though her own response was also untimely. Williams v. Citibank, N.A., 80 Ark. App. 42, 90 S.W.3d 451 (2002).

Defects in the summons, which included the doctor's wrong address, the incorrect amount of time for an out-of-state defendant to file a pleading, and the incorrect date rendered the process void and, even though the doctor was aware of the action and filed an answer before the defective service, estoppel did not apply; in addition, pursuant to subsection (h) of this rule, the doctor reserved the right to assert insufficiency of process as well as insufficiency of service of process in the doctor's answer. Vinson v. Ritter, 86 Ark. App. 207, 167 S.W.3d 162 (2004).

Summons issued to the doctor was clearly defective in two respects: (1) the summons was incorrectly dated September 5, 2000, exactly three months prior to the filing of the complaint on December 5, 2000, and (2) the summons incorrectly stated that the doctor had only 20 days to answer rather than 30 days, which was contrary to subsection (a) of this rule; thus, the trial court properly granted the doctor's motion to dismiss the complaint. Vinson v. Ritter, 86 Ark. App. 207, 167 S.W.3d 162 (2004).

Father waived a personal jurisdiction argument where the court had continuing jurisdiction given that the case involved the welfare of children, the father's answer admitted that jurisdiction was proper, and he neither raised the defense of insufficiency of service of process nor moved to dismiss for failure of service of process. Cross v. Cross, 2019 Ark. App. 100, 572 S.W.3d 407 (2019).

Statement of Grounds for Relief.

Where the direct complaint of the plaintiff against the third-party defendant did not state in ordinary and concise language that plaintiff was entitled to relief on the theory of negligence, the complaint was properly dismissed. Harvey v. Eastman Kodak Co., 271 Ark. 783, 610 S.W.2d 582 (1981).

Since subdivision (b)(6) of this rule tests the sufficiency of the pleadings, it is necessary to read it in conjunction with Ark. R. Civ. P. 8 which deals with the contents of the pleading. Harvey v. Eastman Kodak Co., 271 Ark. 783, 610 S.W.2d 582 (1981).

In an action in trover for the conversion of personal property, the failure to plead either that the plaintiff had a property interest in the subject goods or that the defendant wrongfully converted them was fatally defective upon a motion under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule, even though it could be cured by a verdict. Big A Whse. Distribs., Inc. v. Rye Auto Supply, Inc., 19 Ark. App. 286, 719 S.W.2d 716 (1986).

Where the petitioners alleged the defendant school district knew of the presence of specific rules and regulations for the removal of asbestos and failed and refused to follow such procedures, and knowingly misrepresented and/or concealed the dangerous asbestos condition, the complaint recited more than mere conclusory allegations, and sufficient facts were alleged to state a cause of action for the tort of outrage. Deitsch v. Tillery, 309 Ark. 401, 833 S.W.2d 760 (1992).

Ark. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(1) and subdivision (b)(6) of this rule must be read together in testing the sufficiency of a complaint; facts, not mere conclusions, must be alleged. Hollingsworth v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 311 Ark. 637, 846 S.W.2d 176 (1993).

Claim involving land sales contract and statute of frauds stated facts upon which relief could be granted. Van Dyke v. Glover, 326 Ark. 736, 934 S.W.2d 204 (1996).

Subject-Matter Jurisdiction.

Child-custody jurisdiction is a matter of subject-matter jurisdiction, which is a defense that cannot either be waived by the parties at any time, or conferred by the parties' consent; thus the fact that a father may have entered a general appearance before the Texas court does not waive his right to contest the Texas court's subject-matter jurisdiction. Moore v. Richardson, 332 Ark. 255, 964 S.W.2d 377 (1998).

Legal malpractice action brought against an attorney in the small claims division of the municipal court was really a claim based on fraud and, as such, the municipal court lacked subject-matter jurisdiction pursuant to § 16-17-704; in addition, the circuit court's summary judgment in favor of the attorney was proper because it did not acquire subject-matter jurisdiction on appeal. French v. Webb, 80 Ark. App. 357, 96 S.W.3d 740 (2003).

Although citizens who objected to the issuance of a commercial disposal well permit without timely proof of financial assurance did not specifically mention the words "financial assurance," the issue was not waivable under subdivision (h)(3) of this rule because it involved the subject-matter jurisdiction of the Arkansas Oil and Gas Commission. Capstone Oilfield Disposal of Ark., Inc. v. Pope County, 2012 Ark. App. 231, 408 S.W.3d 65 (2012).

Summary Judgment.

Under some circumstances, the summary judgment motion is an extension of the motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim; while the motion to dismiss alleges the failure to state a claim, the motion for summary judgment alleges the failure to have a claim. Joey Brown Interest, Inc. v. Merchants Nat'l Bank, 284 Ark. 418, 683 S.W.2d 601 (1985).

Neither Ark. R. Civ. P. 56 nor this rule authorizes the trial court to summarily dismiss a complaint where there are matters before the court that show there is an issue of fact to be decided. Maas v. Merrell Assocs., 13 Ark. App. 240, 682 S.W.2d 769 (1985); Dickson v. Delhi

Seed Co., 26 Ark. App. 83, 760 S.W.2d 382 (1988).

If a dismissal motion or motion for judgment on the pleadings is treated as one for summary judgment, it should not be granted if a fact question remains. Sisson v. Ragland, 294 Ark. 629, 745 S.W.2d 620 (1988).

When summary judgment is granted in the trial court because of failure to have a claim, but is affirmed on the basis of failure to state a claim, the judgment is modified to make the dismissal without prejudice in order to afford the plaintiff-appellant a chance to plead further. West v. Searle & Co., 305 Ark. 33, 806 S.W.2d 608 (1991).

By going beyond the complaint in considering the first subsection (b) motion under this rule, the trial court converted that motion to one for summary judgment under Ark. R. Civ. P. 56, according to the peremptory language of subsection (b) of this rule. Godwin v. Churchman, 305 Ark. 520, 810 S.W.2d 34 (1991).

Under subsection (b) of this rule, if matters outside the pleadings are presented and not excluded by the court, a motion to dismiss will be treated as one for summary judgment. Ran-kin v. Farmers Tractor & Equip. Co., 319 Ark. 26, 888 S.W.2d 657 (1994); Clark v. Ridgeway, 323 Ark. 378, 914 S.W.2d 745 (1996).

Once the third-party complaint became moot, the summary judgment motion, with respect to the third-party complaint, should have been denied without addressing its merits, and the third-party complaint dismissed without prejudice on the grounds of mootness of the issues, lack of jurisdiction and non-justiciable nature of the issues as presented. Martin Farm Enters., Inc. v. Hayes, 320 Ark. 205, 895 S.W.2d 535 (1995).

Summary judgment on the basis of failure to have a claim results in a dismissal with prejudice. Mertz v. Pappas, 320 Ark. 368, 896 S.W.2d 593 (1995).

Summary judgment based upon a failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted is different from summary judgment based upon a lack of disputed material facts which results in a party's entitlement to the judgment as a matter of law; the first is a failure to state a claim, while the second is the failure to have a claim. Mertz v. Pappas, 320 Ark. 368, 896 S.W.2d 593 (1995).

Where there were no questions of fact to be determined and the parties agreed upon and stipulated to the relevant facts and exhibits, thereby acknowledging the truth of such facts, the chancellor clearly treated the motion as one to dismiss for failure to state facts upon which relief could be granted, rather than as a motion for summary judgment. Daniel v. Jones, 332 Ark. 489, 966 S.W.2d 226 (1998).

A motion to dismiss was converted into a motion for summary judgment when the court considered affidavits and other documents outside the pleadings. Stapleton v. M.D. Limbaugh Constr. Co., 333 Ark. 381, 969 S.W.2d 648 (1998).

Where wrongful-death complaint was not in compliance with § 16-62-102 and the statute of limitations had run barring heirs from commencing a wrongful-death action against a doctor, the wife of the deceased was also barred from pursuing a separate claim for loss of consortium, which was derivative to the wrongful-death action. Sanderson v. McCollum, 82 Ark. App. 111, 112 S.W.3d 363 (2003).

Grant of summary judgment against the bankruptcy trustee was improper where there was no evidence of an intent to manipulate the judicial process; further, because the parties presented affidavits and other matters outside the pleadings of the circuit court on a motion to dismiss, the motion was treated as one for summary judgment. Dupwe v. Wallace, 355 Ark. 521, 140 S.W.3d 464 (2004).

Writ of prohibition was granted because a circuit court was wholly without jurisdiction to decide whether the Arkansas Workers' Compensation Act applied since there was a conflict over the narrow exception to the exclusivity doctrine; moreover, there was no adequate remedy since a motion for summary judgment was not subject to appeal. A motion to dismiss was treated as such since matters outside of the pleadings were considered. Get Rid of It Ark., Inc. v. Hughes, 368 Ark. 535, 247 S.W.3d 838 (2007).

Former patient argued that trial court's dismissal of her complaint against a hospital should have been treated as based on summary judgment under Ark. R. Civ. P. 56(c); however, because the trial court proceeding was at all times treated as a hearing on a motion to dismiss under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule and the patient never asked the trial court to consider the hospital's motion as one for summary judgment, that argument was not considered on appeal. Alvarado v. St. Mary-Rogers Mem'l Hosp., Inc., 99 Ark. App. 104, 257 S.W.3d 583 (2007).

Trial court's consideration of evidentiary materials beyond the pleadings converted what was essentially a request under subsection (c) of this rule for relief into a summary-judgment situation pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 56. Because the trial court notified the parties of its intentions, and both parties responded by submitting evidentiary materials along with their legal arguments, it did not err as a matter of procedure in considering whether the issues in question were ripe for summary judgment. York v. York, 2010 Ark. App. 343, 374 S.W.3d 827 (2010).

Motions to dismiss the employment-related claims were treated as summary judgment motions where it was clear from the wording of the circuit court's orders that it had considered matters outside the pleadings. Villines v. Har- risson Hous. Auth., 2018 Ark. App. 154, 540 S.W.3d 343 (2018).

Attachment of federal court order as an exhibit to defendant's answer was considered part of the complaint and could be considered in a motion for judgment on the pleadings without converting the motion into one for summary judgment. Duggar v. City of Springdale, 2020 Ark. App. 220, 599 S.W.3d 672 (2020).

Time.

—Extension.

—Incarcerated Defendant.

—Reply.

—Extension.

A motion for additional time in which to answer does not automatically extend the time for filing an answer under subsection (a) of this rule. Friend v. Goslee, 276 Ark. 484, 637 S.W.2d 568 (1982).

In an action for breach of restrictive covenants, appellants were incorrect to rely on statements made by the trial clerk regarding an extension of time because a motion for additional time in which to answer a complaint did not extend the time for filing an answer to a motion to strike; hence, appellee's motion for a default judgment was properly granted. Adams v. Moody, 2009 Ark. App. 474, 324 S.W.3d 348 (2009).

—Incarcerated Defendant.

Circuit court erred in granting a petition by the State of Arkansas for forfeiture of seized currency, because defendant's time to file an answer had not expired; defendant was incarcerated when he was served and therefore, under this rule, had 60 days after service to answer. It mattered not that defendant was personally served; the rule is clear and unambiguous. Cruz v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 91, 572 S.W.3d 27 (2019).

—Reply.

Where the plaintiffs brought an action for the specific performance of an oral contract for the sale of land and the defendants filed a timely counterclaim for ejectment or unlawful detainer, the trial court erred in proceeding to trial of the cause before the plaintiffs' 20 days expired within which they had to respond to the counterclaim. Foster v. Whitlow, 4 Ark. App. 319, 630 S.W.2d 559 (1982).

A rule-against-perpetuities argument raised to counter a defense raised in the answer in a partition action was not untimely, even though it was not raised until trial, since the plaintiffs were not required to file a responsive pleading to the answer. Nash v. Scott, 62 Ark. App. 8, 966 S.W.2d 936 (1998).

Trial court erred in refusing the Arkansas concrete company's motion to strike the Kansas paint company's answer because the answer was filed by the paint company's president, who was not an attorney licensed to practice law in Arkansas and, thus, the answer was a nullity which was not cured by the subsequent filing of an answer by retained counsel; the effect of striking the paint company's answer left the paint company with no initial responsive pleading of record other than its amended answer, which was filed more than 7 months after the paint company was served with process, making it untimely under the 30-day limit for non-resident responsive pleadings, although even an untimely answer could be adequate to preserve the defense of lack of personal jurisdiction where it raised that defense. Concrete Wallsystems of Ark., Inc. v. Master Paint Indus. Coating Corp., 95 Ark. App. 21, 233 S.W.3d 157 (2006).

Summonses that informed defendants they had 20 days to answer that were served prior to an amendment to subdivision (a)(1)(A) of this rule that allowed 30 days to answer were correct when issued and were not invalidated by the rule change effective July 1, 2011. May v. Goodman, 2013 Ark. 82 (2013).

Circuit court erred in striking a son-in-law's answer as untimely because, while a father served a copy of his counterclaim on his daughter and son by serving their attorney, he did not serve a copy of a summons or counterclaim on the son-in-law (who was not a party to the original lawsuit filed by the daughter and son) and the son's response to the father's counterclaim, which was filed 153 days after the counterclaim was filed, was not untimely. Howard v. Codling, 2013 Ark. App. 641 (2013).

Timing of Default Motion.

The fact that the plaintiff's motion for a default judgment was filed prior to the expiration of time for filing an answer did not prohibit the trial court from entering a default judgment after the expiration of time to answer, when the defendant actually was in default. Friend v. Goslee, 276 Ark. 484, 637 S.W.2d 568 (1982).

Transfer for Lack of Jurisdiction.

Subdivision (h)(3) of this rule does not change the rule that, by failing to make a timely motion to transfer a case from equity to law, a party waives the right to make the motion unless the equity court is wholly incompetent to grant the relief sought; an alleged lack of jurisdiction based wholly upon the purported adequacy of a remedy at law is not a jurisdictional question of the type over which equity court has no power to act whatsoever. McCune v. Brown, 8 Ark. App. 51, 648 S.W.2d 811 (1983).

As is provided by Arkansas's statutory law and court rules, the municipal court had authority to transfer cause to the county circuit court after concluding that the replevin action exceeded the jurisdictional amount. Bonnell v. Smith, 322 Ark. 141, 908 S.W.2d 74 (1995).

Venue.

This rule has abolished the distinction between special and general appearances. A defendant need no longer appear specially to attack venue. Arkansas Game & Fish Comm'n v. Lindsey, 292 Ark. 314, 730 S.W.2d 474 (1987).

Motion to dismiss for improper venue must be filed no later than the time at which the original responsive pleading is due. Inmon Truck Sales, Inc. v. Wright, 294 Ark. 397, 743 S.W.2d 793 (1988).

The trial court correctly granted motion to dismiss pursuant to subdivision (b)(3) of this rule, for failure to state proper venue. Fraser Bros. v. Darragh Co., 316 Ark. 297, 871 S.W.2d 367 (1994).

Although the land over which the land owners established a prescriptive easement was in Perry County, pursuant to § 16-60-101, venue was proper in Conway County because a transitory claim, the request for an injunction prohibiting the servient property owners from interfering with the land owners use of the gate in Conway County, was included in the complaint; thus, the trial court's refusal to dismiss on the basis of venue was correct. River Bar Farms, L.L.C. v. Moore, 83 Ark. App. 130, 118 S.W.3d 145 (2003).

Mother in guardianship proceeding waived her argument that venue was not proper in Jefferson County because she did not object to venue at the trial level and did not object to venue in her initial responsive pleading; an objection to venue was waived if it was not raised in the defendant's answer or in a motion filed prior to or simultaneously with the answer. Moore v. Sipes, 85 Ark. App. 15, 146 S.W.3d 903 (2004).

Mother properly raised a venue argument in her first responsive pleading; however, the issue was without merit because the provisions of Ark. Code Ann. § 9-10-113 were inapplicable in a case where a minor child no longer resided in Arkansas. Thomas v. Avant, 370 Ark. 377, 260 S.W.3d 266 (2007).

Because a circuit court had the authority to transfer an attorney's cause of action for attorney fees to the county circuit court that heard the underlying trust litigation under subdivision (h)(3) of this rule as a result of venue being proper in such county, the attorney's petition for a writ of prohibition or a writ of certiorari seeking to keep the action in the current circuit court was denied. Evans v. Blankenship, 374 Ark. 104, 286 S.W.3d 137 (2008).

Dismissal of a medical malpractice claim against out-of-county service providers for lack of proper venue under subdivision (b)(3) of this rule was proper where the patient received treatment from providers in two different counties and, under § 16-55-213(e), each provider had to be sued in the county where the services were provided. Clark v. Johnson Reg'l Med. Ctr., 2010 Ark. 115, 362 S.W.3d 311 (2010).

Circuit court properly dismissed an injured passenger's declaratory-judgment action against an insurer because the insurer established venue in a different county on the issue of liability coverage when it filed suit there before the passenger commenced his action, and the fact that the passenger served the insurer first was immaterial. Johnson v. Equity Ins. Co., 2017 Ark. App. 436, 526 S.W.3d 921 (2017).

Waiver of Defenses.

Hospital did not waive its defective service defense by defending the case before filing a motion asserting the defense because the hospital preserved the defense by asserting it in the hospital's original responsive pleading. Furthermore, the hospital's participation in the case in the interim without requesting affirmative relief preserved that defense. Carter v. Livingston, 2021 Ark. App. 363, 635 S.W.3d 351 (2021).

Where the insureds filed an action on their policy in Saline County and then, realizing that Saline County was not the proper venue, permitted the case to remain on the Saline County docket and refiled their action in Pulaski County, the insurance company's response in the Saline County action, that venue was improper, did not constitute a waiver of the insurance company's right to claim in the Pulaski County action that the same action was pending in Saline County, and that therefore the Pulaski County action should be dismissed. Mark Twain Life Ins. Corp. v. Cory, 283 Ark. 55, 670 S.W.2d 809 (1984).

A bank waived any defect or irregularity in the service of process of the writ of garnishment both by its failure to file a motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction of the person under subsections (b) and (h) of this rule, and by submitting the case to the court on the merits without having filed such a motion. Searcy Steel Co. v. Mercantile Bank, 19 Ark. App. 220, 719 S.W.2d 277 (1986).

Improper venue was waived by asserting a third party complaint. Arkansas Game & Fish Comm'n v. Lindsey, 292 Ark. 314, 730 S.W.2d 474 (1987).

Assertion of a compulsory counterclaim does not constitute a waiver of objection to venue because of the nonvoluntary character of the compulsory counterclaim. Arkansas Game & Fish Comm'n v. Lindsey, 292 Ark. 314, 730 S.W.2d 474 (1987).

Where defendant failed to file motion to dismiss for improper venue within twenty days after service of process upon him, he waived his right to object to venue. Inmon Truck Sales, Inc. v. Wright, 294 Ark. 397, 743 S.W.2d 793 (1988).

Where plaintiff, an Arkansas resident, executed an employment agreement with a Texas corporation which included a clause stating the contract was to be performed wholly or partly within the State of Texas and the plaintiff consented to the jurisdiction of the Texas court in connection with any dispute or controversy arising out of the agreement, the plaintiff admittedly waived any right to be sued in the county of his residence, and consented to Texas as the proper venue for any proceeding arising out of this agreement. Nelms v. Morgan Portable Bldg. Corp., 305 Ark. 284, 808 S.W.2d 314 (1991).

Appellant's failure to assert lack of personal jurisdiction as a defense until midway through his second trial amounted to a waiver of the defense. Blankenship v. Office of Child Support Enforcement, 58 Ark. App. 260, 952 S.W.2d 173 (1997).

The defendant owner of a truck involved in a motor vehicle accident waived the defense of insufficiency of process where it filed an answer, but did not raise the defense until it later filed a response to the plaintiffs' motion for default judgment. Southern Transit Co. v. Coliums, 333 Ark. 170, 966 S.W.2d 906 (1998).

Where defendants failed to raise the defense of improper venue by motion or responsive pleading within 20 days after service of process, defendants waived their right to object to venue. Higgins v. Burnett, 349 Ark. 130, 76 S.W.3d 893 (2002).

Appellant's failure to assert the defense of insufficient service of process in his initial pleading resulted in a waiver of that defense. Dunklin v. First Magnus Fin. Corp., 79 Ark. App. 246, 86 S.W.3d 22 (2002).

Where a non-resident defendant was served on November 30, 2001, and did not file a motion to dismiss for improper venue within 30 days after it was served the summons and complaint, the non-resident defendant waived its improper venue defense. Nucor Corp. v. Kilman, 358 Ark. 107, 186 S.W.3d 720 (2004).

Where insurer neither raised the defense of improper venue in its answer or in a motion filed prior to or simultaneously with its answer, nor did it specifically reserved its objection to improper venue in its answer, it waived its venue objection; therefore, transfer of the case from the Phillips County Circuit Court to the Craighead County Circuit Court was an abuse of discretion. Gailey v. Allstate Ins. Co., 362 Ark. 568, 210 S.W.3d 40 (2005).

Where ex-husband signed both the property settlement agreement and the divorce decree, indicating his approval of their terms, the decree stated that he waived the service of process and entered his appearance, and the waiver of corroboration recognized the case in court and amounted to the husband entering his appearance in the action, ex-husband waived any defect in the service of process and the decree was not void. Morehouse v. Lawson, 90 Ark. App. 379, 206 S.W.3d 295 (2005).

In parents' medical malpractice action against hospital and doctor, the trial court erred in granting summary judgment for the hospital as the hospital responded to the amended complaint and asserted a limitations defense under Ark. R. Civ. P. 8(c), however, as the hospital never raised the issue of insufficient service of process, the hospital waived that defense; however, the doctor never received the amended complaint or responded to it and, thus, did not waive the defense of insufficient service of process, so summary judgment against parents was proper. Posey v. St. Bernard's Healthcare, Inc., 365 Ark. 154, 226 S.W.3d 757 (2006).

Appellate court declined to address a claim that a mother should have raised venue in a prior custody proceeding because no argument or authority was cited. Thomas v. Avant, 370 Ark. 377, 260 S.W.3d 266 (2007).

In a case where relief was sought from a foreclosure proceeding based on defective service under Ark. R. Civ. P. 4, two debtors waived the issue since they recognized the action was in court and made an appearance at the foreclosure proceeding by agreeing to the entry of an order appointing a receiver; therefore, there was no due process violation. Moreover, Rule 4(i) was satisfied because the entry of the order appointing the receiver occurred well within the 120-day period provided for service. Trelfa v. Simmons First Bank of Jonesboro, 98 Ark. App. 287, 254 S.W.3d 775 (2007).

Power companies did not waive the defense of improper venue, as it was not available when they made their first motion to dismiss for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction, and they acted quickly upon learning of its availability. Centerpoint Energy, Inc. v. Miller County Circuit Court, 372 Ark. 343, 276 S.W.3d 231 (2008).

Trial court properly granted summary judgment in favor of a medical center in a medical malpractice claim on the basis of charitable immunity because the medical center did not waive the defense of charitable immunity by failing to assert the defense in its original answer and the patients failed to properly challenge the assertion of the defense by the filing of a motion alleging prejudice. Under Ark. R. Civ. P. 15(a), with the exception of defenses mentioned in subdivision (h)(1) of this rule, a party could amend its pleadings at any time without leave of the trial court unless, upon motion of the opposing party, the trial court determined that prejudice would result; while charitable immunity was an affirmative defense that had to be specifically asserted in a responsive pleading under Ark. R. Civ. P. 8, it was not a defense listed in subdivision (h)(1) and thus could be raised in an amended answer under Ark. R. Civ. P. 15. Seth v. St. Edward Mercy Med. Ctr., 375 Ark. 413, 291 S.W.3d 179 (2009).

Rule 13. Counterclaim and cross-claim.

(a) Compulsory Counterclaims. A pleading shall state as a counterclaim any claim which, at the time of filing the pleading, the pleader has against any opposing party, if it arises out of the transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the opposing party's claim and does not require for its adjudication the presence of third parties of whom the court cannot acquire jurisdiction. But the pleader need not state the claim if (1) at the time the action was commenced the claim was the subject of another pending action, or (2) the opposing party brought suit upon his claim by attachment or other process by which the court did not acquire jurisdiction to render a personal judgment on that claim, and the pleader is not stating any counterclaim under this Rule 13.

(b) Permissive Counterclaim. A pleading may state as a counterclaim any claim against an opposing party not arising out of the transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the opposing party's claim.

(c) Counterclaim Exceeding Opposing Claim. A counterclaim may or may not diminish or defeat the recovery sought by the opposing party. It may claim relief exceeding in amount or different in kind from that sought in the pleading of the opposing party.

(d) Counterclaim Maturing or Acquired After Pleading. A claim which either matured or was acquired by the pleader after filing his pleading shall be presented as a counterclaim by supplemental pleading, provided that if such counterclaim matures or is acquired after all issues are joined, it may be asserted by the pleader in a separate action.

(e) Omitted Counterclaim. When a pleader fails to assert a counterclaim, he shall be entitled to assert such counterclaim by amended or supplemental pleading subject to the requirements and conditions of Rule 15.

(f) Cross-Claim Against Co-Party. A pleading may state as a cross-claim any claim by one party against a co-party arising out of the transaction or occurrence which is the subject matter either of the original action or of a counterclaim therein or relating to any property which is the subject matter of the original action. Such cross-claim may include a claim that the party against whom it is asserted is or may be liable to the cross-claimant for all or part of a claim asserted in the action against the cross-claimant.

(g) Joinder of Additional Parties. Persons other than those made parties to the original action may be made parties to a counterclaim or cross-claim in accordance with the provisions of Rules 19 and 20.

(h) Separate Trials; Separate Judgments. If the court orders separate trials as provided in Rule 42(b), judgment on a counterclaim or cross-claim may be rendered in accordance with the terms of Rule 54(b) when the court has jurisdiction so to do, even if the claims of the opposing party have been dismissed or otherwise disposed of.

HISTORY: Amended December 10, 1990, effective February 1, 1991.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 13:

1. With the exception of one minor wording change, Sections (a) and (b) are otherwise identical to FRCP 13(a) and (b). The word "serving" found in the Federal Rule is omitted and the word "filing" is substituted therefor. These sections abolish the strict compulsory counterclaim rule in Arkansas as codified in superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1121 (Repl. 1962). Under this and the Federal Rule, the only counterclaims which are compulsory are those which arise out of the same transaction or occurrence. Otherwise, a counterclaim is permissive.

2. Section (c) is identical to FRCP 13(c) and does not change Arkansas law.

3. Section (d) of the Federal Rule is eliminated inasmuch as these rules cannot enlarge one's right to assert a counterclaim against the United States or any officer or agent thereof.

4. Section (d) is a revision of FRCP 13(e) and recognizes those rare occasions where a counterclaim arises after pleadings are served.

5. Section (e) is a revision of FRCP 13(f). Under the Federal Rule, delay in asserting a counterclaim may be fatal to one's right to assert such claim. Frank Adam Electric Co. [v.]

Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co., 146 F.2d 165 (C.C.A. 8th, 1945). This section follows superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1160 (Supp. 1975), by permitting a counterclaim to be asserted by amended pleading as any other amendment, subject to the conditions of Rule 15.

6. Section (e) is identical to FRCP 13(g). It follows the intent of superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1134.1 (Supp. 1975) by making such claims permissive rather than mandatory.

7. Section (g) follows FRCP 13(h) by allowing other parties to be brought in under the conditions of Rules 19 and 20. This is essentially what was permitted under superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1134.2 (Supp. 1975).

8. Rule 42(b) gives the court discretion to grant separate trials where two or more competing claims would otherwise have to be tried together. Section (h) of Rule 13, which is identical to Section (i) of the Federal Rule, answers any possible argument that the claim tried last would be barred by res judicata by reason of the first claim having been reduced to judgment or dismissed.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1990 Amendment:

The amendment deletes the last sentence of subdivision (c), which provided that "[i]n the event the amount asserted in the counterclaim exceeds the monetary jurisdiction of the court in which it is filed, the matter shall be transferred to a court of competent jurisdiction to hear the full extent of the claim and counterclaim." This provision created confusion, since the state courts of general jurisdiction do not have monetary jurisdictional limits. While inferior courts have such limits, counterclaims in those courts are governed by Rule 7 of the Inferior Court Rules [now District Court Rules].

CASE NOTES

Abolition of Strict Counterclaim Rule.

The adoption of this rule abolished the strict compulsory counterclaim rule, which had been construed to make all counterclaims mandatory. Harrison v. Springdale Water & Sewer Comm'n, 780 F.2d 1422 (8th Cir. 1986).

Applicability.

Where gubernatorial candidate had sought, in both his motion to intervene and his answer and cross-claim, an order requiring the Secretary of State to certify his name as political party's gubernatorial nominee, candidate sought affirmative relief; therefore the candidate intervened as a plaintiff in the earlier case and this rule would not apply. Independent Party v. Priest, 907 F. Supp. 1276 (E.D. Ark. 1995).

Where trial court ruled that husband's claim was an untimely compulsory counterclaim, and the appellate court affirmed the decision in the first appeal, that ruling became the law of the case; thus, when the wife tried to raise the same claim following the first appeal, the trial court properly denied her permission to do so. Jones v. Double 'D' Props., 357 Ark. 148, 161 S.W.3d 839 (2004).

Non-party notice requirements set out in § 16-55-202(b)(2) apply in addition to state civil procedure rules. Section 16-55-202 should be interpreted as being compatible with § 16-64-122(a), which limits the apportionment of fault to an individual or entity from whom the claiming party seeks to recover damages, which includes individuals and entities that are subject to being brought into a suit pursuant to a cross or third-party claim under this rule or Ark. R. Civ. P. 14, but excludes non-parties who are otherwise immune from suit, including employers who are immune pursuant to § 11-9-105(a), the exclusive remedies provision of the Workers' Compensation Act, §§ 11-9-101 to 11-9-1001. Billings v. Aeropres Corp., 522 F. Supp. 2d 1121 (E.D. Ark. 2007).

Claim Pending in Separate Litigation.

When a cause of action which would otherwise of necessity be pleaded as a compulsory counterclaim is also the subject of pending litigation in another court, litigation which had been commenced before the instant action, waiver will not result from the failure to counterclaim the cause of action in question and the failing party will not thereafter be barred by res judicata. Bowen v. Danna, 4 Ark. App. 232, 632 S.W.2d 234 (1982).

Where the purchasers of certain property brought an action against the seller for fraud and misrepresentation in the inducement and sale of the property, and while that action was still pending the seller filed a separate action against the purchasers seeking to foreclose a mortgage on the property, the purchasers' action for fraud and misrepresentation was not a compulsory counterclaim in the seller's foreclosure action and, therefore, the purchasers' cause of action was not barred by res judicata even though a decree of foreclosure was entered against them in the foreclosure action which was decided prior to a decision on the merits of their claims. Bowen v. Danna, 4 Ark. App. 232, 632 S.W.2d 234 (1982).

Where the mortgagee had a pending foreclosure action in chancery court and the chancellor had already ruled that the cause would remain there, all parties recognized that the claim remained in chancery, and the mortgagors raised no argument of prejudice, the mortgagee's voluntary nonsuit of the foreclosure action as a compulsory counterclaim in the circuit court did not operate to bar its claim in chancery. Bankston v. McKenzie, 288 Ark. 65, 702 S.W.2d 14 (1986).

Where lawsuit was filed in circuit court by plaintiff several hours before a chancery court action was filed by defendant, the chancery court action was not "pending" within the terms of subdivision (a)(1) of this rule. Golden Host Westchase, Inc. v. First Serv. Corp., 29 Ark. App. 107, 778 S.W.2d 633 (1989).

Compulsory Counterclaim.

Refusal of the circuit court to grant the bank's motion to dismiss pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b) and this rule was improper where the farmers' action involving the conversion of wheat and oat crop arose out of the same set of circumstances as the bank's complaint; therefore, it must have been brought as a compulsory counterclaim. First Nat'l Bank of Dewitt v. Cruthis, 352 Ark. 292, 100 S.W.3d 703 (2003).

Ex-husband's claim that his ex-wife was barred by the compulsory-counterclaim provision of subsection (a) of this rule from recovering education expenses because she did not raise the issue during a 2002 contempt action ex-husband initiated was rejected as ex-husband was not filing a pleading and asserting a claim under Ark. R. Civ. P. 7 at that time but, rather, he was filing a motion asking the trial court to enforce a previous order; subsection (a) did not apply and, when his ex-wife filed a counter-petition in May 2004 to enforce the decree and recover tuition and education expenses, she was not barred by the compulsory-counterclaim rule because she did not raise the education-expense issue in response to the ex-husband's first petition filed in 2002. Morsy v. Deloney, 92 Ark. App. 383, 214 S.W.3d 285 (2005).

Although the public facility board's claim in an action involving a breach of contract for final clean-up work was required to be brought in a compulsory counterclaim pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule, the appellate court saw no finality problem. The facility board failed to meet its burden of proof on what the final clean-up work would cost and that part of the trial court's decision was construed as one on the merits against the facility board. Roberts Contr. Co. v. Valentine-Wooten Rd. Pub. Facility Bd., 2009 Ark. App. 437, 320 S.W.3d 1 (2009).

Corporation's counterclaim for tortious interference with a business expectancy was a compulsory claim under subsection (a) of this rule given the elements of tortious interference, and the allegations in the counterclaim that a shareholder's complaint and lis pendens were improper and interfered with the corporation's business; the corporation would be unable to prove that the shareholder's actions were improper without delving into the merits of the complaint. Crockett v. C.A.G. Invs., Inc., 2010 Ark. 90, 361 S.W.3d 262 (2010).

Trial court did not err under subsection (a) of this rule in striking a lessor's counterclaim alongside its answer because lessees' breach of contract complaint was premised on the lessor's statements to a third party, in violation of the lease agreement, while the lessor's counterclaim was based on the lessees' anticipatory breach of the same agreement; hence, both the complaint and counterclaim arose from the same occurrence. Boeuf River Farms v. Browder, 2012 Ark. App. 482, 422 S.W.3d 194 (2012).

Successor noteholder's cause of action to foreclose did not mature until after the issues had been joined, and as a result, it was not required under subdivision (d) of this rule to bring its claim in the first lawsuit against the borrowers. Banning v. LNV Corp., 2014 Ark. App. 207 (2014).

While appellant's compulsory counterclaim was dismissed by the trial court, it was dismissed without prejudice, which gave him the opportunity to refile it, and the judgment on which appellant sought review did not adjudicate his counterclaim, and thus it was a dangling issue that had yet to be decided, such that the judgment was not a final, appealable order; his notice of appeal did not state that he abandoned any unresolved claims, and no certification for an immediate appeal was filed, and thus the appeal was dismissed without prejudice. Horne v. Henson, 2014 Ark. App. 687 (2014).

Appellate court lacked jurisdiction over a granddaughter's appeal because the granddaughter's original claim was related to whether her grandmother validly transferred property to the son's heirs, and the heirs' slander-of-title claim—alleging that the granddaughter's lawsuit and accompanying lis pendens were filed maliciously for the purpose of harassment—was a compulsory counterclaim, and the dismissal of the heirs' compulsory counterclaim was without prejudice. Belk v. Belk, 2015 Ark. App. 682, 476 S.W.3d 861 (2015).

Court of Appeals was without jurisdiction to address the merits of an appeal because the order appealed from was not final since the dismissal of a compulsory counterclaim was without prejudice; the slander-of-title claim arose out of the same transaction or occurrence as a mortgagee's original lawsuit, and thus it was a compulsory counterclaim. US Bank Nat'l v. Unknown Heirs of Greenwood, 2018 Ark. App. 290, 550 S.W.3d 874 (2018).

Counterclaim Barred.

Where petition for increase in child support was based on one order, and a counterclaim was filed alleging contempt for failure to comply with a different order, the counterclaim was barred by this rule. McJunkins v. Lemons, 52 Ark. App. 1, 913 S.W.2d 306 (1996).

Claims by property owners arising from the financing arrangements for a bed-and-breakfast facility constituted compulsory counterclaims in an earlier chancery court action for foreclosure brought by the lender since such claims arose directly from the financing transactions and a logical relationship existed between the foreclosure, the counterclaim, and the subsequent complaint. Linn v. Nations-Bank, 341 Ark. 57, 14 S.W.3d 500 (2000).

Trial court did not err in striking companies' counterclaim that sounded in legal malpractice under this rule and Ark. R. Civ. P. 15 because the prejudice to the lawyers would have been great if the counterclaim was allowed to go forward as it was filed 33 minutes before trial was to begin. Nameloc, Inc. v. Jack, Lyon & Jones, P.A., 362 Ark. 175, 208 S.W.3d 129 (2005).

In a foreclosure case involving a construction loan, the borrower's claim for deceptive trade practices was properly dismissed because it had not been alleged as a compulsory counterclaim. Grand Valley Ridge, LLC v. Metro. Nat'l Bank, 2012 Ark. 121, 388 S.W.3d 24 (2012).

Counterclaim Not Compulsory.

Where the landowners relied upon a conspiracy theory in defending against the county water and sewer commission's condemnation counterclaim in the prior state court proceeding, the landowners' civil rights action for infringement of their constitutional right of access to the courts was not a compulsory counterclaim which should have been asserted in the prior chancery court proceeding; therefore, failure to assert it was not res judicata. Harrison v. Springdale Water & Sewer Comm'n, 780 F.2d 1422 (8th Cir. 1986).

Where the transaction or occurrence at issue in the first trial was the disbursement of insurance proceeds for a home repair contract, and the execution of the mortgage and subsequent default thereof was at issue in the second trial, the second action was a separate "transaction or occurrence" not subject to the compulsory counterclaim provisions of subsection (a) of this rule. United-Bilt Homes, Inc. v. Sampson, 315 Ark. 156, 864 S.W.2d 861 (1993).

Damage Suit Not Compulsory Counterclaim.

Where successor lessors filed action in chancery court to terminate lease and collect damages from assignor of lease and then filed suit in circuit court to recover damages for failure to comply with and perform the covenants in the lease, the circuit court erred in dismissing the suit before it since the plaintiff lessors were not mandatorily required to join the suits in chancery court under Rule 18 because that rule states that the party may join its claims against the opposing party, and since it was not a compulsory counterclaim under this rule because it sought damages from the assignee as a result of the failure to perform its required duties under the lease. Baltz v. Security Bank, 272 Ark. 302, 613 S.W.2d 833 (1981).

Failure to Assert Counterclaim.

In a suit by a payee against a bank for negligence in its failure to notify the payee that checks had been dishonored, the bank's failure to assert by counterclaim that damages should be reduced by the amount the payee recovered from the bad check writer precluded the trial court from reducing the judgment by the amount recovered. Citizens Bank v. Chitty, 285 Ark. 55, 684 S.W.2d 814 (1985).

The circuit judge was not correct in dismissing a tort claim on the basis of res judicata, but the result reached by the trial court was affirmed where the appellant's claim was precluded by subsection (a) of this rule, which requires that a compulsory counterclaim be pled. Estate of Goston v. Ford Motor Co., 320 Ark. 699, 898 S.W.2d 471 (1995).

Because taxpayer's claims arose out of the same transaction that was the subject matter of the original action, the taxpayer's claim was really a compulsory counterclaim, pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule, that should have been raised earlier; even assuming that Ark. R. Civ. P. 15(b) was applicable and the claims should have been considered an amended pleading, the rule only permitted amendments to conform to pleadings when issues were tried by express or implied consent of the parties, and the issues raised by the taxpayer's claims were never so tried and, thus, the trial court did not err in dismissing the claims. Jones v. Double D' Props., 352 Ark. 39, 98 S.W.3d 405 (2003).

Nonsuit.

Judgment in favor of a seller in its foreclosure action against purchasers, which also granted the purchasers' motion for nonsuit of its compulsory counterclaims, was not a final, appealable order because the purchasers were not barred from bringing their claims again; therefore, the purchasers' appeal of the judgment was dismissed without prejudice because the record did not contain an order granting Ark. R. Civ. P. 54 certification. Martin v. Kat's Bar & Grill, LLC, 2009 Ark. App. 737 (2009).

Purpose.

The reason for this rule is to require parties to present all existing claims simultaneously to the court or be forever barred, thus preventing a multiplicity of suits arising from one set of circumstances. Bankston v. McKenzie, 288 Ark. 65, 702 S.W.2d 14 (1986); McJunkins v. Lemons, 52 Ark. App. 1, 913 S.W.2d 306 (1996).

Res Judicata.

Res judicata applies to claims that might have been litigated as cross-claims, as well as to those that were actually litigated in an earlier action. Lawyers Sur. Co. v. Cagle, 49 Ark. App. 131, 898 S.W.2d 476 (1995).

When buyer failed to bring breach of contract counterclaim to seller's foreclosure action, the matter was barred by the doctrine of res judicata. Pentz v. Romine, 75 Ark. App. 274, 57 S.W.3d 235 (2001).

Statute of Limitations.

Assertion of a compulsory counterclaim does not act as a waiver of the statute of limitations. Smith v. Elder, 312 Ark. 384, 849 S.W.2d 513 (1993); TCBY Sys. v. EGB Assocs., 2 F.3d 288 (8th Cir. 1993), cert. denied, 511 U.S. 1108, 114 S. Ct. 2104, 128 L. Ed. 2d 665 (1994).

Venue.

Where a lessee oil company brought an action to quiet title against the landowners and a subsequent lessee oil and gas company, the complaint was local in nature and the plaintiff oil company properly filed the action in the county where the land was located; that same venue was proper for both a compulsory counterclaim, filed by the defendant oil and gas company against the plaintiff oil company and its president, and for a permissive third party complaint filed by the president of the defendant oil and gas company against the plaintiff oil company and its president, since both claims involved the same cause of action as the original complaint and had common questions of law and fact. Wasp Oil, Inc. v. Arkansas Oil & Gas, Inc., 280 Ark. 420, 658 S.W.2d 397 (1983).

Even though an issue relating to venue was not waived because a compulsory counterclaim under subsection (a) of this rule was filed, instead of a permissive counterclaim, an appellate court still could not reach the issue on review because an argument regarding whether § 16-55-213(a) repealed § 16-60-111(a)(1) by implication was not raised below. In the motion for a change of venue, it was argued that the matter should have been transferred to a county where an executrix was a resident since the cause of action arose there, all witnesses resided there, and the official record and other matters related to the case were on record there. Richardson v. Brown, 2012 Ark. App. 535, 423 S.W.3d 630 (2012).

Voluntary Dismissal.

After a compulsory counterclaim has been filed, a plaintiff may once voluntarily dismiss his complaint without prejudice, to refile it within one year. Lemon v. Laws, 305 Ark. 143, 806 S.W.2d 1 (1991).

Rule 14. Third-party practice.

(a) When Defendant May Bring in Third Party. At any time after commencement of the action a defending party, as a third party plaintiff, may cause a summons and complaint to be served upon a person not a party to the action who is or may be liable to him for all or part of the plaintiff's claim against him. The third party plaintiff need not obtain leave to make the service if he files the third party complaint not later than 10 days after he files his answer. Otherwise, he must obtain leave on motion upon notice to all parties to the action. The person served with the summons and the third party complaint, hereinafter called the third-party defendant, shall make his defenses to the third party plaintiff's claim as provided in Rule 12 and his counterclaims against the third party plaintiff and cross-claims against other third party defendants as provided in Rule 13. The third party defendant may assert against the plaintiff any defenses which the third party plaintiff has to the plaintiff's claim. The third party defendant may also assert any claim against the plaintiff arising out of the transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the plaintiff's claim against the third party plaintiff. The plaintiff may assert any claim against the third party defendant arising out of the transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the plaintiff's claim against the third party plaintiff and the third party defendant shall thereupon assert his defenses as provided in Rule 12 and his counterclaims and cross-claims as provided in Rule 13. Any party may move to strike the third party claim or for its severance or separate trial. A third party defendant may proceed under this rule against any person not a party to the action who is or may be liable to him for all or part of the claim made in the action against the third party defendant.

(b) When Plaintiff May Bring in Third Party. When a counterclaim is asserted against a plaintiff, he may cause a third party to be brought in under circumstances which under this rule would entitle a defendant to do so.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 14:

1. Rule 14 is substantially the same as FRCP and superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1134.1 (Supp. 1975). The latter was patterned after the Federal Rule. Omitted are the references in FRCP 14(a) to admiralty and maritime claims. Section (c) of the Federal Rule is omitted in its entirety.

2. Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1134.1 (Supp. 1975) provided that where a third party complaint was not filed within ten days after the filing of the answer, leave of court on motion was required. This rule follows the requirement contained in the Federal Rule that leave of the court must be obtained on motion upon notice to all parties to the action. This will afford the opportunity to parties already in an action to object to the filing of a third party complaint if objection is warranted.

3. The purpose of Rule 14, as construed by the federal courts, is to facilitate the trial of multiple claims which would otherwise be triable only in separate proceedings. United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 340 U.S. 543, 71 S. Ct. 399 (1951). There is no set time during which a third party action must be initiated by a defendant; rather, the timeliness of defendant's application is left to the discretion of the trial court which must consider whether allowing the third party complaint will result in prejudice to the other parties. Meilinger v. Metropolitan Edison Co., 34 F.R.D. 143 (D.C. Pa., 1963); Kubik v. Goldfield, 61 F.R.D. 572 (D.C. Pa., 1974).

CASE NOTES

Basis for Joinder.

This rule does not require that the third party's liability to the defendant be based on the same theory of law as the defendant's liability to the plaintiff in order for the defendant to bring the third party into the action. Nichols Bros. Invs. v. Rector-Phillips-Morse, Inc., 33 Ark. App. 47, 801 S.W.2d 308 (1990).

Error Not Harmless.

It was not harmless error to allow a third-party defendant doctor to be put on a verdict form in a medical malpractice action because (1) defendants physicians were allowed to file third-party complaints less than two weeks before trial, to the prejudice of a representative, (2) the jury was wrongly instructed on those complaints, and (3) the jury was told the representative had to show the doctor's negligence when the physicians had the burden to prove this affirmative defense. English v. Robbins, 2014 Ark. 511, 452 S.W.3d 566 (2014).

Joinder Denied.

Trial court did not err in dismissing defendant's claim for indemnity against third-party defendants, impleaded under this rule, where defendant had voluntarily settled with plaintiffs and plaintiffs' claims against all defendants had been dismissed. Carpetland of N.W. Ark., Inc. v. Howard, 304 Ark. 420, 803 S.W.2d 512 (1991).

Because the hospital did not have a cause of action against the rehabilitation center, the hospital's argument that it was entitled to file a third-party complaint under this rule was without merit, as the hospital did not have a right of contribution against the rehabilitation center. St. Vincent Infirmary Med. Ctr. v. Shelton, 2013 Ark. 38, 425 S.W.3d 761 (2013), superseded by statute as stated in J-McDaniel Constr. Co. v. Dale E. Peters Plumbing Ltd., 2014 Ark. 282, 436 S.W.3d 458 (2014).

Purpose.

The purpose of this rule is to settle all controversies at one time, thereby avoiding a multiplicity of suits. Aclin Ford Co. v. Fiat Motors of N. Am., Inc., 275 Ark. 445, 631 S.W.2d 283 (1982).

Where insurer brought in third-party tort-feasor and judgment was rendered against both tort-feasor and insurer, insurer's motion to amend judgment to allow it to recover its subrogation claim should have been granted since denial undermined the basic purpose of this rule to promote judicial economy and avoid multiplicity of suits. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Riverside Marine Remanufacturing, Inc., 278 Ark. 585, 647 S.W.2d 462 (1983).

Relation to Other Statutes.

Non-party notice requirements set out in § 16-55-202(b)(2) apply in addition to state civil procedure rules. Section 16-55-202 should be interpreted as being compatible with § 16-64-122(a), which limits the apportionment of fault to an individual or entity from whom the claiming party seeks to recover damages, which includes individuals and entities that are subject to being brought into a suit pursuant to a cross or third-party claim under Ark. R. Civ. P. 13 or this rule, but excludes non-parties who are otherwise immune from suit, including employers who are immune pursuant to § 11-9-105(a), the exclusive remedies provision of the Workers' Compensation Act, §§ 11-9-101 to 11-9-1001. Billings v. Aeropres Corp., 522 F. Supp. 2d 1121 (E.D. Ark. 2007).

Third-Party Complaint Untimely.

The trial court in action for breach of warranty in automobile purchase did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow seller to file a third-party complaint against manufacturer on the day of the trial; if this pleading had been allowed at that time it would have surely caused a delay of the trial. Aclin Ford Co. v. Fiat Motors of N. Am., Inc., 275 Ark. 445, 631 S.W.2d 283 (1982).

Implicit in this rule is the assumption that the third-party complaint will be filed before the issues are resolved at trial; otherwise, its provisions allowing the third-party defendant to assert defenses against the original plaintiff would have no meaning; therefore, the trial court in an action for breach of warranty in an automobile purchase was correct in granting manufacturer's motion to strike the third-party complaint against it since it was filed after trial. Aclin Ford Co. v. Fiat Motors of N. Am., Inc., 275 Ark. 445, 631 S.W.2d 283 (1982).

Permitting a third-party complaint to be filed after the entry of the judgment in the underlying suit was error and required that the ruling be reversed. Arkansas Bankers Life Ins. Co. v. Tomerlin, 340 Ark. 701, 13 S.W.3d 581 (2000).

Rule 15. Amended and supplemental pleadings.

(a) Amendments. With the exception of pleading the defenses mentioned in Rule 12 (h)(1), a party may amend his pleadings at any time without leave of the court. Where, however, upon motion of an opposing party, the court determines that prejudice would result or the disposition of the cause would be unduly delayed because of the filing of an amendment, the court may strike such amended pleading or grant a continuance of the proceeding. A party shall plead in response to an amended pleading within the time remaining for response to the original pleading or within 20 days after service of the amended pleading, whichever period is longer, unless the court otherwise orders.

(b) Amendments to Conform to the Evidence. When issues not raised by the pleadings are tried by express or implied consent of the parties, they shall be treated in all respects as if they had been raised in the pleadings. Such amendment of the pleadings as may be necessary to cause them to conform to the evidence and to raise these issues may be made upon motion of any party at any time, even after judgment; but failure so to amend does not affect the result of the trial of these issues. If evidence is objected to at the trial on the ground that it is not within the issues made by the pleadings, the court may allow the pleadings to be amended in its discretion. The court may grant a continuance to enable the objecting party to meet such evidence.

(c) Relation Back of Amendments. An amendment of a pleading relates back to the date of the original pleading when:

(1) the claim or defense asserted in the amended pleading arose out of the conduct, transaction, or occurrence set forth or attempted to be set forth in the original pleading, or

(2) the amendment changes the party or the naming of the party against whom a claim is asserted if the foregoing provision (1) is satisfied and, within the period provided by Rule 4(i) for service of the summons and complaint, the party to be brought in by amendment (A) has received such notice of the institution of the action that the party will not be prejudiced in maintaining a defense on the merits, and (B) knew or should have known that, but for a mistake concerning the identity of the proper party, the action would have been brought against the party.

(d) Supplemental Pleadings. A party may at any time without leave of court file a supplemental pleading setting forth transactions or occurrences or events which have happened since the date of the pleading sought to be supplemented. Where, however, upon motion of an opposing party, the court determines that prejudice would result or the disposition of the cause would be unduly delayed because of the filing of a supplemental pleading, the court may strike such amended pleading or grant a continuance of the proceeding. A party shall plead in response to a supplemental pleading within the time remaining for response to the original pleading or within 20 days after service of the supplemental pleading, whichever period is longer, unless the court otherwise orders.

HISTORY: Amended July 9, 1984, effective September 1, 1984; amended November 8, 1993, effective January 1, 1994; amended February 1, 2001.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 15:

1. Section (a) of Rule 15 marks a substantial change from FRCP 15(a) and is generally in accord with prior Arkansas law. The Committee believed that amendments to pleadings should be allowed in nearly all instances without special permission from the court. The court is, however, given discretion to strike any amendment which would cause prejudice or unduly prolong the disposition of a case. As an alternative to striking an amendment, a continuance could be granted by the trial court. Under prior Arkansas law, trial courts were given broad discretion to permit an amendment to stand. Hogue v. Jennings, 252 Ark. 1009, 481 S.W.2d 752 (1972); Bridgman v. Drilling, 218 Ark. 772, 238 S.W.2d 645 (1951). Generally speaking, it is the intent of this rule that amendments to pleadings should be permitted without leave of the court in all instances unless it can be demonstrated that prejudice or delay would result. To this extent, Rule 15 is more liberal than superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1160 (Repl. 1962) and is certainly more liberal than the Federal Rule.

2. [As amended by Per Curiam, February 26, 1996] Section (b) is identical to FRCP 15(b). It follows prior Arkansas law by permitting amendments to conform to the proof adduced at trial. This rule goes somewhat further, however, by more or less making it mandatory that pleadings be amended to conform to the proof where there has been no objection to such proof. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Fugate, 313 F.2d 788 (C.C.A. 5th, 1963); Bradford Audio Corp. v. Pious, 329 F.2d 67 (C.C.A. 2nd, 1968). (Emphasis added.) Prior Arkansas law granted the trial court considerable discretion to permit pleadings to be amended to conform to the proof where there had been no objection raised. Velda Rose Motel, Inc. v. Eason, 241 Ark. 1041, 411 S.W.2d 502 (1967); Smith v. F. & C. Engineering Co., 225 Ark. 688, 285 S.W.2d 100 (1956). Where a new or different claim or defense was sought to be presented over the objection of the opposing party, the pleadings could not be amended to conform to the proof under prior Arkansas law. Shelton v. Harris, 225 Ark. 855, 286 S.W.2d 20 (1956); O'Guinn Volkswagen, Inc., v. Lawson, 256 Ark. 23, 505 S.W.2d 213 (1974). This rule does liberalize somewhat prior Arkansas law.

3. With the exception of minor wording changes, Section (c) is identical to FRCP 15(c). The question of relation back of pleadings normally does not arise unless the statute of limitations is involved. Under this and the Federal Rule, an amendment always relates back when it arises out of the conduct, transaction or occurrence set forth in the original pleading. Under prior Arkansas law, the question of whether a pleading related back was determined by whether the amendment asserted a new cause of action against the defendant. If it did, the amended pleading could not stand or relate back. Warmack v. Askew, 97 Ark. 19, 132 S.W. 1013 (1910); Love v. Couch, 181 Ark. 994, 28 S.W.2d 1067 (1930).

4. Section (c) also permits changing the party against whom a claim is asserted if the party sought to be brought in received such notice of the action that he would not be prejudiced if brought in and knew or should have known that but for mistake, he would have been made a defendant initially. Prior Arkansas law was somewhat more prohibitive in that where there was a substantial change in identity of the defendant so as to amount to a change of defendants, the amendment would not be permitted to relate back. Davis v. Chrisp, 159 Ark. 335, 252 S.W. 606 (1923); Arkansas Land & Lumber Co. v. Davis, 155 Ark. 549, 244 S.W. 730 (1922).

5. Omitted from Section (c) is the second paragraph of FRCP 15(c). Such provision is unnecessary under Arkansas practice.

6. Section (d) is identical to Section (d) of the Federal Rule. It is in accord with superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1161 (Repl. 1962). Its purpose is simply to allow a pleading to be supplemented to reflect facts which develop after the filing of the original pleading.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1984 Amendment:

Rule 15(a) is amended so that the first sentence takes account of the amendment to Rule 12(h)(1) making it clear that a waivable defense may not be raised by amendment "at any time."

The Rule is also amended to enlarge from 10 to 20 days the time to respond to an amended pleading.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1993 Amendment:

Subdivision (c) is revised to prevent parties against whom claims are made from taking unfair advantage of otherwise inconsequential pleading errors to sustain a limitations defense. The changes are based on the 1991 amendments to the corresponding federal rule.

Paragraph (1) is simply a restatement of the general "relation back" principle and works no change in the law. However, paragraph (2) effectively overturns the interpretation that had been given FRCP 15 with respect to a misnamed defendant. See Schiavone v. Fortune, 477 U.S. 21 (1986), cited with approval in Harvill v. Community Methodist Hospital Ass'n, 302 Ark. 39, 786 S.W.2d 577 (1986), and Southwestern Bell Tel. Co. v. Blastech, Inc., 313 Ark. 202, 852 S.W.2d 813 (1993). Under the revised rule, an intended defendant who is notified of an action with the period allowed by Rule 4(i) for service of a summons and complaint may not defeat the action on account of a defect in the pleading with respect to the defendant's name, provided that the requirements of clauses (A) and (B) have been satisfied. If the notice is received within the period specified in Rule 4(i), including an extension granted pursuant to that rule, a complaint may be amended at any time to correct a formal defect such as a misnomer or mis-identification.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2001 Amendment:

Subdivision (d), which governs supplemental pleadings, is amended to make its terms parallel with those of subdivision (a), which applies to amended pleadings. By virtue of the amendment, permission of the court to file a supplemental pleading is no longer necessary, although the opposing party may move to strike the pleading on grounds of prejudice or undue delay. Also, a response to the supplemental pleading is now required. Under the original version of the rule, a response was to be filed only if the court "deem[ed] it advisable."

CASE NOTES

In General.

An amended complaint, unless it adopts and incorporates the original complaint, supersedes the original complaint. Edward J. DeBartolo Corp. v. Cartwright, 323 Ark. 573, 916 S.W.2d 114 (1996).

Where trustees never filed a second-amended complaint, they could not now raise the argument on appeal that the trial court erred in not permitting an amendment pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule. Giles v. Harrington, Miller, Neihouse & Krug, 362 Ark. 338, 208 S.W.3d 197 (2005).

Although plaintiff lacked standing to sue when she filed the original complaint because she had not yet been appointed the administrator of decedent's estate and she was not the sole heir, upon being appointed administrator six days later, she was deemed to be a new party when she filed the amended complaint; further, the filing of an amended complaint by a new party constituted the commencement of a new suit, initiated prior to the expiration of the statute of limitations period and, thus, there was no need for the suit to "relate back" to the original complaint filed under subsection (c) of this rule. Hackelton v. Malloy, 364 Ark. 469, 221 S.W.3d 353 (2006).

Under Ark. Sup. Ct. P. Reg. Prof'l Conduct § 13, the amendment of disbarment petitions was governed by subsection (a) of this rule, and the denial of the attorney's motions to strike amended pleadings was properly denied. Ligon v. Walker, 2009 Ark. 136, 297 S.W.3d 1 (2009).

Additional Matters Preserved.

Where no mention was made of prejudice or undue delay caused by the amended complaint in respondent's motion to dismiss on other grounds, the matter pled in the amendment was properly preserved. Deutsch v. Tillery, 309 Ark. 401, 833 S.W.2d 760 (1992).

Where appellant did not request a continuance or demonstrate that she would be prejudiced or that undue delay would result if the court should allow the amendment, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that the amended answer did not prejudice appellant. Turner v. Stewart, 330 Ark. 134, 952 S.W.2d 156 (1997).

Amendment Allowed If No Prejudice.

Regardless of the nature of the action, a party should be allowed to amend a pleading at any time as long as it does not prejudice his adversary. Milne v. Milne, 266 Ark. 900, 587 S.W.2d 229 (Ct. App. 1979).

There was no error in permitting an amendment seeking punitive damages two days before trial, where the trial court found neither prejudice nor delay would be caused by the amendment. Olson v. Riddle, 280 Ark. 535, 659 S.W.2d 759 (1983).

A party should be allowed to amend his pleadings absent proof of prejudice by the opposing party, and the failure of the opposing party to seek a continuance is a factor to be considered in determining whether prejudice was shown. Webb v. Workers' Comp. Comm'n, 286 Ark. 399, 692 S.W.2d 233 (1985).

Amendments to pleadings should be allowed in nearly all instances without special permission from the court except where on motion of an opposing party the court determines either that prejudice would result or that disposition of the cause would be unduly delayed; in those instances the court may strike such amended pleadings or grant a continuance of the proceedings. Odaware v. Robertson Aerial-AG, Inc., 13 Ark. App. 285, 683 S.W.2d 624 (1985).

Where there was no determination of undue delay or prejudice, trial court erred in dismissing amended answer. Harris v. First State Bank, 22 Ark. App. 37, 732 S.W.2d 501 (1987).

A party should be allowed to amend absent prejudice. An important consideration in determining prejudice is whether the party opposing the motion will have a fair opportunity to defend after the amendment. Pineview Farms, Inc. v. A.O. Smith Harvestore, Inc., 298 Ark. 78, 765 S.W.2d 924 (1989).

Where defendant's original counterclaim alleged that plaintiff had expressly guaranteed that combine would properly harvest defendants crops, which combine failed to do, and then amended counterclaim to allege that same sale of combine and plaintiff's conduct surrounding it breached implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for a particular purpose, amendment related back and was not subject to statute of limitations because amended counterclaim arose out of same transaction described in original counterclaim, defendant relied upon the same allegations underlying original counterclaim for breach of express warranty, and because original and amended counterclaim were so closely related there was no undue delay or prejudice. Woods v. Hopmann Mach., Inc., 301 Ark. 134, 782 S.W.2d 363 (1990).

Subsection (a) of this rule clearly provides that a party may amend the pleadings at any time without leave of the court. Wiseman v. Batchelor, 315 Ark. 85, 864 S.W.2d 248 (1993).

Trial court properly granted summary judgment in favor of a medical center in a medical malpractice claim on the basis of charitable immunity because the medical center did not waive the defense of charitable immunity by failing to assert the defense in its original answer and the patients failed to properly challenge the assertion of the defense by the filing of a motion alleging prejudice. Under subsection (a) of this rule, with the exception of defenses mentioned in Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(h)(1), a party could amend its pleadings at any time without leave of the trial court unless, upon motion of the opposing party, the trial court determined that prejudice would result; while charitable immunity was an affirmative defense that had to be specifically asserted in a responsive pleading under Ark. R. Civ. P. 8, it was not a defense listed in Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(h)(1) and thus could be raised in an amended answer under this rule. Seth v. St. Edward Mercy Med. Ctr., 375 Ark. 413, 291 S.W.3d 179 (2009).

Trial court misapplied subsection (a) of this rule by dismissing a judgment creditor's amended complaint prior to the trial court's entry of judgment under Ark. R. Civ. P. 58 on its prior oral ruling granting summary judgment to the judgment debtor and her transferees. The trial court also erred in denying the creditor's motion under Ark. R. Civ. P. 59. Mullen v. Shockley, 2009 Ark. App. 855 (2009).

Trial court properly permitted a purchaser to introduce evidence of expenses for repairs the purchaser made to the property under an unjust enrichment theory as a mortgagee did not immediately request a continuance under subsection (b) of this rule; the complaint sought return of the money the purchaser had spent on the repairs; and there was no prejudice in the admission of the evidence. Deutsche Bank Nat'l Trust Co. v. Austin, 2011 Ark. App. 531, 385 S.W.3d 381 (2011).

Amendments to Conform to Evidence.

Where the plaintiff did not plead misrepresentation of income from the property as a ground for relief in his complaint, but where there was a great deal of testimony taken at the trial concerning this issue, and when defendant objected to its introduction, the court repeatedly overruled the objection and admitted the evidence, the trial court thus considered the pleadings amended to conform to the proof, which was the proper thing to do under these circumstances. Hegg v. Dickens, 270 Ark. 641, 606 S.W.2d 106 (Ct. App. 1980).

Where insurance company pleaded affirmative defense of fraudulent misrepresentation, and sufficient evidence was presented at trial to support an instruction on material misrepresentation, the trial court should have required the insurance company to amend its pleading to conform to the facts proved under this rule, and the court should have refused the plaintiff's offered instruction which required the insurance company to show fraud. Capitol Old Line

Ins. Co. v. Gorondy, 1 Ark. App. 14, 612 S.W.2d 128 (1981), disapproved, Southern Farm Bureau Life Ins. Co. v. Cowger, 295 Ark. 250, 748 S.W.2d 332 (1988).

Where ex-husband brought action to discontinue support for 18-year-old daughter who had reached majority age, chancellor raised issue of continued support including college expenses, and ex-husband testified about college expenses and voluntary payments he had made toward college expenses, without obligation, it was not abuse of discretion for chancellor to amend the pleadings to conform with the evidence under this rule. Mitchell v. Mitchell, 2 Ark. App. 75, 616 S.W.2d 753 (1981).

Where, from evidence introduced without objection, the jury found the car in question to have been damaged in the sum of $1,092.77, and the court found that the evidence did not show that the insurer was subrogated to a portion of that amount, the court should have allowed the plaintiff to increase the prayer of his complaint to ask for the full amount of the damages found by the jury, as he was the real party in interest and he was entitled to recovery for all the damages to his car. Thompson v. Brown, 5 Ark. App. 111, 633 S.W.2d 382 (1982).

Where on the first day of the residential property purchasers' suit against the vendor builders, the buyers moved to amend their prayer for damages from $20,000 to $40,000, and the sellers did not claim surprise nor ask for a continuance, the trial court did not abuse its discretion when it allowed the pleadings to be amended to conform to the proof. Wingfield v. Page, 278 Ark. 276, 644 S.W.2d 940 (1983).

The trial court in a breach of warranty action did not abuse its discretion in allowing the plaintiff homeowners to amend their pleadings to conform to the proof after both parties had rested and the matter had been submitted to the court for a decision, where the pretrial pleadings put the defendant builder on notice that he would be required to meet a claim that the foundation was not completed in a workmanlike manner according to standard practices and the amendment simply restated the same claim attaching a different label to it. Bailey v. Matthews, 279 Ark. 117, 649 S.W.2d 175 (1983).

Where the insured was prepared to defend against the occupancy clause in an insurance policy, the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to allow the pleadings to be amended to conform to the evidence where the insurer sought to amend the pleadings by his repeated references to lack of surprise or prejudice and by his proffer, although counsel did not specifically announce his desire to have the pleadings conform to the proof. National Sec. Fire & Cas. Co. v. Shaver, 14 Ark. App. 217, 686 S.W.2d 808 (1985).

Where affirmative defense was tried by the parties without objection, amendment of the pleadings to conform to evidence was allowed. Mercer v. Nelson, 293 Ark. 430, 738 S.W.2d 417 (1987).

The chancellor had authority to award alimony in a divorce proceeding even though the issue was not raised in the pleadings where the issue was clearly tried. McKay v. McKay, 66 Ark. App. 268, 989 S.W.2d 560 (1999).

In an action arising from the sale of a used car, the court erred in finding for the plaintiff on the basis of his revocation of acceptance where (1) the plaintiff sought recovery on the basis of fraud, and (2) he presented testimony that the car was nonconforming, but presented no testimony that he revoked his acceptance of the car. Coran Auto Sales v. Harris, 74 Ark. App. 145, 45 S.W.3d 856 (2001).

In litigation over a construction contract, the trial court indicated that it viewed the complaint as one requesting judgment for a debt and a lien which also asked for foreclosure, rather than a breach of contract case, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the construction company to amend its complaint to conform to the proof where neither a continuance was requested nor a demonstration of any prejudice was shown. Hickman v. Kralicek Realty & Constr. Co., 84 Ark. App. 61, 129 S.W.3d 317 (2003).

Although this rule permits an amendment to the pleadings when the parties have implicitly agreed to the introduction of certain evidence, there was no such agreement in the instant case; the sellers made their position clear by filing their motion to strike the buyer's defense of fraud on the morning of trial, such that the parties' fundamental disagreement on the matter and absence of implied consent could not have been more apparent at trial. Ison Props., LLC v. Wood, 85 Ark. App. 443, 156 S.W.3d 742 (2004).

Plaintiff substantially complied with Ark. R. Civ. P. 9(g) where the pleadings were amended to conform to the proof by presenting plaintiff's expert economist's summary-judgment affidavit and trial testimony; moreover, defendant failed to object to the expert's testimony at any time on the basis that plaintiff had failed to specifically plead its lost profits and it was not until defendant's oral motion at trial, seeking to limit plaintiff to the damages mentioned in its complaint and amended complaint, that the issue of lost profits not being specifically pled by plaintiff was raised. Neste Polyester, Inc. v. Burnett, 92 Ark. App. 413, 214 S.W.3d 882 (2005).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow an individual to amend his pleadings under subsection (b) of this rule to include a counterclaim for a prescriptive easement because the proof did not establish a prescriptive easement, given that there was no evidence of overt, adverse use for the statutory period under § 18-61-101. Myers v. Yingling, 372 Ark. 523, 279 S.W.3d 83 (2008).

Order modifying a visitation decree by removing a provision restricting the father's visitation to times when he would be physically present was upheld where the issue of modification of the visitation order was tried by consent of the parties under subsection (b) of this rule; although the mother did not file a petition to modify visitation, she never objected at trial or on appeal that the modification was entered without petition or that consideration of the modification was improper in a contempt proceeding. Brown v. Ashcraft, 101 Ark. App. 217, 272 S.W.3d 859 (2008).

Neighbors in a boundary line dispute could properly assert the doctrine of boundary by acquiescence in their post-trial brief because the neighbors had submitted evidence on the issue and presented their argument in a post-trial brief without objection from the adjoining landowner. Barnett v. Gomance, 2010 Ark. App. 109, 377 S.W.3d 317 (2010).

Appellant did not seek a continuance or show prejudice by the trial court's ruling to permit the pleadings to conform to the proof, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion. Gregory v. Gregory, 2013 Ark. App. 57, 425 S.W.3d 845 (2013).

Amending the pleadings to conform to the evidence was not error where the landowners were not prejudiced by the timing of the motion to amend, and no other witnesses could have shed light on whether the parties had recognized a fence as the boundary between their properties. Cross v. Cross, 2016 Ark. App. 327, 497 S.W.3d 712 (2016) (substituted op. on reh'g).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the husband to orally amend his pleadings to conform with the evidence where the wife had not met her burden of proving material prejudice or a manifest abuse of discretion, and although she objected to amending the pleadings, she did not ask for a continuance because of surprise or possible prejudice. Honeycutt v. Honeycutt, 2017 Ark. App. 113, 516 S.W.3d 750 (2017).

There was no manifest abuse of discretion by the circuit court in denying appellants' motion to amend the pleadings to conform to the evidence because appellants failed not only to list the affirmative defense of statute of limitations in their response to appellee's complaint, they also failed to raise it throughout the pendency of the case, raising it for the first time at the end of the trial; moreover, appellee objected at the time of the motion and never impliedly consented to arguing the issue of the statute of limitations. Middleton v. Middleton, 2018 Ark. App. 237, 548 S.W.3d 199 (2018).

Appellate court could not say that the circuit court abused its discretion in permitting amendment of the pleadings to conform to the evidence when the mother alleged additional grounds to show there had been a change of circumstances warranting modification of child support. Morgan v. Morgan, 2018 Ark. App. 316, 552 S.W.3d 10 (2018).

—Express or Implied Consent.

Where trial court struck the amended complaint of the plaintiffs with respect to the issue of whether a majority of voters in an improvement district had consented to the formation of the district if certain lands dedicated to public use were excluded from the computation, but the trial court decided the issue, the issue could be considered tried by the implied consent of the defendant, under subsection (b) of this rule and thus was properly considered on appeal. Ketcher v. Mayor of N. Little Rock, 2 Ark. App. 315, 621 S.W.2d 12 (1981).

Issue of material misrepresentation did not become an issue in trial by either the implied or the express consent of parties. Brooks v. Town & Country Mut. Ins. Co., 294 Ark. 173, 741 S.W.2d 264 (1987).

Although there were no pleadings to support the relief awarded the appellee, the appellee was permitted to introduce a substantial amount of testimony regarding the unpled issue without objection by the appellant; the issue was tried by the implied consent of the parties and the pleadings should therefore be treated as amended to conform to the proof, pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule. Williams ex rel. Tucker v. Titterington, 46 Ark. App. 322, 881 S.W.2d 226 (1994).

Even though liability insurance carrier did not specifically request reimbursement of the attorney's fees it had expended on behalf of insured driver, ample evidence was introduced by the litigants for the trial court to treat the issue as being tried by the express or implied consent of the parties. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Carolina Cas. Ins. Co., 52 Ark. App. 35, 914 S.W.2d 324 (1996).

Consent to conforming the pleadings to the proof will not be implied merely because evidence relevant to a properly pled issue incidentally tends to establish an unpled one. Heartland Community Bank v. Holt, 68 Ark. App. 30, 3 S.W.3d 694 (1999).

Although wife did not plead her claim for alimony properly, where it was apparent on the record that throughout the proceeding the parties litigated the case with the full knowledge of wife's desire for alimony, the court erred in granting husband's motion to set aside the award of alimony. McKay v. McKay, 340 Ark. 171, 8 S.W.3d 525 (2000).

Circuit court did not err in denying appellants' motion to amend the pleadings to assert lack of standing because they did not attempt to amend the pleadings to conform to the alleged evidence of standing until 18 months after the complaint was filed, 10 months after the trial on the matter, and three months after the judgment was entered; moreover, appellee never raised the issue of standing, and the issue was not expressly or impliedly consented to. Middleton v. Middleton, 2018 Ark. App. 237, 548 S.W.3d 199 (2018).

Construction.

The phrase "at any time" in the first sentence of subsection (a) of this rule does not stand alone; subsection (a) clearly contemplates that the opposing party may object and the court may strike the amended pleading. Stoltz v. Friday, 325 Ark. 399, 926 S.W.2d 438 (1996).

Where a wrongful death complaint was a nullity because it was not brought by all of the heirs at law, this rule and Ark. R. Civ. P. 17 did not apply to allow the addition of the half-brother as a party plaintiff after the limitations period had run. Andrews v. Air Evac EMS, Inc., 86 Ark. App. 161, 170 S.W.3d 303 (2004).

Counterclaims.

Although subsection (b) of this rule has been interpreted as permitting a defendant to raise a counterclaim, even after judgment, the cases permitting it have done so where it was clear all the relevant evidence was in the record or the issue was clearly one the parties contemplated as being before the court. Shinn v. First Nat'l Bank, 270 Ark. 774, 606 S.W.2d 154 (Ct. App. 1980).

Where defendant filed an answer and pleaded affirmative defenses, but never filed a counterclaim against the plaintiff, and the defendant's attorney did not move to have the pleadings conform to the proof, the chancellor erroneously awarded the defendant a money judgment. Hempel v. Bragg, 313 Ark. 486, 856 S.W.2d 293 (1993).

Because taxpayer's claims arose out of the same transaction that was the subject matter of the original action, the taxpayer's claim was really a compulsory counterclaim, pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 13(a), that should have been raised earlier; even assuming that subsection (b) of this rule was applicable and the claims should have been considered an amended pleading, the rule only permitted amendments to conform to pleadings when issues were tried by express or implied consent of the parties, and the issues raised by the taxpayer's claims were never so tried and, thus, the trial court did not err in dismissing the claims. Jones v. Double 'D' Props., 352 Ark. 39, 98 S.W.3d 405 (2003).

Trial court did not err in striking companies' counterclaim that sounded in legal malpractice under this rule and Ark. R. Civ. P. 13 because the prejudice to the lawyers would have been great if the counterclaim was allowed to go forward as it was filed 33 minutes before trial was to begin. Nameloc, Inc. v. Jack, Lyon &

Jones, P.A., 362 Ark. 175, 208 S.W.3d 129 (2005).

Defenses.

This rule does not require a defendant to reallege its defenses. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Campbell, 315 Ark. 136, 865 S.W.2d 643 (1993).

Condominium seller did not waive the affirmative defense of release because he raised it in an amended answer prior to trial pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 8(c), to which the buyer did not object, and evidence regarding the release defense was received without objection at the trial. Siegel v. Halley, 2010 Ark. App. 106 (2010).

Discovery Matters.

Answers to interrogatories, as well as any other information disclosed during discovery, are not a pleading or a defense to a pleading; however, such information may give rise to amendments to pleadings. National Sec. Fire & Cas. Co. v. Shaver, 14 Ark. App. 217, 686 S.W.2d 808 (1985).

This rule permits amendments to pleadings and amendments to conform to the proof, but it vests broad discretion in the trial court to allow or refuse to allow such amendments and the exercise of that discretion will be sustained unless it is manifestly abused. Miller v. Jasinski, 17 Ark. App. 131, 705 S.W.2d 442 (1986).

Discretion of Court.

In a personal injury suit resulting from the collision of the plaintiffs' car with the defendant's truck which was transporting a house on the highway, the trial court erred in allowing the plaintiff midway through the trial to submit to the jury a highway commission regulation which imposed strict liability on persons transporting houses on the highway, since the complaint was based on various allegations of negligence and the defendant had prepared its case on this theory; accordingly, the defendant's preparations for trial would be materially different in the two situations so that the change of theory was prejudicial and unfair. T.H. Epperson & Son v. Robinson, 274 Ark. 142, 622 S.W.2d 668 (1981).

Although this rule permits amendments to pleadings "at any time," no hard and fast rule can be defined to limit amendment, so that the trial judge's discretion must largely determine when it becomes improper and prejudicial to permit a new defense to be introduced late in the trial; accordingly, the chancellor did not abuse his discretion in refusing to allow the defendant to amend his answer to assert the defenses of limitations and laches where the pleadings had been joined for a year, the plaintiffs were stationed in the military in Alaska, all of the parties had testified and the case was close to completion. Wright v. Langdon, 274 Ark. 258, 623 S.W.2d 823 (1981).

This rule vests broad discretion in the trial court to permit amendment to pleadings and the exercise of that discretion by the trial court will be sustained unless it is manifestly abused. Wingfield v. Page, 278 Ark. 276, 644 S.W.2d 940 (1983).

The trial court is vested with broad discretion in allowing or denying amendments. Kay v. Economy Fire & Cas. Co., 284 Ark. 11, 678 S.W.2d 365 (1984); Cawood v. Smith, 310 Ark. 619, 839 S.W.2d 208 (1992).

Absent express or implied consent, the question of whether pleadings may be amended to conform to the evidence is within the sound discretion of the trial court. Pineview Farms, Inc. v. A.O. Smith Harvestore, Inc., 298 Ark. 78, 765 S.W.2d 924 (1989).

No abuse of discretion in denial of request to amend pleadings. Hubbard v. Jackson, 298 Ark. 93, 766 S.W.2d 2 (1989); Cawood v. Smith, 310 Ark. 619, 839 S.W.2d 208 (1992).

Where plaintiffs violated § 16-114-205 by specifying their damages rather than alleging a general claim for damages, the trial court misapplied subsection (a) of this rule, and abused its discretion by striking plaintiffs' amended complaint, for an unspecified amount of damages, and dismissing the original complaint without prejudice, where defendant did not show that the amendment caused any prejudice or undue delay. Travis v. Houk, 307 Ark. 84, 817 S.W.2d 207 (1991).

In order to secure a reversal of a trial judge's ruling under this rule, the defendant must show that the trial court manifestly abused his discretion in allowing a plaintiff to amend her pleading to conform to the proof. John Cheeseman Trucking, Inc. v. Dougan, 313 Ark. 229, 853 S.W.2d 278 (1993).

Trial judges may properly deny leave to amend if the proposed changes would not save the action. Thompson v. Dunn, 319 Ark. 6, 889 S.W.2d 31 (1994).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting a non-specific motion to permit the plaintiffs to amend their complaint to conform to proof presented at trial of mutual mistake with regard to a contract and deed, notwithstanding the defendant's assertion that he had no notice of the mutual mistake issue, where proof at trial clearly raised such issue. Hope v. Hope, 333 Ark. 324, 969 S.W.2d 633 (1998).

The trial judge abused his discretion by denying an amendment to pleadings to conform to the proof on constructive fraud; however, the error was harmless because the plaintiff did not prevail on either a claim of fraud or constructive fraud. Farm Bureau Policy Holders & Members v. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 335 Ark. 285, 984 S.W.2d 6 (1998).

Where appellants did not raise the issue of fraudulent concealment until the filing of the fifth amended complaint, almost nine months after the action commenced, and counsel for appellants conceded in oral argument that they were aware of the alleged concealment of records but failed to raise it at an earlier time because it did not appear to be necessary to raise that issue, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in striking the amended complaint. Davenport v. Lee, 348 Ark. 148, 72 S.W.3d 85 (2002).

In an unlawful-detainer action, a store owner was entitled to back rental and treble damages pursuant to § 18-60-309(b)(2) because the trial court did not abuse its discretion under subsection (b) of this rule in refusing to dismiss the owner's treble-damages claim, which was pled the day of trial. It was apparent from the commencement of the proceeding that the property involved was commercial. Mendez v. Aguilar, 2010 Ark. App. 268 (2010).

In a paternity and child-support case, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the father to amend his answer to the mother's counterclaim days before trial to assert the affirmative defenses of estoppel, laches, payment, setoff, waiver, and satisfaction. The mother did not file a motion objecting to the allegedly untimely amendment, it was unclear whether she actually objected to the amendment, and she did not accept a continuance when it was offered by the court or demonstrate that prejudice or undue delay would result if the court allowed the amendment. Szwedo v. Cyrus, 2019 Ark. App. 23, 570 S.W.3d 484 (2019).

Doctrine of Relation Back.

—Election Contests.

—Statute of Limitations.

It is settled that subsection (c) of this rule is to be liberally construed in allowing amendments, but the liberal construction applicable to this rule is limited when prejudice to the adverse party is affirmatively shown; the doctrine of relation back should not be allowed when it operates to cut off a substantial right or defense to new matter introduced by the amendment although connected with the original cause of action. Ozark Kenworth, Inc. v. Neidecker, 283 Ark. 196, 672 S.W.2d 899 (1984).

Where a charity concert promoter amended the complaint to allege fraud and negligence in a suit against a booking agent when a promised performer failed to appear at a benefit concert, the amendments related back and there could have been no statute of limitations of objection to the amendment without a showing of undue delay or prejudice. Jim Halsey Co. v. Bonar, 284 Ark. 461, 683 S.W.2d 898 (1985).

Relation back is dependent upon proof of four factors: (1) the basic claim must have arisen out of the conduct set forth in the original pleading; (2) the party to be brought in must have received such notice that it will not be prejudiced in maintaining a defense; (3) that party must or should have known that, but for a mistake concerning identity, the action would have been brought against it; and (4) the second and third requirements must have been fulfilled within the prescribed limitations period. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co. v. Blastech, Inc., 313 Ark. 202, 852 S.W.2d 813 (1993).

Patient failed to comply with the strictures of the rule so as to permit the amended complaint concerning the John Doe defendant to relate back to the time of the filing of the first complaint; the patient was aware that the nurse could have and should have been specifically named as a defendant from the outset of the case, and the failure to name the nurse in the original complaint was not a mere mistake of identity. Stephens v. Petrino, 350 Ark. 268, 86 S.W.3d 836 (2002).

Cause of action against a subcontractor with regard to a particular job was not saved by the relation back doctrine because there was nothing in the original or amended complaints regarding the subcontractor and the job to allow relation back. Ray & Sons Masonry Contrs., Inc. v. United States Fid. & Guar. Co., 353 Ark. 201, 114 S.W.3d 189 (2003).

Term "heirs at law", as used in § 16-62-102(b), means "beneficiaries", as used in § 16-62-102(d), and a motion to dismiss a wrongful death action was properly granted because two sisters were not named as parties; the doctrine of relation back under this rule did not help because the original complaint was a nullity. Brewer v. Poole, 362 Ark. 1, 207 S.W.3d 458 (2005).

Motion to remand was granted as the complaint for loss of use of personal property, fraud, and unjust enrichment was not a nullity and was subject to amendment under subsection (c) of this rule; the amended complaint related back to the original complaint and, because the action was commenced before the effective date of the Class Action Fairness Act (CAFA), the CAFA did not apply to provide the court with subject matter jurisdiction. Whitehead v. Nautilus Group, Inc., 428 F. Supp. 2d 923 (W.D. Ark. 2006).

Negligence action for a slip and fall was improperly dismissed as being barred by the three-year limitations period of § 16-56-105 because, under this rule, an amendment correcting the name of a wrong owner as defendant related back to the original complaint in that the same allegations were made and the new owner was served within 120 days as set forth in Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(i). Bell v. Jefferson Hosp. Ass'n, 96 Ark. App. 283, 241 S.W.3d 276 (2006).

Even though a writ of execution named an original creditor instead of an assignee, a trial court did not err in finding that the assignee's status as the real party in interest related back to the issuance of the writ because the assignee's efforts arose out of the same conduct, transaction, or occurrence that existed when the original writ of execution was issued. Loooney v. Raby, 100 Ark. App. 326, 268 S.W.3d 345 (2007).

In an action arising from a rear-end accident, plaintiff driver could not use the relation-back doctrine in subsection (c) of this rule because the 120-day notice requirement of subsection (c) was not met. The court could not assume defendant driver's knowledge of the action, after being named in the amended complaint, from the fact that defendant was related to and lived with the original defendant, the owner of the vehicle. Bennett v. Spaight, 372 Ark. 446, 277 S.W.3d 182 (2008).

Shareholders attempted to cure the deficiency of their original complaint by joining their bankruptcy trustees as parties plaintiff in their amended complaint; however, because the shareholders were not the real parties in interest at the time of either the filing of the original complaint or the filing of the amended complaint under Ark. R. Civ. P. 17(a), the joinder of the bankruptcy trustees in the amended complaint had the effect of substituting entirely new plaintiffs, and this was in the nature of filing a new action and was barred by the statute of limitations, and the circuit judge did not err in finding that their amended complaint did not relate back to the filing of their original complaint, under subsection (c) of this rule. Bibbs v. Cmty. Bank of Benton, 375 Ark. 150, 289 S.W.3d 393 (2008).

Two purchasers lacked standing based on the fact that two bankruptcy trustees should have filed an action against a bank; therefore, the purchasers' original complaint was void ab initio. As a result, an amended complaint adding the trustees did not relate back to the original filing, and the limitations period had expired on claims of breach of the covenant of good faith, breach of fiduciary duty, fraud, conversion, unjust enrichment, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. Bibbs v. Cmty. Bank, 101 Ark. App. 462, 278 S.W.3d 564, aff'd, Bibbs v. Cmty. Bank of Benton, 375 Ark. 150, 289 S.W.3d 393 (2008).

Arkansas Supreme Court's decision in a prior case caused the estate administrator to make an understandable mistake, and not allowing subsection (c) of this rule to apply would have an unfair and prejudicial result; the administrator's amended complaint related back to his original timely complaint under subsection (c) and as a result, summary judgment as to the medical center's insurer was reversed and remanded. Jackson v. Sparks Reg'l Med. Ctr., 375 Ark. 533, 294 S.W.3d 1 (2009).

Son, a foreign administrator of his mother's estate, was subject to the requirements for domiciliary personal representatives found in §§ 28-48-101 through 28-48-109. Because the son had not been appointed administrator of his mother's estate in any state at the time he filed his original complaint for trespass and conversion of timber, he did not have standing to sue; because the complaint was a nullity, a second complaint could not relate back under subsection (c) of this rule. Travis Lumber Co. v. Deichman, 2009 Ark. 299, 319 S.W.3d 239 (2009).

Where a mother and father timely filed wrongful death and survival claims regarding their stillborn child and subsequently filed an amended complaint after the statute of limitations had expired that added the mother in her capacity as the personal representative of their children's estate, because the original complaint was filed by parties without standing, it was a nullity; as such, the amended complaint could not relate back to rescue the claims from the operation of the statute of limitations, and the health care providers' motion for summary judgment on the basis that the claims were barred by the two-year statute of limitations was properly granted. Dachs v. Hendrix, 2009 Ark. 542, 354 S.W.3d 95 (2009).

Subsection (c) of this rule did not apply and the estate administrator's claims were barred by the statute of limitations, because the administrator's error in failing to name the insurer in the original complaint was purely due to a misunderstanding of the direct-action statute (§ 23-79-210) and not because she did not have the identity of the insurance company. Glass v. Saline County Med. Ctr., 2012 Ark. App. 525, 423 S.W.3d 618 (2012).

Circuit court erred in granting an estate's motion for summary judgment because, although the plaintiff was not aware of the defendant's death, she named the defendant's estate as a John Doe defendant, the statute of limitations was tolled where record demonstrated that the identity of the tortfeasor, the defendant's estate, was unknown to the plaintiff, and the requirements for relation back of an amendment were met. Berryhill v. Synatzske, 2014 Ark. 169, 432 S.W.3d 637 (2014).

Although plaintiff's mistake in naming a retailer in the original slip-and-fall complaint may have been understandable given the fictitious-name registrations, the retailer was properly granted summary judgment where plaintiff was informed that another entity was the proper defendant, she failed to act on that information, and the retailer had done nothing to enhance plaintiff's belief that she had sued the proper party. Law v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 2018 Ark. App. 352, 553 S.W.3d 171 (2018).

In a medical malpractice action, a determination of whether Ark. Code Ann. § 16-56-125 applied was unnecessary because even if it did, the patient failed to meet the requirements of Ark. R. Civ. P. 15(c) where she failed to show that the members of the patient-treatment team had timely notice such that they would not have been prejudiced in defending against the suit. Specifically, the amended complaint, although filed within the 120 days required by the rule, was answered outside the 120 days, there were no other facts indicating they had timely notice, and under the reasoning of case law, the court could not presume that they had notice because their employer had notice. Freeman v. Conway Reg'l Med. Ctr., 2020 Ark. App. 488, 612 S.W.3d 193 (2020).

—Election Contests.

A complaint contesting a special election which alleged that the proposed change in city government was an initiated procedure and was therefore subject to the provisions of Ark. Const., Amend. 7, could not be amended 44 days after certification of the election to allege the issue had been submitted to the voters under an improper ballot title, because election contests are not subject to subsection (c) of this rule, and, under § 14-38-113, the contestant is limited to the grounds set out in his original complaint, and those grounds cannot be enlarged by subsequent amendment not made within the time required by the statute for contesting. Hanson v. Garland County Election Comm'n, 289 Ark. 367, 712 S.W.2d 288 (1986).

—Statute of Limitations.

Where an amendment related back to the time of the filing of the original timely complaint, the statute of limitations did not bar the amended claim. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co. v. Blastech, Inc., 313 Ark. 202, 852 S.W.2d 813 (1993).

When an amendment changes the party against whom the claim is asserted or adds a party after the statute of limitations has run, it may relate back to the time of filing of the original complaint. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co. v. Blastech, Inc., 313 Ark. 202, 852 S.W.2d 813 (1993).

An amended complaint, which added the defendant's insurer as a party, did not relate back and, therefore, the plaintiffs' claim against the insurer was barred by the statute of limitations because it did not appear that the insurer knew that its omission from the original complaint was a mistake of identity as to the proper party. George v. Jefferson Hosp. Ass'n, 337 Ark. 206, 987 S.W.2d 710 (1999).

Where the Boy Scouts of America failed to inform parents and their injured child about the BSA's insurance coverage and parents failed to include insurer in the suit before the statute of limitations ran, notice was imputed to the insurer; thus, under the circumstances, the second amended complaint related back to the filing of the original complaint and was not barred by the statute of limitations. Low v. Ins. Co. of N. Am., 364 Ark. 427, 220 S.W.3d 670 (2005).

Although the trustees' original complaint and subsequent amendments all related to the same conduct alleged as a trespass against their neighbors, the substitution of the parties in subsequent pleadings did not relate back to the date of the original complaint under this rule as it was not understandable that the trustees or their counsel could have been mistaken about the differing and distinct identities of the trustees as individual landowners, their son as landowner, and their family trust as landowners. As such, the trial court properly granted summary judgment in favor of the neighbors. Bryant v. Hendrix, 375 Ark. 200, 289 S.W.3d 402 (2008).

Motion for Restitution.

Where a tort judgment in favor of the plaintiffs was reversed, but where, during pendency of the appeal, the judgment was not superseded and the plaintiffs collected $7,681.41 by garnishments, on remand the trial judge was right in treating defendant's motion for restitution as a motion for judgment and granting relief, and there was no reason for the trial judge to delay the award until a retrial merely to permit a possible set-off against any judgment that might be recovered by the plaintiffs. Lowe v. Morrison, 270 Ark. 668, 606 S.W.2d 569 (1980).

New Grounds.

There is no reason why pleadings in a divorce action cannot be amended to allege grounds for divorce that have arisen since the original action was commenced. Price v. Price, 29 Ark. App. 212, 780 S.W.2d 342 (1989).

Trial court did not err under subsection (a) of this rule in striking an amended complaint, which included a new pre-death claim that was not pled in an original medical malpractice complaint; while the administratrix of a patient's estate described the patient being dropped in her deposition, she did not mention any conscious pain and suffering by the patient in her deposition testimony. Neal v. Sparks Reg'l Med. Ctr., 2012 Ark. 328, 422 S.W.3d 116 (2012).

Prejudice and Undue Delay.

The rule does not require a finding of prejudice or undue delay when a party has merely filed an unnecessary motion seeking to amend. Schmidt v. McIlroy Bank & Trust, 306 Ark. 28, 811 S.W.2d 281 (1991).

Where sufficient evidence existed to show that defendant had notice of the suit when it was filed, it became incumbent upon the defendant to show how it might be prejudiced in maintaining a defense. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co. v. Blastech, Inc., 313 Ark. 202, 852 S.W.2d 813 (1993).

Although the striking of an amendment to a complaint resulted in a loss of the claim that a conversion vote to convert from an association to a public water authority did not pass by the requisite majority, the trial court did not abuse its discretion since allowing the new allegations so close to trial would have resulted in prejudice. Williams v. Brushy Island Pub. Water Auth., 368 Ark. 219, 243 S.W.3d 903 (2006).

In a company's action against a debtor to recover the balance due on a credit card account, the trial court erred in striking the company's amended complaint pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule where no new cause of action was pled; no delay was needed to allow the debtor to become acquainted with the substance of the amendment. Cavalry SPV, LLC v. Anderson, 99 Ark. App. 309, 260 S.W.3d 331 (2007).

Father's due process rights were not violated when a trial court allowed the Arkansas Department of Health and Human Services to amend a termination of parental rights petition on the day of the hearing to reflect that the child had been in its custody for 12 months or longer where the father was not prejudiced; the amendment was proper under subsection (a) of this rule. Smith v. Ark. Dep't of Health & Human Servs., 100 Ark. App. 74, 264 S.W.3d 559 (2007).

In a nursing home negligence action, although appellants failed to attach an arbitration agreement to their initial answer, a circuit court erred by striking appellants' amended answer in which the agreement was attached because appellants had attached the agreement to their motion to compel, which was filed two months before the amended answer, and there was no prejudice to appellee. Advocat, Inc. v. Heide, 2010 Ark. App. 826, 378 S.W.3d 779 (2010).

Appellants failed to show that the circuit court erred in allowing appellees to amend their complaint, because appellants had not shown that they were prejudiced in any way by the amendment seeking partition; appellants did not assert that their trial preparation was changed in any way because of the amendment or that the amendment somehow delayed the resolution of the dispute. Peterson v. Davis, 2012 Ark. App. 166 (2012).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying appellant's motion to strike the amended complaint, as he failed to show that he was prejudiced by the filing; nothing showed that the amendment prevented him from having a fair chance to defend against it, and he knew before trial that appellee was seeking equitable remedies. Grinnell v. Garnet Real Estate LLC, 2013 Ark. App. 273, 427 S.W.3d 717 (2013).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in striking the owners' third amended complaint filed three days before the summary judgment hearing; this rule does not require a written motion to strike and the trial court found that the late filing of the amended complaint was prejudicial to the property owners' association board because it would deny the board the right to address all claims and causes of action asserted by the owners at the scheduled hearing. Orintas v. Point Lookout Prop. Owners Ass'n Bd. of Dirs., 2015 Ark. App. 648, 476 S.W.3d 174 (2015).

Purpose.

The purpose of subsection (c) of this rule is to avoid dismissal on technical grounds if the added defendant received notice of the litigation before the statute of limitations expired. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co. v. Blastech, Inc., 313 Ark. 202, 852 S.W.2d 813 (1993).

Res Judicata.

On remand from the appellate court, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in not allowing appellants to amend their pleadings based on its conclusion that res judicata applied to the appellate court's earlier decision. O'Dell v. Rickett, 92 Ark. App. 364, 214 S.W.3d 301 (2005).

Ruling of Court.

Although the chancellor did not specifically rule on defendant's motion to amend his pleading to include a statute of limitations defense, given the extensive discussion of this defense at the hearing, it was clear from his actions, if not his words, that the chancellor considered the pleadings to be amended. King v. State, Office of Child Support Enforcement, 58 Ark. App. 298, 952 S.W.2d 180 (1997).

Substitution of Parties.

In action for real estate commission where parties five days before trial filed petition asking that they be substituted as parties plaintiff in the suit stating that they were real estate brokers licensed to do business in Arkansas, that they were the real parties in interest, that their business was not a corporation but a partnership and that it is not a licensed real estate broker in Arkansas and further alleged that no proof would be altered by the substitution and that no delay would result and defendants filed no response to the petition but did make a verbal objection, trial court's action in permitting the substitution of plaintiffs was not an abuse of discretion since there was no doubt from the record that the parties were doing business under the name of United Farm Agency and that one of them took the real estate listing of defendants, that the listing was in writing and did not identify the business as a corporation and defendants failed to show that the substitution of the parties would prejudice them in any way in maintaining their defenses upon the merits and neither the pleading nor the testimony was challenged in any manner by defendants. Storey v. Johnson, 270 Ark. 392, 605 S.W.2d 480 (Ct. App. 1980).

John Doe pleadings pursuant to § 16-56-125 are for actions against a tortfeasor whose identity is unknown. Before a real party can be substituted for a “Doe” defendant in the original complaint, however, such pleadings must meet the requirements of subsection (c) of this rule. Harvill v. Community Methodist Hosp. Ass’n, 302 Ark. 39, 786 S.W.2d 577 (1990).

This rule permitted the amendment of a pleading to relate back to the date of the original pleading and its purpose was not to permit the relation back of an entirely separate lawsuit; thus, where the amended complaint substituted out all of the plaintiffs and put in their place entirely new plaintiffs, it was not an amendment, but rather a new suit. St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co. v. Circuit Court of Craighead County, 348 Ark. 197, 73 S.W.3d 584 (2002).

Where an original wrongful death complaint was a nullity because it was brought by the decedent’s heirs rather than the personal representative, as required by the wrongful-death statute, § 16-62-102, a subsequent amended complaint filed by the administratrix which attempted to bring the estate in as a party was a new suit filed after the statute of limitations period and, therefore, could not relate back under this rule and was barred by statute of limitations. Rhuland v. Fahr, 356 Ark. 382, 155 S.W.3d 2 (2004).

In a wrongful death action, the amended complaint related back to the date of the original pleading because the estate administrator’s mistake was as to the identity of the proper party where at the time the administrator filed her original complaint, she properly named a nursing center and a hospital and, alternatively, named John Doe insurers as defendants, and after the decision in Low, the insurer became the proper party. Downing v. Nursing Ctr., 2010 Ark. 175, 369 S.W.3d 8 (2010).

Supplemental Pleadings.

Where plaintiff added to his complaint that he had been denied relief at his grievance hearing before the civil service commission, the addition was regarded as a supplementary complaint governed by subsection (d) of this rule rather than an amendment under subsection (a) of this rule, because the hearing had been held after plaintiff had filed the original complaint. City of Ft. Smith v. Driggers, 305 Ark. 409, 808 S.W.2d 748 (1991).

Because the amended complaint seeking damages for future earnings was stricken by the court and the appellant has not appealed that action, the trial court correctly found that the appellant lacked standing under his original complaint to pursue his claim for damages. Vickers v. Freyer, 41 Ark. App. 122, 850 S.W.2d 10 (1993).

Because trusts never filed a second-amended complaint in their legal malpractice action against attorneys and a law firm, the trusts could not argue that the trial court erred by not allowing the them to amend their complaint to add the trustees as plaintiffs in their individual capacities pursuant to this rule. Giles v. Harrington, Miller, Neihouse & Krug, 362 Ark. 338, 208 S.W.3d 197 (2005).

Timeliness.

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow insured plaintiffs, to amend their complaint, where the insured attempted to make the amendment after the date beyond which the parties and the trial court had agreed that no pleadings would be filed. Kay v. Economy Fire & Cas. Co., 284 Ark. 11, 678 S.W.2d 365 (1984).

In an action to recover on an open account, the defendant was not entitled to amend his pleadings to allege a set-off on the day of trial where the plaintiff was not prepared to meet that issue, even though the defendant in his answers to interrogatories had referred to the set-off. Odaware v. Robertson Aerial-AG, Inc., 13 Ark. App. 285, 683 S.W.2d 624 (1985).

Pleading, not filed until the day before the trial on the merits was to began, was untimely and would result in prejudice to opposing party. Kinthead v. Union Nat’l Bank, 51 Ark. App. 4, 907 S.W.2d 154 (1995).

Defendant’s time for response should have been calculated from the date of service of the amended complaint, since that date allowed the longer time to respond, and entry of a default judgment prior to the expiration of the response time was improper. Edward J. DeBartolo Corp. v. Cartwright, 323 Ark. 573, 916 S.W.2d 114 (1996).

Trial court did not err in permitting appellees’ adverse possession counterclaim, filed the morning of trial, pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule, where appellants failed to make a showing of prejudice, refused to request a continuance, and indicated that they wished to proceed with trial. Trice v. Trice, 91 Ark. App. 309, 210 S.W.3d 147 (2005).

Trial court erred in denying appellants’ motion to strike a medical center’s amended answer in an action for medical negligence because the amended answer, in which the center stated for the first time that it was entitled to charitable immunity, was prejudicial to appellants; by the time the center filed its amended answer, any attempt to add the center’s insurer as a party-defendant would have been untimely. Neal v. Sparks Reg’l Med. Ctr., 375 Ark. 46, 289 S.W.3d 8 (2008).

While a circuit court erred in fragmenting a jury verdict, and awarding the borrowers attorney fees outside the time limits of Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(e)(2), and post-judgment interest in excess of that authorized by Ark. Const. Art. 19, § 13 [repealed], their amended complaint was properly dismissed as untimely under subsection (a) of this rule. Mfrs. & Traders Trust Co. v. Nickelson, 2011 Ark. App. 557, 386 S.W.3d 41 (2011).

Rule 16. Pre-trial procedure; formulated issues.

In any action, the court may in its discretion direct the attorneys for the parties to appear before it for a conference to consider:

- (1) The simplification of issues;
- (2) The necessity or desirability of amendments to the pleadings;
- (3) The possibility of obtaining admissions of act and of documents which will avoid unnecessary proof;
- (4) The limitation of the number of expert witnesses;
- (5) The advisability of a preliminary reference of issues to a master;
- (6) The possibility of settlement or, pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 16-7-202, the use of extrajudicial procedures, including mediation, to resolve the dispute;
- (7) Such other matters as may aid in the disposition of the action.

The court shall make an order which recites the action taken at the conference, the amendments allowed to the pleadings and the agreements made by the parties as to any of the matters considered and which limits the issues for trial to those not disposed of by admissions or agreements of counsel; and such order, when entered, controls the subsequent course of the action, unless modified at the trial to prevent manifest injustice. The court in its discretion may establish by rule a pre-trial calendar on which actions may be placed for consideration as above provided and may either confine the calendar to jury actions or to non-jury actions or extend it to all actions.

HISTORY: Amended November 18, 1996, effective March 1, 1997.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 16:

1. Rule 16 is essentially the same as FRCP 16. The only change from the Federal Rule is found in Section (5). Under Rule 53, a master is not permitted in jury actions; hence, the minor wording change. This rule is substantially the same as superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-2401 (Repl. 1962), which was patterned after FRCP 16.

2. Omitted from Rule 16 is Section (d) of Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-2401 (Repl. 1962). Motions or applications for the production of documents are matters which should be considered under Rule 34. Also, any unresolved questions concerning documents may be considered by the court and the parties under Rule 16 (3). Overall, this rule should have little effect on prior Arkansas law.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1997 Amendment:

Former paragraph (6) has been redesignated as paragraph (7) and a new paragraph (6) added to mention the possibility of settlement and the use of extrajudicial procedures, such as mediation. The amended rule, based on a similar provision in the Alabama Rules of Civil Procedure, recognizes that pretrial conferences can be profitably used to discuss settlement. Since it eases congested court dockets and results in savings to litigants and the judicial system, settlement should be facilitated at as early a stage in the litigation as possible. However, settlement conferences are not mandatory and would be a waste of time in many cases. In addition to settlement, paragraph (6) refers to exploring the use of alternative means of dispute resolution, such as mediation, in accordance with Ark. Code Ann. § 16-7-202.

CASE NOTESExpert Witness.

Case dismissed with prejudice where plaintiff refused to narrow her list of expert witnesses in violation of an order pursuant to subsection (4) of this rule. Rush v. Fieldcrest Cannon, Inc., 326 Ark. 849, 934 S.W.2d 512 (1996).

In a products liability action against a tire manufacturer, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion by excluding the defense expert's additional opinion disclosed in his deposition shortly before trial — as a sanction under Ark. R. Civ. P. 37 for defendant's failure to disclose the opinion in the earlier report required by the scheduling order; the circuit court also found that the opinion was unreliable under Ark. R. Evid. 702. Hankook Tire Co. v. Philpot, 2020 Ark. App. 316, 603 S.W.3d 614 (2020).

Inapplicable Order.

An order which denied two motions for summary judgment, granted a motion to dismiss, and also dealt with a continuance motion and a motion in limine was not a motion under this rule. Dodson v. Charter Behavioral Health Sys., 335 Ark. 96, 983 S.W.2d 98 (1998).

Pretrial Order Controlling.

Under this rule the pretrial order, when entered, controls the subsequent course of the action and, therefore, where an election of remedy issue was not contained in the trial court's pretrial order, the defendant could not raise the election of remedy issue at the trial even though the defendant had raised the issue as an affirmative defense in its answer. Chappell Chevrolet, Inc. v. Strickland, 4 Ark. App. 108, 628 S.W.2d 25 (1982).

Purpose.

The primary purpose of the scheduling order is to keep litigation moving forward and to advise parties about the deadlines that they are expected to meet; failure to meet the deadlines undermines the goals of the scheduling order and prejudices the other side, which is also subject to discovery deadlines. Rush v. Fieldcrest Cannon, Inc., 326 Ark. 849, 934 S.W.2d 512 (1996).

Rule 23.2. Actions relating to unincorporated associations.

Rule 24. Intervention.

Rule 25. Substitution of parties.

Rule 17. Parties plaintiff and defendant.

(a) Real Party in Interest. Every action shall be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest. An executor, administrator, guardian (conservator), bailee, trustee of an express trust, a party with whom or in whose name a contract has been made for the benefit of another, or the State or any officer thereof or any person authorized by statute to do so may sue in his own name without joining with him the party for whose benefit the action is being brought. No action shall be dismissed on the ground that it is not prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest until a reasonable time has been allowed after objection for ratification of commencement of the action by, or joinder or substitution of, the real party in interest; and such ratification, joinder or substitution shall have the same effect as if the action had been commenced in the name of the real party in interest.

(b) Infants or Incompetent Persons. Whenever an infant or incompetent person has a guardian, the guardian must sue or defend on behalf of the infant or incompetent person. If an infant or incompetent person does not have a duly appointed guardian, he may sue by his next friend or by a guardian ad litem. The court shall appoint a guardian ad litem for an infant or incompetent person not otherwise represented in an action or shall make such other order as it deems proper for the protection of the infant or incompetent. No judgment shall be rendered against an infant or incompetent until after a defense by a guardian or guardian ad litem, who shall be appointed by the court upon application of any interested party and who shall promptly respond to the claim against the infant or incompetent as provided by these Rules.

HISTORY: Amended January 22, 2004.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 17:

1. Rule 17 is a slightly modified version of FRCP 17. Basically this rule deletes various provisions of Sections (a) and (b) of FRCP 17 which have reference to actions brought by the United States or under a federal statute and to diversity of citizenship actions.

2. Section (a) is essentially the same as superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-801 and 27-804 (Repl. 1962). It has generally been held that the real party in interest is the person who can discharge the claim upon which the action is brought and not necessarily the person who is ultimately entitled to the benefit of recovery. House v. Long, 244 Ark. 718, 426 S.W.2d 814 (1968). The federal courts have generally held that the effect of such rule is to require the action to be brought by the person who is entitled to enforce the right or claim. Wright & Miller, Federal Practice And Procedure, Sec. 1543. The list of persons in 17(a) is not meant to be conclusive and exhaustive and any person possessing the right to enforce a particular claim is deemed the real party in interest even though he is not specifically identified in the rule. Section (a) of this rule does not appreciably alter Arkansas law on real parties in interest.

3. While the Federal Rule is not clear on whether objection to a party as not being the real party in interest must be made by Rule 12(b) motion or by answer, Ohmer Corp. v. Duncan Meter Corp., 8 F.R.D. 582 (D.C. Ill., 1948) and Clark v. Chase National Bank, 45 F. Supp. 820 (D.C. NY, 1942), Rule 12(b) does permit such objection without any question, although the objection can be raised under Rule 8(c).

4. Section (b) of the Federal Rule is omitted in its entirety from Rule 17 as it is not applicable to actions in state court.

5. Section (b) of this rule is basically the same as FRCP 17(c). Omitted from the Federal Rule are all those persons designated as representatives of an infant or incompetent except a guardian. The parenthetical reference to a conservator is made necessary by Ark. Stat. Ann., Title 57, Ch. 7 (Supp. 1977). Rule 17 makes it mandatory that a guardian sue or defend as opposed to the permissive feature of FRCP 17.

6. Section (c) is not found in the Federal Rule. It is thought to be worthwhile as giving a measure of protection to prisoners who might not otherwise be protected. This section tracks superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-833 (Repl. 1962). See also Rule 7.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2004 Amendment:

Subdivision (c), which has no counterpart in Fed. R. Civ. P. 17, has been deleted. Borrowed from a superseded statute that was part of the Civil Code of 1868, the subdivision stated that "[n]o judgment shall be rendered against a prisoner in the penitentiary until after a defense made for him by his attorney, or, if there is none, by a person appointed by the court to defend for him." Because of the elimination of subdivision (c), prisoners no longer receive special treatment with respect to default judgments. See Zardin v. Terry, 275 Ark. 452, 631 S.W.2d 285 (1982). However, the safeguards in Rule 4(d)(4) and Rule 12(a)(1) afford incarcerated persons notice, the opportunity to be heard, and the opportunity to obtain counsel. Rule 12(a)(1), as amended in 2004, provides that incarcerated persons have 60 days after service of process in which to file an answer, compared to the 20-day period for residents of the state. This differential reflects the role of prison employees in delivering the summons and complaint, as well as the likelihood that an incarcerated person will need more time than other defendants to arrange for legal representation.

CASE NOTESApplicability.

Although plaintiff lacked standing to sue when she filed the original complaint because she had not yet been appointed the administrator of decedent’s estate and she was not the sole heir, upon being appointed administrator six days later, she was deemed to be a new party when she filed the amended complaint; further, the filing of an amended complaint by a new party constituted the commencement of a new suit, initiated prior to the expiration of the statute of limitations period and, thus, there was no need for the suit to “relate back” to the original complaint filed under this rule. Hackelton v. Malloy, 364 Ark. 469, 221 S.W.3d 353 (2006).

Appointment of Counsel.

Trial court properly granted summary judgment for Supreme Court Committee on Professional Conduct against disbarred appellant attorney despite denying attorney’s motion for appointed counsel pursuant to former subsection (c) of this rule; the attorney was not prejudiced in any way in presenting his case by not having appointed counsel and he failed in his attempt to show the appellate court why disbarment was not appropriate. Todd v. Ligon, 356 Ark. 187, 148 S.W.3d 229 (2004).

Finding against appellants in an action concerning property transfers was proper pursuant to former subsection (c) of this rule because no motion requesting removal of an appointed attorney was included in the record or in a motion or judgment in an abstract. Middleton v. Lockhart, 364 Ark. 32, 216 S.W.3d 98 (2005).

Estate Proceedings.

There is no requirement of notice of estate proceedings to parties who had no direct interest in decedents’ estates, and those parties did not have standing to enter into the estate proceeding or to raise the issue whether decedents’ son, who had been convicted of manslaughter in their death, could inherit from their estate. Kimrey v. Booth, 285 Ark. 18, 685 S.W.2d 139 (1985).

A personal representative who was timely substituted as the plaintiff in an estate’s suit for an injunction had a property interest, giving her standing to sue as the real party in interest. White v. Welsh, 327 Ark. 465, 939 S.W.2d 299 (1997).

As a guardian’s substitution for the promisee as the proper party to an action on a promissory note related back to the initial filing of the suit, the promisor’s claim that the suit was time-barred was properly rejected. Thurman v. Baker, 76 Ark. App. 403, 65 S.W.3d 478 (2002).

Where an original wrongful death complaint was a nullity because it was brought by the decedent’s heirs rather than the personal representative, as required by the wrongful-death statute, § 16-62-102, a subsequent amended complaint filed by the administratrix which attempted to bring the estate in as a party was a new suit filed after the statute of limitations period and, therefore, could not relate back under Ark. R. Civ. P. 15 and was barred by statute of limitations. Rhuland v. Fahr, 356 Ark. 382, 155 S.W.3d 2 (2004).

Where a wrongful death complaint was a nullity because it was not brought by all of the heirs at law, Ark. R. Civ. P. 15 and this rule did not apply to allow the addition of the half-brother as a party plaintiff after the limitations period had run. Andrews v. Air Evac EMS, Inc., 86 Ark. App. 161, 170 S.W.3d 303 (2004).

Term “heirs at law”, as used in § 16-62-102(b), means “beneficiaries”, as used in § 16-62-102(d), and a motion to dismiss a wrongful death action was properly granted because two sisters were not named as parties; the doctrine of relation back under Ark. R. Civ. P. 15 did not help because the original complaint was a nullity. Brewer v. Poole, 362 Ark. 1, 207 S.W.3d 458 (2005).

Regarding a father’s motion to intervene in a mother’s wrongful death and survivor action for the sole purpose of seeking to stay the proceedings pending a determination from the probate court as to who would be named administrator of decedent son’s estate, this rule had no application because the action was not filed in accordance with § 16-62-102(b) or § 16-62-101 and the original complaint thus was a nullity. When the original complaint was a nullity, this rule was inapplicable because the original complaint never existed and, therefore, there was no pleading to amend. Farrow v. Sammis, No. 3:07cv00097 SWW, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90429 (E.D. Ark. Dec. 7, 2007).

Minors.

Where the only impediment to suit by a minor was one of capacity, and where the interests of the minor were sufficiently protected, the court could enter judgment in favor of the minor child. Cowden v. Ramsay, 154 B.R. 531 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 1993).

Real Party in Interest.

Where an individual plaintiff trustee brought an action against the defendant purchasers for breach of a real estate sales contract, the trial court did not err when it allowed the addition of a bank as a new party plaintiff after the original plaintiff had rested his case, since the bank held the title to the real estate as a cotrustee and was, therefore, the real party in interest. McMaster v. McIlroy Bank, 9 Ark. App. 124, 654 S.W.2d 591 (1983).

The chancellor had no authority to grant damages to the plaintiff as trustee for her son and grandson, for damage done to a mulberry tree where at the time the tree was damaged she did not own the property on which the tree was located, having previously transferred the property to her son and grandson, because in Arkansas an express trust can never be implied or arise by operation of law and can be proved only by some instrument in writing signed by the party enabled by law to declare the trust. Welch v. Cooper, 11 Ark. App. 263, 670 S.W.2d 454 (1984).

Only a real party in interest may bring a cause of action; that party is generally considered that person who can discharge the claim on which suit is brought, and not necessarily the person ultimately entitled to the benefit of recovery. Bar S Bar W. Store v. Martin, 295 Ark. 176, 747 S.W.2d 113 (1988).

The decedent's three children, who were his only immediate heirs and the persons who were entitled to inherit his estate, were the real parties in interest in negligence suit against insurance company and its agent. Gladden v. Bucy, 299 Ark. 523, 772 S.W.2d 612 (1989).

The real party in interest is generally considered to be the person or corporation who can discharge the claim upon which the allegation is based, and is not necessarily the person ultimately entitled to the benefit of any recovery; the assignee of a properly assigned account is the entity who can discharge the claim, and the real party in interest. Smith v. National Cashflow Sys., 309 Ark. 101, 827 S.W.2d 146 (1992).

When an insurance company has only partially reimbursed an insured for his loss, the insured is the real party in interest; however, when the insured has been paid in full, the insurer is the real party in interest. Argenia, Inc. v. Blasingame, 51 Ark. App. 70, 910 S.W.2d 225 (1995).

Where bank ratified the actions of the seller in declaring the purchase contract to be forfeited and further ratified the act of the seller in beginning an unlawful detainer suit, the case fell directly within the purview of this rule, and thus the trial court did not err in finding that the bank's ratification cured any alleged defect in the parties. Harvill v. Bevans, 52 Ark. App. 57, 914 S.W.2d 784 (1996).

A change in procedural law now allows a substitution of the real party in interest upon a transfer of interest. Lott v. Circuit Court, 328 Ark. 596, 945 S.W.2d 922 (1997).

Where the insured has a deductible interest, the insured is the real party in interest and the action must be brought in his name for his own benefit, but an insured stands as a trustee to the insurer as to any amount recovered. TB of Blytheville, Inc. v. Little Rock Sign & Emblem, Inc., 328 Ark. 688, 946 S.W.2d 930 (1997).

In an action pertaining to an easement, a developer was the real party in interest where (1) it was actually a party to the easement agreement, although the easement ran in favor of a city, (2) pursuant to contract, the developer provided the compensation for the easement and relied on the easement in installing sewer lines, and (3) the existence of the easement benefitted the developer as much as it did the city. Forrest Constr., Inc. v. Milam, 70 Ark. App. 466, 20 S.W.3d 440 (2000), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 345 Ark. 1, 43 S.W.3d 140 (2001).

Dismissal of a wrongful-death action against a doctor and a hospital was proper because the savings statute under § 16-62-102(b) did not apply since the case was improperly refiled by a mother and father as heirs at law when a personal representative had been appointed; the personal representative should have been substituted as the real party in interest prior to dismissal. Recinos v. Zelk, 369 Ark. 7, 250 S.W.3d 221 (2007).

Even though a writ of execution named an original creditor instead of an assignee, a trial court did not err in finding that the assignee's status as the real party in interest related back to the issuance of the writ because the assignee's efforts arose out of the same conduct, transaction, or occurrence that existed when the original writ of execution was issued. Looney v. Raby, 100 Ark. App. 326, 268 S.W.3d 345 (2007).

Subsequent ratification of the shareholder's lender-liability suit did not cure the standing deficiency in the Bankruptcy Code; a trustee, and only a trustee, had standing to prosecute causes of action that were property of the Chapter 7 bankruptcy estate, and the determination of the real party in interest was not difficult for the shareholders, nor was there an understandable or excusable mistake by the shareholders in this regard. Bibbs v. Cmty. Bank of Benton, 375 Ark. 150, 289 S.W.3d 393 (2008).

Because parties' divorce-decree-settlement agreement was in essence a contract between an ex-husband and an ex-wife, to which the parties' adult children were third-party beneficiaries, the ex-wife was the proper party under subsection (a) of this rule to bring a contempt action to enforce a provision in the decree despite such enforcement being of benefit to the children. Chambers v. Ratcliff, 2009 Ark. App. 377, 309 S.W.3d 224 (2009).

Former wife had standing to bring suit against a former brother-in-law to have a constructive trust placed on certain property because the wife was the real party in interest; a divorce decree granted the wife possession of the marital home, and the brother of the husband and brother-in-law testified that he held no claim to the property and considered it the wife's property. Higgins v. Higgins, 2010 Ark. App. 71, 374 S.W.3d 56 (2010).

Husband was proper party to bring a contempt action against the wife who had spent her daughter's funds in violation of the couple's divorce decree where the daughter was a third-party beneficiary to the terms of the divorce decree that pertained to her funds. Coleman v. Coleman, 2016 Ark. App. 324, 497 S.W.3d 688 (2016).

Where it was properly determined that the bankruptcy trustee had not abandoned the plaintiff debtors' medical malpractice claim and thus the plaintiffs lacked standing, the circuit court did not err in finding that there was no understandable mistake and in refusing to apply subsection (a) of this rule; due to their lack of standing, the plaintiffs' malpractice complaint was a nullity, and as a result, this rule could not have been employed in their favor. Barnes v. Ozarks Cmty. Hosp., 2017 Ark. App. 32, 510 S.W.3d 286, cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 382, 199 L. Ed. 2d 279 (2017).

Former LLC member was not a real party in interest to an interpleader action where he admitted that he had no claim to the interpleaded funds, he had no ability to discharge any lien at issue, he made arguments before the court that could only have been made by other entities that were parties to the action, and those entities had chosen not to make those arguments. Srygley v. Parker, 2018 Ark. App. 272, 549 S.W.3d 388 (2018).

Where homeowners mistakenly brought suit as individuals rather than in the name of the corporation that owned the real property, the circuit court did not err in denying their motion to substitute the corporation as the real party in interest because if the circuit court had granted the motion for substitution, it would have constituted a new complaint and would have been after the statute of limitations had run; relation back did not apply. C&R Constr. Co. v. Woods Masonry & Repair, LLC, 2020 Ark. App. 105, 596 S.W.3d 35 (2020).

Reasonable Time.

What constitutes a reasonable time under this rule is a matter of judicial discretion and will depend upon the facts of each case. Insurance from CNA v. Keene Corp., 310 Ark. 605, 839 S.W.2d 199 (1992).

Timely Objection.

Grantor of deed was a third party beneficiary of the option to repurchase agreement and he was a proper party to bring suit on that agreement; if third party should have been a party because the option was in his name, this point was waived by the grantee's failure to raise the issue before the trial started. Monaghan v. Davis, 16 Ark. App. 258, 700 S.W.2d 375 (1985).

Where the issue of standing is pleaded, but the issue is not brought to the trial court's attention and the trial court does not rule on the issue, the failure to do so constitutes a waiver of the issue and will not be considered on appeal. Peoples Bank & Trust Co. v. Wallace, 290 Ark. 589, 721 S.W.2d 659 (1986).

Waiver.

Since this rule is designed for the protection of the defendant, it may be waived by him either by his action or inaction. Gladden v. Bucy, 299 Ark. 523, 772 S.W.2d 612 (1989).

Ward.

Because the acts of attorneys raised questions under Ark. R. Prof'l Conduct 1.7, 1.14, and 1.16, the matter was referred to the Supreme Court Committee on Professional Conduct to determine whether any disciplinary action was warranted; following their disqualification and the appointment of a guardian, the attorneys persisted in filing legal documents on behalf of a ward. Kuelbs v. Hill, 2011 Ark. App. 628 (2011).

Rule 18. Joinder of claims and remedies.

(a) Joinder of Claims. A party asserting a claim for relief as an original claim, counterclaim, cross-claim, or third-party claim may join, either as independent or alternate claims, as many claims, legal or equitable, as the party may have against an opposing party, provided that nothing herein shall affect the obligation of a party under Rule 13(a).

(b) Severance and Transfer.

(1) Any claim against a party may be severed and proceeded with separately.

(2) If the court determines that the action, or a particular claim, should in the interest of justice or judicial economy be heard in another division, the court may transfer it to that division.

(c) Joinder of Remedies; Fraudulent Conveyances. Whenever a claim is one heretofore cognizable only after another claim has been prosecuted to a conclusion, the two claims may be joined in a single action; but the court shall grant relief in that action only in accordance with the relative substantive rights of the parties. In particular, a plaintiff may state a claim for money and a claim to have set aside a conveyance fraudulent as to him, without first having obtained judgment establishing the claim for money.

HISTORY: Amended May 24, 2001, effective July 1, 2001.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 18:

1. Rule 18 is a modified version of FRCP 18. Its effect is to substantially change Arkansas procedural rules. Under superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1301 (Repl. 1962), joinder of claims was limited to those classes of actions specifically enumerated; however, under Rule 18, joinder of all claims is permitted, regardless of whether they are equitable or legal in nature.

2. Section (b) permits the trial court to grant a severance of joined claims or to order a transfer of a particular claim between law and chancery courts so as to do justice and facilitate the disposition of an action. This provision confers broad discretion upon the trial court in granting or denying a severance or transfer.

3. As under the Federal Rule, the joinder of claims under this rule is permissive and not mandatory. Fowler Mfg. Co. v. Gorlick, 415 F.2d 1248 (C.C.A. 9th, 1969); McConnell v. Travelers Indem. Co., 346 F.219 (C.C.A. 5th, 1965). Also, where the joinder of claims will result in prejudice or inconvenience to the court or the parties, the court may order separate trials under Rule 42(b).

4. Section 18(c) is identical to FRCP 18(b). The specific remedy mentioned in FRCP 18(b) is illustrative only and does not limit the application of the rule to that particular remedy. Wright & Miller, Federal Practice And Procedure, Section 1591.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2001 Amendment:

Subdivisions (a) and (b) have been amended in light of Constitutional Amendment 80, which established the circuit courts as the "trial courts of original jurisdiction" in the state and abolished the separate chancery and probate courts.

New language in subdivision (a) authorizes joinder of claims whether "legal or equitable," as does the corresponding federal rule. Amendment 80's merger of law and equity removed any barriers to the joinder of legal and equitable claims in a single action. See Beacon Theatres, Inc. v. Westover, 359 U.S. 500, 510 (1959) ("the liberal joinder provisions of the Federal Rules . . . allow legal and equitable causes to be brought and resolved in one civil action").

Previously, subdivision (b) stated that a trial court could "make appropriate orders affecting severance of claims and may transfer claims between courts of law and equity on appropriate jurisdictional grounds." This provision has been deleted because of Amendment 80 and replaced with two paragraphs.

Under new paragraph (1), which tracks the language of Rule 21, any claim "may be severed and proceeded with separately." New paragraph (2) permits the transfer of a particular claim, or the entire action, from one division of the circuit court to another "in the interest of justice or judicial economy." Administrative Order No. 14, adopted by the Supreme Court pursuant to Amendment 80, requires that the circuit judges of each judicial circuit establish five divisions in each county of the circuit: criminal, civil, juvenile, probate, and domestic relations. Creation of these divisions has no jurisdictional significance. See 2001 Reporter's Note accompanying Rule 2.

In the system contemplated by Amendment 80 and Administrative Order No. 14, severance should be employed sparingly and only when multiple claims in a single action are wholly unrelated. If the claims arise from the same transaction or occurrence, a series of transactions or occurrences, or a common nucleus of operative fact, they should not be severed and then transferred to another division of the circuit court for disposition. Severance and transfer in this situation would be at odds with the purpose of Amendment 80, which was designed to eliminate the jurisdictional lines that had forced cases to be divided artificially and litigated separately in different courts. See, e.g., Hilburn v. First State Bank, 259 Ark. 569, 535 S.W.2d 810 (1976).

CASE NOTES

Joinder Allowed.

Contract and tort causes of action may be joined when both seek the same relief and the evidence to support recovery on one theory partially supports the other. Lemon v. Laws, 313 Ark. 11, 852 S.W.2d 127 (1993).

If a party has two or more remedies that are concurrent and consistent, he may pursue all of them. Lemon v. Laws, 313 Ark. 11, 852 S.W.2d 127 (1993).

A client's claims against his attorney, alleging negligence and breach of contract for inadequate representation, could be joined, since both causes of action sought the same relief and the evidence to support recovery on one theory partially supported the other. Lemon v. Laws, 313 Ark. 11, 852 S.W.2d 127 (1993).

Joinder Not Mandatory.

Where successor lessors filed action in chancery court to terminate lease and collect damages from assignor of lease and then filed suit in circuit court to recover damages for failure to comply with and perform the covenants in the lease, the circuit court erred in dismissing the suit before it since the plaintiff lessors were not mandatorily required to join the suits in chancery court under this rule because it states that the party may join its claims against the opposing party, and since it was not a compulsory counterclaim under Rule 13 because it sought damages from the assignee as a result of the failure to perform its required duties under the lease. Baltz v. Security Bank, 272 Ark. 302, 613 S.W.2d 833 (1981).

Severance.

Under this rule, the trial court may sever causes at its discretion, but may not dismiss them. Carpetland of N.W. Ark., Inc. v. Howard, 304 Ark. 420, 803 S.W.2d 512 (1991).

Rule 19. Joinder of persons needed for just adjudication.

(a) Persons to Be Joined If Feasible. A person who is subject to service of process shall be joined as a party in the action if (1) in his absence complete relief cannot be accorded among those already parties, or, (2) he claims an interest relating to the subject of the action and is so situated that the disposition of the action in his absence may (i) as a practical matter, impair or impede his ability to protect that interest, or, (ii) leave any of the persons already parties subject to a substantial risk of incurring double, multiple or otherwise inconsistent obligations by reason of his claimed interest. If he has not been joined, the court shall order that he be made a party. If he should join as a plaintiff, but refuses to do so, he may be made a defendant; or, in a proper case, an involuntary plaintiff.

(b) Determination by Court Whenever Joinder Not Feasible. If a person as described in subdivision (a)(1)-(2) hereof cannot be made a party, the court shall determine whether in equity and good conscience the action should proceed among the parties before it, or should be dismissed, the absent person being thus regarded as indispensable. The factors to be considered by the court include: (1) to what extent a judgment rendered in the person's absence might be prejudicial to him or those already parties; (2) the extent to which, by protective provisions in the judgment, by the shaping of relief, or other measures, the prejudice can be lessened or avoided; (3) whether a judgment rendered in the person's absence will be adequate; (4) whether the plaintiff will have an adequate remedy if the action is dismissed for nonjoinder.

(c) Exception of Class Actions. This rule is subject to the provisions of Rule 23.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 19:

1. Rule 19 deals with compulsory joinder of parties. With the exception of the omission of the last sentence of FRCP 19(a), this rule is the same as its federal counterpart. It is believed that the omitted sentence dealing with venue is unnecessary under state practice. Section 19(a) requires the person joined to be subject to service of process; therefore, the fact that such person could otherwise object to venue is of no consequence where existing defendants are properly before the court. This is the effect of Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-615 (Repl. 1962) which remains unaffected by these rules.

2. Section 19(a) concerns itself with the question of who is a "necessary" party while 19(b) deals with whether a necessary party is an indispensable party. Wright v. First National Bank, 483 F.2d 73 (C.C.A. 10th, 1973); Charon v. Meaux, 60 F.R.D. 107 (D.C. N.Y., 1973). The policy behind FRCP 19 is to avoid dismissal of actions where possible and when it is possible to join an absent party, dismissal is not proper as such party will be ordered to enter the action as a defendant or plaintiff.

3. Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-808 (Repl. 1962) provided that parties who were united in interest must be joined as plaintiffs or defendants. Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-814

(Repl. 1962) provided that where a controversy could not be resolved without prejudice to others or by preserving their rights, then the other parties had to be brought in as parties. This rule, following FRCP 19, abolishes the rigid distinctions between necessary and indispensable parties and instead places the emphasis upon the practical effects a judgment might have upon an absent party.

4. Section (c) of FRCP 19 is omitted from this rule. If there are questions as to defects in parties plaintiff, it is the Committee's view that this is more appropriately an issue which should be raised by a defendant under Rule 12(b).

5. The exception of class actions in 19(c) is for obvious reasons. Rule 23 suggests that absent class members can never be considered indispensable and it is doubtful that they can be considered necessary parties. Watson v. Branch County Bank, 380 F. Supp. 945 (D.C. Mich., 1974).

CASE NOTES

In General.

Because joinder is proper only as to a person subject to service of process, then service of process must be made for joinder to be proper. Taylor v. Zanone Props., 342 Ark. 465, 30 S.W.3d 74 (2000).

Committee to establish a municipal fire department which circulated a petition to place an ordinance on the city's general election ballot, but which was not joined by a local voter and, further, did not purport to represent local voters, lacked standing to intervene or the right to be joined in a case concerning the ballot title and initiative petition, or rights which, pursuant to Ark. Const., Amend. 7, were reserved to the local voters. Comm. to Establish Sherwood Fire Dep't v. Hillman, 353 Ark. 501, 109 S.W.3d 641 (2003).

Action Against Corporation.

It is axiomatic that a shareholder is not a proper party, much less a necessary or indispensable party, in a suit to foreclose a corporate mortgage; the corporation is the proper party to be sued, not its shareholders or their trustee; accordingly, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to grant a continuance on the basis that the trustee of minority shareholders was an indispensable party. Arkansas Iron & Metal Co. v. First Nat'l Bank, 16 Ark. App. 245, 701 S.W.2d 380 (1985).

Application.

Writ of certiorari was proper, because the court erred in denying the husband's motion to quash several subpoenas concerning his medical records, when the husband was not a party to the underlying custody dispute, the husband did nothing to bring his medical condition into issue, and the husband's mental health was examined through other admissible evidence; neither party by intervention or by joinder applied. McKenzie v. Pierce, 2012 Ark. 190, 403 S.W.3d 565 (2012).

Attorney's Fees.

In a quiet title case where a dismissal was entered for failing to join indispensable parties, a trial court erred by awarding attorney's fees in favor of a neighbor based on an allegation of a complete absence of a justiciable issue. However, since an occupant would not have been an indispensable party and no evidence was presented to establish the merit of the claim against the occupant, a trial court was free to reconsider fees for the occupant on remand. Croney v. Lane, 99 Ark. App. 346, 260 S.W.3d 316 (2007).

Dismissal.

In a quiet title action, a dismissal for failing to join indispensable parties under this rule was erroneous because there was nothing showing that the other people who lived on the road could not have been joined. Even if they could not have been, a dismissal was not warranted since the purchasers would have had no other remedy. Croney v. Lane, 99 Ark. App. 346, 260 S.W.3d 316 (2007).

Indispensible Parties.

In a mother-in-law's conversion case against her former daughter-in-law, the son—who misappropriated all of his mother's funds and placed some in his former wife's account—was not an indispensable party under subsection (b) of this rule because he was completely available if the daughter-in-law wanted him joined in the litigation and, in fact, testified at trial. Volgelgesang v. Vogelgesang, 2010 Ark. App. 178 (2010).

In an action alleging that the tobacco company breached the terms of the Master Settlement Agreement, the tobacco company did not amend its notice of appeal to include an appeal from the denial of its motion to amend or alter the judgment. Thus, its motion to amend or alter the judgment, which included its request to join indispensable parties, could not be addressed on appeal. Vibo Corp. v. State ex rel. McDaniel, 2011 Ark. 124, 380 S.W.3d 411, cert. denied, 565 U.S. 1059, 132 S. Ct. 759, 181 L. Ed. 2d 483 (2011).

In an action alleging that the tobacco company breached the terms of the Master Settlement Agreement, because the tobacco company raised the issue of the circuit court's lack of authority over the Settling States other than Arkansas, which equated to lack of personal jurisdiction, and because this rule granted authority to the courts to bring in indispensable parties on their own motion, the order regarding payment to the other Settling States was reversed; the other Settling States appeared to be indispensable parties for allocation of the escrowed funds and the matter was remanded to the circuit court to weigh joinder of the other Settling States as indispensable parties under this rule so that complete relief could be afforded. Vibo Corp. v. State ex rel. McDaniel, 2011 Ark. 124, 380 S.W.3d 411, cert. denied, 565 U.S. 1059, 132 S. Ct. 759, 181 L. Ed. 2d 483 (2011).

Trial court erred in granting custody of a father's child to her step-mother because the child's biological mother was an indispensable party where the determination of custody and visitation in her absence impaired her ability to protect her interest in the child and left the father subject to conflicting orders. Abeyta v. Abeyta, 2013 Ark. App. 726 (2013).

Matter was remanded to the circuit court to join the circuit clerk as an indispensable party because a professor's claims concerned whether the fees assessed by the circuit clerk for compiling a record violated Ark. Code Ann. § 21-6-402; without the circuit clerk as a party, the circuit court could not answer that question and grant appropriate relief, as it was not apparent from the record how the clerk calculated the fee charged to the professor. Steinbuch v. Univ. of Ark., 2021 Ark. 99 (2021).

Municipal Corporations.

Where plaintiffs filed a complaint which sought to prevent annexation of territory by a city, and failed to serve notice on the city's agents, as required by § 14-40-601, the trial court should have directed that the city be made a party by service of summons on the city's agents, pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule, rather than dismissing the complaint. Britton v. City of Conway, 36 Ark. App. 232, 821 S.W.2d 65 (1991).

Necessary Parties.

There is nothing in this rule which compels the joinder of the division of social services (abolished — see § 25-10-101 et seq.) in all adoption proceedings, since the relief sought in an adoption proceeding is the adoption itself and by terms of § 9-9-201 et seq. such relief may be granted whether the division is a party or not; thus the department is not a necessary party under subdivision (a)(1) of this rule, and as to subdivision (a)(2) of this rule, social services does not have such an interest in the proceeding that it must be joined under this section since § 9-9-201 et seq. does not mandate that social services be joined in an adoption proceeding. Cox v. Stayton, 273 Ark. 298, 619 S.W.2d 617 (1981).

Beneficiaries of will were necessary parties to action against estate. Moore v. Moore, 21 Ark. App. 165, 731 S.W.2d 215 (1987).

In the declaratory judgment action, complete relief could not be afforded without making the lifetime beneficiary and the remainder beneficiaries parties to the action; consequently, chancellor erred in exercising jurisdiction because the guardian and the remaindermen could later raise identical issues, and thus, there would be no termination of the uncertainty or controversy. Yamauchi v. Sovran Bank/Central S., 309 Ark. 532, 832 S.W.2d 241 (1992).

In action against dentist for unlawful practice of medicine and against hospital for aiding and abetting dentist, Dental Board should have been joined as a necessary party, since it is the regulatory agency vested with the authority to decide what constitutes the practice of dentistry. Arkansas State Medical Bd. v. Bolding, 324 Ark. 238, 920 S.W.2d 825 (1996).

In order to identify and determine what was marital property, the trial court had authority to require that the landlords of a store operated by the husband be made parties to a divorce action and that they be enjoined from selling the inventory of the store in order to recover rent due from the husband. Arnold v. Spears, 343 Ark. 517, 36 S.W.3d 346 (2001).

In the store's action to recover on a charge account, contrary to the store's argument, the customer's daughter who purportedly made the charges was not an indispensable party; the daughter's conduct was not relevant to the determination of the customer's obligations under the charge card agreement and the customer's declaratory action for a determination of whether she owed any amount of the alleged indebtedness on charges for which she did not sign charge slips was improperly dismissed under Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(7). Wilmons v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 355 Ark. 668, 144 S.W.3d 245 (2004).

Circuit court erred in dismissing taxpayers' case for failure to join all interested parties where all licensed check-cashers in Arkansas would be members of the class and parties to the illegal exaction suit; Ark. Const., Art. 16, § 13 made each taxpayer a party to the lawsuit as a matter of law. McGhee v. Ark. State Bd. of Collection Agencies, 360 Ark. 363, 201 S.W.3d 375 (2005).

Although the secretary of state and the committee were indispensable parties under § 7-7-401 and this rule for pre-election challenges, they were not required parties in the present post-election challenge by a candidate for a district office, such as the state senate. Willis v. Crumbly, 368 Ark. 5, 242 S.W.3d 600 (2006).

In a case alleging an illegal exaction relating to a settlement agreement, an argument relating to joinder was not heard on appeal since it was moot; it was properly determined that there was no improper expenditure of money. Therefore, it did not matter whether a certain party was necessary or not. Stromwall v. Van Hoose, 371 Ark. 267, 265 S.W.3d 93 (2007).

Company was not a necessary party to the foreclosure action, because the lender on the deed of trust was the beneficiary and it received the payments on the debt, and the company held no authority to act as an agent and held no property interest in the mortgaged land. Mortgage Elec. Registration Sys. v. Southwest Homes of Ark., 2009 Ark. 152, 301 S.W.3d 1 (2009).

Trial court did not err by finding that the rehabilitation center was not a necessary or indispensable party under this rule because the presence of the rehabilitation center was not indispensable to the determination of the hospital's separate liability under the Civil Justice Reform Act of 2003. St. Vincent Infirmary Med. Ctr. v. Shelton, 2013 Ark. 38, 425 S.W.3d 761 (2013), superseded by statute as stated in J-McDaniel Constr. Co. v. Dale E. Peters Plumbing Ltd., 2014 Ark. 282, 436 S.W.3d 458 (2014).

Rule 20. Permissive joinder of parties.

(a) Permissive Joinder. All persons may join in one action as plaintiffs if they assert any right to relief jointly, severally or in the alternative in respect of or arising out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences and if any question of law or fact common to all these persons will arise in the action. All persons may be joined in one action as defendants if there is asserted against them jointly, severally, or in the alternative, any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences and if any question of law or fact common to all defendants will arise in the action. A plaintiff or defendant need not be interested in obtaining or defending against all the relief demanded.

Judgment may be given for one or more of the plaintiffs according to their respective rights to relief, and against one or more defendants according to their respective liabilities.

(b) Separate Trials. The court may make such orders as will prevent a party from being embarrassed, delayed, or put to expense by the inclusion of a party against whom he asserts no claim and who asserts no claim against him and may order separate trials or make other orders to prevent delay or prejudice.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 20:

1. Rule 20 basically tracks prior Arkansas law. Section 20(a) is identical to superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-806 (Repl. 1962) which was taken from FRCP 20. Omitted from this rule is the reference in the Federal Rule to admiralty actions; otherwise, the two sections are identical.

2. Section 20(b) is identical to superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-807 (Repl. 1962) and FRCP 20(b). Overall, Rule 20 works no changes in Arkansas practice and procedure.

CASE NOTES

Joinder Proper.

In a contract action to recover the value of work performed, permissive joinder of a contractor and subcontractor was proper where they both were involved in series of construction projects with defendant and there were common questions of law and of fact. Dooley v. Cecil Edwards Constr. Co., 13 Ark. App. 170, 681 S.W.2d 399 (1984).

Separate Trials.

Severance should have been granted in case alleging several civil conspiracies involving several defendants. Pennington v. Harvest Foods, Inc., 326 Ark. 704, 934 S.W.2d 485 (1996).

Rule 21. Misjoinder and non-joinder of parties.

Misjoinder of parties is not ground for dismissal of an action. Parties may be dropped or added by order of the court on motion of any party or on its own initiative at any stage of the action and upon such terms as are just. Any claim against a party may be severed and proceeded with separately.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 21:

1. Rule 21 is identical to FRCP 21. There was no comparable provision under prior Arkansas law and a defect in parties was generally raised by demurrer where the defect appeared on the face of the complaint and by answer where the defect was not so evident. Under prior law, a defect in parties was ground for dismissal of the cause whereas under this rule, the cause is not dismissed, but rather the defect is simply cured by adding or striking parties upon motion of a party or by the court on its own motion.

2. Rule 21 should have no appreciable effect on Arkansas law. A defect in parties was non-fatal under prior Arkansas law in that it could be waived. Province v. Dean, 223 Ark. 508, 266 S.W.2d 812 (1954). A defect in parties remains non-fatal under this rule. This rule does, however, confer upon the trial court additional discretion to cure a misjoinder or non-joinder on its own motion.

CASE NOTES

Appealable Order.

Applying Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(b)(2), the appellate court lack an appealable order because the claims against certain defendants had not been dismissed or otherwise resolved, there was uncertainty regarding whether certain defendants were served, and no separate docket numbers were issued to distinguish the severed actions and the trial court continued to issue orders that pertained to all plaintiffs. Ellis v. Agriliance, LLC, 2012 Ark. App. 549 (2012).

Parties Added by Judge.

In order to identify and determine what was marital property, the trial court had authority to require that the landlords of a store operated by the husband be made parties to a divorce action and that they be enjoined from selling the inventory of the store in order to recover rent due from the husband. Arnold v. Spears, 343 Ark. 517, 36 S.W.3d 346 (2001).

Rule 22. Interpleader.

(a) Persons having claims against the plaintiff may be joined as defendants and required to interplead when their claims are such that the plaintiff is or may be exposed to double or multiple liability. It is not ground for objection to the joinder that the claims of the several claimants or the titles on which their claims depend do not have a common origin or are not identical, but are adverse to and independent of one another, or that the plaintiff avers that he is not liable in whole or in part to any or all of the claimants. A defendant exposed to similar liability may obtain such interpleader by way of cross-claim, third-party complaint or counterclaim. The provisions of this rule supplement and do not in any way limit the joinder of parties permitted in Rule 20.

(b) A plaintiff who disclaims any interest in the money or property that is the subject of the interpleader action shall, upon depositing the money or property in the registry of the court, be discharged from all liability. The court may make an award of reasonable litigation expenses, including attorneys' fees, to such a plaintiff.

HISTORY: Amended November 8, 1993, effective January 1, 1994; amended May 24, 2001, effective July 1, 2001.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 22:

1. Rule 22 is identical to FRCP 22 and does alter prior Arkansas law. Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-816 (Repl. 1962), et seq. set forth prior interpleader procedure and it is this procedure, rather than the substance of prior law which is changed by this rule.

2. Previously, upon depositing money or property into the registry of the court, a plaintiff was released from all further liability and was awarded his costs and a reasonable attorney's fee. Under this rule, as under FRCP 22, the allowance of costs and fees rests in the sound discretion of the trial court. Gulf Oil Corporation v. Oliver, 412 F.2d 938 (C.C.A. 5th, 1969).

3. Prior Arkansas law did not expressly require a deposit of the disputed funds or property into the registry of the court, but it was clear that the plaintiff could not be discharged from further liability or awarded costs and fees until he had deposited the money or property. Under this and the Federal Rule, a deposit is not a jurisdictional prerequisite, but may be required by the court in its discretion so as to safeguard the property and insure the satisfaction of a judgment. Emmco Ins. Co. v. Frankford Trust Co., 352 F. Supp. 130 (D.C. Pa., 1972). Compare, however, Miller & Miller Auctioneers, Inc. v. Murphy Industries, Inc., 472 F.2d 893 (C.C.A. 10th, 1973).

4. Prior Arkansas law required interpleader actions to be brought in chancery court. The decisions under FRCP 22 make it clear that an interpleader is equitable in nature. United Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Leech, 326 F. Supp. 598 (D.C. Pa., 1971); Home Ins. Co. v. Moore, 499 F.2d 1202 (C.C.A. 8th, 1974). Under this rule, however, interpleader actions are not limited to courts of equity.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1993 Amendment:

Rule 22 is amended by adding new subdivision (b), which provides that a disinterested stakeholder — i.e., a plaintiff who disclaims any interest in the money or property — is to be discharged from liability upon depositing the money or property in the registry of the court. Further, such a disinterested stakeholder may be awarded attorneys' fees and other litigation expenses, in the discretion of the court. Subdivision (b) is based on a statute that was superseded when Rule 22 was adopted; however, the revised rule departs from the statute by making a fee award discretionary rather than mandatory. See Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-816 (Repl. 1962). Absent express authorization, a fee award is impermissible in an interpleader action, even though the stakeholder is disinterested and brings about resolution of the conflicting claims by initiating the action. See, e.g., Saunders v. Kleier, 296 Ark. 25, 751 S.W.2d 343 (1988).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2001 Amendment:

The word "trial," which modified "court" in the second sentence of subdivision (b), has been deleted. Constitutional Amendment 80 established the circuit courts as the "trial courts of original jurisdiction" in the state and abolished the separate chancery and probate courts.

CASE NOTES

Attorney's Fees.

While former statute governing interpleader actions provided for the recovery of attorney's fees, that statute was specifically superseded by this rule, which does not provide or even mention recovery of legal expenses. Saunders v. Kleier, 296 Ark. 25, 751 S.W.2d 343 (1988).

There is no authority under this rule to award attorney's fees. Birdsong Cabinet Shop, Inc. v. Bland, 307 Ark. 149, 817 S.W.2d 886 (1991).

In an interpleader action, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the bank's motion for attorney's fees; although this rule authorized an award to the bank, an award of attorney's fees was discretionary, not mandatory. One Bank & Trust, N.A. v. Lenderman, 2017 Ark. App. 42, 512 S.W.3d 651 (2017).

Timeliness.

The timeliness of intervention is within the discretion of the trial court; permitting intervention will not be considered error due to untimeliness unless there has been an abuse of discretion. Arkansas Best Corp. v. General Elec. Capital Corp., 317 Ark. 238, 878 S.W.2d 708 (1994).

When there are unusual and compelling circumstances, the court will permit intervention even after a final judgment has been entered. Arkansas Best Corp. v. General Elec. Capital Corp., 317 Ark. 238, 878 S.W.2d 708 (1994).

Vacating Order.

Circuit court did not err by setting aside an interpleader order that allowed an insurer to deposit proceeds into the court's registry and be discharged from liability, even though it was beyond the 90-day limitation in the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure, because the interpleader order was vacated before final judgment was entered in the case. Here, only one stage of the interpleader had been completed when the order was vacated because the amount of proceeds due to each defendant had not yet been determined. Southern Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. Co. v. Parsons, 2015 Ark. App. 95 (2015).

Rule 23. Class actions.

(a) Prerequisites to Class Action. One or more members of a class may sue or be sued as representative parties on behalf of all only if (1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable, (2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class, (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class, and (4) the representative parties and their counsel will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.

(b) Class Actions Maintainable. An action may be maintained as a class action if the prerequisites of subdivision (a) are satisfied, and the court finds that the questions of law or fact common to the members of the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and that a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy. At an early practicable time after the commencement of an action brought as a class action, the court shall determine by order whether it is to be so maintained. For purposes of this subdivision, “practicable” means reasonably capable of being accomplished. An order under this section may be altered or amended at any time before the court enters final judgment. An order certifying a class action must define the class and the class claims, issues, or defenses.

(c) Notice. (1) In any class action in which monetary relief is sought, including actions for damages and restitution, the court shall direct to the members of the class the best notice practicable under the circumstances, including individual notice to all members who can be identified through reasonable effort.

(2) The notice must concisely and clearly state in plain, easily understood language:

- the nature of the action,
- the definition of the class certified,
- the class claims, issues, or defenses,
- that a class member may enter an appearance and participate in person or through counsel if the member so desires,
- that the court will exclude from the class any member who requests exclusion, stating when and how members may elect to be excluded, and
- the binding effect of a class judgment on class members.

(3) In any class action in which no monetary relief is sought, the court may require any notice it deems appropriate in the circumstances.

(4) The cost of any notice shall be borne by the representative parties; provided, however, that the court may shift all or part of the cost to the opposing party or parties if the case is settled or the class representative substantially prevails on the merits.

(d) Orders in Conduct of Actions. In the conduct of actions to which this rule applies, the court may make appropriate orders: (1) determining the course of proceedings or prescribing measures to prevent undue repetition or complication in the presentation of evidence or argument; (2) requiring, for the protection of the members of the class or otherwise for the fair conduct of the action, that notice be given in such manner as the court may direct to some or all of the members of any step in the action, or of the proposed extent of the judgment, or of the opportunity of the members to signify whether they consider the representation fair and adequate, to intervene and present claims or defenses, or otherwise come into the action; (3) imposing conditions on the representative parties or on intervenors; (4) requiring that the pleadings be amended to eliminate therefrom allegations as to representation of absent persons, and that the action proceed accordingly; (5) dividing the class into subclasses, treating each subclass as a class, and construing and applying the provisions of this rule accordingly; and (6) dealing with similar procedural matters. The orders may be combined with an order under Rule 16 and may be altered or amended from time to time as may be desirable.

(e) Dismissal or Compromise. (1) The court must approve any settlement, voluntary dismissal, or compromise of the claims, issues, or defenses of a certified class. The court must direct notice in a reasonable manner to all class members who would be bound by a proposed settlement, voluntary dismissal, or compromise. The court may approve any such resolution that would bind class members only after a hearing and on finding that the settlement, voluntary dismissal, or compromise is fair, reasonable, and adequate.

(2) The parties seeking approval of a settlement, voluntary dismissal, or compromise must file a statement identifying any agreement made in connection with the proposed settlement, voluntary dismissal, or compromise.

(3) The court may refuse to approve a settlement unless it affords a new opportunity to request exclusion to individual class members who had an earlier opportunity to request exclusion but did not do so.

(4) Any class member may object to a proposed settlement, voluntary dismissal, or compromise that requires court approval. An objection may be withdrawn only with the court's approval.

HISTORY: Amended December 10, 1990, effective February 1, 1991; amended May 25, 2006.

Publisher's Notes.

A proposed amendment to Rule 23 was published by the supreme court of Arkansas for comment on March 2, 2006. The proposed amendment would revise all parts of this rule to echo recent amendments to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23, while others incorporate the holding of recent Arkansas decisions and current Arkansas practice. With a few exceptions, the changes are technical and do not change Arkansas law.

Reporter's Notes (as modified by the Court) to Rule 23:

1. Class actions in Arkansas have been governed by Ark. Stat. Ann. 2-809 (Repl. 1962) which provide minimum procedural rules. This rule does not change prior law.

2. Rule 23 confers broad discretion upon the trial court to dictate such terms as are necessary to protect the rights of absent class members. This discretion is also conferred upon the federal courts by FRCP 23.

3. In Arkansas, many of the class action cases have involved actions brought by and against members of unincorporated associations such as labor unions. Thomas v. Dean, 245 Ark. 446, 432 S.W.2d 771 (1968); International Brotherhood v. Blassingame, 226 Ark. 614, 293 S.W.2d 444 (1956). See also Massey v. Rogers, 232 Ark. 110, 334 S.W.2d 664 (1960). Such actions shall henceforth be brought pursuant to Rule 23.2.

4. Under prior Arkansas law, class actions could be maintained in either law or equity. Thomas v. Dean, supra. This rule does not affect jurisdiction and thus such actions may still be maintained in either court.

Subdivision (a) has been completely rewritten to set out the requirements for numerosity, commonality, typicality, and adequate representation. As revised, subdivision (a) is identical to the corresponding federal rule. Former subdivision (c) has been modified slightly and redesignated as subdivision (e). Under the revised version, which is based on the corresponding federal rule, notice of a proposed dismissal or compromise is mandatory rather than discretionary. New subdivision (c) requires that the best practicable notice of the pendency of class actions seeking monetary relief, whether legal or equitable, be given to all class members. Among other things, the notice must advise class members of their right to participate in or be excluded from the litigation. When monetary relief is sought, class members must, as a matter of due process, be given such notice and afforded the opportunity to "opt out" of the class action. See Phillips Petroleum v. Shutts, 472 U.S. 797 (1985). It is not clear from Shutts whether due process requires such notice when the class action involves only injunctive or declaratory relief. Id. at 811, n. 3. Subdivision (c) does not impose such a requirement in such circumstances, but the trial court may, pursuant to subdivision (d), order that notice be given. The last sentence of subdivision (c) makes clear that the class representatives must initially bear the cost of the notice, though such cost may ultimately be shifted to the opposing parties. This practice is followed in the federal courts. See Eisen v. Carlisle and Jacquelin, 417 U.S. 156 (1974). Subdivision (d) has been revised to take into account the foregoing changes and to spell out in further detail the trial court's discretion in the management of a class action. It is virtually identical to the corresponding federal rule.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2006 Amendment:

All parts of the Rule have been revised. Many of these changes echo recent amendments to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23, while others incorporate the holding of recent Arkansas decisions and current Arkansas practice. With a few exceptions, the changes are technical and do not change Arkansas law.

Another prerequisite - the adequacy of class counsel - has been added to subdivision (a). This addition conforms the Rule to Arkansas law. E.g., Mega Life & Health Insurance Co. v. Jacola, 330 Ark. 261, 275, 975 S.W.2d 898, 904 (1997). Relevant factors for the circuit court's evaluation of class counsel include: counsel's work identifying and investigating potential claims, counsel's experience in handling class actions, complex litigation, and claims of the type asserted; counsel's knowledge of the applicable law; and the resources counsel will commit to representing the class. See generally, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(g). Unless a showing is made to the contrary, however, Arkansas law presumes that the class representative's counsel "will vigorously and competently pursue the litigation." USA Check Cashers of Little Rock, Inc. v. Island, 349 Ark. 71, 80, 76 S.W.3d 243, 247 (2002).

Subdivision (b) on the timing of the circuit court's certification decision has been amended. The former rule required a certification decision as soon as practicable after the lawsuit commenced. That requirement, however, neither captured the prevailing practice nor recognized the good reasons for delaying the certification decision, such as the need for limited discovery on the Rule 23(a) prerequisites. The revised Rule requires a decision on certification at an early practicable time, which is the current standard in the federal Rule. That standard gives the circuit court and the parties some flexibility, while leaving intact the settled Arkansas law that the court may not inquire into the merits at the certification stage. E.g., Speights v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co., Inc., — Ark. —, —, — S.W.3d —, — 2004 WL 1354279 (30 September 2004) (Supplemental Opinion Denying Rehearing).

The amendment deletes the phrase "may be conditional" from the part of subdivision (b) authorizing the circuit court to alter or amend a certification order. The deleted phrase is superfluous; the Arkansas cases on point have emphasized the circuit court's power to reconsider, affirm, alter, modify, or withdraw certification. E.g., Fraley v. Williams Ford Tractor and Equipment Co., 339 Ark. 322, 347, 5 S.W.3d 423, 438-39 (1999). All of these actions spring from the power to alter or amend a certification order. This change brings the Arkansas Rule back into conformity with the federal Rule.

The amendment also replaces the phrase "before the decision on the merits" in subdivision (b) with the phrase "at any time before the court enters final judgment." This change follows an amendment to the federal Rule; it better reflects the duration of the circuit court's authority to modify its certification decision; and it should give the circuit court greater flexibility to deal with developments late in the litigation but before final judgment.

A new sentence has been added to the end of subdivision (b). As the cases make plain, the certification order must define the class in sufficiently definite terms so that the court and the parties may identify the class members. E.g., Ferguson v. Kroger, 343 Ark. 627, 631-32, 37 S.W.3d 590, 593 (2001). Identifying the claims, issues, and defenses will likewise help in identifying class members and expedite the resolution of the litigation. The amendment tracks existing Arkansas law and the federal Rule. This amendment does not alter the precedent holding that the circuit court is not required to perform a rigorous analysis of the case at the certification stage. E.g., THE/FRE, Inc. v. Martin, 349 Ark. 507, 514, 78 S.W.3d 723, 727 (2002). But the circuit court must "undertake enough of an analysis to enable [the appellate court] to conduct a meaningful review." See Lenders Title Co. v. Chandler, 353 Ark. 339, 349, 107 S.W.3d 157, 162 (2003).

Subdivision (c) on notice has been rewritten and divided into subparts. The changes specify the contents of the notice in clearer terms, make a plain-statement requirement for the notice explicit, and bring the Arkansas Rule in line with the comparable federal Rule. A provision explicitly authorizing the circuit court to require notice in class actions where no monetary relief is sought has also been added. All these revisions are technical and do not change Arkansas law.

A new sentence (5) has been added to subdivision (d) to recognize the circuit court's authority to create subclasses. The Arkansas cases have assumed this authority, and implicitly approved it, for almost twenty years. E.g., Int'l Union of Ethical, Radio and Machine Workers v. Hudson, 295 Ark. 107, 117, 747 S.W.2d 81, 86-87 (1988); State Farm Fire & Casualty Co. v. Ledbetter, 355 Ark. 28, 35-36, 1295 S.W.3d 815, 820-21 (2003). The federal Rule authorizes subclasses, which are often useful. This change conforms the Rule to current Arkansas practice. Former sentence (5) has been renumbered as (6).

Subdivision (e) about dismissal and compromise has been rewritten. With some exceptions, the revised Rule restates Arkansas law in the clearer terms of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(e) and incorporates current Arkansas practice. For example, proposed settlements are evaluated now for fairness, reasonableness, and adequacy. Ballard v. Martin, 349 Ark. 564, 79 S.W.3d 838 (2002). Subdivision (1) also requires the circuit court to hold a fairness hearing before approving any proposed settlement. This is a new requirement, though fairness hearings are routine in most class actions. Subdivision (2) requires the parties seeking approval of any settlement to file a statement identifying side agreements. This new requirement will promote fairness in settlements and mirrors the federal Rule. Subdivision (3) gives the circuit court discretion to open a second opt-out window if the circumstances justify it. The federal Rule contains this option, and it merely recognizes the circuit court's power to fashion all appropriate relief as part of approving any proposed settlement. Finally, subdivision (4) requires court approval before an objection may be withdrawn. Objections often can, and should be, resolved by the parties. This new requirement, also drawn from the federal Rule, will help the circuit court insure the fairness of those resolutions in light of the overall proposed settlement of the litigation.

CASE NOTES

Constitutionality.

In action by taxpayers challenging municipal ordinance levying privilege tax on waterworks commission, trial court erred in refusing to require taxpayers to comply with this rule; the rule does not conflict with Ark. Const., Art. 16, § 13 governing illegal exactions but serves as the rule of procedure in a class action case of such nature. However, the error was harmless since there was a final adjudication of a fully developed adversary case. City of Little Rock v. Cash, 277 Ark. 494, 644 S.W.2d 229 (1982), cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1111, 103 S. Ct. 2464, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1341 (1983), overruled in part, T&T Chem. v.

Priest, 351 Ark. 537, 95 S.W.3d 750 (2003). But see Hamilton v. Villines, 323 Ark. 492, 915 S.W.2d 271 (1996).

The illegal-exaction clause provides for a constitutionally established class of interested persons, although the formation of the class is still subject to well established common law principles and is neither limited nor expanded by the provisions of this rule. Carson v. Weiss, 333 Ark. 561, 972 S.W.2d 933 (1998).

Adequate Representation.

Intervenors met all the necessary elements with respect to the adequacy of representation requirement, where it was not contended that (1) counsel was inadequate, inexperienced or unable to conduct the litigation; (2) there was no evidence in the record of any conflicting interest between the Intervenor and the other members of the class; and (3) the Intervenor displayed the necessary interest in the action to ensure vigorous prosecution and were familiar with the litigation. First Nat'l Bank v. Mercantile Bank, 304 Ark. 196, 801 S.W.2d 38 (1990).

When it otherwise appears that the representative plaintiff will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class, allegations of attorney misconduct are more appropriately addressed to the state disciplinary committee rather than denying the plaintiff's class status. Union Nat'l Bank v. Barnhart, 308 Ark. 190, 823 S.W.2d 878 (1992).

The representative must simply display some minimal level of interest in the action, familiarity with the practices challenged, and ability to assist in decision making as to the conduct of the litigation. Cheqnet Sys. v. Montgomery, 322 Ark. 742, 911 S.W.2d 956 (1995).

Where a title company allegedly engaged in the unauthorized practice of law and violated the Arkansas Deceptive Trade Practices Act, § 4-88-101 et seq., a class action was appropriate because the representatives were adequate; they were qualified to conduct the litigation since they had been required to pay a document preparation fee, they displayed some interest in the litigation, despite a failure to appear, and there was no evidence of a conflict of interest. American Abstract & Title Co. v. Rice, 358 Ark. 1, 186 S.W.3d 705 (2004).

Class representative was adequate as he conducted his own research as to the legitimacy of the allegations before he decided to become a class member and representative, he displayed the minimal level of interest in the class action, he was familiar with the challenged practice of charging a documentary fee as part of a car sale, and he was able to assist in litigation decisions with class counsel. Asbury Auto. Group, Inc. v. Palasack, 366 Ark. 601, 237 S.W.3d 462 (2006).

Three elements are required under the adequacy criteria under subdivision (a)(4) of this rule: (1) the representative counsel must be qualified, experienced, and generally able to conduct the litigation; (2) that there be no evidence of collusion or conflicting interest between the representative and the class; and (3) the representative must display some minimal level of interest in the action, familiarity with the practices challenged, and ability to assist in decision making as to the conduct of the litigation. Beverly Enterprises-Arkansas, Inc. v. Thomas, 370 Ark. 310, 259 S.W.3d 445 (2007).

Under subdivision (a)(4) of this rule, the cash advance companies failed to show that the class representative could not adequately represent her class as her mental illness rendered her incapable, she was not familiar with the basic facts, and did not understand her responsibilities and duties; the representative understood the nature and extent of her responsibilities and duties as a class representative, and the alleged injury suffered was the same for the representative and all class members. Advance Am. Servicing of Ark., Inc. v. McGinnis, 2009 Ark. 151, 300 S.W.3d 487 (2009).

Named class representatives were adequate and did not have a conflict of interest where every lot in the club's subdivisions was burdened by the supplemental declarations, and thus, there was no conflict with the proposed class members who were currently enjoying deferred-dues payments. Diamante v. Dye, 2013 Ark. 501, 430 S.W.3d 710 (2013).

Trial court's finding that class counsel was adequate was affirmed where the golf club owner did not directly challenge his qualifications, capability, or competence. Diamante v. Dye, 2013 Ark. 501, 430 S.W.3d 710 (2013).

Class representative was not required to be a legal expert or an oil-and-gas expert. Seeco, Inc. v. Snow, 2016 Ark. 444, 506 S.W.3d 206 (2016).

Oil and gas lessor chosen to represent a class of Arkansas citizens who entered into certain lease agreements for the production of natural gas on their property was adequate under subdivision (a)(4) of this rule; royalty owners who were not citizens of Arkansas were free to pursue their claims in another class action, and the lessee's arguments as to the location of the lessor's well went to the merits and the amount of damages. Seeco, Inc. v. Snow, 2016 Ark. 444, 506 S.W.3d 206 (2016).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in finding that the class representative met the adequacy requirement where the representative's debt-settlement claim was raised as an affirmative defense to the LLC's complaint, and the class-action claims were based on the allegation that the LLC engaged in uniform debt-collection activities without a license. CACH, LLC v. Echols, 2016 Ark. 446, 506 S.W.3d 217 (2016).

Circuit court properly granted class certification because it did not abuse its discretion in determining that an employee had no conflict of interest disqualifying him from representing the classes; the fact that potential members could choose to assert a statute of limitations defense against creditors' claims, rather than risk reviving an expired limitations period on those claims, did not demonstrate a conflict because those potential members could elect to be excluded from the class. Mun. Health Ben. Fund v. Hendrix, 2020 Ark. 235, 602 S.W.3d 101 (2020).

Amendments to Complaints.

Subsection (e) of this rule does not require court approval for amendments to complaints, but only for dismissals or compromises.

SEECO, Inc. v. Hales, 341 Ark. 673, 22 S.W.3d 157 (2000).

Appeal.

The order of a trial court certifying a case as a class action under this rule was a final or appealable order as defined in ARAP 2 following the Supreme Court's amendment of ARAP 2 to permit an appeal from an order certifying a case as a class action. Ford Motor Credit Co. v. Nesheim, 285 Ark. 253, 686 S.W.2d 777 (1985).

Where the trial court did not enter specific findings of fact and conclusions of law reflecting the analysis required for certification of a class action, the grant of class certification was reversed and the matter was remanded to the trial court for further proceedings. BPS Inc. v. Richardson, 341 Ark. 834, 20 S.W.3d 403 (2000), superseded by statute as stated in Indus. Welding Supplies of Hattiesburg, LLC v. Pinson, 2017 Ark. 315, 530 S.W.3d 854 (2017).

Appeal from a refusal to grant certification of a class in an illegal exaction case was not a proper basis for an interlocutory appeal under RAP-Civ 2(a)(9) because the taxpayers were already a class pursuant to Ark. Const., Art. 16, § 13. T&T Chem. v. Priest, 351 Ark. 537, 95 S.W.3d 750 (2003).

Whether competing class-action lawsuits should have been allowed was outside the scope of an appeal where the subsidiaries were appealing class certification under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2(a)(9). Seeco, Inc. v. Stewmon, 2016 Ark. 435, 506 S.W.3d 828 (2016).

In class action against a debt collector who allegedly engaged in debt-collection activities without a license, the debt collector's argument that the retroactive licensing provisions of § 17-24-103 rendered the class-action claims moot involved the merits of the claims and thus was not heard in the debt collector's interlocutory appeal of class certification under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2(a)(9). CACH, LLC v. Echols, 2016 Ark. 446, 506 S.W.3d 217 (2016).

The Supreme Court reviews class certification under an abuse of discretion standard. Cheqnet Sys. v. Montgomery, 322 Ark. 742, 911 S.W.2d 956 (1995).

To determine the fairness of a class settlement, the Supreme Court of Arkansas adopted the factors set forth in Grunin v. Int'l House of Pancakes, 513 F.2d 114 (8th Cir. 1975) which are: (1) the strength of the case for the plaintiffs on the merits, balanced against the amount offered in the settlement, (2) the defendant's overall financial condition and ability to pay, (3) the complexity, length, and expense of further litigation, and (4) the amount of opposition to the settlement. Ballard v. Martin, 349 Ark. 564, 79 S.W.3d 838 (2002), cert. denied, 537 U.S. 1105, 123 S. Ct. 871, 154 L. Ed. 2d 774 (2003).

In an individuals class-action complaint against three title insurance companies regarding the unauthorized practice of law, related to title searches and opinions already performed by licensed attorneys, the trial court committed reversible error when it concluded that it did not have subject-matter jurisdiction to hear the issues raised in the complaint; the Arkansas Supreme Court Committee on the Unauthorized Practice of Law (CUPL) did not have exclusive jurisdiction over such matters and the CUPL had no power to enforce whatever decision it might have reached regarding any given investigation. Speights v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 358 Ark. 59, 186 S.W.3d 715 (2004).

Appellate court was unable to address the merits of a circuit court's class certification order because the order did not comply with subsection (b) of this rule where it failed to define the "class claims, issues, or defenses", as required by the 2006 amendment to this rule. Agents Mut. Ins. Co. v. Benham, 2020 Ark. 39, 591 S.W.3d 799 (2020).

Attorney's Fees.

Although "monetary relief" in the form of attorney's fees was being sought in a class illegal exaction complaint, the chancellor erred in requiring individual notices to the taxpayers in accordance with subsection (c) of this rule because attorney's fees are not available in an illegal exaction case where no refund is sought. Hamilton v. Villines, 323 Ark. 492, 915 S.W.2d 271 (1996).

Taxpayer class members did not have standing to appeal the circuit court's decision awarding attorney's fees where they merely objected to the fees but did not intervene at the trial-court level; however, the court served notice that they would entertain in a subsequent case the issue of whether prior caselaw should be overruled in order to permit such an appeal. Butt v. Evans Law Firm, P.A., 351 Ark. 566, 98 S.W.3d 1 (2003).

Class Action Disallowed.

Where plaintiffs sought to assert that a mortgage assumption fee made a loan usurious, and, under the particular facts of the case, plaintiff's fee was higher than usual but the application had initially been turned down due to insufficient income, refusal of the chancellor to entertain the suit as a class action was proper since, although the members of the class are numerous and the principle of law common to the members, the plaintiffs did not show that a class action would, under subsection (b) of this rule, be superior to individual remedies for a fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy, since, if the defendant did prove that plaintiff's fee was reasonable, plaintiff would not be in an equitable position to profit from a finding that defendant overcharged other borrowers. Drew v. First Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 271 Ark. 667, 610 S.W.2d 876 (1981).

Where seven former city policemen sought to recover up to a maximum of 30 days accumulated sick leave pay, and also sought to maintain the suit as a class action for the benefit of other former policemen who came within the same amended city ordinance, a class action suit was not proper under subsection (a) of this rule since the total number of other former policemen was determined to be ten; thus the class was not too numerous and it was not impracticable to bring all 17 plaintiffs to court at the same time. City of N. Little Rock v. Vogelgesang, 273 Ark. 390, 619 S.W.2d 652 (1981).

In a medical malpractice action, the issue of informed consent is foundational to the individual claims and cannot be tried on a class basis. Arthur v. Zearley, 320 Ark. 273, 895 S.W.2d 928 (1995).

There must be full compliance with § 26-18-507(e)(2)(A) before sovereign immunity is waived; therefore, where only one taxpayer has claimed a refund, no taxpayer class action can be certified. State, Dep't of Fin. & Admin. v. Staton, 325 Ark. 341, 942 S.W.2d 804 (1996), overruled in part, Bd. of Trs. of the Univ. of Ark. v. Andrews, 2018 Ark. 12, 535 S.W.3d 616 (2018).

In action by taxpayers for refunds from the state, chancellor lacked authority to certify as members of class taxpayers who had not filed refund claims, because sovereign immunity was waived only for plaintiffs who had followed the procedure outlined in § 26-18-507 and applied for refunds. ACW, Inc. v. Weiss, 329 Ark. 302, 947 S.W.2d 770 (1997).

While Ark. Code Ann. § 23-2-301 gave to Arkansas Public Service Commission the power to hear a class action in an administrative proceeding, the Commission was not required to follow the Rules of Civil Procedure and address a class certification issue before determining the merits of a case, and did not err in denying class certification because individual claims of purported class members lacked merit. Brandon v. Ark. Western Gas Co., 76 Ark. App. 201, 61 S.W.3d 193 (2001).

Class Action Maintainable.

Subsection (b) of this rule requires that a class action be superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy. Lemarco, Inc. v. Wood, 305 Ark. 1, 804 S.W.2d 724 (1991).

The requirements of numerosity, commonality, predominance, superiority, typicality, and adequacy were met, and class certification was proper. Mega Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Jacola, 330 Ark. 261, 954 S.W.2d 898 (1997), superseded by statute as stated in Indus. Welding Supplies of Hattiesburg, LLC v. Pinson, 2017 Ark. 315, 530 S.W.3d 854 (2017).

Applying the criteria of typicality, predominance, and superiority of this rule, the trial court determined that a class action was appropriate. BNL Equity Corp. v. Pearson, 340 Ark. 351, 10 S.W.3d 838, cert. denied, 531 U.S. 823, 121 S. Ct. 66, 148 L. Ed. 2d 32 (2000).

Where each class member in the lawsuit would be asserting the same claim of usury against the lender, the lender's individual defenses or claims against particular class members or subsets of class members did not defeat the initial usury inquiry, therefore, the class representative's claims were typical of the class's claims; moreover, because of the pervasiveness of the issue of the lender's fees in the transactions of all potential class members, a class action was the superior method for adjudicating the class members' claims. The Money Place v. Barnes, 349 Ark. 518, 78 S.W.3d 730 (2002).

Circuit court did not err in granting the customers' class certification under this rule where there was a common usury claim against the stores that ran amongst all class members, and the need to resolve the usury question outweighed the possibility of individual defenses, and the class action was fair to both sides in the case. Johnson's Sales Co. v. Harris, 370 Ark. 387, 260 S.W.3d 273 (2007).

Class Certification.

In an action concerning an insurance company's payment of medical expenses incurred in car accidents, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in certifying the class because class members could be determined by reviewing whether the requested payment and the received payment were different, the class would contain at least 100 members, plaintiff's criminal convictions did not bar him from service as a class representative, the affirmative defenses raised were secondary to the common question, whether the insurer engaged in a scheme to reduce reimbursements to its insureds and whether the scheme constituted a breach was a question common to all class members, and the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in concluding common issues predominated and the class-action mechanism was superior. Shelter Mut. Ins. Co. v. Baggett, 2022 Ark. 149, 646 S.W.3d 106 (2022).

Subsection (a) of this rule differs from that of the federal rule, but it embodies implicitly the requirement that class certification is dependent on the representative parties protecting the interests of the class fairly and adequately. First Nat'l Bank v. Mercantile Bank, 304 Ark. 196, 801 S.W.2d 38 (1990).

The trial judge has broad discretion in matters of class certification. A finding of adequate representation may be jeopardized if a representative's interests are in conflict with other class members, but six members who disagree with what is a potentially legitimate claim, common to thousands of people, does not justify decertification. Union Nat'l Bank v. Barnhart, 308 Ark. 190, 823 S.W.2d 878 (1992).

Where the insurer failed to request specific findings in regard to the elements of subsection (b) of this rule either prior to or after the entry of the order of certification, it waived the issue on appeal. Mega Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Jacola, 330 Ark. 261, 954 S.W.2d 898 (1997), superseded by statute as stated in Indus. Welding Supplies of Hattiesburg, LLC v. Pinson, 2017 Ark. 315, 530 S.W.3d 854 (2017).

Trial court properly certified a class consisting of every person who had engaged in deferred presentment transactions with the check cashing companies anywhere in Arkansas, properly concluding that the class representatives' experience with the companies and the transactions involved were typical of all of the companies' customers, that questions of law or fact common to the class members predominated over individual issues and that a class action was superior to other available methods of adjudication. F&G Fin. Servs. v. Barnes, 349 Ark. 420, 82 S.W.3d 162 (2002).

Where class members alleged that the service fees charged in connection with check-cashing transactions were loans, and that such service fees were usurious in violation of the Arkansas Constitution, the trial court properly found that the requirements of adequacy of representation, typicality, predominance, and superiority under this rule were met where class members were adequate persons to serve as class representatives, their counsel could adequately represent the class, they demonstrated that they had at least a minimal level of interest in the cause of action, and the common issue was whether the check-cashing transactions were considered loans and whether the fees charged in connection with those transactions were usurious in nature. THE/FRE, Inc. v. Martin, 349 Ark. 507, 78 S.W.3d 723 (2002).

In class action against lender for violating usury laws, where lender neither requested specific findings of fact for the issues under this rule, nor did it file a motion pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 52(b) after the entry of the court's judgment to make additional findings on the issues, the lender's argument that the trial court "failed to undertake the required rigorous analysis" in considering the class-certification request was waived on appeal; further, the appellate court did not require that the trial court conduct a "rigorous analysis" under this rule. The Money Place v. Barnes, 349 Ark. 518, 78 S.W.3d 730 (2002).

The trial court is not required to undertake a "rigorous analysis" of requirements of predominance and superiority under subsection (b) of this rule in considering a class certification request. Tay-Tay, Inc. v. Young, 349 Ark. 675, 80 S.W.3d 365 (2002).

Under the terms of Ark. Const., Art. 16, § 13, the parties to an illegal exaction suit include all citizens of the county, city, or town affected by the illegal exaction, and because all citizens are parties to the constitutionally created class, the right to opt out, as developed under this rule, is not applicable in an illegal exaction suit; further, communication with the affected citizens have to be unfettered to determine whether any alleged illegal exaction may have been voluntarily paid, and therefore, not subject to suit under Ark. Const., Art. 16, § 13. Worth v. City of Rogers, 351 Ark. 183, 89 S.W.3d 875 (2002).

Appeal by city from a class-certification order in an illegal-exaction case was not a proper basis for an interlocutory appeal under RAP-Civ 2(a)(9); the taxpayers were already a class under Ark. Const., Art. 16, § 13. City of W. Helena v. Sullivan, 353 Ark. 420, 108 S.W.3d 615 (2003).

Trial court did not err in granting teacher's motion for class certification in a breach of contract action against the school district because there were adequate methods for determining the identity of class members, the class definition was specific enough to prevent it from becoming too unwieldy, and there were common issues as what comprised a school day under the teacher contracts and the teachers' uncompensated non-instructional duties; further, the class definition did not require the trial court to delve into the ultimate issue in determining which teachers were class members. Van Buren Sch. Dist. v. Jones, 365 Ark. 610, 232 S.W.3d 444 (2006).

In a suit by former and current residents of an apartment complex for damages resulting from their exposure to dangerous levels of carbon monoxide, the circuit court did not err in certifying the class as to claims of breach of contract and fraud because the claims regarding improper design and construction were common to all class members. The circuit court properly denied, however, class certification as to the residents' claims of negligence, wrongful death, and strict liability because proximate cause was a foundational element of their tort claims and the residents could not establish the collective liability of the apartments' owners, builder, and architect without addressing the individualized issues of proximate cause, which involved the extent of each resident's exposure to carbon monoxide and the particular ill effects suffered by each individual resident as a result of such exposure. Simpson Hous. Solutions, LLC v. Hernandez, 2009 Ark. 480, 347 S.W.3d 1 (2009).

Denial of the class member's motion to strike in an action against cellular providers was inappropriate, in part because expert testimony focused on one provider's damages and how other costs might increase if the early termination fees were invalidated; thus, the expert's opinion was concerned with the underlying merits of the case and it was improper to consider the underlying merits at the class-certification stage of proceedings. Moreover, the expert opinion contained conclusions that invaded the role of the circuit court. Rosenow v. Alltel Corp., 2010 Ark. 26, 358 S.W.3d 879 (2010).

Denial of the class member's motion for class certification in an action against cellular providers was inappropriate because the reasoning by the circuit court went well beyond the procedural issues of whether there were any common issues and whether those common issues predominated under subdivision (a)(2) of this rule. The circuit court's focus in analyzing the requirements of this rule was possible damages sustained by one of the providers and not the claims alleged by the class member on behalf of the class. Rosenow v. Alltel Corp., 2010 Ark. 26, 358 S.W.3d 879 (2010).

Certification of a class pursuant to this rule was proper because, although identification of a class member may have required determining if the person was legally responsible for the charges for services or goods received from a health care provider, that did not require delving into the individual merits of each claim, legal responsibility for the charges was but one factor to consider, and the provider's records contained much of the information needed to analyze this issue; further, the individual issues here, applying the various factors to determine the prices accepted by the provider to satisfy the patient accounts of nonclass members, did not defeat the common question. Since the only alternative method to adjudicate the claims of the class would have been through numerous separate trials, with the potential for different and inconsistent results, the superiority requirement was satisfied. Baptist Health v. Hutson, 2011 Ark. 210, 382 S.W.3d 662 (2011).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in finding that the requirements for class certification were met because a seller who entered into contracts for the sale and purchase of real property used the same master contract containing similar contract language in the transactions with each member of the proposed class of buyers. Moreover, each member claimed that, by using these contracts, the seller charged interest in usurious amounts and, by doing so, engaged in deceptive trade practices. Lambert & Lambert Investors, Inc. v. Harris, 2016 Ark. 24, 480 S.W.3d 138 (2016).

Circuit court's order certifying a class in a breach-of-contract action against an employer failed to comply with the mandatory requirements of subsection (b) of this rule; the order did not define the class claims, issues, or defenses, but rather made a bare conclusion that the employees had satisfied the elements of the rule. Thus, the case was remanded. Indus. Welding Supplies of Hattiesburg, LLC v. Pinson, 2017 Ark. 315, 530 S.W.3d 854 (2017).

Even in the absence of a Rule 52 motion, the circuit court must still comply with the mandatory language contained in Rule 23 in order for the appellate court to conduct a meaningful review. Indus. Welding Supplies of Hattiesburg, LLC v. Pinson, 2017 Ark. 315, 530 S.W.3d 854 (2017).

Ark. R. Civ. P. 23 requires, at a minimum, that the circuit court define the class claims, issues, or defenses. Rule 23 is not as exacting as Ark. R. Civ. P. 52, which imposes a heightened standard because it requires the circuit court to make specific findings of fact and conclusions of law. Indus. Welding Supplies of Hattiesburg, LLC v. Pinson, 2017 Ark. 315, 530 S.W.3d 854 (2017).

Circuit court erred in denying employees' motion for class certification because the class did exist and was ascertainable; the proposed class included individuals who worked for the former employer for more than one year on the date of their termination, were terminated from the former employer as part of the merger, and were not paid for their vacation time. Vaughn v. Mercy Clinic Fort Smith Cmty., 2019 Ark. 329, 587 S.W.3d 216 (2019).

In employees' class action for the failure to pay them for their unused vacation time at the time their employment was terminated with their former employer and they were transferred to the acquiring entity, the circuit court erred in denying class certification after the former employer was granted a stay and then paid the employees for their unused vacation time. Vaughn v. Mercy Clinic Fort Smith Cmty., 2019 Ark. 329, 587 S.W.3d 216 (2019).

Circuit court abused its discretion by relying on payments to defeat this rule's requirements because whether the employees were entitled to prejudgment interest, or when such interest charges began to accrue, should not have been considered at the class-certification stage; and the class of individuals who were not paid for their unused vacation time at the time of the termination of their employment with the employer still existed. Vaughn v. Mercy Clinic Fort Smith Cmty., 2019 Ark. 329, 587 S.W.3d 216 (2019).

Circuit court's failure to timely decide the class issue and the extended delay it imposed in this case was not in keeping with the requirement of this rule to decide class certification issues at "an early practicable time"; this rule does not provide for the circuit court to delay its decision in anticipation of the development of an affirmative defense. Vaughn v. Mercy Clinic Fort Smith Cmty., 2019 Ark. 329, 587 S.W.3d 216 (2019).

Certification of a class action alleging that defendants' negligence caused plaintiffs' water systems to be contaminated with sewage was appropriate under Ark. R. Civ. P. 23. There was no abuse of discretion in the circuit court's definition of the class, as the court could easily ascertain the property owners, nor in the circuit court's finding that common issues of fact and law predominated over individual issues. There were overarching issues common to the class that involved proximate causation. C.J. Mahan Constr. Co. v. Betzner, 2021 Ark. 42 (2021).

Commonality.

Class members met the commonality requirement of subdivision (a)(2) of this rule where the club's alleged material breaches of the supplemental declarations, which were common to all class members, gave rise to the question of whether the tie-in rights were enforceable. Diamante v. Dye, 2013 Ark. 501, 430 S.W.3d 710 (2013).

Commonality requirement was met where the allegations were based on the LLC taking action to collect debts without the necessary license. CACH, LLC v. Echols, 2016 Ark. 446, 506 S.W.3d 217 (2016).

In a class action filed by the personal representative of a resident's estate against a nursing and rehabilitation center, the commonality requirement was satisfied because the center's act of understaffing established a common question relating to the entire class. Robinson Nursing & Rehab. Ctr., LLC v. Phillips, 2017 Ark. 162, 519 S.W.3d 291 (2017).

In employees' suit for breach of contract and unjust enrichment due to employer's failure to pay earned but unused vacation time, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in finding that the employees had met the commonality requirement for class action certification under subdivision (a)(2) of this rule, where the terms of the employer's contractual obligation did not depend on each employee's performance, and any differences between employee contracts and noncompete agreements could be addressed with subclasses. Indus. Welding Supplies of Hattiesburg, LLC v. Pinson, 2019 Ark. 325, 587 S.W.3d 540 (2019).

Circuit court properly granted class certification because it did not abuse its discretion on its commonality finding; the interpretation and enforceability of exclusions in a municipal health benefit fund's policy booklet would be the same as to all class members. Mun. Health Ben. Fund v. Hendrix, 2020 Ark. 235, 602 S.W.3d 101 (2020).

Discretion of Court.

While a chancellor does have discretion in determining whether to certify a suit as a class action, that discretion is not unlimited. The latitude of a chancellor's discretion increases proportionately as the situation presents to the trial judge a question that cannot equally well be presented to the Supreme Court by the printed record. Where the question on appeal turns heavily on the credibility of witnesses, for example, the Supreme Court will defer to the superior position of the chancellor in that regard. Ford Motor Credit Co. v. Nesheim, 287 Ark. 78, 696 S.W.2d 732 (1985), overruled, International Union of Electrical, etc. v. Hudson, 295 Ark. 107, 747 S.W.2d 81 (1988).

Court abused its discretion in certifying a class action in customers' suit against a telephone company challenging interest charges because the definition of a class member depended on the determination of the ultimate question, i.e., whether the interest charges were usurious; definition provided no objective criteria for ascertaining class membership and the court had to delve into the merits in order to determine who was an appropriate class member. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co. v. Pipkin Enters., 359 Ark. 402, 198 S.W.3d 115 (2004).

Circuit court erred in denying, inter alia, a condemnnee's motion for class action certification because the circuit court did not consider the evidence in the record, which would have included any admissible evidence submitted as exhibits by the parties in support of their contentions that the motion for class certification should have been granted or denied. Convent Corp. v. City of North Little Rock, 2016 Ark. 212, 492 S.W.3d 498 (2016).

Dispositive Motions.

Appellate court declined to impose a new requirement that dispositive motions be decided before a ruling on a class-certification motion. Infinity Healthcare Mgmt. of Ark., LLC v. Boyd, 2019 Ark. 346, 588 S.W.3d 22 (2019).

Due Process.

In a class action suit, those persons who have allegedly been denied due process are those absent class members who will receive directory rather than mandatory notice of the action; their right to due process is a personal right, and it may not be asserted by their adversary. In the event the class loses at the trial on the merits, an absent class member can then contend that the judgment on the merits is not entitled to res adjudication effect because of the directory, rather than the mandatory, notice. Ford Motor Credit Co. v. Rogers, 285 Ark. 64, 685 S.W.2d 145 (1985).

A 28-day notice met the requirements of the rule and due process. Seeco, Inc. v. Hales, 334 Ark. 307, 973 S.W.2d 818 (1998).

Federal Rules.

The amended version of this rule tracks the language of the federal rule, but even under the prior version of this rule the spirit of the federal rule was to be found even if all the words were not, so that the federal and state rules all set out the same basic requirements for a class action. Union Nat'l Bank v. Barnhart, 308 Ark. 190, 823 S.W.2d 878 (1992); Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Farm Bureau Policy Holders & Members, 323 Ark. 706, 918 S.W.2d 129 (1996).

Findings of Fact.

A trial court is required to conduct an analysis of the factors required for certification of a class action under the provisions of this rule and to enter written findings of fact and conclusions of law when requested by a party to the litigation as provided by Rule 52. BPS Inc. v. Richardson, 341 Ark. 834, 20 S.W.3d 403 (2000), superseded by statute as stated in Indus. Welding Supplies of Hattiesburg, LLC v. Pinson, 2017 Ark. 315, 530 S.W.3d 854 (2017).

When Ark. R. Civ. P. 52 was invoked, the circuit court was required to enter specific findings of fact and conclusions of law, even in denying class certification. Conley v. Boll Weevil Pawn Co., 2019 Ark. 31, 566 S.W.3d 125 (2019).

Circuit court's order denying class certification was inadequate where the plaintiff had requested specific findings of fact and conclusions of law pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 23 and 52, the order spoke nothing of adequacy, predominance, or superiority, and only alluded to the other Rule 23 factors, and nothing in case law suggested that Rule 52's requirements were only applicable when the circuit court granted class certification. Conley v. Boll Weevil Pawn Co., 2019 Ark. 31, 566 S.W.3d 125 (2019).

When Ark. R. Civ. P. 52 is invoked, its requirements for specific findings of fact and conclusions of law must apply regardless of whether class certification is granted or denied. All six factors in Rule 23 must be analyzed by the court. Conley v. Boll Weevil Pawn Co., 2019 Ark. 31, 566 S.W.3d 125 (2019).

In granting class certification to nursing employees at a health and rehabilitation facility, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in either its class-certification order or its Rule 52 order, which used the multipage form that defendants provided for the circuit court to use in making its findings of fact and conclusions of law. Infinity Healthcare Mgmt. of Ark., LLC v. Boyd, 2019 Ark. 346, 588 S.W.3d 22 (2019).

Identification of Class.

In an action alleging that the defendant store misled the public with its double-coupon advertisements, the certification of a class action was properly denied because of the all but insurmountable difficulties in identifying the class. Ferguson v. Kroger Co., 343 Ark. 627, 37 S.W.3d 590 (2001).

A class must be susceptible to definition and cannot be amorphous or imprecise. Ferguson v. Kroger Co., 343 Ark. 627, 37 S.W.3d 590 (2001).

In a class action filed against a title company, the class was properly identified by examining documents where the title company participated in closings during a relevant time period; it was administratively feasible to identify the class, even though it was not convenient for the title company due to poor bookkeeping practices. Landers Title Co. v. Chandler, 358 Ark. 66, 186 S.W.3d 695 (2004).

Trial court erred in certifying a class pursuant to this rule because the parties seeking certification had advanced two different class definitions, the trial court had included both of these definitions in its order, and there was no way of ascertaining which definition was the intended class definition. Teris, L.L.C. v. Golliher, 371 Ark. 369, 266 S.W.3d 730 (2007).

Health-information management company's argument that a trial court erred in granting a motion for class certification under this rule because the class definition presented no feasible means for ascertaining the members of the class failed because: (1) class members could have been identified by objective criteria, including the company's own billing records; (2) any issue that could have arose regarding a notary fee was a damages issue and did not render the class definition defective; and (3) the fact that the company failed to maintain and store sufficient records was not the fault of the patient or the class. ChartOne, Inc. v. Raglon, 373 Ark. 275, 283 S.W.3d 576 (2008).

Class definition was sufficiently precise because the class was identifiable from objective criteria, specifically, ownership of the specified vehicles so specifically equipped, and no investigation into the merits of each individual's claim was needed to identify the class members. The class definition clearly stated that the class included any owner or subsequent owner of certain vehicles containing a specified parking-brake system, with the terms owners and subsequent owners being taken from a corporation's own warranty publications. GMC v. Bryant, 374 Ark. 38, 285 S.W.3d 634 (2008), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 1098, 129 S. Ct. 901, 173 L. Ed. 2d 107 (2009).

Order certifying a class and defining the class as all adults residing or occupying business premises who were physically evacuated because of the fire and explosion at issue in the lawsuit was a sufficient definition because the definition of the class provided objective criteria for ascertaining class membership without requiring an investigation into the merits of each individual's claim. Teris, LLC v. Chandler, 375 Ark. 70, 289 S.W.3d 63 (2008).

When consumers claimed a manufacturer falsely advertised that light cigarettes were safer than regular cigarettes, a trial court sufficiently found a class was ascertainable because (1) the court's class definition referred to objective criteria, (2) the court did not have to separately find ascertainability, and (3) consumers did not have to provide receipts for purchases to show class membership. Philip Morris Cos. v. Miner, 2015 Ark. 73, 462 S.W.3d 313 (2015).

Class was sufficiently defined for purposes of class certification against nursing homes, as the definition did not have to include an element of actual harm. GGNSC Arkadelphia, LLC v. Lamb, 2015 Ark. 253, 465 S.W.3d 826 (2015).

Defined class of Arkansas citizens who entered into certain lease agreements for the production of natural gas on their property was ascertainable where citizenship could be determined through affidavits or testimony. Seeco, Inc. v. Snow, 2016 Ark. 444, 506 S.W.3d 206 (2016).

Class definition was sufficiently definite so that it was administratively feasible for the circuit court to determine whether a particular individual was a member of the proposed class because the class definition included residents and estates of residents who resided at a nursing and rehabilitation center from June 11, 2010 to the present. Robinson Nursing & Rehab. Ctr., LLC v. Phillips, 2017 Ark. 162, 519 S.W.3d 291 (2017).

Circuit court properly denied the plaintiffs' motion for class certification in litigation against a pawn shop concerning interest rates because the definitions of the proposed classes were not based on objective criteria; the circuit court would be required to determine one of the ultimate issues in the case—whether a debt was incurred—before it could be determined whether prospective plaintiffs could properly be included in either of the proposed classes. Walker v. Wilmoe Corp., 2017 Ark. 340, 531 S.W.3d 387 (2017).

Jurisdiction.

Arkansas circuit court had subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to subsection (e) of this rule regarding an intervention to contest a settlement of an Arkansas class action on behalf of about 250,000 persons nationwide who held cancer insurance policies, despite the lack of controversy between plaintiffs and defendants upon settlement. Hunter v. Runyan, 2011 Ark. 43, 382 S.W.3d 643, cert. denied, 565 U.S. 879, 132 S. Ct. 243, 181 L. Ed. 2d 139 (2011).

Merits of Case.

In an action challenging the defendant's practice of cashing checks for a fee, the trial court erred when it reached the merits on a motion for class certification and determined that the cash advances were loans, that the fees charged were interest, and that the transactions were usurious on their face, void ab initio, and unenforceable. Advance Am. v. Garrett, 344 Ark. 75, 40 S.W.3d 239 (2001).

Trial court did not err in finding that a class action was the superior method for adjudicating the claims at issue; the trial court found that the predominant issue was whether the fees assessed in exchange for deferring presentment of checks were usurious, and an attempt to raise defenses at this stage, including the issue of whether the individuals were to remain in the lawsuit on a theory of piercing the corporate veil, was an attempt to delve into the merits of the case, which the court refused to address. Nat'l Cash, Inc. v. Loveless, 361 Ark. 112, 205 S.W.3d 127 (2005).

Circuit court erred when it determined that a claim of an illegal tying arrangement based on an alleged forced purchase by a franchisee could not have fallen under state statutes; federal jurisdiction was not exclusive in these matters under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq.; moreover, a finding that a state claim could not have prevailed or that defenses existed was improper at the class certification stage because the only permissible inquiry was whether the elements of this rule had been satisfied. Carquest of Hot Springs, Inc. v. General Parts, Inc., 367 Ark. 218, 238 S.W.3d 916 (2006).

Monetary Relief.

Reference to a sanction which may or may not become necessary does not amount to a request for "monetary relief" by a class as contemplated in subsection (c) of this rule. Hamilton v. Villines, 323 Ark. 492, 915 S.W.2d 271 (1996).

Bifurcated process of certifying a class to resolve preliminary, common issues and then decertifying the class to resolve individual issues, such as damages, is consistent with the rule. Beverly Enterprises-Arkansas, Inc. v. Thomas, 370 Ark. 310, 259 S.W.3d 445 (2007).

Notice.

An order prescribing notice to absent class members of the class action is fundamental to the further conduct of the case, and is reviewable on interlocutory appeal. Union Nat'l Bank v. Barnhart, 308 Ark. 190, 823 S.W.2d 878 (1992).

Defendants in a class action have standing to challenge the notice to absent class members since they are not asserting the due process rights of the class, but rights of their own. Without a determination of the issue, the defendants may be subject to multiple lawsuits from absent class members who claim they never received adequate notice. Union Nat'l Bank v. Barnhart, 308 Ark. 190, 823 S.W.2d 878 (1992).

This rule gives the court continuing jurisdiction to require additional terms and conditions in order to ensure that the class members are being fairly and adequately represented, and to correct any deficiencies as to notice to absent class members during the pendency of the litigation. Union Nat'l Bank v. Barnhart, 308 Ark. 190, 823 S.W.2d 878 (1992).

The purpose of requiring notice to class members who may have a monetary recovery in prospect is to allow them to decide whether to participate as members of the class; in a case in which the prospective class member has no individual claim to relief, there is no purpose in the notice requirement that would not obtain anytime a city or county is sued. Hamilton v. Villines, 323 Ark. 492, 915 S.W.2d 271 (1996).

Notices of class certification, the settlement, and the date of the fairness hearing to class members were adequate in that the class members were given approximately three months notice of the opt-out deadline, individual notices were properly sent, and proper newspaper publication was made such that the minimum standards of due process were met. Ballard v. Martin, 349 Ark. 564, 79 S.W.3d 838 (2002), cert. denied, 537 U.S. 1105, 123 S. Ct. 871, 154 L. Ed. 2d 774 (2003).

Developer's motion for summary judgment on liability issues prior to class notice waived the mandate that notice be given under subsection (c) of this rule; it would make little sense for a defendant such as the developer to move for summary judgment on liability issues before notice, lose on that motion, and then argue that the court's judgment violated notice requirements. Nat'l Enters., Inc. v. Kessler, 363 Ark. 167, 213 S.W.3d 597 (2005).

In a dispute brought by condominium owners against corporations who were successors-in-interest to the original developers, the trial court did not err in ruling on the owner's cross-motion for summary judgment on the issue of liability before the class members were noticed as the corporations waived the issue of notice, and § 18-14-601 was quite clear that the obligations of the original developers remained in place. Nat'l Enters. v. Kessler, 363 Ark. 167, 213 S.W.3d 597 (2005).

Defendant condominium developers' motion for summary judgment on liability issues prior to class notice waived the mandate that notice be given under subsection (c) of this rule. Office of Child Support Enforcement v. Pyron, 363 Ark. 521, 215 S.W.3d 637 (2005).

Though liability issues could be resolved before notice to the class members due to defendant developers' waiver, notice was then appropriate to class members under the direction of the circuit court, and the court remanded the case for that purpose. Office of Child Support Enforcement v. Pyron, 363 Ark. 521, 215 S.W.3d 637 (2005).

When a defendant moves for summary judgment prior to class notice, and the motion is denied and no decision on the merits is rendered, the defendant does not waive the right to compel pretrial notice under subsection (c) of this rule. City of Fort Smith v. Merriott, 2020 Ark. 94, 593 S.W.3d 481 (2020).

Circuit court erred in denying a city's motion to compel class notice under subsection (c) of this rule on the ground that the city waived notice by moving for summary judgment prior to class certification and notice because the circuit court's broad approach far exceeded the scope of a prior opinion (National Enterprises v. Kessler, 363 Ark. 167 (2005)) and misapprehended the authorities relied on in that opinion. In this case, there had not been a ruling on the merits of liability prior to notice because the only ruling was to deny the city's motion for summary judgment. City of Fort Smith v. Merriott, 2020 Ark. 94, 593 S.W.3d 481 (2020).

Numerosity.

A trial court should not delve into the merits of affirmative defenses, such as release and consent, in determining whether the numerosity requirement of subsection (a) of this rule has been satisfied at the class-certification stage. Fraley v. Williams Ford Tractor & Equip. Co., 339 Ark. 322, 5 S.W.3d 423 (1999).

Numerosity requirement was established in a class action suit against a title company under the Arkansas Deceptive Trade Practices Act, § 4-88-101 et seq., because the title company closed more than 50,000 loan transactions in the relevant period of time, the title company routinely charged a document fee, the issues raised in one case were present in most of the closings where the title company participated, and the act complained of by the representative was typical of the title company's actions in other closings. Lenders Title Co. v. Chandler, 358 Ark. 66, 186 S.W.3d 695 (2004).

Where the circuit court's defined the class as all persons in Arkansas that paid a documentary fee to appellants since December 31, 1997, this definition was sufficient because it provided an objective set of criteria that could be used to identify the class members. Asbury Auto. Group, Inc. v. Palasack, 366 Ark. 601, 237 S.W.3d 462 (2006).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion by granting class certification under this rule in suit by owners of mineral interests against defendant lessee after it suspended royalty payments. Although defendant contended that a 36-member class was insufficient under the numerosity requirement, the circuit court considered the number of potential claimants known at the time to exist and determined that joinder of all potential claimants would be impractical. Stephens Prod. Co. v. Mainer, 2019 Ark. 118, 571 S.W.3d 905 (2019).

Supreme Court of Arkansas has held that when the numerosity question is a close one, the balance should be struck in favor of a finding of numerosity in light of the trial court's option to later decertify. Stephens Prod. Co. v. Mainer, 2019 Ark. 118, 571 S.W.3d 905 (2019).

Pre-Certification Communications with Potential Class Members.

Pre-certification communications with potential class members which attempt to substantially reduce member participation in the class action, or which otherwise indicate a likelihood of coercion or a serious potential for harm to the interests of the class action, should be restricted or prohibited when brought to the attention of the trial court. Fraleay v. Williams Ford Tractor & Equip. Co., 339 Ark. 322, 5 S.W.3d 423 (1999).

Pre-certification communications by the defendant with potential class members were improper and presented a likelihood of serious abuses and, therefore, the trial court's consideration of such communications, including the releases that resulted therefrom, was an abuse of discretion where representatives of the defendant attempted to contact all potential class members prior to class certification, attempted to discourage participation in the lawsuit, and also discussed the merits of the case. Fraleay v. Williams Ford Tractor & Equip. Co., 339 Ark. 322, 5 S.W.3d 423 (1999).

Predominant Common Questions.

Where the validity of a 99-year lease of a gate house to a developer, objected to by property owners in the developments, was the main issue, questions of law or fact common to the members of the class predominated over questions affecting only individual members. Cooper Communities, Inc. v. Sarver, 288 Ark. 6, 701 S.W.2d 364 (1986).

In class action challenging propriety of insurers' requirement that insureds pay membership fee to the Farm Bureau Federation, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in ruling on the commonality of interests; the common question was whether the applicable statutes preclude the companies from requiring their insureds to pay such fee. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Farm Bureau Policy Holders & Members, 323 Ark. 706, 918 S.W.2d 129 (1996).

Individual issues raised by a claim of fraudulent concealment and the defenses of statute of limitations, release, and consent did not override the common questions relating to the allegation of a centralized scheme perpetrated by the defendant. Fraleay v. Williams Ford Tractor & Equip. Co., 339 Ark. 322, 5 S.W.3d 423 (1999).

Where a common question of misrepresentation under subdivision (a)(1) of this rule was the linchpin of every class member's case and needed to be resolved as the first step, resolution of the issue predominated over potential individual issues relating to investor knowledge or affirmative defenses. BNL Equity Corp. v. Pearson, 340 Ark. 351, 10 S.W.3d 838, cert. denied, 531 U.S. 823, 121 S. Ct. 66, 148 L. Ed. 2d 32 (2000).

Employees' breach of contract action against employer regarding an incentive bonus plan lacked the commonality required for certification as a class action, under subdivision (a)(2) of this rule, since inquiry of each class member as to his or her understanding of the contract terms was required. Williamson v. Sanofi Winthrop Pharms., Inc., 347 Ark. 89, 60 S.W.3d 428 (2001).

Where a title company allegedly engaged in the unauthorized practice of law and violated the Arkansas Deceptive Trade Practices Act, § 4-88-101 et seq., a class action was appropriate because the common wrong alleged applied to every member of the class, and the individual claims did not predominate because the common issues were capable of resolution first. American Abstract & Title Co. v. Rice, 358 Ark. 1, 186 S.W.3d 705 (2004).

Predominance requirement was established in a class action suit against a title company under the Arkansas Deceptive Trade Practices Act, § 4-88-101 et seq., because several common issues predominated over individual claims; the common threshold questions concerning whether the company was permitted to charge document fees during closings could have been decided before the consideration of any individual issues. Lenders Title Co. v. Chandler, 358 Ark. 66, 186 S.W.3d 695 (2004).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the predominance element was satisfied where common issues of law and fact predominated over the individual issues in the case; the predominating questions concerned the charge of the documentary fee and the basis for charging that fee. Asbury Auto. Group, Inc. v. Palasack, 366 Ark. 601, 237 S.W.3d 462 (2006).

Starting point in examining the predominance issue is whether a common wrong has been alleged against the defendant. If a case involves preliminary, common issues of liability and wrongdoing that affect all class members, the predominance requirement of the rule is satisfied even if the trial court must subsequently determine individual damage issues in bifurcated proceedings. Beverly Enterprises-Arkansas, Inc. v. Thomas, 370 Ark. 310, 259 S.W.3d 445 (2007).

In a case in which a corporation that had been sued for damages and injunctive relief arising out of vapors, gasses, odors, and other forms of hazardous, noxious, toxic and or harmful substances and contamination emitted from an industrial wastewater treatment system operated by the corporation, the trial court erred in granting limited class certification because numerous and complex individual issues predominated over the common issues. Georgia-Pacific Corp. v. Carter, 371 Ark. 295, 265 S.W.3d 107 (2007).

Element of predominance, under subsection (b) of this rule, was satisfied in a case that alleged that a health-information management company's actions constituted a statewide deceptive practice because the issue of whether the prices charged by the company exceeded those allowed under § 16-46-106 was the single most common issue that predominated over all others because the company's billing practices, whether they were for the copying of records or for shipping or postage, were the central issue of the litigation, and the patient alleged that the company engaged in a deceptive scheme to overcharge its customers in violation of statutory and common law. ChartOne, Inc. v. Raglon, 373 Ark. 275, 283 S.W.3d 576 (2008).

Fact that various states' laws could be required in determining certain issues, such as damages, restitution, or other individual issues, did not mean certification was improper because whether or not a class of vehicles contained a defectively designed parking-brake system and whether or not a corporation concealed that defect were predominating questions. A circuit court was not required to engage in a choice of law analysis prior to certifying a class. GMC v. Bryant, 374 Ark. 38, 285 S.W.3d 634 (2008), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 1098, 129 S. Ct. 901, 173 L. Ed. 2d 107 (2009).

Pursuant to this rule, the circuit court abused its discretion in certifying a class action where there was no one set of operative facts applicable to all class members that may or may not have constituted the unauthorized practice of law or a violation of the Arkansas Deceptive Trade Practices Act by the railroad; the question of whether the railroad advised claimants of their legal rights would vary from person to person, and there was no one set of operative facts that established the railroad's liability to any given class member. Union Pac. R.R. v. Vickers, 2009 Ark. 259, 308 S.W.3d 573 (2009).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion as to the class' unjust-enrichment claim against the preparer under this rule, as it provided specific findings of fact and conclusions of law; if the issue was resolved in favor of the class, every member would have suffered a common injury of paying a fee the preparer was not permitted to charge. Flow Doc, Inc. v. Horton, 2009 Ark. 411, 334 S.W.3d 865 (2009).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in finding that the requirement of predominance was met because the common issue that predominated was whether a limited liability company, individuals, and trusts breached a fiduciary duty by failing to disclose all relevant information with respect to a proposed merger; that over-arching issue could be resolved before the circuit court reached any of the individualized questions the company, individuals, and trusts raised. Ark. Media, LLC v. Bobitt, 2010 Ark. 76, 360 S.W.3d 129 (2010).

In an action by insureds against insurers, alleging that the insurers sold health insurance policies by systematically misrepresenting the scope and nature of the policies, the trial court properly certified the matter a class action under this rule where common issues of law and fact predominated over individual issues in the case. The crucial issue common to all members of the class was whether the insurers engaged in a general scheme to defraud and misrepresent to potential customers that an offered bundle was equal to or better than major medical coverage and whether the insurers falsely implied that a membership and life insurance policy were included free with the purchase of a healthcare policy. United Am. Ins. Co. v. Smith, 2010 Ark. 468, 371 S.W.3d 685 (2010).

Because there was one set of operative facts concerning a service provider's alleged wrongful collection of an early cancellation fee that could be tried prior to any individual issues, the predominance requirement of subsection (b) of this rule was satisfied, even if some customers other than the named plaintiff had an opportunity to read the service agreement before their service began. DIRECTV, Inc. v. Murray, 2012 Ark. 366, 423 S.W.3d 555 (2012).

Predominance requirement for class actions was satisfied in a suit brought by local taxing entities alleging underpayment of gross-receipts taxes, even if there were some differences in the tax ordinances, because each ordinance had been derived from and enacted under the authority of the same statutes. Hotels.com, L.P. v. Pine Bluff Adver. & Promotion Comm'n, 2013 Ark. 392, 430 S.W.3d 56 (2013).

Predominance requirement was met where the issues related to identical provisions of the supplemental declarations and identical conduct of the golf club owner common to all the proposed class were at the heart of the declaratory judgment action, and the owner's identification of some extraneous facts relating to differences in membership agreements did not change the circuit court's finding of the factual basis for the lawsuit. Diamante v. Dye, 2013 Ark. 501, 430 S.W.3d 710 (2013).

Class of consumers alleging a manufacturer falsely advertised light cigarettes as safer than regular cigarettes was properly certified because individual issues did not predominate, as (1) the key inquiry under Ark. Code Ann. § 4-88-101 et seq., was the manufacturer's deception, and (2) a bifurcated approach could be used to address individual causation and damages issues. Philip Morris Cos. v. Miner, 2015 Ark. 73, 462 S.W.3d 313 (2015).

Class certification against nursing homes met the predominance requirement of this rule because common issues existed as to (1) a duty to provide proper staffing under an admission agreement and § 20-10-1201 et seq., (2) liability under the Arkansas Deceptive Trade Practices Act, § 4-88-101 et seq., and (3) whether statutory and contractual duties were met. GG-NSC Arkadelphia, LLC v. Lamb, 2015 Ark. 253, 465 S.W.3d 826 (2015).

In cases arising from the Arkansas Minimum Wage Act, Ark. Code Ann. § 11-4-201 et seq., it was an abuse of discretion to certify a class of hourly, nonnursing employees alleging that they were not paid for overtime hours worked because a determination of liability would have required a highly individualized inquiry as to each employee's hours during a given week. There was no one set of operative facts to establish liability to any given class member; if the employee did not work through lunch, and if the employee failed to work more than 40 hours in a given work week, there was no liability. Ark. Dep't of Veterans Affairs v. Mallett, 2015 Ark. 428, 474 S.W.3d 861 (2015).

Common questions predominated in the lessors' action against the oil and gas lessee where a common issue was the reasonableness of the lessee's postage-stamp rate for post-production costs. Seeco, Inc. v. Snow, 2016 Ark. 444, 506 S.W.3d 206 (2016).

Predominance requirement was met where the central issue was the LLC's debt-collection practices that were undertaken without a license. CACH, LLC v. Echols, 2016 Ark. 446, 506 S.W.3d 217 (2016).

In a class action filed by the personal representative of a resident's estate against a nursing and rehabilitation center, the predominance requirement was satisfied as to the breach of contract, ADTPA, and unjust-enrichment claims because the common, overarching issues concerned whether the center had liability for chronic understaffing under the admission agreement and the asserted statutes. Robinson Nursing & Rehab. Ctr., LLC v. Phillips, 2017 Ark. 162, 519 S.W.3d 291 (2017).

Circuit court properly concluded that the predominance requirement for class action certification was met as the issue of whether there existed an enforceable obligation to pay the employees for earned but unused vacation time was a preliminary issue common to all case members. Indus. Welding Supplies of Hattiesburg, LLC v. Pinson, 2019 Ark. 325, 587 S.W.3d 540 (2019).

Circuit court properly granted class certification because it did not abuse its discretion on its predominance finding since the interpretation and enforceability of the two policy exclusions in a municipal health benefit fund's policy booklet predominated over any individual issues or defenses; the same exclusionary terms were applied to all class members, and a court would determine whether they were enforceable or not as to all class members. Mun. Health Ben. Fund v. Hendrix, 2020 Ark. 235, 602 S.W.3d 101 (2020).

Prerequisites Generally.

This rule requires that the questions presented be of interest to many persons, or numerous parties, and that it be impractical to bring them all before the court within a reasonable time. Lemarco, Inc. v. Wood, 305 Ark. 1, 804 S.W.2d 724 (1991).

Typicality determines whether a sufficient relationship exists between the injury to the named plaintiff and the conduct affecting the class, so that the court may properly attribute a collective nature to the challenged conduct. In other words, when such a relationship is shown, a plaintiff's injury arises from or is directly related to a wrong to a class, and that wrong includes the wrong to the plaintiff; thus, a plaintiff's claim is typical if it arises from the same event or practice or course of conduct that gives rise to the claims of other class members, and if his or her claims are based on the same legal theory. When it is alleged that the same unlawful conduct was directed at or affected both the named plaintiff and the class sought to be represented, the typicality requirement is usually met irrespective of varying fact patterns which underlie individual claims. Cheqnet Sys. v. Montgomery, 322 Ark. 742, 911 S.W.2d 956 (1995).

The numerosity requirement was met where the proposed class possibly consisted of 3,000 persons; while the exact number of the proposed class was not proved, the exact size of the proposed class and the identity of the class members need not be established for the court to certify a class, and the numerosity requirement may be supported by common sense. Cheqnet Sys. v. Montgomery, 322 Ark. 742, 911 S.W.2d 956 (1995).

Individual questions relating to a class member's reliance for an estoppel claim or reliance for a misrepresentation claim will not defeat class certification. SEECO, Inc. v. Hales, 330 Ark. 402, 954 S.W.2d 234 (1997).

Despite her lack of understanding of some legal terms involved in the case, where class representative clearly showed a minimal level of interest in the action in that she contacted her attorneys to pursue a claim against the lender, stayed in regular contact with her attorneys regarding the progress of the case, and understood the cycle of payment of "fees" or "interest" at percentages beyond the usury rate, the class representative met the minimal bar set by the third requirement derived from subdivision (a)(4) of this rule. The Money Place v. Barnes, 349 Ark. 518, 78 S.W.3d 730 (2002).

Prerequisites Not Satisfied.

Where plaintiff, who filed a class action suit on behalf of himself and all other taxpayers similarly situated, was the only taxpayer who had applied for a refund and been denied, only he had complied with § 26-18-507(e)(2)(A), and thus the proposed class of taxpayers, who had not complied with that section, could not be certified as a class. State, Dep't of Fin. & Admin. v. Tedder, 326 Ark. 495, 932 S.W.2d 755 (1996), overruled in part, Bd. of Trs. of the Univ. of Ark. v. Andrews, 2018 Ark. 12, 535 S.W.3d 616 (2018).

Class certification was properly denied in an action against numerous manufacturers, suppliers, and distributors of fenfluramine, dexfenfluramine, and phentermine for negligence, product liability, failure to warn, and breach of express and implied warranties, because numerous and complex individual issues predominated over the common issues. Baker v. Wyeth-Ayerst Lab. Div., 338 Ark. 242, 992 S.W.2d 797 (1999).

In a suit against an insurer regarding denial of coverage pursuant to the homeowner's insurance policy exclusion for damage caused by settling or earth movement, because there were no objective criteria for ascertaining class membership and because the trial court could not delve into the merits of the underlying claim when deciding whether the requirements for class certification were met, the trial court abused its discretion in certifying the matter as a class action. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v. Ledbetter, 355 Ark. 28, 129 S.W.3d 815 (2003).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to certify a class of municipal bondholders in an action for breach of fiduciary duty, gross negligence, and breach of contract brought against a bank that served as trustee in connection with the issuance and sale of municipal bonds where it would have been necessary to establish that the bank's conduct was the proximate cause for the low price received by each bondholder upon the sale of their bonds and, thus, individual issues predominated over the issues common to the class. Mittry v. Bancorpsouth Bank, 360 Ark. 249, 200 S.W.3d 869 (2005).

Where two parents who had been identified as class representatives did not know much about the fire that was the underlying basis for the complaint and did not understand the responsibilities of a class representative, the motion to deny class certification under subdivision (a)(4) of this rule was proper. Valley v. Nat'l Zinc Processors, Inc., 364 Ark. 184, 217 S.W.3d 832 (2005).

Circuit court abused its discretion in certifying the class action as to negligence because the proximate-causation analysis necessarily required an individual inquiry; there was "no one set of operative facts" to establish a nursing and rehabilitation center's liability to any given class member because each class member's claim would result in an individualized inquiry as to whether understaffing was the proximate cause of his or her injury. Robinson Nursing & Rehab. Ctr., LLC v. Phillips, 2017 Ark. 162, 519 S.W.3d 291 (2017).

Prerequisites Satisfied.

A group comprising 184 individuals satisfied the requirement that the question be of interest to many persons and that it be impractical to bring them all before the court within a reasonable time, the mere signing of the affidavit did not make each affiant a party to the case. Cooper Communities, Inc. v. Sarver, 288 Ark. 6, 701 S.W.2d 364 (1986).

There is no requirement that the trial court find that the facts as to each individual of a class action must in every respect be identical with that of all other members of the class; it is enough to show that a common question of law or fact predominates over other questions affecting only individual members. Arkansas La. Gas Co. v. Morris, 294 Ark. 496, 744 S.W.2d 709 (1988).

Where it was found that (1) the trial court did not abuse its discretion in certifying the class action, (2) the number of persons seeking relief was not too small, (3) there were predominant common questions of law or fact, and (4) a tort action should be allowed to proceed as a class action, there was a sufficient showing of compliance with the requirements of this rule. International Union of Elec., Radio & Mach. Workers v. Hudson, 295 Ark. 107, 747 S.W.2d 81 (1988).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that the requirements of subsection (a) of this rule had been met. Lemarco, Inc. v. Wood, 305 Ark. 1, 804 S.W.2d 724 (1991).

The prerequisites of this rule were met where there were numerous potential class members with predominate common questions even though the law of 39 states relative to novation would have to be explored. Security Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Graham, 306 Ark. 39, 810 S.W.2d 943 (1991).

Although the plaintiffs' allegations as to their injuries and damages were different from those they described for other members of the class, their claims were sufficiently typical in the sense that they arose from the alleged wrong to the class which included the wrong allegedly done to them. Summons v. Missouri Pac. R.R., 306 Ark. 116, 813 S.W.2d 240 (1991).

The prerequisites to a class action were satisfied. Summons v. Missouri Pac. R.R., 306 Ark. 116, 813 S.W.2d 240 (1991).

The requirement of common questions of law or fact was met in action where common questions of fact concerned whether defendant charged $25 per dishonored check and where common questions of law concerned the legality of defendant's charging $25 per dishonored check and the applicability of the federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act and where these questions applied to the entire class of those individuals who were overcharged. Chequet Sys. v. Montgomery, 322 Ark. 742, 911 S.W.2d 956 (1995).

Plaintiff shareholder satisfied typicality requirement despite the fact that she had not yet suffered any damages because, even though some class members may collect more than others, the claims are still typical where they arise from the same wrong. Direct Gen. Ins. Co. v. Lane, 328 Ark. 476, 944 S.W.2d 528 (1997).

The Supreme Court will not look to the merits of class claims or to appellants' defenses in determining the procedural issue of whether the elements of this rule have been satisfied. BNL Equity Corp. v. Pearson, 340 Ark. 351, 10

There was no abuse of discretion in certifying the class under this rule, because each of the claims arose from the same wrong allegedly committed by the trusts, the common issues regarding usury, fraud and choice of law could be addressed before individual issues were resolved, a single class action instead of over 600 individual lawsuits to try the common issues of usury and fraud was the most efficient way to resolve the litigation, and the notes and mortgages of the class were in writing and contained substantially the same language and each lender had the same or similar contacts with Arkansas. FirstPlus Home Loan Owner 1997-1 v. Bryant, 372 Ark. 466, 277 S.W.3d 576 (2008).

Element of typicality under subdivision (a)(3) of this rule was satisfied in an action that alleged that a health-information management company's actions constituted a statewide deceptive practice because a patient and the class alleged the same unlawful conduct by the company and a resolution of the central issues of whether the company overcharged its customers would have resolved all class members' claims, and the claims of the class members all arose out of the company's practices of charging for the copying of medical records. ChartOne, Inc. v. Raglon, 373 Ark. 275, 283 S.W.3d 576 (2008).

In a class action lawsuit with a class comprised of all adults residing or occupying business premises who were physically evacuated because of the fire and explosion at issue in the lawsuit, the typicality prong for a class action suit was satisfied because the claims were based on the same legal theory and the same illegal conduct, the predominance element was satisfied because there were common questions regarding liability and those questions predominated over individual issues, and the superiority prong was satisfied when the trial court found that a class action was the superior method because common questions predominated and a class action would be the most realistic means for disposing of the large number of claims arising out of the same event. Teris, LLC v. Chandler, 375 Ark. 70, 289 S.W.3d 63 (2008).

In a case alleging violations of the Arkansas Minimum Wage Act, § 11-4-201 et seq., a circuit court did not abuse its discretion in certifying a class action under the less rigorous analysis of this rule. The question of whether an employer's lunch auto-deduct policy was illegal and whether its time reclamation policy was reasonable could have been determined on a class-wide basis and was common for all putative class members. Whether the employer had a reasonable reclamation process for claiming overtime was a question that predominated over individual issues. On the issue of superiority, even though the employer was permitted to defend as it saw fit, the question was really more about how to best manage the case, something that the circuit court had broad discretion to determine. Ark. Dep't of Veterans Affairs v. Okeke, 2015 Ark. 275, 466 S.W.3d 399 (2015).

Certification of the class of lessors was not an abuse of discretion where the requirements of residency and having a signed gas lease with the subsidiaries were easily proved, a potential class of at least several thousand members was properly inferred, and the alleged inside dealing among the subsidiaries supported the commonality finding. Seeco, Inc. v. Stewmon, 2016 Ark. 435, 506 S.W.3d 828 (2016).

In a case alleging breach of an employment contract, a circuit court did not abuse its discretion by certifying a class action because commonality was shown since the inquiry of whether accepting a job was adequate consideration for a pay grid was the same for every class member; next, the common questions of whether a sales tax resolution was itself a promise to pay and whether accepting employment was adequate consideration predominated over any individual issues. The claims of two individuals arose from the same wrong asserted by the class, and the class action was superior because it was efficient to resolve all claims in one forum. City of Conway v. Shumate, 2017 Ark. 36, 511 S.W.3d 319 (2017).

Circuit court did not err in certifying a class action filed by the personal representative of a resident's estate against a nursing and rehabilitation center as to the claims for breach of contract, violation of the Arkansas Deceptive Trade Practices Act, and unjust enrichment, based on alleged chronic understaffing; the representative met his burden of proving commonality, predominance, typicality, and superiority and the class was sufficiently definite. Robinson Nursing & Rehab. Ctr., LLC v. Phillips, 2017 Ark. 162, 519 S.W.3d 291 (2017).

Where appellees enrolled in appellant's "company-paid" truck driver training, but did not complete one year of work with a designated carrier and had to pay the full cost of training, the circuit court did not err in granting class certification because the question of whether appellant fit the definition of a "school" for purposes of §§ 6-51-602 and 6-51-605 was appropriate for consideration on a class-wide basis; that issue would be central to the claims of each class member; the named appellees' claims arose from the same event, practice, or course of conduct that would give rise to the claims of the other class members; and there was no legitimate indication that utilizing the class mechanism would be unfair to either party. Driver Sols., LLC v. Downey, 2019 Ark. 296, 586 S.W.3d 142 (2019).

Circuit court properly granted class certification for nursing employees at a health and rehabilitation facility in their action alleging that the facility's meal-deduction policy violated minimum-wage and overtime provisions of state law; more than 50 persons were employed, all class members were involved in providing nursing care, common questions as to the reasonableness of the facility's time-reclamation policy remained regardless of who the owner or employer was at any given time, and the claims of the named representatives and proposed class members were based on the same practice or course of conduct of the facility owners. Infinity Healthcare Mgmt. of Ark., LLC v. Boyd, 2019 Ark. 346, 588 S.W.3d 22 (2019).

Circuit court properly granted class certification under the commonality, predominance, and superiority requirements of this rule to the employees in their action alleging that the employer failed to pay them for time spent changing into (donning) and out of (doffing) protective equipment because donning and doffing constituted work under the Minimum Wage Law, § 11-4-211(a), the employer required all hourly employees to wear a similar uniform regardless of position or department, and the employer's policy required each employee to arrive at the workstation fully dressed and leave fully dressed. Koppers, Inc. v. Trotter, 2020 Ark. 354 (2020).

Representative Parties.

To adequately follow the proceedings, the class representative must simply display some minimal level of interest in the action, familiarity with the practices challenged, and ability to assist in decision making as to the conduct of the litigation. Union Nat'l Bank v. Barnhart, 308 Ark. 190, 823 S.W.2d 878 (1992).

Proposed class representatives were adequate where counsel was qualified, experienced, and generally able to conduct the legislation and where there was no evidence of collusion or conflicting interest between the representatives and the class; representatives also demonstrated in their affidavits and depositions that they possessed the requisite interest in the action to serve as representatives and showed a familiarity with the practices challenged in the complaint. USA Check Cashers of Little Rock, Inc. v. Island, 349 Ark. 71, 76 S.W.3d 243 (2002).

Where the insurer sold the husband Medicare supplemental insurance, although the husband was already receiving Medicaid benefits, and the husband and his wife sued the insurer, the chancery court did not abuse its discretion by certifying the suit as a class action since: (1) the class definition was not imprecise; (2) the husband and wife were proper class representatives; (3) common issues predominated over individual issues; and (4) certification was the superior method of disposing of the claims in an effort to avoid numerous small lawsuits. Arkansas Blue Cross & Blue Shield v. Hicks, 349 Ark. 269, 78 S.W.3d 58 (2002).

An individual qualified as an adequate class representative as required by subdivision (a)(4) of this rule because the individual: (1) displayed a level of interest in the action by attempting to put an end to the check-cashing practices of certain companies; (2) talked to the attorneys for the class on a regular basis; and (3) was informed of the status of the case by the attorneys. Ballard v. Martin, 349 Ark. 564, 79 S.W.3d 838 (2002), cert. denied, 537 U.S. 1105, 123 S. Ct. 871, 154 L. Ed. 2d 774 (2003).

Request for Findings.

A trial court is required to conduct an analysis of the factors required for certification of a class action under the provisions of this rule and to enter written findings of fact and conclusions of law when requested by a party to the litigation, as provided by Ark. R. Civ. P. 52. BPS Inc. v. Richardson, 341 Ark. 834, 20 S.W.3d 403 (2000), superseded by statute as stated in Indus. Welding Supplies of Hattiesburg, LLC v. Pinson, 2017 Ark. 315, 530 S.W.3d 854 (2017).

Trial court's order certifying a suit as a class action was reversed on appeal where the trial court was required but failed to make specific findings and conclusions, even though a request for such findings was timely made; more was required of the trial court than a cursory mention of the six criteria for a class action or bare conclusions that those criteria had been satisfied. Lenders Title Co. v. Chandler, 353 Ark. 339, 107 S.W.3d 157 (2003).

In "self-pay" patients' action that alleged a hospital charged them significantly more than it charged patients with private insurance or patients insured under government health plans, such as Medicare, the trial court erred in certifying the case for class-action status because the trial court's order did not provide the parties or the appellate court with an analysis of the requirements of this rule or specific findings of fact or conclusions of law pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 52. Baptist Health v. Haynes, 367 Ark. 382, 240 S.W.3d 576 (2006).

Res Judicata.

Res judicata can prevent a person from being certified as a class member in a class action. Arkansas La. Gas Co. v. Taylor, 314 Ark. 62, 858 S.W.2d 88 (1993).

Standing.

Unnamed class member lacked standing to appeal the settlement entered into by the named class members. Haberman v. Lisle, 317 Ark. 600, 884 S.W.2d 262 (1994).

Superiority.

Evidence established superiority since there were common predominating questions of law and fact and since a class action would allow the defendant to present evidence of fair dealing with the plaintiff customers and could also present individual defenses to the claims of individual class members. Fraley v. Williams Ford Tractor & Equip. Co., 339 Ark. 322, 5 S.W.3d 423 (1999).

Class action was not a superior method under subsection (b) of this rule, of resolving employee's breach of contract action against their employer, since each employee would have to individually state his or her understanding of the alleged contract. Williamson v. Sanofi Winthrop Pharms., Inc., 347 Ark. 89, 60 S.W.3d 428 (2001).

Where a title company allegedly engaged in the unauthorized practice of law and violated the Arkansas Deceptive Trade Practices Act, § 4-88-101 et seq., a class action was appropriate because the superiority requirement was met since a class action was fair to both sides and an efficient way of handling the controversy, which involved more than 10,000 real estate transactions. American Abstract & Title Co. v. Rice, 358 Ark. 1, 186 S.W.3d 705 (2004).

Superiority requirement was established in a class action suit against a title company under the Arkansas Deceptive Trade Practices Act, § 4-88-101 et seq., because it was not feasible to recover the small document fee charged to parties in real estate transactions in individual litigation and an examination of individual cases were not required; the title company's argument that § 4-88-113 showed the economic feasibility of individual claims was rejected. Lenders Title Co. v. Chandler, 358 Ark. 66, 186 S.W.3d 695 (2004).

The number of claims and the low dollar amount involved in each claim indicated that a class action was superior because it would avoid a multitude of small individual claims and the initial determination of common, predominating issues in the form of a class-action lawsuit was the most efficient method of adjudicating these claims; once these questions were answered, any individual claims and advanced defenses could be tried separately, if necessary. Asbury Auto. Group, Inc. v. Palasack, 366 Ark. 601, 237 S.W.3d 462 (2006).

In a guardian's action against a nursing center for breach of contract and violation of the Arkansas Residents' Rights Act, the trial court properly granted class certification where a class action was the superior method under subsection (b) of this rule to resolve the issue of whether the center was chronically understaffed so as to violate the residents' statutory and contractual rights. Beverly Enterprises-Arkansas, Inc. v. Thomas, 370 Ark. 310, 259 S.W.3d 445 (2007).

Subsection (b) of this rule requires that a class action be superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy. The superiority requirement is satisfied if class certification is the more "efficient" way of handling the case, and it is fair to both sides. Beverly Enterprises-Arkan-

Class action was the superior method, under subsection (b) of this rule, for handling a case that alleged that a health-information management company's actions constituted a statewide deceptive practice because: (1) the common, predominating issue was whether the company engaged in a scheme to overcharge customers for copying charges, as well as postage and shipping; (2) the common question could have been answered and, if necessary, subsequent trials could have been held on any individual issues; (3) the large number of potential class members, and the relatively small size of their claims, favored a finding of superiority; and (4) proceeding as a class action was fair to both sides because each side could have presented evidence regarding the predominating question of whether the company engaged in a deceptive scheme. ChartOne, Inc. v. Raglon, 373 Ark. 275, 283 S.W.3d 576 (2008).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in finding that a class action was superior to individual actions because the proposed class of around 4 million members made it at least likely that without a class action numerous meritorious claims could go unaddressed; the relief sought by class members was relatively small if sought on an individual basis, and thus, it was not economically feasible for members of the class to pursue a corporation on an individual basis; and a class action was a better resolution than having individual members seek relief from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration. GMC v. Bryant, 374 Ark. 38, 285 S.W.3d 634 (2008), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 1098, 129 S. Ct. 901, 173 L. Ed. 2d 107 (2009).

Action against a golf club owner challenging tie-in rights as unenforceable met the superiority requirement given the circuit court's factual findings that the arbitration provisions did not apply to the declaratory-judgment action before it. Diamante v. Dye, 2013 Ark. 501, 430 S.W.3d 710 (2013).

Class action was a superior method of adjudicating the claims of a class of consumers that a manufacturer falsely advertised that light cigarettes were safer than regular cigarettes because (1) the manufacturer would not have to litigate multiple lawsuits, and (2) the overarch-ing issue of the manufacturer's misrepresentation could be conveniently determined. Philip Morris Cos. v. Miner, 2015 Ark. 73, 462 S.W.3d 313 (2015).

Class certification against nursing homes met the superiority requirement because (1) whether understaffing created contractual or statutory liability and occurred were more efficiently handled in one proceeding, and (2) the involvement of 12 facilities did not make the case unmanageable, as § 20-10-1407 required each facility to report shifts failing to meet

In a class action filed against a nursing and rehabilitation center, the superiority requirement was satisfied; the class was a cohesive and manageable group because the common question of understaffing could be ascertained on a class-wide basis. Determining whether understaffing created contractual or statutory liability and whether chronic understaffing occurred were more efficiently handled in a single proceeding. Robinson Nursing & Rehab. Ctr., LLC v. Phillips, 2017 Ark. 162, 519 S.W.3d 291 (2017).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion by granting class certification under this rule in suit by owners of mineral interests against defendant lessee after it suspended royalty payments. Although defendant contended that a 36-member class was too small to meet the superiority requirement, a class action was the superior method of adjudicating the controversy as the pertinent language in the leases was the same for all potential class members; the complaint alleged that defendant's actions were the same as to all potential class members; a class action would allow the issue of liability to be determined in one case, as opposed to being relitigated in multiple separate cases; and proceeding as a class action was fair to both sides. Stephens Prod. Co. v. Mainer, 2019 Ark. 118, 571 S.W.3d 905 (2019).

In employees' suit for breach of contract and unjust enrichment due to employer's failure to pay earned but unused vacation time, the circuit court properly concluded that the superiority requirement was satisfied for class action certification, where it was admitted that the employees of the employer were treated the same with respect to when they earned vacation time and when they either took it or were compensated for it, and to the extent that employee contracts and non-compete agreements varied among class members, such differences, if there were any of significance, could be addressed through utilization of subclasses, and the class could be decertified after common questions had been litigated, if the circuit court decided it was appropriate to do so. Indus. Welding Supplies of Hattiesburg, LLC v. Pinson, 2019 Ark. 325, 587 S.W.3d 540 (2019).

Typicality.

In a case in which plaintiff appealed from the circuit court's denial of her motion for class certification, the Supreme Court concluded that plaintiff satisfied the typicality requirement for class action certification. Plaintiff's claims arose from the same wrong allegedly committed against the class, which was that the post-repossession notices sent to debtors failed to contain certain information required under the Uniform Commercial Code. Rivera-Ceren v.

Presidential Limousine & Auto Sales, Inc., 2021 Ark. 219, 635 S.W.3d 304 (2021).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the requirement of typicality was satisfied because class representatives' claims arose from the same course of conduct giving rise to the claims of the other class members, and those claims were based on the same legal theories; both the class representatives and the class alleged the same unlawful conduct, and each class member was asserting the same claims. Ark. Media, LLC v. Bobitt, 2010 Ark. 76, 360 S.W.3d 129 (2010).

Because alleged unlawful conduct of a service provider in improperly charging an early cancellation fee affected both the named plaintiff and the putative class, the typicality requirement of subsection (a) of this rule was satisfied, even if some customers other than the named plaintiff had an opportunity to read the service agreement before their service began. DIRECTV, Inc. v. Murray, 2012 Ark. 366, 423 S.W.3d 555 (2012).

Driver's class action counterclaim against an insurer alleging that the insurer caused collection-style letters to be sent in an attempt to collect potential subrogation claims as debts violated the Arkansas Deceptive Trade Practices Act and other states' laws was sufficiently pleaded to withstand the insurer's motion to strike. Kersten v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2013 Ark. 124, 426 S.W.3d 455 (2013).

Class members met the typicality requirement where the differences in the bylaws and club membership agreements with regard to arbitration were of no effect on the pending litigation between the lot owners and the golf club, the club owner's motion for arbitration had already been rejected, and the case involved a judicial determination of whether the owner's conduct has made it inequitable to enforce the tie-in rights. Diamante v. Dye, 2013 Ark. 501, 430 S.W.3d 710 (2013).

In a class action against a debt collector, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in finding that the class representative's claim was typical as it arose from the same event, practice, or course of conduct that gave rise to the other class members' claims. CACH, LLC v. Echols, 2016 Ark. 446, 506 S.W.3d 217 (2016).

The notice-of-breach provision in the class representative's lease did not disqualify the class representative. The focus in reviewing typicality is the extent to which the lead plaintiff's claim is similar to the other potential class members, not how it is different. The class representative was an Arkansas resident and her lease contained the provision that the lessee allegedly violated, and no more was required. Seeco, Inc. v. Stewmon, 2016 Ark. 435, 506 S.W.3d 828 (2016).

In a class action suit by Arkansas residents who entered into natural-gas leases, typicality was satisfied despite the notice provision in the standard leases; the defense, if applicable, would be a defense common to every class member who signed the same standard lease. A notice defense would not overshadow the wrong complained of in the lawsuit; it is only when the unique defenses threaten to become the focus of the litigation that class certification is not appropriate. Seeco, Inc. v. Stewmon, 2016 Ark. 435, 506 S.W.3d 828 (2016).

Oil and gas lessor class met the typicality requirement where the lessee failed to show that the notice-of-breach provision even applied to claims for money damages. Seeco, Inc. v. Snow, 2016 Ark. 444, 506 S.W.3d 206 (2016).

In a class action filed by the personal representative of a resident's estate against a nursing and rehabilitation center, the typicality requirement was satisfied because the representative's claim arose from the same alleged wrongful conduct that affected hundreds of residents at the center, understaffing. Robinson Nursing & Rehab. Ctr., LLC v. Phillips, 2017 Ark. 162, 519 S.W.3d 291 (2017).

Circuit court properly granted class certification because it did not abuse its discretion in determining that the typicality requirement had been met since the exclusionary terms in a municipal health benefit fund's policy booklet on which any liability rested were common to all members of the respective classes; the same practice or course of conduct by the fund was the basis for an employee's claims and those made on behalf of the classes. Mun. Health Ben. Fund v. Hendrix, 2020 Ark. 235, 602 S.W.3d 101 (2020).

Rule 23.1. Actions by shareholders.

In a derivative action brought by one or more shareholders or members to enforce a right of a corporation or of an unincorporated association, the corporation or association having failed to enforce a right which may properly be asserted by it, the complaint shall be verified and shall allege that the plaintiff was a shareholder or member at the time of the transaction of which he complains or that his share or membership thereafter devolved on him by operation of law. The complaint shall also allege with particularity the efforts, if any, made by the plaintiff to obtain the action he desires from the directors or comparable authority and, if necessary, from the shareholders or members, and the reasons for his failure to obtain the action or for not making the effort. The derivative action may not be maintained if it appears that the plaintiff does not fairly and adequately represent the interests of the shareholders or members similarly situated in enforcing the right of the corporation or association. The action shall not be dismissed or compromised without the approval of the court and notice of the proposed dismissal or compromise shall be given to shareholders or members in such manner as the court directs.

1. Rule 23.1 is identical to FRCP 23.1.

2. Both this and FRCP 23.1 are silent concerning the "security for expenses" provision of many state business corporation acts, including that found in Ark. Stat. Ann. § 64-223(c)(d) (Repl. 1962). Since the decision in Cohen v. Beneficial Industrial Loan Corporation, 337 U.S. 541, 69 S. Ct. 1221 (1949), it has generally been considered that such acts were substantive in nature and should be followed in diversity actions in federal courts. Consequently, the adoption of this rule does not supersede or repeal the "security for expenses" provision found in the Arkansas Business Corporation Act. The same is also true with regard to the matter of attorney's fees, which under Ark. Stat. Ann. § 64-223 (Repl. 1962), may be awarded to either plaintiff or defendant, depending upon which prevailed in the action. See Wright & Miller, Federal Practice And Procedure, Section 1841.

3. This rule follows prior Arkansas law as found in Ark. Stat. Ann. § 64-223(f) (Repl. 1962) which required court approval to dismiss or compromise a derivative action. This rule goes further, however, and requires that notice of a proposed dismissal or compromise be given to other shareholders or members in such manner as the court may direct. This is simply to afford an opportunity for other stockholders to voice objection to any proposed settlement or dismissal.

CASE NOTES

Allegation of Efforts Made.

With respect to the requirement that a plaintiff allege with particularity the efforts made to obtain the actions he desires from the directors and the reasons for his failure to obtain the action or for not making the effort, there are situations in which the demand requirement should be relaxed and if the demand is in all likelihood a futile gesture, it is not essential. Morgan v. Robertson, 271 Ark. 461, 609 S.W.2d 662 (Ct. App. 1980).

Compliance with Requirements.

The requirement of this rule that a plaintiff fairly and adequately represent the interests of the members justifies requiring compliance with the rule to a greater degree than a complaint which fails to supply any information regarding members — who they are, where they are, how they become members, or even whether there are members. If this information is not known to plaintiff, but is available to the defendants, even that ought to be alleged and pursued by discovery. Morgan v. Robertson, 271 Ark. 461, 609 S.W.2d 662 (Ct. App. 1980).

The true measure of representation under this rule is not how many shareholders the plaintiff represents but rather how well the representative plaintiff advances the interests of similarly situated shareholders. Brandon v. Brandon Constr. Co., 300 Ark. 44, 776 S.W.2d 349 (1989).

The trial court correctly concluded that the plaintiffs shareholders' claims essentially constituted a derivative action, which could be maintained pursuant to the rule, where the plaintiffs' sought relief from corporate indebtedness that they had personally guaranteed. Hames v. Cravens, 332 Ark. 437, 966 S.W.2d 244 (1998).

—Burden of Proof.

The burden of showing that the party bringing a derivative action does not fairly and adequately represent the interests of the shareholders is always on the defendant. Brandon v. Brandon Constr. Co., 300 Ark. 44, 776 S.W.2d 349 (1989).

Real Party in Interest.

In a derivative suit on behalf of a corporation either against third persons or against officers or directors of the corporation, the corporation is a necessary party. It is, in fact, inherent in the nature of the suit itself that it is the corporation whose rights are being redressed rather than those of the individual plaintiff, and the corporation is regarded as the real party in interest and is entitled to service of process as any other defendant. Morgan v. Robertson, 271 Ark. 461, 609 S.W.2d 662 (Ct. App. 1980).

Standing.

An officer, director and member of a nonprofit corporation is not without standing to question the management and conduct of other officers and directors who are alleged to be in violation of the bylaws and articles and against the purposes of the corporation. Morgan v. Robertson, 271 Ark. 461, 609 S.W.2d 662 (Ct. App. 1980).

A corporation's injuries for loss of contract, the goodwill associated with the contract, and the gross receipts and profits generated therefrom, were injuries for which relief should be granted to the corporation and not a shareholder, and any action to recover the alleged loss was derivative in nature and subject to this rule. Walker v. Hyde, 303 Ark. 615, 798 S.W.2d 435 (1990).

A shareholder may bring a derivative action on behalf of a corporation to enforce a right of the corporation when the corporation has failed to do so, but in order for a shareholder to bring an individual cause of action against a third party, that shareholder must be injured for a wrong directly or independently of the corporation; individual stockholders have no standing to sue in their individual capacities for injuries allegedly suffered primarily by the corporation and its shareholders, and direct suits are appropriate only where a shareholder asserts a direct injury to the shareholder distinct and separate from harm caused to the corporation. Farm Bureau Ins. Co. of Ark., Inc. v. Running M Farms, Inc., 366 Ark. 480, 237 S.W.3d 32 (2006).

Rule 23.2. Actions relating to unincorporated associations.

An action brought by or against the members of an unincorporated association as a class by naming certain members as representative parties may be maintained only if it appears that the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the association and its members. In the conduct of the action the court may make appropriate orders corresponding with those described in Rule 23(d), and the procedure for dismissal or compromise of the action shall correspond with that provided in Rule 23(e).

Reporter's Notes to Rule 23.2:

1. With the exception of minor wording changes, Rule 23.2 is identical to FRCP 23.2. These wording changes were necessary because of the revision of Rule 23 from FRCP 23.

2. Actions by and against members of unincorporated associations as a class have been long recognized in Arkansas. Since an association cannot sue or be sued in its own name, a class action has been the customary method of bringing suit. Baskin v. United Mine Workers of America, 150 Ark. 398, 234 S.W. 464 (1921); Smith v. Arkansas Motor Freight Lines, 214 Ark. 553, 217 S.W.2d 249 (1949).

3. Rule 23.2 should have little effect on Arkansas law. The rule simply provides safeguards to insure that absent members of the association are fully protected. This rule does not affect the principle that individual members of an association are not liable for damages. Massey v. Rogers, 232 Ark. 110, 334 S.W.2d 664 (1960).

CASE NOTES

Adequate Representation.

Despite its erroneous finding that a taxpayer was an inadequate representative under Ark. Const., Art. 16, § 13, a circuit court did not err in dismissing an illegal-exaction claim as to taxpayers within 498 of the 499 municipalities participating in a defense program because those municipalities were not proper parties through this rule. Ark. Const., Art. 16, § 13 was self-executing and imposed no terms or conditions upon the right of a citizen to file suit to prevent an illegal exaction. Stromwall v. Van Hoose, 371 Ark. 267, 265 S.W.3d 93 (2007).

Class Certification.

There is no need for the certification of a class in an action brought under the rule. Arkansas County Farm Bureau v. McKinney, 334 Ark. 582, 976 S.W.2d 945 (1998).

In a case alleging an illegal exaction relating to a settlement agreement, an argument that there were no findings of fact made was meritless because a request under Ark. R. Civ. P. 52 was in error; no class certification was required to proceed under this rule. Stromwall v. Van Hoose, 371 Ark. 267, 265 S.W.3d 93 (2007).

Rule 24. Intervention.

(a) Intervention of Right. Upon timely application anyone shall be permitted to intervene in an action: (1) when a statute of this state confers an unconditional right to intervene; or (2) when the applicant claims an interest relating to the property or transaction which is the subject of the action and he is so situated that the disposition of the action may as a practical matter impair or impede his ability to protect that interest, unless the applicant's interest is adequately represented by existing parties.

(b) Permissive Intervention. Upon timely application anyone may be permitted to intervene in an action: (1) when a statute of this state confers a conditional right to intervene; or (2) when an applicant's claim or defense and the main action have a question of law or fact in common. When a party to an action relies for ground of claim or defense upon any statute or executive order administered by a federal or state governmental officer or agency or upon any regulation, order, requirement or agreement issued or made pursuant to the statute or executive order, the officer or agency upon timely application may be permitted to intervene in the action. In exercising its discretion, the court shall consider whether the intervention will unduly delay or prejudice the adjudication of the rights of the original parties.

(c) Procedure. A person desiring to intervene shall serve a motion to intervene upon the parties as provided in Rule 5. The motion shall state the grounds therefor and shall be accompanied by a pleading setting forth the claim or defense for which intervention is sought. When the constitutionality of a statute of this state affecting the public interest is drawn into question in any action, the court may require that the Attorney General of this state be notified of such question.

1. Generally speaking, the question of whether to allow an intervention has rested in the discretion of the trial court. There are situations, however, under prior Arkansas law where an intervention has been allowed as a matter of right. Ark. Stat. Ann. § 31-157 (Repl. 1962) permits a person contesting the validity of an attachment or claiming an interest in attached property to intervene to assert his rights. That statute seems to suggest that an intervention is allowed as a matter of right once the proper interest is shown in the subject matter. Lawrence v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 247 Ark. 1125, 449 S.W.2d 695 (1970). Likewise, Ark. Stat. Ann. § 34-1809 (Repl. 1962), provides that upon proper showing, a party claiming an interest in property about to be sold at a partition sale can intervene in that action, with the implication that such right is unconditional. Also, Ark. Stat. Ann. § 81-1340(a) (Repl. 1962), seems to suggest that a workmen's compensation carrier has the unconditional right to intervene in an action brought by an injured employee against a third party. Thus, there are at least three situations where the right to intervene is granted by statute as contemplated by Rule 24(a)(1).

2. The Arkansas Supreme Court has held that intervention is not a common law right, but is instead based upon the principle that a party should be permitted to do that voluntarily which, if known, a court would require to be done. Board of Directors of St. Francis Levee Dist. v. Raney, 190 Ark. 75, 76 S.W.2d 311 (1934). Accordingly, the court has followed the general rule that only necessary parties could intervene as a matter of right, while permitting the trial court to exercise its discretion in deciding whether others could intervene. Pulaski County Bd. of Eq. v. American Republic Life Ins. Co., 223 Ark. 124, 342 S.W.2d 660 (1961). Section (a)(2) of this rule suggests, however, that an intervention as a matter of right may not be limited to those persons who have been traditionally considered as "necessary" parties.

3. Section (b) does not appear to change to any appreciable degree prior Arkansas law concerning permissive interventions. As noted herein, the question of permitting persons other than those mentioned in Section (a) to intervene rests in the sound discretion of the trial court. Thus, Section (b), does not work any changes in prior law.

CASE NOTES

In General.

There are two means by which to intervene in a lawsuit: as a matter of right and by permission. The former cannot be denied, but the latter is discretionary, and denial of permissive intervention will only be reversed if that discretion is abused. Schacht v. Garner, 281 Ark. 45, 661 S.W.2d 361 (1983).

One who does not intervene, whether or not by right, is not at risk of being bound by the litigation and is not subject to res judicata. The impairment that is faced by one who has been denied intervention and proceeds with his own litigation, is that of stare decisis. UHS of Ark., Inc. v. City of Sherwood, 296 Ark. 97, 752 S.W.2d 36 (1988).

Where plaintiff's counsel sought newspaper photographs of accident scene, the trial court abused its discretion by refusing to quash the subpoena because it abrogated the newspaper's property rights by requiring the newspaper to create and produce photographic prints for use in a lawsuit to which it was not a party, while prohibiting it from recovering reasonable compensation for the use of its intellectual property. Ark. Democrat-Gazette, Inc. v. Brantley, 359 Ark. 75, 194 S.W.3d 748 (2004).

In a probate proceeding, a decision to deny intervention by two healthcare providers in order to challenge the qualifications of an administratrix was reversed where the court failed to analyze the case under this rule. Helena Reg'l Med. Ctr. v. Wilson, 362 Ark. 117, 207 S.W.3d 541 (2005).

Appeal.

An order denying intervention as a matter of right is appealable; the movant need only claim a legitimate interest to warrant review. Cupples Farms Partnership v. Forrest City Prod. Credit Ass'n, 310 Ark. 597, 839 S.W.2d 187 (1992).

In order to overturn the chancellor's ruling denying their motion to intervene, appellants must demonstrate that the trial court abused its discretion by making a judgment call which was arbitrary or groundless. Employers Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Grantors to Diaz Refinery PRP Comm. Site Trust, 313 Ark. 645, 855 S.W.2d 936 (1993).

When a trial court granted a permissive intervention, the intervenors could not appeal the decision because they had a method of intervention and the judgment was not final. Duffield v. Benton County Stone Co., 369 Ark. 314, 254 S.W.3d 726 (2006).

Applicability.

Writ of certiorari was proper, because the court erred in denying the husband's motion to quash several subpoenas concerning his medical records, when the husband was not a party to the underlying custody dispute, the husband did nothing to bring his medical condition into issue, and the husband's mental health was examined through other admissible evidence; neither party by intervention or by joinder applied. McKenzie v. Pierce, 2012 Ark. 190, 403 S.W.3d 565 (2012).

Circuit court did not err in allowing two family members to become parties to a dependency-neglect case without first finding that they had met the requirements of this rule given the mandatory nature of Ark. Code Ann. § 28-65-107(c)(1) and that no authority required an intervention before a person could pursue a petition for guardianship. Peeler v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2016 Ark. App. 534 (2016).

Independent Cause of Action.

Trial court erred in denying Arkansas Department of Human Services' motion for intervention, as its claims were clearly not derivative of the claims of the parents. National Bank of Commerce v. Quirk, 323 Ark. 769, 918 S.W.2d 138 (1996), amended in part, 325 Ark. 31, 922 S.W.2d 717 (1996), overruled in part, Ark. HHS v. Ahlborn, 547 U.S. 268, 126 S. Ct. 1752, 164 L. Ed. 2d 459 (2006).

Interested Parties.

Subdivision (a)(2) of this rule has expanded the privilege to intervene as a matter of right and this privilege is no longer limited to those persons who have been traditionally considered as "necessary" parties. Bank of Quitman v. Phillips, 270 Ark. 53, 603 S.W.2d 450 (Ct. App. 1980).

An applicant must establish not only a sufficient interest, but also that the disposition of the action may, as a practical matter, impair or impede an ability to protect one's interest and that the interest is not adequately represented by the existing parties. UHS of Ark., Inc. v. City of Sherwood, 296 Ark. 97, 752 S.W.2d 36 (1988).

Circuit court erred in holding that the foster parents had no right to adopt and therefore no right to intervene in an adoption proceeding involving their foster child under this rule. Section 9-27-325(1)(3)(B) contemplated that foster parents seeking to adopt a child might become parties to the dependency-neglect proceeding. Schubert v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2010 Ark. App. 113 (2010).

Intervention As a Matter of Right.

Grandparents who had been granted visitation rights had sufficient interest in adoption proceedings to allow them to intervene for the limited purpose of offering evidence on the best interests of their grandchildren and were entitled to intervene as a matter of right under this rule. Quarles v. French, 272 Ark. 51, 611 S.W.2d 757 (1981).

Generally, if the one seeking intervention will be left with his right to pursue his own independent remedy against the parties, regardless of the outcome of the pending case, then he has no interest that needs protecting by intervention of right. Billabong Prods., Inc. v. Orange City Bank, 278 Ark. 206, 644 S.W.2d 594 (1983).

Allegations by corporation, which sought to intervene in action between corporate stockholders and bank, that stare decisis might prevent it from prosecuting its own claim against bank and that it was financially unable to bring the suit were insufficient reasons to allow intervention as a matter of right. Billabong Prods., Inc. v. Orange City Bank, 278 Ark. 206, 644 S.W.2d 594 (1983).

Corporation did not claim a sufficient interest relating to the transaction which was the subject of suit between corporate stockholders and a bank where the transaction which was the subject of that action was a guaranty contract whereby the stockholders guaranteed payment of a debt allegedly owed by corporation, while the transaction in corporation's motion to intervene was an alleged breach of contract to loan money or, in the alternative, an alleged promissory deceit; moreover, corporation was not so situated that disposition of the action would impair its ability to protect its claim against the bank since, no matter how the suit between the stockholders and the bank was decided, corporation could still bring an action against the bank for breach of contract to loan money or for promissory deceit. Therefore, the trial court did not err in refusing to grant intervention under subdivision (a)(2) of this rule. Billabong Prods., Inc. v. Orange City Bank, 278 Ark. 206, 644 S.W.2d 594 (1983); Midland Dev., Inc. v. Pine Truss, Inc., 24 Ark. App. 132, 750 S.W.2d 62 (1988).

Intervention as a matter of right cannot be denied. Midland Dev., Inc. v. Pine Truss, Inc., 24 Ark. App. 132, 750 S.W.2d 62 (1988).

This rule does not give an absolute right to intervene unless the application complies with the procedural requirements. Three requirements that an applicant must meet in order to prevail as a matter of right are that: (1) he has a recognized interest in the subject matter of the primary litigation, (2) his interest might be impaired by the disposition of the suit, and (3) his interest is not adequately represented by existing parties. Midland Dev., Inc. v. Pine Truss, Inc., 24 Ark. App. 132, 750 S.W.2d 62 (1988).

When § 11-9-410(a)(1) gives a carrier the right to intervene, the carrier may intervene as a matter of right under this rule. Carton v. Missouri Pac. R.R., 315 Ark. 5, 865 S.W.2d 635 (1993).

A party's interest in enforcing arbitration rights has been held to be a significant factor in determining whether to allow intervention as of right pursuant to the federal rule, which is identical to this rule. Matson, Inc. v. Lamb & Assocs. Packaging, 328 Ark. 705, 947 S.W.2d 324 (1997).

Employer had an unconditional right to intervene in its injured employees' suit against a company the employees were working for as independent contractors, and it was error for the trial court to have denied the employer that right; additionally, the right to intervene to protect subrogation rights did not require the default judgment against the employer to have been set aside. Nucor Corp. v. Kilman, 358 Ark. 107, 186 S.W.3d 720 (2004).

Easement holder was entitled to intervene as a matter of right in a title-confirmation case because the holder had a valid interest in the property and showed both entitlement and unusual and compelling circumstances for the holder's late attempt to intervene; the assessor's office erroneously deleted the holder from its tax rolls in 2001, which led to the holder not being officially notified of a 2004 tax sale or the 2007 title-confirmation action. Parkerson v. Brown, 2010 Ark. App. 505, 379 S.W.3d 485 (2010).

But for the will, the decedent's son would have been the intestate heir of the decedent, and the son quitclaimed his interest in the property to a company by an instrument recorded on June 24, 2009, and the will had not been admitted to probate in Arkansas until October 23, 2012; the trial court erred in denying the devisees' motion to intervene, given that, as named devisees of the property in question in the decedent's will, the devisees clearly had a recognized interest in the mineral interests in the property that the company's petition sought to settle. Christian v. McVesting, LLC, 2014 Ark. App. 509, 443 S.W.3d 578 (2014).

Circuit court erred in denying the underwriters' motion to intervene in the insureds' class-action suit against a group of licensed surplus-lines-insurance brokers because the shorthand reference to "Certain Underwriters" to describe the numerous insurers of the policies at issue did not render them amorphous, the brokers submitted affidavits identifying the syndicates who subscribed to the policies, the underwriters had an interest in the subject matter of the litigation where the end result sought by the insureds was the validity of the contracts, the interests of the underwriters and the brokers were ultimately different, and it would not be unduly burdensome to add the underwriters. Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's, London v. Bass, 2015 Ark. 178, 461 S.W.3d 317 (2015).

Applicant was entitled to intervention as of right in a partnership's action against the Department of Finance and Administration and the Arkansas Racing Commission because its interest was not adequately protected by existing parties given that its contract with the county could be impaired by a favorable ruling to the partnership; neither defendant was a party to the contract between the applicant and the county and had any interest in defending the applicant's interest in that contract. Cherokee Nation Bus., LLC v. Gulfside Casino P'ship, 2021 Ark. 17, 614 S.W.3d 811.

Applicant was entitled to intervention as of right in a partnership's action against the Department of Finance and Administration and the Arkansas Racing Commission because disposition of the case would affect the applicant's interest in the litigation; the partnership's success on the merits would foreclose any opportunity for the applicant to pursue a license, and it would further impair the contractual economic development agreement between the applicant and the county. Cherokee Nation Bus., LLC v.

Applicant was entitled to intervention as of right in a partnership's action against the Department of Finance and Administration and the Arkansas Racing Commission because the applicant asserted a sufficient interest in the litigation based on its status as the only qualified applicant for a county casino license; the applicant had a "recognized interest" in the litigation based on its interest in the license, having its license application considered, and its contract with the county. Cherokee Nation Bus., LLC v. Gulfside Casino P'ship, 2021 Ark. 17, 614 S.W.3d 811 (2021).

Intervention Denied.

Where Illinois official wanted to be a party to keep an eye on lawsuit involving rehabilitation of Arkansas insurance companies but he did not object to reorganization, and made no third party complaint, nor did he make any claim, trial judge properly denied intervention. Schacht v. Garner, 281 Ark. 45, 661 S.W.2d 361 (1983).

Where no motion to intervene was ever filed as required by this rule, the county could not object to the failure of the trial court to allow it to intervene in a probate action to determine the ownership of the contents of a safe deposit box. Newton County v. Davison, 289 Ark. 109, 709 S.W.2d 810 (1986).

There was ample evidence in the record to support the chancellor's finding that the appellants' motions for intervention were untimely. Employers Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Grantors to Diaz Refinery PRP Comm. Site Trust, 313 Ark. 645, 855 S.W.2d 936 (1993); National Enters., Inc. v. Union Planters Nat'l Bank, 322 Ark. 590, 910 S.W.2d 691 (1995).

Where no motion to intervene was filed in the trial court before that court lost jurisdiction of the case, and only filed in the appellate court four days after the record was lodged in the appeal, the proposed intervenors' motion was denied for lack of timeliness. Arkansas Dep't of Health v. Westark Christian Action Council, 319 Ark. 288, 890 S.W.2d 582 (1995).

Where a secured creditor of a company that owned and operated a federally licensed radio station successfully sought an ex parte order appointing it receiver for purposes of furthering its claim before the Federal Communications Commission that it was entitled to the radio license, petitioner, who also claimed he was entitled to the license, should have been allowed to intervene in the cause of action as a matter of right. Pearson v. First Nat'l Bank, 325 Ark. 127, 924 S.W.2d 460 (1996).

Law firms did not have a right to intervene in an action by the state against several tobacco manufacturers for the purpose of protecting their claimed interest in attorney's fees, pursuant to an alleged contract to represent the state in the matter, where: (1) the motion to intervene was not filed until approximately three weeks after a consent decree was entered, and the complaint in intervention was not filed until some six months later, (2) the state and the tobacco companies would be prejudiced by the delay caused by intervention, (3) there was no sound or compelling reason for the delay in seeking intervention, (4) the law firms had no recognized interest in the subject matter of the litigation between the state and the tobacco companies, and (5) the law firms' interest in obtaining attorney's fees would not be impaired by the disposition of the litigation between the state and the tobacco companies. Milberg, Weiss, Bershad, Hynes, & Lerach v. State, 342 Ark. 303, 28 S.W.3d 842 (2000).

Law firms did not qualify for permissive intervention in an action by the state against several tobacco manufacturers for the purpose of protecting their claimed interest in attorney's fees, pursuant to an alleged contract to represent the state in the matter, where they cited no state statute that conferred upon them a conditional right to intervene and failed to show that their claim for attorney's fees and the underlying litigation had a common question of law or fact. Milberg, Weiss, Bershad, Hynes, & Lerach v. State, 342 Ark. 303, 28 S.W.3d 842 (2000).

Committee to establish a municipal fire department which circulated a petition to place an ordinance on the city's general election ballot but which was not joined by a local voter and, further, did not purport to represent local voters, lacked standing to intervene in a case concerning the ballot title and initiative petition, or rights which, pursuant to Ark. Const., Amend. 7, were reserved to the local voters. Comm. to Establish Sherwood Fire Dep't v. Hillman, 353 Ark. 501, 109 S.W.3d 641 (2003).

Denial of the motor company's representative's motions to intervene and to quash a writ of garnishment was proper where, given the fact that a tort suit would have complicated the issues already before the circuit court and the fact that the representative could have pursued his claim independently, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to intervene. Turner v. Farnam, 82 Ark. App. 489, 120 S.W.3d 616 (2003).

Trial court properly denied hospital's motion to intervene because it found the hospital had not met one of the factors required by subdivision (a)(2) of this rule. Med. Park Hosp. v. BancorpSouth, 357 Ark. 316, 166 S.W.3d 19 (2004).

Where the mother's parental rights were terminated, the maternal grandparents lost any right they had to custody and visitation of the children. The trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying the grandparents' motion to intervene in the adoption proceedings under subsection (c) of this rule. Burt v. Ark. Dep't of

In a class action suit against a telecommunications company, denial of an alleged class member's motion to intervene was proper as he failed to establish eligibility for intervention under subdivision (a)(2) of this rule; the settlement agreement, as well as the notice to proposed class members, made clear that proposed class members could request to be excluded from the settlement class, but the member did not make any such request. Further, there was no merit to the member's argument that he did not receive a copy of the settlement agreement in sufficient time for him to consider his options and decide upon exclusion, and he failed to show that his interest was not adequately represented by the existing parties. DeJulius v. Sumner, 373 Ark. 156, 282 S.W.3d 753 (2008).

Denial of motion to intervene by the Department of Human Services in a juvenile delinquency case was affirmed; the department could appeal from the order denying its motion to set aside the commitment order without needing to intervene in the underlying matter. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs. v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 137, 516 S.W.3d 743 (2017).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in denying the veterans' first attempt to intervene in a class action case against an insurer where the subject paragraph in their "objection to settlement terms" did not meet the requirements of subsection (c) of this rule for a motion to intervene, and given the case's complexity, the trial court could not determine the basis for the intervention in the absence of a pleading. Wartick v. United Servs. Auto. Ass'n, 2017 Ark. App. 329, 525 S.W.3d 38 (2017).

Former employer's Ark. R. Civ. P. 24(a)(1) motion to intervene as a matter of right in a guardianship proceeding was properly denied where the guardianship statute is discretionary, and thus it did not confer an unconditional right to intervene. Kennedy v. McDaniel, 2020 Ark. App. 311, 603 S.W.3d 551 (2020).

Intervention of right under Ark. R. Civ. P. 24(a)(2) in a guardianship proceeding was properly denied as the case law relied on addressed the narrow issue of permissive intervention, and the former employer failed to establish that his interest in the incapacitated person was not adequately represented by her mother, the appointed temporary guardian. Kennedy v. McDaniel, 2020 Ark. App. 311, 603 S.W.3d 551 (2020).

Intervention Properly Allowed.

Where four county householders brought an action challenging the validity of a county ordinance which imposed an annual fee on each household to meet the cost of providing emergency medical services to the county, the chancellor did not abuse his discretion in permitting a city within the county and the emergency medical service corporation to intervene in the suit since the intervenors had a vital interest to protect and had questions of law and fact in common with the primary litigation. Vandiver v. Washington County, 274 Ark. 561, 628 S.W.2d 1 (1982).

The trial court in an eminent domain proceeding did not err in allowing contract purchasers of a portion of the property to intervene in the action, and the granting of the intervention did not amount to a suit against the state in violation of Ark. Const., Art. 5, § 20. Arkansas State Hwy. Comm'n v. Wilkinson, 12 Ark. App. 28, 670 S.W.2d 462 (1984).

Where bank had itself appointed receiver even though it had an interest in the matter (an appointment which was in apparent violation of § 16-17-207 [repealed]), basic fairness dictated that petitioner, also claiming an interest, be allowed to intervene and contest the appointment of bank as receiver. Pearson v. First Nat'l Bank, 325 Ark. 127, 924 S.W.2d 460 (1996).

In parents' divorce action, son seeking specific performance of a contract to convey property to him satisfied the three requirements that an applicant must meet in order to intervene as a matter of right: (1) that he has a recognized interest in the subject matter of the primary litigation; (2) that his interest might be impaired by the disposition of the suit; and (3) that his interest is not adequately represented by existing parties. Bradford v. Bradford, 52 Ark. App. 81, 915 S.W.2d 723 (1996).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in allowing a maternal grandmother to intervene because she orally moved to intervene, and the fact that she did not file a written motion to intervene did not defeat her intervention; although the grandmother had not filed a verified petition or pleading seeking to intervene, she requested custody of the children, and all counsel, including the mother's, agreed. Mossholder v. Coker, 2017 Ark. App. 279, 521 S.W.3d 150 (2017).

While it is true that the remaining heirs had filed their own petitions seeking to share in the decedent's estate, the circuit court correctly allowed the remaining heirs to intervene of right because they were claiming the entire estate, including the shares sought by another group of heirs. Lucas v. Wash. Cty., 2020 Ark. App. 540, 614 S.W.3d 840 (2020).

Notice to Intervenor of Right.

Under the provisions of § 28-50-101 the insurance company which insures a deceased tort-feasor is the only party financially interested in the outcome of the case since, although the estate is the named defendant, it is not financially liable under the statute; therefore, the peculiar nature of the statute, in effect, confers an unconditional right to intervene on the insurance carrier under subsection (a) of this rule, and the insurance carrier is entitled to notice of the proceeding. Ideal Mut. Ins. Co. v. McMillian, 275 Ark. 418, 631 S.W.2d 274 (1982).

Where passenger injured in airplane crash filed negligence suit against estate of the deceased pilot, the insurer of the airplane was entitled to notice of and had the right to intervene in the proceedings; the method of giving notice must be reasonably calculated to apprise the insurance company of the pendency of the action and attempted notice by a letter mailed to the wrong address was insufficient. Ideal Mut. Ins. Co. v. McMillian, 275 Ark. 418, 631 S.W.2d 274 (1982).

Although the insurance company was not given notice that the case had been set for trial, it knew the lawsuit was pending, and this was sufficient notice to satisfy the due process requirement. RLI Ins. Co. v. Coe, 306 Ark. 337, 813 S.W.2d 783 (1991), cert. dismissed, 502 U.S. 1067, 112 S. Ct. 959, 117 L. Ed. 2d 126 (1992).

Permissive Intervention.

Permissive intervention is a matter resting within the sound discretion of the trial court and appellate court will reverse only for abuse of that discretion. Billabong Prods., Inc. v. Orange City Bank, 278 Ark. 206, 644 S.W.2d 594 (1983).

Where corporation sought to intervene in action by bank to enforce guaranty contract against stockholders and motion alleged breach of contract or promissory deceit by bank, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in not allowing permissive intervention since the pleadings failed to establish any common questions between the guaranty and the alleged breach of contract to loan money or promissory deceit. Billabong Prods., Inc. v. Orange City Bank, 278 Ark. 206, 644 S.W.2d 594 (1983).

Trial court did not err under subdivision (c) of this rule in allowing a mother's former step-grandmother to intervene in the mother and father's divorce proceeding because not only did the step-grandmother stand in loco parentis to the mother and father's child, but she also had physical custody of the child at the time of the divorce and at the time she was permitted to intervene. Winn v. Bonds, 2013 Ark. App. 147, 426 S.W.3d 533 (2013).

In an appeal stemming from the temporary appointment of guardianship for an elderly woman, the record demonstrated that the underlying probate litigation and the motion to intervene by the neighbors, who had cared for the woman for five years, clearly had a common question of fact. The circuit court did not err in denying the grandson's motion to dismiss the neighbors' motion to intervene in the probate proceedings. Whaley v. Beckham, 2016 Ark. 196, 492 S.W.3d 65 (2016).

In denying maternal grandparents' petition for permissive intervention, the trial court did not clearly err in finding the grandparents did not stand in loco parentis to their minor grandsons. The boys' mother was not only alive, but also a party to the adoption proceeding, and the mother was actively opposing the adoption. Goins v. White, 2020 Ark. App. 79, 595 S.W.3d 49 (2020).

Permissive intervention under Ark. R. Civ. P. 24(b) in a guardianship proceeding was properly denied as the mother's appointment as guardian tracked Ark. Code Ann. § 28-65-204(b)(4) and was consistent with Ark. Code Ann. § 28-65-204(c), and the incapacitated person's former employer was not a former caretaker, had never been the guardian, and had never maintained a health proxy for the incapacitated person. Kennedy v. McDaniel, 2020 Ark. App. 311, 603 S.W.3d 551 (2020).

Pleading.

Motion to intervene was deficient where it contained no pleading setting forth the claim or defense of the appellant. Polnac-Hartman & Assocs. v. First Nat'l Bank, 292 Ark. 501, 731 S.W.2d 202 (1987).

Probate Proceedings.

In accordance with Ark. R. Civ. P. 81, it is precisely because the probate code and the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure set forth different time limits on the court's authority to modify or vacate prior orders that § 28-1-115 applies in probate proceedings; therefore, an appeal under § 28-1-116 was timely since Ark. R. Civ. P. 52 was not implicated in an appeal from a denial of reconsideration arising from a denial of intervention in a probate case. Helena Reg'l Med. Ctr. v. Wilson, 362 Ark. 117, 207 S.W.3d 541 (2005).

Because appellant heir was made a party to the probate action when the circuit court granted his motion to intervene under this rule, the circuit court erred by determining that he was not entitled to notice of a hearing on a motion to remove the estate executrix. Maxwell v. Estate of Maxwell, 2012 Ark. App. 174 (2012).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying a grandchild's motion to intervene in a petition for approval of distribution of a decedent's estate because the grandchild did not have an interest in the estate; the grandchild was not the decedent's statutory heir, given that his mother was still alive at the time of the decedent's death, and the grandchild was not a wrongful death beneficiary either. Watkins v. Adams, 2021 Ark. App. 261 (2021).

Service.

Republican candidate's complaint in intervention was properly dismissed as he had not served his motion to intervene or his proposed complaint on the defending Democratic candidate, the Republican candidate was not relieved of his service obligations simply because the Democratic candidate may have been able to obtain the Republican candidate's complaint through his own efforts, and the Democratic candidate's appearance and defense to plaintiff's complaint did not establish a waiver of service with respect to the Republican candidate's complaint. The dismissal should have been without prejudice, however. Tollett v. Wilson, 2020 Ark. 326, 608 S.W.3d 602 (2020).

Timeliness.

This rule does not give an absolute right to intervene unless the application is timely and timeliness is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial court whether the intervention is allowed or denied; the trial court's action is subject to reversal only where discretion has been abused. Bank of Quitman v. Phillips, 270 Ark. 53, 603 S.W.2d 450 (Ct. App. 1980).

Absent extraordinary and unusual circumstances, intervention after a final judgment by a party who did not participate in the litigation giving rise to the judgment sought to be vacated, should not be permitted and where the record showed that a bank, which failed to intervene before final judgment in a foreclosure action, was fully aware of this action from its inception and chose not to intervene before the decree although it had a right to do so, intervention in an action to vacate such judgment was properly denied. Bank of Quitman v. Phillips, 270 Ark. 53, 603 S.W.2d 450 (Ct. App. 1980).

Entry of judgment is not the only criterion by which court can measure the timeliness of the attempted intervention; timeliness of intervention is a matter within the discretion of the trial court. Polnac-Hartman & Assocs. v. First Nat'l Bank, 292 Ark. 501, 731 S.W.2d 202 (1987).

Attempted intervention held untimely. Polnac-Hartman & Assocs. v. First Nat'l Bank, 292 Ark. 501, 731 S.W.2d 202 (1987).

A post-judgment intervention will be allowed only upon a strong showing of entitlement or a demonstration of unusual and compelling circumstances. UHS of Ark., Inc. v. City of Sherwood, 296 Ark. 97, 752 S.W.2d 36 (1988).

It would not be reasonable to charge an intervenor with untimeliness where the motion for intervention would clearly have been timely but for the expedited manner with which the judgment was entered. UHS of Ark., Inc. v. City of Sherwood, 296 Ark. 97, 752 S.W.2d 36 (1988).

Timeliness under subsection (a) of this rule is a matter lying within the discretion of the trial court and will not be subject to reversal absent abuse of that discretion. Cupples Farms Partnership v. Forrest City Prod. Credit Ass'n, 310 Ark. 597, 839 S.W.2d 187 (1992).

Factors to consider in a decision on timeliness of a motion to intervene are: (1) how far the proceedings have progressed; (2) any prejudice to other parties caused by the delay; and (3) the reason for the delay. Cupples Farms Partnership v. Forrest City Prod. Credit Ass'n, 310 Ark. 597, 839 S.W.2d 187 (1992).

Not protecting a claimed interest in over four hundred thousand dollars for either seven or ten years was untimely. Cupples Farms Partnership v. Forrest City Prod. Credit Ass'n, 310 Ark. 597, 839 S.W.2d 187 (1992).

There are three factors to be considered in a decision on timeliness: (1) how far the proceedings have progressed; (2) any prejudice to other parties caused by the delay; and (3) the reason for the delay. Employers Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Grantors to Diaz Refinery PRP Comm. Site Trust, 313 Ark. 645, 855 S.W.2d 936 (1993).

A threshold question in determining whether intervention should be allowed is whether the application to intervene was made in a timely manner. Employers Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Grantors to Diaz Refinery PRP Comm. Site Trust, 313 Ark. 645, 855 S.W.2d 936 (1993).

A decision as to the timeliness of intervention is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial court and is subject to reversal only where that discretion has been abused. Employers Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Grantors to Diaz Refinery PRP Comm. Site Trust, 313 Ark. 645, 855 S.W.2d 936 (1993).

Timeliness of intervention under subsection (a) of this rule is a matter within the discretion of the trial court and will not be disturbed absent some abuse of discretion; timeliness is to be determined from all the circumstances. Carton v. Missouri Pac. R.R., 315 Ark. 5, 865 S.W.2d 635 (1993).

The timeliness of intervention is within the discretion of the trial court; permitting intervention will not be considered error due to untimeliness unless there has been an abuse of discretion. Arkansas Best Corp. v. General Elec. Capital Corp., 317 Ark. 238, 878 S.W.2d 708 (1994).

When there are unusual and compelling circumstances, the court will permit intervention even after a final judgment has been entered. Arkansas Best Corp. v. General Elec. Capital Corp., 317 Ark. 238, 878 S.W.2d 708 (1994).

Timeliness is to be determined from all of the circumstances including: (1) how far the proceedings have progressed; (2) any prejudice to other parties caused by the delay; and (3) the reason for the delay. Bradford v. Bradford, 52 Ark. App. 81, 915 S.W.2d 723 (1996).

Intervention of two fathers in the custody proceedings involving their children and the divorce of the mother from a third father held timely where the fathers filed on the day the temporary order finding probable cause for dependency-neglect was entered and only a month had passed since the original petition had been filed. Lowell v. Lowell, 55 Ark. App. 211, 934 S.W.2d 540 (1996).

A motion to intervene was untimely where it was not filed until four years after the entry of a preliminary injunction, notwithstanding that little or litigation ensued during that four year period, where the movant failed to explain why it did not seek to enter the action earlier and deliberately chose other avenues to pursue to protect its interests. McLane Co. v. Davis, 30 S.W.3d 473, 30 S.W.3d 743 (Ark.), sub. op., 342 Ark. 655, 33 S.W.3d 473 (2000).

In an action arising from a motor vehicle accident, the motions of the plaintiff's employer and the workers' compensation carrier for the employer to intervene were timely, notwithstanding that the motion was not made until almost three months after they were notified of the action and only after they were notified that the parties has reached a settlement, where the motion was brought six days before the end of an extended period granted to the plaintiff for completing service upon the defendant. Northwest Ark. Area Agency on Aging v. Golmon, 70 Ark. App. 136, 15 S.W.3d 363 (2000).

Where dissatisfied class members delayed the filing of their motion to intervene until nearly 15 months after the litigation had begun or 2 months after a proposed settlement had been reached, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that: (1) class members waited until the litigation had progressed too far before they filed their motion to intervene; (2) the granting of the class members' untimely motion would have caused the other parties to the litigation to suffer prejudice; and (3) the class members failed to provide a valid reason for their delay in filing their motion to intervene. Ballard v. Garrett, 349 Ark. 371, 78 S.W.3d 73 (2002).

Probate judge did not abuse his discretion in finding that the doctor's and medical clinic's petition to intervene under this rule was untimely where the petition was filed almost four years after the order appointing the son as administrator was filed and the estate could be prejudiced if appellants were permitted to intervene; appellants delayed almost two years after being named as defendants in the wrongful-death action before they challenged the son's appointment. Kelly v. Estate of Edwards, 2009 Ark. 78, 312 S.W.3d 316 (2009).

Trial court did not err in dismissing a petition by a great-uncle for permissive intervention under subsection (b) of this rule in a dependency-neglect case involving his great-niece and great nephew subsequent to the termination of their parents' rights; the petition was not filed until 15 months after the children were removed from their home, and approximately seven months after parental rights were terminated. Mann v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2012 Ark. App. 352, 415 S.W.3d 45 (2012).

Trial court did not err in refusing to allow appellant to intervene in a paternity proceeding because his motion to intervene was untimely under subsection (a) of this rule, he waited until the litigation had progressed too far, approximately eight years, before filing his motion to intervene, and the granting of his untimely motion would have caused the other parties to the litigation to suffer great prejudice. Sublett v. Mallett, 2013 Ark. App. 676 (2013).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying intervenors' motion to intervene as a matter of right as untimely because the intervenors did not file the motion until over three years after the school district filed its complaint; during the delay, certain claims of the school district were dismissed, summary judgment was granted on another, and an appeal was taken, and the intervenors' justification for the delay simply did not withstand scrutiny. Fort Smith Sch. Dist. v. Deer/Mt. Judea Sch. Dist., 2014 Ark. 486, 450 S.W.3d 239 (2014).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying intervenors' motion to intervene as a matter of right as untimely because the intervenors did not file the motion until over three years after the school district filed its complaint; the more than three-year delay in the addition of new claims to a lawsuit involving funding legislation and its effect on a single school district would be prejudicial to the parties already present, and the focus of the litigation was already well-established and pertained to a single district. Fort Smith Sch. Dist. v. Deer/Mt. Judea Sch. Dist., 2014 Ark. 486, 450 S.W.3d 239 (2014).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion when it denied appellant's motion to intervene as untimely. By the time appellant filed its motion to intervene, the circuit court had entered a judgment, the subject property had been sold, and the circuit court had approved the sale. Appellant offered no reason for its delay, though it did assert an ownership interest in the property. There were no unusual and compelling circumstances entitling appellant to intervene in the case after the final judgment was entered. Valois Dynasty, LLC v. City Nat'l Bank, 2016 Ark. App. 140, 486 S.W.3d 205 (2016).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in denying the veterans' postjudgment motion for intervention where they filed it only after their original request was deemed noncompliant, they had ample time to file a proper motion to intervene, and they identified no reason for their failure to file a timely motion. Wartick v. United Servs. Auto. Ass'n, 2017 Ark. App. 329, 525 S.W.3d 38 (2017).

Great-grandmother's petition to intervene in a dependency-neglect case was properly denied where the petition was filed 27 months after the child had been placed in foster care and eight months after parental rights had been terminated, there was no good reason for the delay, and, in light of the court's conclusion that it would hear the great-grandmother's adoption petition once it was filed in a new case, intervention in the dependency-neglect case was unnecessary. Stricklin v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2017 Ark. App. 441, 528 S.W.3d 321 (2017).

Rule 25. Substitution of parties.

(a) Death. (1) If a party dies and the claim is not thereby extinguished, the Court may order substitution of the proper parties. The motion for substitution may be made by any party or by the successors or representatives of the deceased party, and such substitution may be ordered without notice or upon such notice as the Court may require. Unless the motion for substitution is made not later than ninety (90) days after the death is suggested upon the record by the service upon the parties of a statement of the fact of death, the action may be dismissed as to the deceased party.

(2) Upon the death of a plaintiff the proper party for substitution shall be his personal representative or, where the claim has passed to his heirs or to his devisees, the heirs or devisees may be substituted for the deceased party. Upon the death of a defendant in an action wherein the claim survives against his personal representative, the personal representative shall be the proper party for substitution. Except in an action for the recovery of real property only, or for the adjudication of an interest therein, the heirs, devisees or personal representative may be the proper parties for substitution as the Court may determine. Where the deceased party is acting in the capacity as personal representative, his successor shall be the proper party for substitution.

(3) Upon the death of any party the Court before which such litigation is pending may, upon the motion of any party, appoint a special administrator who shall be substituted for the deceased party. The powers of such special administrator shall extend only to the prosecution and defense of the litigation wherein he is appointed. No special administrator shall be appointed where there is a general personal representative subject to the jurisdiction of the Court for the deceased party. Where such a general personal representative qualifies after the appointment of a special administrator, the general personal representative shall, upon the motion of any party, or the general personal representative, be substituted for such special administrator. Costs taxed against a special administrator shall not constitute a personal obligation.

(4) In the event of the death of one or more of the plaintiffs or one or more of the defendants in an action in which the right sought to be enforced survives only to the surviving plaintiffs or only against the surviving defendants, the action does not abate. The death shall be suggested upon the record and the action shall proceed in favor of or against the surviving parties.

(b) Guardians. If a plenary, limited or temporary guardian is appointed for a party, the court shall upon such terms as it considers just and upon motion of a party or the guardian allow the guardian to be substituted to the extent of his judiciary capacity, for the party for whom the guardian has been appointed.

(c) Transfer of Interest. In the case of any transfer of interest, the action may be continued by or against the original party, unless the Court upon motion directs the person to whom the interest is transferred to be substituted in the action or joined with the original party. Service of this motion shall be made as provided in subdivision (a) of this rule.

(d) Public Officers; Death or Separation from Office. (1) When a public officer is a party to an action in his official capacity and during its pendency dies, resigns, or otherwise ceases to hold office, the action does not abate and his successor is automatically substituted as a party. Proceedings following the substitution shall be in the name of the substituted party, but any misnomer not affecting the substantial rights of the parties shall be disregarded. An order of the substitution may be entered at any time, but the omission to enter such an order shall not affect the substitution.

(2) When a public officer sues or is sued in his official capacity, he may be described as a party by his official title rather than by name; but the Court may require his name to be added.

(e) Limitation of Rule. The provisions of this rule shall in no way allow a claim to be maintained which is otherwise barred by limitations or non-claim, nor shall the provisions of this rule be determinative of whether or not a claim for or against a deceased party survives his death.

HISTORY: Amended July 9, 1984, effective September 1, 1984.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 25:

1. Section (a)(1) is modified from FRCP 25(a) so as to allow, with or without notice, the substitution of parties in the event of the death of a party. This change is predicated upon the assumption that the trial court can best determine whether the substitution is essentially a routine clerical matter or whether it should be allowed only after a hearing. This section is further modified from the Federal Rule by changing the word "may" for "shall" in the last sentence so as to afford the trial court some discretion in deciding whether to dismiss an action.

2. Section (a)(2) represents an attempt to identify the proper parties for substitution on the death of a party and to condense superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 27-1003, 27-1012, 27-1013 and 27-1014 (Repl. 1962). The purpose of this rule is to permit the action to be prosecuted by or against those who are, following the death of a party, either the real party in interest or representative thereof.

3. Section (a)(3) empowers the trial court to appoint a special administrator for a deceased party in litigation pending before it. This basically tracks the provisions contained in superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 27-1009 through 27-1011 (Repl. 1962).

4. Section (e) represents an attempt to limit the effect of this rule to the determination of who may be substituted and not to enlarge the time during which a claim may be prosecuted. Neither does it determine which claims survive the death of a party. Specifically, Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 27-901 through 27-910 (Repl. 1962), remain unaffected by Rule 25.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1984 Amendment:

Rule 25(b) is amended to make it compatible with the Limited Guardianship Act and Rule 4(d)(1) and (3). The purpose of providing for substitution of a guardian only "to the extent of his judiciary capacity" is to permit the individual to remain a party in cases in which issues in excess of the guardian's capacity are to be decided.

CASE NOTES

Applicability.

Where the guardian of the wife's estate failed to timely obtain letters of administration within forty days of the wife's death, the guardian lost its authority to prosecute an action to contest her husband's will on her behalf. No substitution of parties was at issue; therefore, this rule was inapplicable. First Sec. Bank v.

Estate of Leonard, 369 Ark. 213, 253 S.W.3d 434 (2007).

Construction With Other Laws.

Section 16-62-108 is not superseded by this rule since the statute creates a special proceeding with a different procedure distinct from an ordinary civil action to which the rules apply.

Nix v. St. Edward Mercy Med. Ctr., 342 Ark. 650, 30 S.W.3d 746 (2000).

Death of Party.

Circuit court order appointing son as special administrator for his deceased mother and ordering substitution of parties was sufficient to revive mother's breach of contract and negligence action against the nursing home; the procedures in § 16-62-105(a) and (b) [repealed] were superseded by the Rules of Civil Procedure in 1986 and no longer governed the procedure for obtaining an order of revivor. Deaver v. Faucon Props., 367 Ark. 288, 239 S.W.3d 525 (2006).

Substitution of a new class representative when the initial representative died was not covered by this rule; no procedure was specified under the court rules and the Arkansas Supreme Court and the circuit court acted in a manner authorized by Ark. R. Civ. P. 81(c). Seeco, Inc. v. Stewmon, 2016 Ark. 435, 506 S.W.3d 828 (2016).

Circuit court properly dismissed an executor's lawsuit against the owners of a nursing home because the savings statute, § 16-56-126, did not apply to the facts of the case; the decedent passed away while her case was still pending, which abated the case, and it was nonsuited only after the case abated, and the executor had not timely moved for an order of substitution or commenced a new action within one year after decedent's death as required by §§ 16-62-108 and 16-56-117. Garrett v. Progressive Eldercare Servs. — Saline, Inc., 2019 Ark. App. 201, 575 S.W.3d 426 (2019).

Dismissal.

The use of the word "may" in this rule implies that dismissal is not mandatory; however, it is discretionary with the trial court. Wolford v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 331 Ark. 426, 961 S.W.2d 743 (1998).

Notice.

The trial court did not err by granting appellee's motion to be substituted for the original party as the party in interest nor did the court abuse its discretion by not requiring notice to appellants of the requested substitution, as substitution may be ordered without notice. McDermott v. Great Plains Equip. Leasing Corp., 40 Ark. App. 8, 839 S.W.2d 547 (1992).

Substitution at Trial Level.

Since this rule is directed towards substitution at the trial court level, a motion indicating the death of the appellee and asking that an appropriate order be entered to substitute the personal representative of the appellee's estate, if any, or, if none has been appointed, to appoint an undesignated person as a special administrator to be substituted for and as the appellee, pursuant to this rule, was properly denied.

Constitution State Ins. Co. v. Passmore, 18 Ark. App. 247, 713 S.W.2d 255 (1986).

While this rule illustrates the proper substitution of parties, it does not determine which claims survive the death of a party; thus, the matter was remanded to the trial court to determine if it was a proper action for revival under § 16-62-105 [repealed] and to determine if the wife's petition for an increase in Medicaid benefits was one that would survive her husband's death such that wife would be substituted as the executrix of the husband's estate. Ark. Dept. of Health & Human Servs. v. Smith, 366 Ark. 584, 237 S.W.3d 79, overruled in part, Deaver v. Faucon Props., 367 Ark. 288, 239 S.W.3d 525 (2006).

Timeliness.

Dismissal of medical malpractice action against doctor who died properly dismissed where the motion for substitution of parties was not timely filed; however, in accordance with Ark. R. Civ. P. 41(b), the dismissal should have been without prejudice. Wolford v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 331 Ark. 426, 961 S.W.2d 743 (1998).

One-year statute of limitations in § 16-62-108 was applicable to bar a suit brought by a special administrator of an estate when the administrator died during the litigation. This rule merely governed the procedure for substituting a party and did not operate to enlarge the time in which substitution could occur. Language in § 16-62-109 regarding a special administrator's powers ceasing for a period so long that the action cannot be revived further reinforced that the time limitation in § 16-62-108 applied, regardless of whether it was the injured party who died or a special administrator. Ausman v. Hiram Shaddox Geriatric Ctr., 2013 Ark. 66, 426 S.W.3d 379 (2013).

Transfer of Interest.

A change in procedural law now allows a substitution of the real party in interest upon a transfer of interest. Lott v. Circuit Court, 328 Ark. 596, 945 S.W.2d 922 (1997).

Even though a writ of execution named an original creditor instead of an assignee, a trial court did not err in finding that the assignee's status as the real party in interest related back to the issuance of the writ because the assignee's efforts arose out of the same conduct, transaction, or occurrence that existed when the original writ of execution was issued. Looney v. Raby, 100 Ark. App. 326, 268 S.W.3d 345 (2007).

Waiver of Objection.

Although a substitute representative of an estate made no formal request for substitution as plaintiff within the one-year limitations period of § 16-62-108, he defended motions to dismiss based on the original representative's disqualification and sought reconsideration of the dismissals; therefore, the defendants waived the issue of substitution. Taylor v. MCSA, LLC, 2013 Ark. 430, 430 S.W.3d 113 (2013).

After the original defendant died, pro se plaintiff, who was a licensed attorney, waived the issue of substitution and question of revivor by continuing to amend his complaint and going to trial without a proper party substituted for the decedent in her individual capacity. Nash v. Nash, 2019 Ark. App. 173, 574

S.W.3d 171, cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 536, 205 L. Ed. 2d 336 (2019).

ARTICLE V. DEPOSITIONS AND DISCOVERY

Rule

Rule 26. General provisions governing discovery.

Rule 26.1. Electronic Discovery.

Rule 27. Depositions before action or pending appeal.

Rule 28. Persons before whom depositions may be taken.

Rule 29. Stipulations regarding discovery procedures.

Rule 30. Depositions upon oral examination.

Rule 31. Depositions upon written questions.

Rule 32. Use of depositions in court proceedings.

Rule 33. Interrogatories to parties.

Rule 34. Production of documents and things and entry upon land for inspection and other purposes.

Rule 35. Physical and mental examination of persons.

Rule 36. Requests for admission.

Rule 37. Failure to make discovery; sanctions.

Rule 26. General provisions governing discovery.

(a) Discovery Methods. Parties may obtain discovery by one or more of the following methods: depositions upon oral examination or written questions; written interrogatories; production of documents or things or permission to enter upon land or other property, for inspection and other purposes; physical and mental examinations; and requests for admission. Unless the court orders otherwise under subdivision (c) of this rule, the frequency of use of these methods is not limited.

(b) Scope of Discovery. Unless otherwise limited by order of the court in accordance with these rules, the scope of discovery is as follows:

(1) In general. Parties may obtain discovery regarding any matter, not privileged, which is relevant to the issues in the pending actions, whether it relates to the claim or defense of the party seeking discovery or to the claim or defense of any other party, including the existence, description, nature, custody, condition, identity and location of any books, documents, or other tangible things and the identity and location of persons who have knowledge of any discoverable matter or who will or may be called as a witness at the trial of any cause. It is not ground for objection that the information sought will be inadmissible at the trial if the information sought appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

(2) Insurance agreements. A party may obtain discovery of the existence and contents of any insurance agreement under which any person carrying on an insurance business may be liable to satisfy part or all of a judgment which may be entered in the action or to indemnify or reimburse for payments made to satisfy the judgment. Information concerning the insurance agreement is not by reason of disclosure admissible in evidence at trial.

For purposes of this paragraph, an application for insurance shall not be treated as part of an insurance agreement.

(3) Trial preparation; materials. Subject to the provisions of subdivision (b)(4) of this rule, a party may obtain discovery of documents and tangible things otherwise discoverable under subdivision (b)(1) of this rule and prepared in anticipation of litigation or for trial by or for another party or by or for that other party's representative (including his attorney, consultant, surety, indemnitor, insurer, or agent) only upon a showing that the party seeking discovery has substantial need of the materials in the preparation of his case and that he is unable without undue hardship to obtain the substantial equivalent of the materials by other means. In ordering discovery of such materials when the required showing has been made, the court shall protect against disclosure of the mental impressions, conclusions, opinions or legal theories of an attorney or other representative of a party concerning the litigation.

A party may obtain without the required showing a statement concerning the action or its subject matter previously made by that party. Upon request, a person not a party may obtain without the required showing a statement concerning the action or its subject matter previously made by that person. If the request is refused, the person may move for a court order. The provisions of Rule 37(a)(4) apply to the award of expenses incurred in relation to the motion. For purposes of this paragraph, a statement previously made is (A) a written statement signed or otherwise adopted or approved by the person making it, or (B) a stenographic, mechanical, electrical, or other recording, or a transcription thereof, which is a substantially verbatim recital of an oral statement by the person making it and contemporaneously recorded.

(4) Trial preparation: experts. Discovery of facts known and opinions held by experts, otherwise discoverable under the provisions of subdivision (b)(1) of this rule and acquired or developed in anticipation of litigation or for trial, may be obtained only as follows:

(A) (i) A party may through interrogatories require any other party to identify each person whom the other party expects to call as an expert witness at trial, to state the subject matter on which he is expected to testify, and to state the substance of the facts and opinions to which the expert is expected to testify and a summary of the grounds for each opinion. (ii) Subject to subdivision (b)(4)(C) of this rule, a party may depose any person who has been identified as an expert expected to testify at trial.

(B) A party may discover facts known or opinions held by an expert who has been retained or specially employed by another party in anticipation of litigation or preparation for trial and who is not expected to be called as a witness at the trial, only as provided in Rule 35(b) or upon a showing of exceptional circumstances under which it is impractical for the party seeking discovery to obtain facts or opinions on the same subject by other means.

(C) Unless manifest injustice would result, (i) the court shall require that the party seeking discovery pay the expert a reasonable fee for time spent in responding to discovery under subdivisions (b)(4)(A)(ii) and (b)(4)(B) of this rule; and (ii) with respect to discovery obtained under subdivision (b)(4)(B) of this rule the court shall require the party seeking discovery to pay the other a fair portion of the fees and expenses reasonably incurred by the latter party in obtaining facts and opinions from the expert.

(5) Inadvertent Disclosure.

(A) A party who discloses or produces material or information without intending to waive a claim of privilege or attorney work product shall be presumed not to have waived under these rules and the Arkansas Rules of Evidence if the party takes the following steps: (i) within fourteen calendar days of discovering the inadvertent disclosure, the producing party must notify the receiving party by specifically identifying the material or information and asserting the privilege or doctrine protecting it; and (ii) if responses to written discovery are involved, then the producing party must amend them as part of this notice.

(B) Within fourteen calendar days of receiving notice of an inadvertent disclosure, a receiving party must return, sequester, or destroy the specified materials and all copies. After receiving this notice, the receiving party may not use or disclose the materials in any way.

(C) A receiving party may challenge a disclosing party's claim of privilege or protection and inadvertent disclosure. The reason for such a challenge may include, but is not limited to, the timeliness of the notice of inadvertent disclosure or whether all the surrounding circumstances show waiver.

(D) In deciding whether the privilege or protection has been waived, the circuit court shall consider all the material circumstances, including: (i) the reasonableness of the precautions taken to prevent inadvertent disclosure; (ii) the scope of the discovery; (iii) the extent of disclosure; and (iv) the interests of justice. Notwithstanding Model Rule of Professional Conduct 3.7, and without having to terminate representation in the matter, an attorney for the disclosing party may testify about the circumstances of disclosure and the procedures in place to protect against inadvertent disclosure.

(c) Protective Orders. Upon motion by a party or by the person from whom discovery is sought, stating that the movant has in good faith conferred or attempted to confer with other affected parties in an effort to resolve the dispute without court action, and for good cause shown, the court in which the action is pending may make any order which justice requires to protect a party or person from annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden or expense, including one or more of the following: (1) that the discovery not be had; (2) that the discovery may be had only on specified terms and conditions, including a designation of the time or place; (3) that the discovery may be had only by a method of discovery other than that selected by the party seeking discovery; (4) that certain matters not be inquired into, or that the scope of the discovery be limited to certain matters; (5) that discovery be conducted with no one present except persons designated by the court; (6) that a deposition after being sealed be opened only by order of the court; (7) that a trade secret or other confidential research, development, or commercial information not be disclosed or be disclosed only in a designated way; (8) that the parties simultaneously file specified documents or information enclosed in sealed envelopes to be opened as directed by the court.

If the motion for a protective order is denied in whole or in part, the court may, on such terms and conditions as are just, order that any party or person provide or permit discovery. The provisions of Rule 37(a)(4) apply to the award of expenses incurred in relation to the motion.

(d) Sequence and Timing of Discovery. Unless the court upon motion, for the convenience of parties and witnesses and in the interests of justice, orders otherwise, methods of discovery may be used in any sequence and the fact that a party is conducting discovery, whether by deposition or otherwise, shall not operate to delay any other party's discovery.

(e) Supplementation of Responses. (1) A party is under a duty seasonably to amend a prior response to an interrogatory, request for production, or request for admission if the party learns that the response is in some material respect incomplete or incorrect and if the additional or corrective information has not otherwise been made known to the other parties during the discovery process or in writing. This duty includes, but is not limited to, supplying supplemental information about the identity and location of persons having knowledge of discoverable matters, the identity and location of each person expected to be called as a witness at trial, and the subject matter and substance of any expert witness's testimony.

(2) An additional duty to supplement responses may be imposed by order of the court, agreement of the parties, or at any time prior to trial through new requests for supplementation of prior responses.

(f) Contents of Trial Court Orders for Production of Discovery When Defense to Production is a Privilege or the Opinion-work-product Protection. When the defense to production of discovery is any privilege recognized by Arkansas law or the opinion-work-product protection, orders pursuant to Rule of Civil Procedure 37 compelling production of discovery or denying a motion to quash production of materials pursuant to Rule 45 shall be supported by factual findings and shall address the following factors:

- (1) the need to prevent irreparable injury;
- (2) the likelihood that the claim of privilege or protection would be sustained on appeal;
- (3) the likelihood that an immediate appeal would delay a scheduled trial date;
- (4) the diligence of the parties in seeking or resisting the discovery in the circuit court;
- (5) the circuit court's written statement of reasons supporting or opposing immediate review; and
- (6) any conflict with precedent or other controlling authority as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion.

The Supreme Court may, in its discretion, permit an interlocutory appeal from such orders pursuant to Ark. R. App. P.-Civ. 2(f).

HISTORY: Amended November 18, 1996, effective March 1, 1997; amended January 28, 1999; amended May 25, 2006; amended January 10, 2008; amended May 24, 2012, effective July 1, 2012.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 26:

1. Rule 26 is a slightly modified version of FRCP 26. This rule works few significant changes in Arkansas law although Section (b)(2) is new to state practice.

2. The changes from FRCP 26 are designed to follow prior Arkansas law where it was deemed sounder or more appropriate than the Federal Rule. The first change is found in (b)(1) which permits a party to determine the identity and location of persons who will or may be called as witnesses at the trial. The Federal Rule does not specifically require that the names and addresses of potential witnesses be furnished although many local district court rules do make this a requirement. Bell v. Swift & Co., 283 F. 2d 407 (C.C.A. 5th, 1960). This rule makes it clear that such information must be furnished.

3. The second change from the language of the Federal Rule is found in Section (c) which concerns which court may enter a protective order. Under FRCP 26, the court in the district where the deposition is taken may enter a protective order. This is a power concurrent with that exercised by the court in which the action is pending. Under this rule, only the courts wherein actions are pending shall have the right to enter a protective order.

4. Overall, Rule 26 simply recites the basic philosophy of discovery and with the exception of Section (b)(2), as noted, works few changes in Arkansas practice and procedure.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1997 Amendment:

The introductory clause of Rule 26(c) has been revised along the lines of the corresponding federal rule, as amended in 1993. A similar change has been made in Rule 37(a). As amended, subdivision (c) provides that a motion for a protective order must contain a statement that the movant has conferred, either in person or by telephone, with the other affected parties in a good faith effort to resolve the discovery dispute without the need for court intervention. If the movant is unable to get opposing parties even to discuss the matter, the efforts in attempting to arrange such a conference should be indicated. Like the motion itself, the statement required by subdivision (c) is subject to Rule 11.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1999 Amendment:

The first sentence of subdivision (b)(1) has been revised to correct an oversight that dates to the rule's adoption. As amended, this sentence provides for discovery not only as to persons who may have knowledge of discoverable matters or who may be called as witnesses at trial, but also as to "books, documents, or other tangible things." The new language is taken from Federal Rule 26(b)(1), on which the Arkansas rule was based.

Subdivision (e)(2) has been revised to track the corresponding federal rule, as amended in 1993. The duty to supplement, while imposed on a "party," applies whether the corrective information is learned by the client or by the attorney. Supplementation need not be made as each new item of information is learned but should be made at appropriate intervals during the discovery period, and with special promptness as the trial date approaches. Under the revised rule, the obligation to supplement applies to interrogatories, requests for production, and requests for admissions, but not ordinarily to deposition testimony. However, supplementation is required under subdivision (e)(1) with respect to changes in the opinions of experts, whether in response to interrogatories under subdivision (b)(4)(A) or in a deposition.

The obligation to supplement under subdivision (e)(2) arises whenever a party learns that its prior responses are "in some material respect" incomplete or incorrect. The "knowing concealment" standard found in the former version of the rule has been deleted. A formal amendment of a response is not necessary if the corrective or supplemental information has been made known to the parties in writing or during the discovery process, as when a witness not previously disclosed is identified during the taking of a deposition.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2006 Amendment:

Subdivision (e) has been amended. The amendment strengthens a party's duty to supplement discovery responses with additional or corrected information received after the party's original response. Introductory language stating a general no-duty-to-supplement rule with exceptions has been eliminated. Former subdivisions (e)(1) and (e)(2) have been combined: there is one duty to amend, and amended responses containing supplemental information are one kind of amendment. Former subdivision (e)(3) has been renumbered as new (e)(2) and clarified. The circuit court or the parties may expand the Rule 26(e) duty to supplement. New subdivision (e) in Arkansas Rule of Civil Procedure 37 contains a companion change: if a party fails to supplement discovery responses seasonably, and prejudice results, then the prejudiced party may move for any appropriate sanction from the circuit court.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2008 Amendment:

Paragraph (4)(A) of subdivision (b) has been amended to conform the Rule to current practice. Parties routinely depose testifying experts, as they do other witnesses, without first getting a court order allowing the deposition. This amendment eliminates an unnecessary provision that no one was following.

Paragraph (5) has been added to subdivision (b). These provisions protect parties who inadvertently disclose material protected by any evidentiary privilege or doctrine of protection, such as the attorney work product doctrine. This provision draws on the work of the Arkansas Bar Association's Task Force on the Attorney-Client Privilege, American Bar Association Resolution 120D (adopted by House of Delegates in August 2006), and a 2006 amendment to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26. The Arkansas Bar Association specifically endorsed a similar change in the Arkansas Rule, although its proposal was limited to the attorney-client privilege and the work-product doctrine.

Lawyers do their best to avoid mistakes, but they sometimes happen. Discovery has always posed the risk of the inadvertent production of privileged or protected material. The advent of electronic discovery has only increased the risk of inadvertent disclosures. This amendment addresses this risk by creating a procedure to evaluate and address inadvertent disclosures, including disputed ones.

Arkansas law on this issue is scarce. In Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. v. Little, 276 Ark. 511, 639 S.W.2d 726 (1982), a letter between two lawyers for Firestone "made its way" to one of Firestone's customers, who produced the letter in another lawsuit. The Supreme Court held that Firestone waived the privilege by allowing the letter to get into the customer's hands. 276 Ark. at 519, 639 S.W.2d at 730. The Court, however, did not discuss how the customer obtained the letter or whether Fires-tone's disclosure was inadvertent. The Eighth Circuit has endorsed the multifactor approach contained in this Rule as amended. Gray v. Bicknell, 86 F.3d 1472, 1483-84 (8th Cir. 1996) (predicting in a diversity case that Missouri courts would adopt this approach, which is the majority view).

The new provision creates a presumption against waiver if the disclosing party acts promptly after discovering the inadvertent disclosure. Notice by the disclosing party must be specific about both the material inadvertently disclosed and the privilege or doctrine protecting it. After receiving this kind of notice, a party may neither use nor disclose the specified material. Instead, the receiving party must either return, sequester, or destroy the material (including all copies). A party's failure to fulfill these obligations will expose that party to sanctions under Rule 37. The new provision also creates a procedure for the receiving party to challenge a notice of inadvertent disclosure and a procedure for the circuit court to resolve the dispute. This procedure, which requires the court to consider all the material circumstances, "strikes the appropriate balance" and is "best suited to achieving a fair result." Gray, 86 F.2d at 1484.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2012 Amendment:

Subdivision (f) is added to correspond with new Ark. R. App. P.—Civil 2(f). That rule of appellate procedure gives the Arkansas Supreme Court discretion to grant permission to take an interlocutory appeal of an order under Ark. R. Civ. P. 37 compelling production of materials or information or an order under Ark. R. Civ. P. 45 denying a motion to quash production of materials for which a privilege or opinion-work-product is claimed. To help ensure development of an adequate record for the Supreme Court's consideration of whether to allow an appeal, new Rule 26(f) requires the trial court to make factual findings and address the guideline factors (a) through (f).

CASE NOTES

Appellate Review.

The standard of appellate review, of decisions by the trial court to exclude or permit the testimony of any witness at trial, is whether the trial court has abused its discretion. Collins v. Hinton, 327 Ark. 159, 937 S.W.2d 164 (1997).

Circuit court, which awarded child support and reimbursement of medical expenses to an ex-husband, abused its discretion in granting the ex-husband's objection to the ex-wife's discovery request. Income from the ex-husband was relevant for determining whether a deviation from the child-support chart should be allowed. Hill v. Kelly, 2014 Ark. 34 (2014).

Construction With Other Rules.

The failure of the plaintiffs to serve full and complete answers to interrogatories could not be excused under Ark. R. Civ. P. 37(d) where their objections to some of the interrogatories were not made within 30 days, as required by Ark. R. Civ. P. 33(b), and they did not apply for a protective order under subsection (c) of this rule. Calandro v. Parkerson, 333 Ark. 603, 970 S.W.2d 796 (1998).

Evidence.

A court does not abuse its discretion in admitting rebuttal evidence where a response to discovery was truthful when made and the need to change the response is the result of trial developments. Phillips v. McAuley, 297 Ark. 563, 764 S.W.2d 424 (1989).

Expenses.

The trial court did not abuse its wide latitude of discretion in setting a “reasonable” amount for expenses. 65th Ctr., Inc. v. Copeland, 308 Ark. 456, 825 S.W.2d 574 (1992).

Expert Testimony.

Where answer to interrogatories supplied by a party identifying an expert witness was dated and mailed to counsel for the opposing party, according to the certificate of service, nearly two weeks before the trial began, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the testimony of the expert. Banks v. Jackson, 312 Ark. 232, 848 S.W.2d 408 (1993).

Even if subdivision (b)(4)(B) of this rule applied in a breach of contract action, a client’s use of a contractor’s witness as an expert was within an exception to the rule, which permitted discovery upon a showing of exceptional circumstances; the client’s attorney informed the trial court that the client was unable to obtain another expert to testify about the repairs at issue. Acker Constr., LLC v. Tran, 2012 Ark. App. 214, 396 S.W.3d 279 (2012).

Methods.

Under subsection (a) of this rule, a party has an absolute right to take a deposition; if the deponent is asked questions that are inappropriate or unreasonable, he has a right to refuse to answer the question and request a protective order from the trial court, pursuant to subsection (c) of this rule, to prevent the deposer from asking further questions along that line. Lupo v. Lineberger, 313 Ark. 315, 855 S.W.2d 293 (1993).

Since issues of discovery are squarely under the trial court’s jurisdiction, it necessarily follows that a writ of prohibition is not the solution to a discovery problem. Lupo v. Lineberger, 313 Ark. 315, 855 S.W.2d 293 (1993).

Motor Vehicle Accident Cases.

In an action arising from a motor vehicle accident which occurred when a sheet of plexiglass allegedly blew off the defendant’s camper and struck the plaintiff’s vehicle, the defendant was entitled to discovery of the defendant’s address for the past 15 years and whether he had any citations of the type that could have been issued under the circumstances of the case, i.e., weights and measures violations, overweight loads, and failure to secure a load; however, the defendant was not entitled to discovery of all traffic tickets received by the defendant or information establishing whether his vehicle insurance had ever been declined or canceled. Barker v. Clark, 69 Ark. App. 375, 13

S.W.3d 190, rev’d, 343 Ark. 8, 33 S.W.3d 476 (2000).

Privileged Matters.

While parties may not obtain discovery under subdivision (b)(1) of this rule regarding privileged matters, a privilege is only safeguarded if the proper procedures are followed in a timely fashion. Dunkin v. Citizens Bank, 291 Ark. 588, 727 S.W.2d 138 (1987).

A party claiming a privilege to refuse to answer interrogatories may obtain a protective order under subsection (c) of this rule, which would protect the party from discovery or from inquiry into certain matters. Ark. R. Civ. P. 37(d) states that the failure to serve answers or objections to interrogatories “may not be excused on the ground that the discovery sought is objectionable unless the party failing to act has applied for a protective order as provided in Ark. R. Civ. P. 26(c).” Dunkin v. Citizens Bank, 291 Ark. 588, 727 S.W.2d 138 (1987).

Subdivision (b)(3) of this rule does not create an exception to the Freedom of Information Act, § 25-19-101 et seq., based on attorney-client privilege. Scott v. Smith, 292 Ark. 174, 728 S.W.2d 515 (1987).

Where an accident reconstructionist was hired by an attorney representing a driver who was involved in a car accident, the accident reconstruction report and testimony of the accident reconstructionist’s employee were confidential, privileged communications that could not be subpoenaed. Holt v. McCastlain, 357 Ark. 455, 182 S.W.3d 112 (2004).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in ruling that the owner waived its claim of attorney-client and work-product privileges as to un-produced documents listed on the privilege logs where the owner failed to object on privilege grounds in its initial responses to discovery, the lack of an objection persisted over time, the owner continued to produce documents without objection, and the untimely privilege claim was exacerbated by the owner’s general lack of compliance during discovery. Gerber Prods. Co. v. CECO Concrete Constr., LLC, 2017 Ark. App. 568, 533 S.W.3d 139 (2017).

As to certain documents containing privileged matter that were inadvertently produced, the circuit court was within its discretion in determining that a waiver of privilege occurred, given the plant owner’s lack of precautions to prevent inadvertent disclosure. Gerber Prods. Co. v. CECO Concrete Constr., LLC, 2017 Ark. App. 568, 533 S.W.3d 139 (2017).

In an ironworker’s personal injury action, the trial court properly ordered a nuclear plant to produce two internal investigation “root-cause evaluation” reports, as they did not qualify for the work-product privilege because the plant failed to show that they were created in a form that was different from those created in the ordinary course of business. Entergy Ark., Inc.

v. Francis, 2018 Ark. App. 250, 549 S.W.3d 362 (2018).

Public Census Information.

Court did not abuse its discretion in permitting introduction of testimony by witness regarding certain information based upon the 1970 census even though no advance notice of such expert witness was provided to defendant since no issue of relevancy was raised and the testimony amounted to no more than the extraction of public census information; even without the presence of this witness the court could have taken judicial notice of the information under Evid. Rules 201 and 1005. Bradley v. Houston, 12 Ark. App. 351, 676 S.W.2d 746 (1984).

Remedies.

Where there was an obvious violation of subdivision (e)(1) of this rule to the prejudice of the appealing party, the two-hour continuance granted by the trial court was hardly sufficient to allow examination and investigation of new facts and figures contained in an expert witness' report; the trial court's response amounted to an abuse of discretion sufficient to cause reversal and remand of the case. Arkansas State Hwy. Comm'n v. Frisby, 329 Ark. 506, 951 S.W.2d 305 (1997).

Writ of certiorari was proper, because neither exception under Ark R. Civ. P. 60(k) applied and the husband had no remedy under subsection (c) of this rule, when the husband was neither a party, nor a person from whom discovery was sought. McKenzie v. Pierce, 2012 Ark. 190, 403 S.W.3d 565 (2012).

When a teacher made a Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request to a school district (district) after the teacher was terminated, and the denial of that request was reviewed in the same case in which the termination was contested, a trial court had no jurisdiction to grant the district's renewed motion for a protective order because (1) the order was sought under Ark. R. Civ. P. 26(c), which was independent of the FOIA, and (2) the renewed motion initiated no FOIA case, as the district was the records custodian and only a citizen could seek review of the denial of an FOIA request, and the motion was litigated while the termination case was on appeal. Hollis v. Fayetteville Sch. Dist. No. 1, 2016 Ark. App. 132, 485 S.W.3d 280 (2016).

Scope of Discovery.

It was error to grant at this point in the case defendant subcontractor's motion to compel discovery of the confidential settlement agreement between plaintiff and defendant general contractor that resulted from mediation, when the subcontractor sought contribution and apportionment of fault, because (1) any right of contribution does not arise until one joint tort-feasor pays more than the tortfeasor's share of liability, and no damages had been awarded yet, and (2) it was error to find the general contractor and subcontractor were joint tortfeasors before any evidence was presented. Wynne-Ark., Inc. v. Richard Baughn Constr., 2020 Ark. App. 140, 597 S.W.3d 114 (2020).

Supplementation of Responses.

Subsection (e) of this rule was inapplicable where expert was court's witness and there was no surprise of defense counsel. Bradley v. Houston, 12 Ark. App. 351, 676 S.W.2d 746 (1984).

Trial court has considerable latitude to excuse failure to supplement when the response to an answer changes, and it requires at least passive concealment before imposition of a sanction. Dunlap ex rel. First State Bank v. Buchanan, 293 Ark. 179, 735 S.W.2d 705 (1987).

Records should not have been excluded from evidence solely as a sanction under subsection (e) of this rule. Dunlap ex rel. First State Bank v. Buchanan, 293 Ark. 179, 735 S.W.2d 705 (1987).

Where appellant failed to supplement the response to interrogatories as required by subsection (e) of this rule, and the trial court sanctioned that party by disallowing exhibit, which may well have been error, because the jury returned a verdict in favor of that party, it could show no basis for prejudice. Without prejudice to the appellants, there is no basis for reversal. Banks v. Jackson, 312 Ark. 232, 848 S.W.2d 408 (1993).

Subsection (e) of this rule allowed for the supplementation of incomplete or incorrect responses to interrogatories, not for untruthful responses corrected if and when the responding party's deceit was discovered; thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in striking the offending party's answer to interrogatories propounded against it where it was caught in a lie and attempted to correct the same by its supplemented answer. Coulson Oil Co. v. Tully, 84 Ark. App. 241, 139 S.W.3d 158 (2003).

In a mother's medical malpractice action against a doctor, where the mother's expert failed to update the opinion testimony given by deposition after the expert changed that opinion based on previously unread information, the trial court's refusal to exclude the testimony of the mother's expert was affirmed on appeal because the doctor did not show that the ruling was an abuse of discretion. Hill v. Bilups, 85 Ark. App. 166, 148 S.W.3d 288 (2004).

Finding in favor of the passenger in her personal-injury action against the driver was proper, in part pursuant to subdivision (e)(1) of this rule because the driver received a continuance of over a year in order to review the digital motion x-rays and the documents supplied before trial contained no surprises and illustrated the reliability and acceptance of the evidence that was already in the driver's possession. Graftenreed v. Seabaugh, 100 Ark. App. 364, 268 S.W.3d 905 (2007).

Defendant was entitled to a new trial after a jury awarded damages to plaintiff in an action to recover damages for injuries sustained in a car accident because a constructive fraud occurred when plaintiff did not fulfill the duty of supplementing discovery responses about plaintiff's medical treatment; subdivision (e)(1) of this rule imposed a legal duty on plaintiff to supplement the discovery responses if any of them got stale. Battles v. Morehead, 103 Ark. App. 283, 288 S.W.3d 693 (2008).

Although property buyers failed to supplement their discovery responses as required by subsection (e) of this rule to disclose their expert witness, a property surveyor, the failure was not prejudicial because the witness's testimony was not about the central issue of the case, the validity of a land purchase agreement, and the trial court's ultimate judgment did not depend on the surveyor's testimony. Price v. Willbanks, 2009 Ark. App. 849, 374 S.W.3d 28 (2009).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing plaintiff's personal injury complaint for failing to supplement his responses to discovery to include his criminal indictment and guilty plea relating to a federal charge for interfering with the administration of the IRS. Roberts v. Wortz, 2017 Ark. App. 349, 525 S.W.3d 485 (2017).

Witnesses.

Where a name did not appear on the witness list, the trial judge conducted an in-chambers hearing and properly determined that the purpose of the testimony was to rebut plaintiff's case-in-chief and that there had not been a knowing concealment of the name of the witness. Marvel v. Parker, 317 Ark. 232, 878 S.W.2d 364 (1994).

Witness properly excluded where defendant did not list witness on answers or supplemental answers to interrogatories; neither the fact that the witness was mentioned, not by name, but only by a reference to the wife of another witness, in a deposition conducted by defense counsel, nor the fact that defense counsel had announced the witness as a witness during voir dire, were sufficient notice for the plaintiff.

When a party complains about failure to update discovery, the matter lies within the discretion of the trial court. Arkansas State Hwy. Comm'n v. Frisby, 329 Ark. 506, 951 S.W.2d 305 (1997).

Trial court's refusal to allow wife, in her medical malpractice action brought after her husband died after surgery, to depose people whom it seriously doubted she could call as witnesses at trial, was error because that was not the standard by which such decisions should have been made, and on remand, the wife was to be allowed to depose the doctors who treated her husband's surgeon for his bipolar disorder. Turner v. Northwest Ark. Neurosurgery Clinic, P.A., 84 Ark. App. 93, 133 S.W.3d 417 (2003).

Rule 26.1. Electronic Discovery.

(a) Definitions. In this rule:

(1) "Discovery" means the process of providing information in a civil proceeding in the courts of this state pursuant to the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure or these rules.

(2) "Electronic" means relating to technology having electrical, digital, magnetic, wireless, optical, electromagnetic, or similar capabilities.

(3) “Electronically stored information” means information that is stored in an electronic medium and is retrievable in perceivable form.

(4) “Person” means an individual, corporation, business trust, estate, trust, partnership, limited liability company, association, joint venture, public corporation, government or governmental subdivision, agency, or instrumentality, or any other legal or commercial entity.

(b) Supplemental and Optional Rule. This rule is intended to supplement the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure, and the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure shall govern if there is a conflict between this supplemental rule and the Rules of Civil Procedure. The rule is optional because either the parties must agree that it will apply, or the circuit court must order that it will apply on motion for good cause shown.

(c) Conference, Plan, and Report.

(1) In any proceeding in circuit court, the parties may agree to pursue electronic discovery pursuant to this rule or the court may so order on motion for good cause shown. Any such agreement or motion shall be made within 120 days after the date that the complaint was filed. The court, however, may extend or reopen this period for good cause. Within 30 days of an agreement or order to proceed under this rule, the parties shall confer. At this conference, the parties shall discuss and plan for the following issues:

(A) any issues relating to preservation of discoverable information;

(B) the form in which each type of the information will be produced;

(C) the period within which the information will be produced;

(D) the method for asserting or preserving claims of privilege or of protection of the information such as trial-preparation materials, including the manner in which such claims may be asserted after production;

(E) the method for asserting or preserving confidentiality and proprietary status of information relating to a party or a person not a party to the proceeding;

(F) whether allocation among the parties of the expense of production is appropriate; and,

(G) any other issue relating to the discovery of electronically stored information.

(2) Following the planning conference, the parties shall:

(A) develop a proposed plan relating to discovery of the information; and

(B) not later than 14 days after the conference under subdivision (c)(1), submit to the court a written report that summarizes the plan and states the position of each party as to any issue about which they are unable to agree.

(d) Order Governing Discovery.

(1) In a civil proceeding, the court may issue an order governing the discovery of electronically stored information pursuant to:

(A) a motion by a party seeking discovery of the information or by a party or person from which discovery of the information is sought;

(B) a stipulation of the parties and of any person not a party from which discovery of the information is sought, or

(C) the court’s own motion, after reasonable notice to, and an opportunity to be heard from, the parties and any person not a party from which discovery of the information is sought.

(2) An order governing discovery of electronically stored information may address:

(A) whether discovery of information is reasonably likely to be sought in the proceedings;

(B) preservation of the information;

(C) the form in which each type of the information is to be produced;

(D) the time within which the information is to be produced;

(E) the permissible scope of discovery of the information;

(F) the method for asserting or preserving claims of privilege or of protection of the information as trial-preparation material after production;

(G) the method for asserting or preserving confidentiality and the proprietary status of information relating to a party or a person not a party to the proceeding;

(H) allocation of the expense of production; and

(I) any other issue relating to the discovery of the information.

(e) Limitation on Sanctions. Absent exceptional circumstances, the court may not impose sanctions on a party under these rules for failure to provide electronically stored information lost as the result of the routine, good-faith operation of an electronic information system.

(f) Request for Production.

(1) In a civil proceeding, a party may serve on any other party a request for production of electronically stored information and for permission to inspect, copy, test or sample the information.

(2) A party on which a request to produce electronically stored information has been served shall, in a timely manner, serve a response on the requesting party. The response must state, with respect to each item or category in the request:

(A) that inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of the information will be permitted as requested; or

(B) any objection to the request and the reasons for the objection.

(g) Form of Production. Unless the parties otherwise agree or the court otherwise orders:

(1) the responding party shall produce the information in a form in which it is ordinarily maintained or in a form that is reasonably useful;

(2) if necessary, the responding party shall also produce any specialized software, material, or information not ordinarily available so that the requesting party can access and use the information in its ordinarily maintained form; and

(3) a party need not produce the same electronically stored information in more than one form.

(h) Limitations on Discovery.

(1) A party may object to discovery of electronically stored information from sources that the party identifies as not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or expense. In its objection the party shall identify the reason for such undue burden or expense.

(2) On motion to compel discovery or for a protective order relating to the discovery of electronically stored information, a party objecting bears the burden of showing that the information is from a source that is not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or expense.

(3) The court may order discovery of electronically stored information that is from a source that is not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or expense if the party requesting discovery shows that the likely benefit of the proposed discovery outweighs the likely burden or expense, taking into account the amount in controversy, the resources of the parties, the importance of the issues, and the importance of the requested discovery in resolving the issues.

(4) If the court orders discovery of electronically stored information under subdivision (h)(3) it may set conditions for discovery of the information, including allocation of the expense of discovery.

(5) The court shall limit the frequency or extent of discovery of electronically stored information, even from a source that is reasonably accessible, if the court determines that:

(A) it is possible to obtain the information from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome, or less expensive;

(B) the discovery sought is unreasonably cumulative or duplicative;

(C) the party seeking discovery has had ample opportunity by discovery in the proceeding to obtain the information sought; or

(D) the likely burden or expense of the proposed discovery outweighs the likely benefit, taking into account the amount in controversy, the resources of the parties, the importance of the issues, and the importance of the requested discovery in resolving the issues.

(i) Claim of Privilege or Protection After Production. A claim of privilege or protection after production of electronic data under these supplemental rules shall be governed by Rule of Civil Procedure (26)(b)(5) unless the application of that rule is modified by agreement of the parties or by order of the court.

(j) Subpoena for Production.

(1) A subpoena in a civil proceeding may require that electronically stored information be produced and that the party serving the subpoena or person acting on the party's request be permitted to inspect, copy, test, or sample the information.

(2) Subject to subsections (j)(3) and (j)(4), subdivisions (g), (h), and (i) apply to a person responding to a subpoena under subsection (j)(1) as if that person were a party.

(3) A party serving a subpoena requiring production of electronically stored information shall take reasonable steps to avoid imposing undue burden or expense on a person subject to the subpoena.

(4) An order of the court requiring compliance with a subpoena issued under this rule must provide protection to a person that is neither a party nor a party's officer from undue burden or expense resulting from compliance.

HISTORY: Added September 24, 2009, effective October 1, 2009.

Rule 27. Depositions before action or pending appeal.

(1) Petition. A person who desires to perpetuate his own testimony or that of another person regarding any matter that may be cognizable in any court of this state may file a verified petition in the circuit court in the county of the residence of any expected adverse party. The petition shall be entitled in the name of the petitioner and shall show: (1) that the petitioner expects to be a party to an action cognizable in a court in this state but is presently unable to bring it or cause it to be brought; (2) the subject matter of the expected action and his interest therein; (3) the facts which he desires to establish by the proposed testimony and his reasons for desiring to perpetuate it; (4) the names or a description of the persons he expects will be adverse parties and their addresses so far as known; and (5) the names and addresses of the persons to be examined and the substance of the testimony which he expects to elicit from each, and shall ask for an order authorizing the petitioner to take the depositions of the persons to be examined named in the petition, for the purpose of perpetuating their testimony.

(2) Notice and Service. The petitioner shall thereafter serve a notice upon each person named in the petition as an adverse party, together with a copy of the petition, stating that the petitioner will apply to the court, at a time and place named therein, for the order described in the petition. At least 20 days before the date of hearing, the notice shall be served either within or without the state in the manner provided in Rule 4 for service of summons; but if such service cannot with due diligence be made upon any expected adverse party named in the petition, the court may make such order as is just for service by publication or otherwise, and shall appoint, for persons not served in the manner provided in Rule 4, an attorney who shall represent them, and, in case they are not otherwise represented, shall cross-examine the deponent. If any expected adverse party is a minor or incompetent, the provisions of Rule 17(b) apply.

(3) Order and Examination. If the court is satisfied that the perpetuation of the testimony may prevent a failure or delay of justice, it shall make an order designating or describing the persons whose depositions may be taken and specifying the subject matter of the examination and whether the deposition shall be taken upon oral examination or written interrogatories. The depositions may then be taken in accordance with these rules, and the court may make orders of the character provided for by Rules 34 and 35. For the purpose of applying these rules to depositions for perpetuating testimony, each reference therein to the court in which the action is pending shall be deemed to refer to the court in which the petition for such deposition was filed.

(4) Use of Deposition. If a deposition to perpetuate testimony is taken under these rules or if, although not so taken, it would be admissible in the courts of this state, it may be used in any action involving the same subject matter subsequently brought in a circuit court of this state in accordance with the provisions of Rule 32(a).

(b) Pending Appeal. If an appeal has been taken from a judgment of a circuit court or before the taking of an appeal if the time therefor has not expired, the court in which the judgment was rendered may allow the taking of the depositions of witnesses to perpetuate their testimony for use in the event of further proceedings in the court. In such case the party who desires to perpetuate the testimony may make a motion in the circuit court for leave to take the depositions, upon the same notice and service thereof as if the same were pending in that court. The motion shall show (1) the names and addresses of persons to be examined and the substance of the testimony which he expects to elicit from each; (2) the reasons for perpetuating their testimony. If the court finds that the perpetuation of the testimony is proper to avoid a failure of justice, it may make an order allowing the depositions to and may make orders of the character provided for by Rule 35, and thereupon the depositions may be taken and used in the same manner and under the same conditions as are prescribed these rules for depositions taken in actions pending in the circuit court.

(c) Perpetuation by Action. This rule does not limit the power of a court to entertain an action to perpetuate testimony.

HISTORY: Amended May 24, 2001, effective July 1, 2001.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 27:

1. With minor wording changes to accommodate it to state practice, Rule 27 is essentially the same as FRCP 27. It is likewise essentially the same as superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-349 (Repl. 1962), and thus works no change in Arkansas practice and procedure.

2. Except under this rule, a person must actually have commenced suit and be involved in litigation before the usual discovery tools are available to him. B & C Tire Co. v. Internal Revenue Service, 376 F. Supp. 708 (D. C. Ala., 1974). This rule in no way determines substantive rights, but merely provides an aid in the eventual adjudication of such rights in an action to be commenced later. Mosseller v. United States, 158 F.2d 380 (C.C.A. 2nd, 1946).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2001 Amendment:

The reference to chancery courts in subdivision (a)(4) has been deleted in light of Constitutional Amendment 80, which established circuit courts as the "trial courts of original jurisdiction" in the state and abolished the separate chancery and probate courts. Also, the references to "trial court" in subdivision (b) have been changed to "circuit court" or "court."

CASE NOTES

In General.

Former section 16-44-117 was superseded by this rule. Hegwood v. State, 297 Ark. 218, 760 S.W.2d 859 (1988).

Applicability.

Subsection (a) of this rule applies in situations where the petitioner expects to be a party to an action, but is presently unable to bring it. The procedures set out in subsection (a) allow the petitioner to preserve testimony that is critical to his case so that it will be available when the petitioner is able to bring an action. Hegwood v. State, 297 Ark. 218, 760 S.W.2d 859 (1988).

Party to Action.

Plaintiff adequately and fairly represented the interests of the two subclasses despite defendant's contention that plaintiff suffered no damage herself and therefore did not have a sufficient interest in the case. Direct Gen. Ins. Co. v. Lane, 328 Ark. 476, 944 S.W.2d 528 (1997).

Rule 28. Persons before whom depositions may be taken.

(a) Within this State and Elsewhere in the United States. Within this state and elsewhere in the United States or within a territory or insular possession subject to the dominion of the United States, depositions shall be taken before an officer authorized to administer oaths by the laws of this State or of the place where the examination is held, or before a person appointed by the court in which the action is pending. A person so appointed has power to administer oaths and take testimony.

(b) In Foreign States or Countries. In a foreign state or country, depositions may be taken (1) on notice before a person authorized to administer oaths in the place where the examination is held, either by the law thereof or by the law of the United States, or (2) before a person commissioned by the court, and a person so commissioned shall have the power by virtue of his commission to administer any necessary oath and take testimony, or (3) pursuant to any applicable treaty or convention or pursuant to a letter of request, whether or not captioned a letter rogatory. A commission or a letter of request shall be issued on application and notice and on terms that are just and appropriate. It is not requisite to the issuance of a commission or a letter of request that the taking of the deposition in any other manner is impractical or inconvenient, and both a commission and a letter of request may be issued in proper cases. A notice or commission may designate the person before whom the deposition is to be taken either by name or descriptive title. A letter of request may be addressed "To the Appropriate Authority in (name of the country)." When a letter of request or any other device is used pursuant to any applicable treaty or convention, it shall be captioned in the form prescribed by that treaty or convention. Evidence obtained in response to a letter of request need not be excluded merely because it is not a verbatim transcript, because the testimony was not taken under oath, or because of any similar departure from the requirements for depositions taken within the United States under these rules.

(c) For Use in Foreign Countries. A party desiring to take a deposition or have a document or other thing produced for examination in this state, for use in a judicial proceeding in a foreign country, may produce to a judge of the circuit court in the county where the witness or person in possession of the document or thing to be examined resides or may be found, letter rogatory, appropriately authenticated, authorizing the taking of such deposition or production of such document or thing on notice duly served; whereupon it shall be the duty of the court to issue a subpoena requiring the witness to attend at a specified time and place for examination. In case of failure of the witness to attend or refusal to be sworn or to testify or to produce the document or thing requested, the court may find the witness in contempt.

(d) Disqualification for Interest. No deposition shall be taken before a person who is a relative or employee or attorney or counsel of any of the parties, or is a relative or employee of such attorney or counsel, or is financially interested in the action. Additionally, the officer before whom the deposition is to be taken and the parties, attorneys, or employees shall not:

(1) include the officer on any list of preferred providers of court reporting services after exchanging information and reaching an agreement specifying the prices or other terms upon which future court reporting services will be provided whether or not the services actually are ever ordered; or

(2) take any action to restrict an attorney's choice in the selection of an officer.

HISTORY: Amended November 20, 1989, effective January 1, 1990; amended November 18, 1996, effective March 1, 1997; amended May 24, 2001, effective July 1, 2001; amended May 12, 2022, effective June 1, 2022.

Reporter's Notes (as modified by the Court) to Rule 28:

1. Rule 28 is very similar to FRCP 28. This rule is a slightly modified version of superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-350 (Repl. 1962) which tracked FRCP 28 prior to the 1963 amendments thereto. This rule does not make any appreciable changes in Arkansas law. As a practical matter, anyone authorized by law to administer oaths is qualified to take depositions.

2. Section (c) is a combination of 28 U.S.C. Section 1782 and superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-346 (Repl. 1962). Nothing in this rule requires that the deposition actually be taken before the court. In this sense the rule may be a departure from the superseded statute.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1989 Amendment:

Rule 28(c) is amended to apply only to the taking of depositions for use in judicial proceedings in foreign countries. Rule 45(f), as amended in 1989, now governs the taking of depositions for use in proceedings in other states.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1997 Amendment:

This revision, based on a 1993 change in federal Rule 28(b), is intended to make effective use of the Hague Convention on the Taking of Evidence Abroad in Civil or Commercial Matters, and of any similar treaties that the United States may enter into in the future which provide procedures for taking depositions abroad. The term "letter of request" has been substituted for "letter rogatory" because it is the primary method provided by the Hague Convention. A letter rogatory is essentially a form of a letter of request.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2001 Amendment:

Subdivision (c) has been amended by deleting the reference in the first sentence to chancery and probate courts. Constitutional Amendment 80 established circuit courts as the "trial courts of original jurisdiction" in the state and abolished the separate chancery and probate courts.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2022 Amendment:

Subsection (d) has been amended to identify a process that could compromise the neutrality of the officer before whom the deposition is to be taken. Additional language is also found in Section 22 of the Regulations of the Board of Certified Court Reporter Examiners.

Rule 29. Stipulations regarding discovery procedures.

Unless the court orders otherwise, the parties may by written stipulation (1) provide that depositions may be taken before any person, at any time or place, upon any notice and in any manner and when so taken may be used like any other depositions; and (2) modify the procedures provided by these rules for other methods of discovery.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 29:

1. Rule 29 is a modified version of FRCP 29. Under the latter, prior court approval must be secured to extend the time to (a) answer interrogatories; (b) produce documents, etc.; or (c) respond to requests for admissions of fact. This prior approval has been rejected by such states as Massachusetts and Arizona when adopting procedural rules patterned after the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. See Rule 29 of the Massachusetts Rules of Civil Procedure and "Arizona and the Federal Rules" 41 F.R.D. 79 (1966).

2. Agreements between counsel to modify the discovery rules have been commonplace in Arkansas practice. No particular problems have arisen and the notion that prior court approval is necessary was rejected by the Committee. Should agreements of counsel get out of hand, the court has the power under Rule 29 to overrule or reject any stipulation or agreement of counsel. Therefore, any problems which may arise in this area may be corrected by the court on a case by case basis.

3. Prior Arkansas law was found in superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-351 (Repl. 1962), which was identical to FRCP 29 as it existed prior to its 1970 amendments.

Rule 30. Depositions upon oral examination.

(a) When Depositions May Be Taken. After commencement of the action, any party may take the testimony of any person, including a party, by deposition upon oral examination. Leave of court, granted with or without notice, must be obtained only if the plaintiff seeks to take a deposition prior to the expiration of 30 days after service of the summons and complaint upon any defendant or service made under Rule 4(e), except that leave is not required (1) if a defendant has served a notice of taking deposition or otherwise sought discovery, or (2) if special notice is given as provided in subdivision (b)(2) of this rule. The attendance of a witness may be compelled by subpoena as provided in Rule 45, but a subpoena is not necessary if the witness is a party or a person designated under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule to testify on behalf of a party. The deposition of a person confined in prison may be taken only by leave of court on such terms as the court prescribes.

(b) Notice of Examination; General Requirements; Special Notice; Method of Recording; Production of Documents and Things; Deposition of Organization.

(1) A party desiring to take the deposition of any person upon oral examination shall give reasonable notice in writing to every other party to the action. The notice shall state the time and place for taking the deposition and the name and address of each person to be examined, if known, and if the name is not known, a general description sufficient to identify him or the particular class or group to which he belongs. If a subpoena duces tecum is to be served on the person to be examined, the designation of the materials to be produced as set forth in the subpoena shall be attached to or included in the notice.

(2) Leave of court is not required for the taking of a deposition by plaintiff under subdivision (a) if the notice (A) states that the person to be examined is about to go out of this state, or is about to go out of the United States, and will be unavailable for examination unless his deposition is taken before expiration of the 30 day period, and (B) sets forth facts to support the statement. The plaintiff's attorney shall sign the notice and his signature constitutes a certification by him that to the best of his knowledge, information and belief, the statement and supporting facts are true. The sanctions provided by Rule 11 are applicable to the certification.

(3) The party taking the deposition shall state in the notice the method by which the testimony shall be recorded. Unless the court orders otherwise, it may be recorded by sound, sound-and-visual, or stenographic means, and the party taking the deposition shall bear the cost of the recording. Any party may arrange for a transcription to be made from the recording of a deposition taken by nonstenographic means. With prior notice to the deponent and other parties, any party may designate another method to record the deponent's testimony in addition to the method specified by the person taking the deposition. The additional record or transcript shall be made at that party's expense unless the court otherwise orders.

(4) Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, a deposition shall be conducted before an officer appointed or designated under Rule 28 and shall begin with a statement on the record by the officer that includes: (A) the officer's name and business address; (B) the date, time, and place of the deposition; (C) the name of the deponent; (D) the administration of the oath or affirmation to the deponent; and (E) an identification of all persons present. If the deposition is recorded other than stenographically, the officer shall repeat items (A) through (C) at the beginning of each unit of recorded tape or other recording medium. The appearance or demeanor of deponents or attorneys shall not be distorted through camera or sound-recording techniques. At the end of the deposition, the officer shall state on the record that the deposition is complete and shall set forth any stipulations made by counsel concerning the custody of the transcript or recording and the exhibits, or concerning other pertinent matters.

(5) The notice to a party deponent may be accompanied by a request made in compliance with Rule 34 for the production of documents and tangible things at the taking of the deposition. The procedure of Rule 34 shall apply to the request. The court may on motion, with or without notice, allow a shorter or longer time.

(6) A party may in his notice and in the subpoena name as the deponent a public or private corporation or a partnership or association or governmental agency and describe with reasonable particularity the matters on which examination is requested. In that event, the organization so named shall designate one or more officers, directors, or managing agents, or other persons who consent to testify on its behalf and may set forth, for each person designated, the matters on which he will testify. A subpoena shall advise a non-party organization of its duty to make such a designation. The persons so designated shall testify as to matters known or reasonably available to the organization. This subdivision (b)(6) does not preclude taking a deposition by any other procedure authorized by these rules.

(7) The parties may stipulate in writing or the court may upon motion order that a deposition be taken by telephone or other remote electronic means. For purposes of these rules, a deposition by such means is taken at the place where the deponent is to answer questions.

(c) Examination and Cross-Examination; Record of Examination; Oath; Objections. Examination and cross-examination of witnesses may proceed as permitted at the trial under the provisions of the Arkansas Rules of Evidence, except Rule 103. The officer before whom the deposition is to be taken shall put the witness on oath or affirmation and shall personally, or by someone acting under his direction and in his presence, record the testimony of the witness. The testimony shall be taken stenographically or recorded by any other method authorized by subdivision (b)(3) of this rule. All objections made at the time of the examination to the qualifications of the officer taking the deposition, to the manner of taking it, to the evidence presented, to the conduct of any party, or to any other aspect of the proceedings, shall be noted by the officer upon the record of the deposition; but the examination shall proceed, with the testimony being taken subject to the objections. In lieu of participating in the oral examination, parties may serve written questions in a sealed envelope on either the party taking the deposition in which event he shall (1) transmit such questions to the office, or (2) directly upon the officer, who shall propound them to the witness and record the answers verbatim.

(d) Schedule and Duration; Motion to Terminate or Limit Examination.

(1) Any objection during a deposition must be stated concisely and in a non-argumentative and non-suggestive manner. A person may instruct a deponent not to answer only when necessary to preserve a privilege, to enforce a limitation directed by the court, or to present a motion under paragraph (4).

(2) The court may by order limit the time permitted for the conduct of a deposition, but must allow additional time if needed for a fair examination of the deponent or if the deponent or another person impedes or delays the examination.

(3) If the court finds that any impediment, delay, or other conduct has frustrated the fair examination of the deponent, it may impose upon the persons responsible an appropriate sanction, including the reasonable costs and attorneys' fees incurred by any parties as a result thereof.

(4) At any time during a deposition, on motion of a party or of the deponent and upon a showing that the examination is being conducted in bad faith or in such manner as unreasonably to annoy, embarrass, or oppress the deponent or party, the court in which the action is pending may order the officer conducting the examination to cease forthwith from taking the deposition, or may limit the scope and manner of the taking of the deposition as provided in Rule 26(c). If the order made terminates the examination, it may be resumed thereafter only upon the order of the court in which the action is pending. Upon demand of the objecting party or deponent, the taking of the deposition must be suspended for the time necessary to make a motion for an order. The provisions of Rule 37(a)(4) apply to the award of expenses incurred in relation to the motion.

(e) Review by Witness; Changes; Signing. If requested by the deponent or a party before completion of the deposition, the deponent shall have 30 days after being notified by the officer that the transcript or recording is available in which to review the transcript or recording and, if there are changes in form or substance, to sign a statement reciting such changes and the reasons given by the deponent for making them. The officer shall indicate in the certificate prescribed by subdivision (f)(1) whether any review was requested and, if so, shall append any changes made by the deponent during the period allowed.

(f) Certification by Officer; Exhibits; Copies; Notice of Filing. (1) The officer shall certify that the witness was duly sworn by him and that the deposition is a true record of the testimony given by the witness. This certificate shall be in writing and accompany the record of the deposition. The officer shall place the deposition in an envelope or package indorsed with the title of the action and marked 'Deposition of (name of witness)' and, if ordered by the court in which the action is pending pursuant to Rule 5(c), promptly file it with the clerk of that court. Otherwise, the officer shall send it to the attorney who arranged for the transcript or recording, who shall store it under conditions that will protect it against loss, destruction, tampering, or deterioration. Documents and things produced for inspection during the examination of the witness shall, upon the request of a party, be marked for identification and annexed to and returned with the deposition, and may be inspected and copied by any party, except that (A) the person producing the materials may substitute copies to be marked for identification, if he affords to all parties fair opportunity to verify the copies by comparison with the originals, and (B) if the person producing the materials requests their return, the officer shall mark them, give each party an opportunity to inspect and copy them, and return them to the person producing them and the materials may then be used in the same manner as if annexed to and returned with the deposition. Any party may move for an order that the original be annexed to the deposition if it is to be used at trial.

(2) Unless otherwise ordered by the court or agreed by the parties, the officer shall retain, for the period established for transcripts of court proceedings in the retention schedule for official court reporters, stenographic notes of any deposition taken stenographically or a copy of the recording of any deposition taken by another method. Upon payment of reasonable charges therefor, the officer shall furnish a copy of the transcript or other recording of the deposition to any party or to the deponent; provided that it shall be the duty of the party causing the deposition to be taken to furnish one copy of the transcript, or if the deposition was recorded solely by sound or sound-and-visual as provided for in Rule 30(b)(3), a copy of the recording, to any opposing party, or in the event there is more than one opposing party, a copy may be filed with the clerk for the use of all opposing parties, and the party filing the deposition shall give prompt notice of its filing to all other parties.

(g) Failure to Attend or to Serve Subpoena; Expenses. (1) If the party giving the notice of the taking of a deposition fails to attend and proceed therewith and another party attends in person or by an attorney pursuant to the notice, the court may order the party giving the notice to pay such other party the reasonable expenses incurred by him and his attorney in attending, including reasonable attorney's fees.

(2) If the party giving the notice of the taking of a deposition of a witness fails to serve a subpoena upon him and the witness because of such failure does not attend, and if another party attends in person or by an attorney because he expects the deposition of that witness to be taken, the court may order the party giving the notice to pay to such other party the reasonable expenses incurred by him and his attorney in attending, including reasonable attorney's fees.

HISTORY: Amended July 9, 1984, effective September 1, 1984; amended November 11, 1991, effective January 1, 1992; amended November 18, 1996, effective March 1, 1997; amended January 22, 1998; amended March 13, 2003; amended February 10, 2005; amended June 2, 2011, effective July 1, 2011.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 30:

1. Rule 30 is, with the exception of minor wording changes, the same as FRCP 30. This rule also closely follows superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-352 (Repl. 1962), which was patterned after FRCP 30 as it existed prior to the series of amendments thereto beginning in 1970.

2. Section (a) is identical to FRCP 30(a). It is comparable to superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-348 (Repl. 1962), and works no appreciable change in Arkansas law.

3. Section (b)(1) is identical to FRCP 30(b)(1) and substantially follows superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-352(a) (Repl. 1962). It does not change Arkansas law. Section (b)(2) is revised from FRCP 30(b)(2). The latter, in subpart (A) refers to one who is bound on a voyage at sea whereas this rule is applicable to any person leaving the state or country. There was no comparable provision under prior Arkansas law and this should resolve the question of when an emergency or rush deposition could be taken.

4. Rule 30(b)(3) is identical to FRCP 30(b)(3). Similar language was found in superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-352(a) (Repl. 1962).

5. Section 30(b)(4) is identical to FRCP 30(b)(4). Under this provision, the court has the discretion to order that a deposition may be taken by other than stenographic means. Under proper safeguards, a deposition may be taken by photographic-sound devices. Carson v. Burlington Northern, Inc., 52 F. R. D. (D.C. Neb., 1971). Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-352(c) (Repl. 1962), permitted the parties to agree on some form or method of taking a deposition other than stenographically. Where proper safeguards are made, video taped depositions are certainly proper.

6. Section 30(b)(5) closely follows FRCP 30(b)(5) and establishes a method whereby a party can request that certain documents and tangible items may be brought to the deposition. The procedure described in Rule 34 is applicable and the deponent may refuse to produce the requested documents in which event the moving party is required to present the matter to the court for a determination of whether the documents or items should have been produced. This rule also permits the court to shorten or extend the time limit set by Rule 34 for responding to the request. To such extent, this rule differs from the Federal Rule.

7. With exception of minor wording changes, Section (c) is identical to FRCP 30(c) and substantially the same as superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-352(c) (Repl. 1962).

8. Section (d) is identical to FRCP 30(d) and substantially follows superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-352(e) (Repl. 1962).

9. Section (e) is identical to Section (e) of the Federal Rule and follows closely superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-352(e). Under this and the Federal Rule, if the deponent has not signed the deposition within 30 days of its submission to him, the officer is directed to sign the deposition and give the reason for the deponent's failure or refusal to sign the deposition.

10. Section 30(f)(1) is identical to FRCP 30(f)(1). Section (f)(2) is, however, reworded from the Federal Rule to delete the requirement that the deposition be filed.

11. Section (g) is identical to FRCP 30(g) and is also substantially the same as superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-352(g) (Repl. 1962).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1984 Amendment:

Rule 30(f) is amended to remove references to the filing requirement which no longer exists in view of the change to Rule 5(c). The provision for optional filing as a means of giving access to the deposition to multiple parties remains, and the provision for notice of filing formerly found in Rule 30(f)(3) is contained in Rule 30(f)(2).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1986 Amendment:

New subsection (b)(7) is based upon the corresponding federal rule. Although depositions by telephone have been available by stipulation under Rule 29, this subsection authorizes that method by order of the court as well. The second sentence of the new subsection, under which the telephone deposition is deemed “taken” at the place where the witness is to answer the questions (rather than the place where the questions are propounded), is necessary as a definitional provision in light of other rules involving the place of a deposition. See Rules 37(a)(1), 37(b)(1), and 45(d).

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 1991 Amendment:

Under subdivision (c), “[e]vidence objected to shall be taken subject to the objections.” Thus, it is generally not proper for a lawyer to instruct a deponent to refuse to answer a question. The 1991 amendment expressly states that such an instruction is impermissible absent exceptional circumstances or a reasonable, good faith assertion of a privilege. In light of the amendment, a contention that the question seeks irrelevant information beyond the scope of discovery under Rule 26(b)(1) is not a basis for instructing the deponent not to answer, unless exceptional circumstances — such as harassment or irrelevant questions that unnecessarily touch on sensitive areas — are present. The 1991 amendment is consistent with case law applying Federal Rule 30(c). See, e.g., Eggleston v. Chicago Journeymen Plumbers’ Local Union No. 130, 657 F.2d 890 (7th Cir. 1981); International Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 91 F.R.D. 277 (D.D.C. 1981); Preyer v. United States Lines, Inc., 64 F.R.D. 430 (E.D. Pa. 1973).

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 1997 Amendment:

The changes that have been made in subdivisions (b)-(f) of this rule track the 1993 amendments to Federal Rule 30 and are designed in part to take into account the use of video and other recording methods. Provisions in the federal rule limiting the number of depositions were not adopted.

The last sentence of subdivision (b)(2), which dealt with use of the deposition of a party unable to obtain counsel, has been deleted, and this matter is now covered by Rule 32(a)(3). The primary change in subdivision (b) is that parties will be authorized to record deposition testimony by nonstenographic means without first having to obtain permission of the court or agreement from other counsel. Under paragraph (3), the party taking the deposition has the choice of the method of recording. Objections to nonstenographic recording of a deposition, when warranted by the circumstances, can be presented to the court by motion pursuant to Rule 26(c). Other parties may arrange, at their own expense, for the recording of a deposition by a mens in addition to the method designated by the person noticing the deposition. A party choosing to record a deposition only by videotape or audiotape should understand that a transcript will be required if the deposition is later to be offered as evidence at trial under amended Rule 32(c) or on a dispositive motion under Rule 56.

Revised paragraph (4) of subdivision (b) requires that all depositions be recorded by an officer designated or appointed under Rule 28 and contains special provisions designed to provide basic safeguards to assure the utility and integrity of recordings taken other than stenographically. Paragraph (7) has been amended to allow the taking of a deposition not only by telephone but also by other remote electronic means, such as satellite television, when agreed to by the parties or authorized by the court.

Minor changes have been made in subdivision (c). First, the reference to Rule 43(b) has been replaced with a reference to the Arkansas Rules of Evidence. The examination and cross-examination of a deponent are governed by those rules, with the exception of Rule 103, which deals with evidentiary rulings. Second, subdivision (c) has been revised to reflect the changes made in subdivision (b) regarding the method by which a deposition is to be recorded. Finally, the provision that dealt with instructing the deponent not to answer has been deleted and moved to subdivision (d)(1).

Unlike its federal counterpart, subdivision (c) does not contain an exception from Rule 615 of the Rules of Evidence. By virtue of this exception in the federal rule, other potential witnesses are not automatically excluded from a deposition at a party’s request, although the court can order their exclusion via a protective order. Because such an exception is not included in revised subdivision (c), depositions in Arkansas will continue to be subject to Rule 615.

The first sentence of subdivision (d)(1) provides that any objections during a deposition must be made concisely and in a non-argumentative and non-suggestive manner. Depositions frequently have been unduly prolonged, if not unfairly frustrated, by lengthy objections and colloquy, often suggesting how the witness should respond. While objections may, under the revised rule, be made during a deposition, they should ordinarily be limited to those that under Rule 32(d)(3) might be waived if not made at that time, i.e., objections on grounds that might be immediately obviated or cured, such as the form of a question or the responsiveness of an answer. Under Rule 32(b), other objections can, even without the so-called “usual stipulation” preserving objections, be raised for the first time at trial and therefore should be kept to a minimum during a deposition.

The second sentence of subdivision (d)(1) addresses an even more disruptive practice, i.e., instructing the deponent not to answer a question. This provision previously appeared, in slightly different form, in subdivision (c), having been added in 1991. The former language has been retained as to “reasonable, good faith claims of privilege,” but new grounds based on the federal rule — to enforce a limitation on evidence imposed by the court and to present a motion under what is now designated as paragraph (3) — have been added.

Paragraph (2) of subdivision (d) dispels any doubts regarding the power of the court to limit, by order, the length of a deposition. This provision also expressly authorizes the court to impose the cost resulting from obstructive tactics that unreasonably prolong a deposition on the person engaged in such obstruction. This sanction may be imposed on a non-party witness as well as a party or attorney. Unlike the federal rule, paragraph (2) does not empower a trial court to establish limits on deposition length by local rule, since such rules are not permissible in Arkansas.

Paragraph (3) authorizes appropriate sanctions not only when a deposition is unreasonably prolonged, but also when an attorney engages in other practices that frustrate the fair examination of the deponent, such as making improper objections or giving directions not to answer prohibited by paragraph (1). In general, counsel should not engage in any conduct during a deposition that would not be allowed in the presence of a judicial officer. The making of an excessive number of objections may itself constitute sanctionable conduct.

Various changes have been made in subdivision (e) to reduce problems sometimes encountered when depositions are taken stenographically. Reporters frequently have difficulties obtaining signatures from deponents and the return of depositions. Under the revision, pre-filing review by the deponent is required only if requested before the deposition is completed. If review is requested, the deponent will be allowed 30 days to review the transcript or recording and to indicate any changes in form or substance. Signature of the deponent will be required only if review is requested and changes are made.

Subdivision (f) has been revised to reflect changes made in subdivision (b) as to the methods by which a deposition may be taken. If the court does not order the deposition to be filed pursuant to Rule 5(c), the reporter can transmit the transcript or recording to the attorney taking the deposition or ordering the transcript or record, who then becomes custodian for the court of the original record of the deposition. Pursuant to paragraph (2), as under the prior rule, any other party is entitled to secure a copy of the deposition from the officer designated to take it. New language makes clear that the officer must retain a copy of the record or the stenographic notes, unless otherwise ordered by the court or agreed by the parties. The retention period is the same as that specified for transcripts of court proceedings in the record retention schedule for official court reporters in Arkansas.

As amended in 1997, Rule 30(f)(1) provided that the officer taking the deposition “shall securely seal” it in an envelope or package and either file it with the clerk, if so ordered, or send it to the attorney who arranged for the deposition. The term “seal” could be read as implying that the attorney who received the deposition was obligated to keep it sealed. Such a result was not intended, and Rule 30(f)(1) has been amended to require that the officer “place” the deposition in an envelope. The obligation that the attorney “store it under conditions that will protect it against loss, destruction, tampering, or deterioration” remains unchanged.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 2003 Amendment:

The penultimate sentence of subdivision (a) has been rewritten to expressly provide that a subpoena is not mandatory if the deponent is a party or a person designated under subdivision (b)(6) to testify on behalf of a party. Notice of the deposition is the sole requirement in these circumstances.

Rule 30 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure does not explicitly state that a subpoena is unnecessary when the deponent is a party. Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(d), however, sanctions may be imposed against a party or person designated to testify on behalf of a party who does not appear at a deposition “after being served with a proper notice.” On the basis of this language, which also appears in the corresponding Arkansas rule, the federal courts “have reasoned that notice alone, without subpoena, is sufficient.” 8A Wright, Miller & Marcus, Federal Practice & Procedure § 2107 (1994).

Rule 30(d) has been amended and its subsections renumbered. For many years, Arkansas Rule 30 has been substantially similar to Federal Rule 30. The 2005 amendments to Rule 30(d) track changes made in 2000 to the Federal Rule and clarify the terms about behavior during depositions. The amendments confirm that the Rule’s limitations extend beyond parties to all persons present at a deposition. They also clarify when a privilege may be asserted against a question. Former subsection (2) has been divided into new subsections (2) and (3), and former (3) has been renumbered as (4). See generally, Advisory Committee Note, 2000 Amendments to FRCP 30(d). The Federal Rule's presumptive limitation on the duration of any deposition to one seven-hour day has not been incorporated into the Arkansas Rule.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2011 Amendment:

Subdivision (f)(2) is revised to clarify that a party taking a deposition is not obligated to provide the opposing party or parties a copy of any sound or sound and video recording of the deposition unless no written transcript was made. Since former subdivision (f)(2) required that the party taking the deposition provide the opposing party a copy of the deposition (if multiple parties, to file a copy with the clerk for use by all parties), the rule could have been read as requiring the party taking the deposition to incur the additional expense of providing a copy of the nonstenographic sound or sound and video recording in addition to the written transcript. Under the amendment, a party taking a deposition only by sound or sound and video recording is still obligated to provide the opposing party with a copy of the deposition or, in a case involving multiple parties to file a copy for use of all opposing parties.

CASE NOTES

Criminal Proceedings.

The discovery procedures permitted in this rule and Ark. R. Civ. P. 34 are applicable only to civil actions; they are not applicable in criminal proceedings unless there is a specific statute so providing. Kelley v. State, 7 Ark. App. 130, 644 S.W.2d 638 (1983), superseded by statute as stated in Conner v. State, 75 Ark. App. 418, 58 S.W.3d 865 (2001).

Motion to Strike.

Trial court did not err in denying a patient's request to strike a physician's deposition after the physician corrected his initial statement regarding the standard of care and the suturing of a patient's bladder during a hysterectomy; it could not be determined from the record whether notice was given, to whom it was given, or when the transcript was made available to the physician. Crowell v. Barker, 369 Ark. 428, 255 S.W.3d 858 (2007).

Reasonable Notice.

At an adjudication hearing in a proceeding to determine permanency planning for a dependent-neglected child, the trial court refused to receive deposition testimony from a doctor because the mother had not given the Arkansas Department of Human Services (DHS) reasonable notice of the deposition when she notified DHS three days before it occurred. Hannah v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2013 Ark. App. 502 (2013).

Telephone.

Deposition by telephone not permitted. Thomas v. Pacheco, 293 Ark. 564, 740 S.W.2d 123 (1987), limited, R.N. v. J.M., 347 Ark. 203, 61 S.W.3d 149 (2001), superseded by statute as stated in Keahey v. Cox, No. CA05-1415, 2006 Ark. App. LEXIS 575 (Ark. Ct. App. Sept. 20, 2006).

Termination or Limitation.

The unilateral termination of depositions without a court order contravenes subsection (d) of this rule and is wrong. Goodwin v. Harrison, 300 Ark. 474, 780 S.W.2d 518 (1989).

Rule 31. Depositions upon written questions.

(a) Serving Questions; Notice. (1) Any party may take the testimony of any person, including a party, by deposition upon written questions without leave of court except as provided in paragraph (2). The attendance of witnesses may be compelled by the use of subpoena as provided in Rule 45. The deposition of a person confined in prison may be taken only by leave of court on such terms as the court prescribes.

(2) A party must obtain leave of court if the person to be examined is confined in prison or if, without the written stipulation of the parties, a plaintiff seeks to take a deposition prior to the expiration of 30 days after service of the summons and complaint upon any defendant or service made under Rule 4(e), except that leave is not required if a defendant has served a notice of taking deposition or otherwise sought discovery, or if special notice is given as provided in Rule 30(b)(2).

(3) A party desiring to take a deposition upon written questions shall serve them upon every other party with a notice stating (A) the name and address of the person who is to answer them, if known, and if the name is not known, a general description sufficient to identify him or the particular class or group to which he belongs, and (B) the name or descriptive title and address of the officer before whom the deposition is to be taken. A deposition upon written questions may be taken of a public or private corporation or a partnership or association or governmental agency in accordance with the provisions of Rule 30(b)(6).

(4) Within 14 days after the notice and written questions are served, a party may serve cross questions upon all other parties. Within 7 days after being served with cross questions, a party may serve redirect questions upon all other parties. Within 7 days after being served with redirect questions, a party may serve recross questions upon all other parties. The court may for cause shown enlarge or shorten the time.

(b) Officer to Take Responses and Prepare Record. A copy of the notice and copies of all questions served shall be delivered by the party taking the deposition to the officer designated in the notice, who shall proceed promptly, in the manner provided by Rule 30(c), (e) and (f) to take the testimony of the witness in response to the questions and to prepare, certify and file or mail the deposition, attaching thereto the copy of the notice and the questions received by him.

(c) Copies; Notice of Filing. The party causing the deposition to be taken shall furnish one copy of the deposition to any opposing party, or if there is more than one opposing party, a copy may be filed with the clerk for the use of all opposing parties, and the party filing the deposition shall give prompt notice of its filing to all other parties.

HISTORY: Amended July 9, 1984; effective September 1, 1984; amended November 18, 1996, effective March 1, 1997.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 31:

1. Rule 31 is identical to FRCP 31 and is a revised version of superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-353(1)(a) through (c) (Repl. 1962). Deleted from the Federal Rule by the 1970 amendments thereto was former section (d) which was a part of this superseded statute. That section provided that the court could make such orders as were necessary for the protection of the parties, including the right to require that the deposition be taken upon oral examination. This provision is not retained in Rule 31 in light of Rule 26(c) which provides that the Court may order that one discovery device be used in place of another.

2. The time limits prescribed in Section (a) are taken from the Federal Rule. Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-353(1)(a) (Repl. 1962) was patterned [after] the Federal Rule insofar as time limits are concerned as it existed prior to the 1970 amendments. Overall, this rule should have little effect upon Arkansas practice.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1984 Amendment:

Rule 31(c) is amended to make it consistent with the amendment to Rule 5(c) making filing of discovery documents optional. The same means of giving access to upon written questions as are found in the amended Rule 30 with respect to depositions upon oral examination are provided in the amendment.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1997 Amendment:

Subdivision (a) has been divided into four numbered paragraphs. The first two paragraphs make the rule consistent with Rule 30 as to the circumstances under which leave of court is required. Paragraph (3) is the former second paragraph, without substantive change. Paragraph (4) is the former third paragraph, but the total time for developing cross-examination, redirect, and recross questions is reduced from 50 days to 28 days.

Rule 32. Use of depositions in court proceedings.

(a) Use of Depositions. At the trial or upon the hearing of a motion or an interlocutory proceeding, any part or all of a deposition, so far as admissible under the rules of evidence applied as though the witness were then present and testifying, may be used against any party who was present or represented at the taking of the deposition or who had reasonable notice thereof, in accordance with any of the following provisions:

(1) Any deposition may be used by any party for the purpose of contradicting or impeaching the testimony of deponent as a witness or for any other purpose permitted by the Arkansas Rules of Evidence.

(2) The deposition of a party or of anyone who, at the time of taking the deposition was an officer, director, or managing agent, or a person designated under Rule 30(b)(6) or 31(a) to testify on behalf of a public or private corporation, partnership or association or governmental agency which is a party, may be used by an adverse party for any purpose.

(3) The deposition of a witness, whether or not a party, may be used by any party for any purpose if the court finds: (A) that the witness is dead; or (B) that the witness is at a greater distance than 100 miles from the place of trial or hearing, or is out of this state, unless it appears that the absence of a witness was procured by the party offering the deposition; or (C) that the witness is unable to attend or testify because of age, illness, infirmity, or imprisonment; or (D) the party offering the deposition has been unable to procure the attendance of the witness by subpoena; or (E) upon application and notice, that such exceptional circumstances exist as to make it desirable, in the interest of justice and with due regard to the importance of presenting the testimony of witnesses orally in open court, to allow the deposition to be used. A deposition taken without leave of court pursuant to a notice under Rule 30(b)(2) shall not be used against a party who demonstrates that, when served with the notice, it was unable through the exercise of diligence to obtain counsel to represent it at the taking of the deposition; nor shall a deposition be used against a party who, having received less than 11 days' notice of a deposition, has promptly upon receiving such notice filed a motion for a protective order under Rule 26(c)(2) requesting that the deposition not be held or be held at a different time or place and such motion is pending at the time the deposition is held.

(4) If only part of a deposition is offered in evidence by a party, an adverse party may require him to introduce any other part which ought in fairness to be considered with the part introduced, and any party may introduce any other parts.

Substitution of parties pursuant to Rule 25 does not affect the right to use depositions previously taken; and, when an action in any court of the United States or of any state has been dismissed and another action involving the same subject matter is afterward brought between the same parties or their representatives or successors in interest, all depositions lawfully taken in the former action may be used in the latter as if originally taken therefor. A deposition previously taken may also be used as permitted by the Arkansas Rules of Evidence.

(b) Objections to Admissibility. Subject to the provisions of Rule 28(b) and subdivision (d)(3) of this rule, objection may be made at the trial or hearing to receiving in evidence any deposition or part thereof for any reason which would require the exclusion of the evidence if the witness were then present and testifying.

(c) Form of Presentation. Except as otherwise directed by the court, a party offering deposition testimony pursuant to this rule may offer it in stenographic or nonstenographic form, but, if in nonstenographic form, the party shall also provide the court with a transcript of the portions so offered. The transcript must be prepared by a certified court reporter from the nonstenographic recording. On request of any party in a case tried before a jury, deposition testimony offered other than for impeachment purposes shall be presented in nonstenographic form, if available, unless the court for good cause orders otherwise.

(1) As to Notice. All errors and irregularities in the notice for taking a deposition are waived unless written objection is promptly served upon the party giving the notice.

(2) As to Disqualification of Officer. Objection to taking a deposition because of disqualification of the officer before whom it is to be taken is waived unless made before the taking of the deposition begins or as soon thereafter as the disqualification becomes known or could be discovered with reasonable diligence.

(3) As to Taking of Deposition.

(A) Objections to the competency of a witness or to the competency, relevancy or materiality of testimony are not waived by failure to make them before or during the taking of the deposition, unless the ground of the objection is one which might have been obviated or removed if presented at that time.

(B) Errors and irregularities occurring at the oral examination in the manner of taking the deposition, in the form of the questions or answers, in the oath or affirmation, or in the conduct of parties, and errors of any kind which might be obviated, removed, or cured if promptly presented, are waived unless seasonable objection thereto is made at the taking of the deposition.

(C) Objections to the form of written questions submitted under Rule 31 are waived unless served in writing upon the party propounding them within the time allowed for serving the succeeding cross or other questions and within 5 days after service of the last questions authorized.

(4) As to Completion and Return of Deposition. Errors and irregularities in the manner in which the testimony is transcribed or the deposition is prepared, signed, certified, sealed, indorsed, transmitted, filed or otherwise dealt with by the officer under Rules 30 and 31 are waived unless a motion to suppress the deposition or some part thereof is made with reasonable promptness after such is, or with due diligence might have been ascertained.

HISTORY: Amended July 9, 1984, effective September 1, 1984; amended November 20, 1989, effective January 1, 1990; amended November 11, 1991, effective January 1, 1992; amended November 18, 1996, effective March 1, 1997; amended January 22, 1998.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 32:

1. With the exception of minor wording changes necessary to adapt FRCP 32 to state practice, Rule 32 is essentially the same as the Federal Rule. This rule tracks Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 28-348 and 28-354 (Repl. 1962) and does not work any significant changes in Arkansas practice.

2. Section (c) of FRCP 32 was abrogated in 1972 and the Federal Rules of Evidence now control the effect of taking or using depositions in federal courts. This section is also omitted from Rule 32 as the Uniform Rules of Evidence adopted in this State also control on this same question.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1984 Amendment:

Rule 32(a)(1) is amended to broaden the uses of depositions at trial beyond impeachment by permitting their use for any purpose permitted by the evidence rules.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1989 Amendment:

As initially adopted, the second paragraph of Rule 32(a)(4) provided that a prior action must have been dismissed before depositions taken for use in it could be used in a subsequent action. The 1989 amendment permits the use of a deposition from a prior action to the extent allowed by the Rules of Evidence. The corresponding federal rule was so amended in 1980. In addition, the 1989 amendment eliminates the requirement that a deposition taken in a prior action must have been filed in order for it to be used in a subsequent action. This change is consistent with Rule 5(c), which, as amended in 1984, does not require that depositions be filed as a matter of course.

Subdivision (a)(3) has been amended by adding a new paragraph that includes not only the substance of provisions formerly found in Rule 30(b)(2), but also new language dealing with the situation in which a party who receives minimal notice of a deposition is unable to obtain a court ruling on a motion for protective order seeking to delay or change the place of the deposition. Ordinarily, a party does not obtain protection merely by the filing of a motion under Rule 26(c); any such protection is dependent upon the court's ruling. Under the revision, a party receiving less than 11 days notice of a deposition can, provided that its motion for a protective order is filed promptly, be spared the risks resulting from nonattendance at the deposition held before its motion is ruled upon. Although the revision covers only the risk that the deposition could be used against the non-appearing movant, it should also follow that, when the proposed deponent is the movant, the deponent would have "just cause" for failing to appear for purposes of Rule 37(d)(1). Inclusion of this provision is not intended to signify that 11 days' notice is the minimum advance notice for all depositions or that greater than 10 days should necessarily be deemed sufficient in all situations.

Former subdivision (c) has been redesignated as subdivision (d), without change, and a new subdivision (c) added to reflect the increased opportunities for video and audio recording of depositions under revised Rule 30. Under the new provision, a party may offer deposition testimony in any of the forms authorized under Rule 30(b) but, if offering it in a nonstenographic form, must provide the court with a transcript of the portions so offered. On request of any party in a jury trial, deposition testimony offered other than for impeachment purposes is to be presented in a nonstenographic form if available, unless the court directs otherwise.

Subdivision (c) requires that the court be furnished with a transcript of any deposition testimony presented at trial in nonstenographic form. It was not clear, however, whether the transcript had to be certified by the officer before whom the deposition was taken. If that were so, the rule would as a practical matter require the presence of a court reporter at video depositions; under Section 9 of the rules providing for certification of court reporters, 'transcripts . . . will be accepted only if they are certified by a court reporter who holds a valid certificate under this Rule.' Such a result would be at odds with Rule 30(b), which contemplates depositions taken by nonstenographic means only. Accordingly, a new second sentence has been added to Rule 32(c) making plain that the transcript must be prepared by a certified court reporter from the audio or video tape recording of the deposition, thereby ensuring that the transcript accurately reflects what is on the tape offered at trial.

CASE NOTES

In General.

This rule is essentially the same as Fed. R. Civ. P. 32, which has been construed to point out that any party, not only the party who took the deposition, may use the deposition of a witness, whether or not a party, for any purpose at the trial or hearing, if the party demonstrates to the court the existence of one of the conditions specified in subdivision (a)(3) of this rule. Shelter Mut. Ins. Co. v. Tucker, 295 Ark. 260, 748 S.W.2d 136 (1988).

This rule outlines the use of depositions; it does not distinguish between discovery depositions and evidentiary depositions. Yet, members of the bar commonly describe depositions as being either discovery or evidentiary. Goodwin v. Harrison, 300 Ark. 474, 780 S.W.2d 518 (1989).

Where the parties and the court obviously thought that they were dealing with "discovery" depositions, and, accordingly, there was an implied agreement that they were not "evidentiary" depositions and could not be used as evidence at the trial, the literal wording of this rule was waived. Goodwin v. Harrison, 300 Ark. 474, 780 S.W.2d 518 (1989).

This rule does not distinguish between discovery and evidentiary depositions. Whitney v. Holland Retirement Ctr., Inc., 323 Ark. 16, 912 S.W.2d 427 (1996); National Bank of Commerce v. Quirk, 323 Ark. 769, 918 S.W.2d 138 (1996), amended in part, 325 Ark. 31, 922 S.W.2d 717 (1996), overruled in part, Ark. HHS v. Ahlborn, 547 U.S. 268, 126 S. Ct. 1752, 164 L. Ed. 2d 459 (2006).

Any party, not only the party who took the deposition, may use the deposition of a witness, whether or not a party, for any purpose at the trial or hearing, if the party demonstrates to the court the existence of one of the conditions specified in subdivision (a)(3) of this rule. Kristie's Katering v. Ameri, 72 Ark. App. 102, 35 S.W.3d 807 (2000).

Because subdivisions (a)(1) and (a)(3) of this rule presented a different criterion for use of a deposition, to prevail on appeal, the partnership had to focus its argument on the section that was actually used by the trial judge in her ruling, and the partnership made no argument concerning (a)(1); accordingly, the failure was fatal to its argument on appeal, that the use of the owner's wife's deposition to impeach the owner was improper. DC Xpress, L.L.C. v. Briggs, 2009 Ark. App. 651, 343 S.W.3d 603 (2009).

Error in Admitting Deposition.

Where the record did not show that any of the five conditions contained in subdivision (a)(3) of this rule existed so as to permit the introduction of the pre-trial depositions of plaintiff or her husband and, in fact, plaintiff and her husband were present in court when their depositions were introduced and admitted into evidence, and they both testified at the same proceeding, admission of the depositions was error. Crisp v. Brown, 4 Ark. App. 208, 628 S.W.2d 596 (1982).

Error in Excluding Deposition.

Where there was no dispute that both expert witnesses were out of state at the time of trial and no allegation that the absence of either expert was procured by the party offering the depositions, this rule clearly provided for the admission of both depositions. National Bank of Commerce v. Quirk, 323 Ark. 769, 918 S.W.2d 138 (1996), amended in part, 325 Ark. 31, 922 S.W.2d 717 (1996), overruled in part, Ark. HHS v. Ahlborn, 547 U.S. 268, 126 S. Ct. 1752, 164 L. Ed. 2d 459 (2006).

Expert Witnesses.

Exclusion of the deposition testimony of expert witnesses held prejudicial error where the plaintiffs' burden of proving the applicable standard of care and the defendant's failure to comply with that standard required expert testimony. National Bank of Commerce v. Quirk, 323 Ark. 769, 918 S.W.2d 138 (1996), amended in part, 325 Ark. 31, 922 S.W.2d 717 (1996), overruled in part, Ark. HHS v. Ahlborn, 547 U.S. 268, 126 S. Ct. 1752, 164 L. Ed. 2d 459 (2006).

Objection to Admissibility.

Subsection (b) of this rule provides that an objection may be made at the trial or hearing to receiving into evidence any deposition or part thereof for any reason which would require the exclusion of the evidence if the witness was then present and testifying; since appellee's counsel complied with subsection (b), the court's mistaken assertion as to the existence of a stipulation between the parties was of no consequence. Benson v. Shuler Drilling Co., 316 Ark. 101, 871 S.W.2d 552 (1994).

Where a doctor's expert witness in a medical malpractice action was more than 100 miles away on the trial date, the trial court improperly refused to rule on the admissibility of the expert's deposition, taken on the day before on the basis of a discovery scheduling order, because the plaintiff's was an evidentiary objection, not a discovery objection. Hill v. Billups, 85 Ark. App. 166, 148 S.W.3d 288 (2004).

When the videotaped deposition testimony by plaintiff's treating physician was played in plaintiff's medical malpractice action against defendant, a circuit court did not err in ruling that defendant waived the objection to the qualification of plaintiff's treating physician as an expert because defendant did not make the objection at the time of the deposition, in accordance with this rule, and it was the type of objection that could have been obviated or removed had it been made at the time of the deposition. Padilla v. Archer, 2011 Ark. App. 746, 387 S.W.3d 267 (2011).

Part of Deposition.

Once one party has used part of a deposition at trial, an opposing party may introduce any other parts, regardless of the declarant's availability, subject, of course, to the rules of evidence. Ouachita Mining & Exploration, Inc. v. Wigley, 318 Ark. 750, 887 S.W.2d 526 (1994).

Testimony Admitted.

Discovery deposition testimony held admissible pursuant to subdivision (a)(3) of this rule. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co. v. Blastech, Inc., 313 Ark. 202, 852 S.W.2d 813 (1993); F.L. Davis Bldrs. Supply, Inc. v. Knapp, 42 Ark. App. 52, 853 S.W.2d 288 (1993).

Where federal regulations prevented a witness from testifying at trial, the trial court properly admitted witness' pretrial deposition

A deposition was properly introduced at trial where (1) in his deposition, the deponent testified that he was moving to Colorado, but that if he was notified of the trial date, he would come back to Arkansas for trial, but (2) plaintiff's counsel informed the court that when he tried to notify the deponent of the trial date by telephone, he was only able to leave a message on an answering machine, and that the deponent had not returned his calls and, further, that the plaintiff had spoken to the deponent's roommate who told him that the deponent was incarcerated in Colorado over a dispute with his girlfriend. Kristie's Katering v. Ameri, 72 Ark. App. 102, 35 S.W.3d 807 (2000).

Where the patient brought a medical negligence suit against a doctor and a medical center, defendants were permitted to admit at trial video-deposition testimony of a nurse and the patient under subdivision (a)(2) of this rule. The patient's counsel participated in the cross-examination of the nurse in the video deposition and had the right to mount any objections during at that time; the patient waived any objection to the admission of the nurse's deposition testimony under subdivision (a)(3). Nelson v. Stubblefield, 2009 Ark. 256, 308 S.W.3d 586 (2009).

Rule 33. Interrogatories to parties.

(a) Availability. Any party may serve upon any other party written interrogatories to be answered by the party served or, if the party served is a public or private corporation or a partnership or association or governmental agency, by any officer or agent, who shall furnish such information as is available to the party. Interrogatories may, without leave of court, be served upon the plaintiff after commencement of the action and upon any other party with or after service of the summons and complaint upon that party.

(b) Answers and Objections. (1) Each interrogatory shall be answered separately and fully in writing under oath, unless it is objected to, in which event the objecting party shall state the reasons for objection and shall answer to the extent the interrogatory is not objectionable. (2) The party answering interrogatories shall repeat each interrogatory immediately before the answer or objection. The answers are to be signed by the person making them and the objections signed by the attorney making them. (3) The party upon whom the interrogatories have been served shall serve a copy of the answers, or objections within 30 days after the service of the interrogatories, except that a defendant must serve answers or objections within 30 days after the service of the interrogatories upon him or within 45 days after the summons and complaint have been served upon him, whichever is longer. A shorter or longer time may be directed by the court or, in the absence of such an order, agreed to in writing by the parties subject to Rule 29. (4) All grounds for an objection to an interrogatory shall be stated with specificity. Any ground not stated in a timely objection is waived unless the party's failure to object is excused by the court for good cause shown. (5) The party submitting the interrogatories may move for an order under Rule 37(a) with respect to any objection to or other failure to answer an interrogatory.

(c) Scope; Use at Trial. Interrogatories may relate to any matters which can be inquired into under Rule 26(b), and the answers may be used to the extent permitted by the rules of evidence.

An interrogatory otherwise proper is not necessarily objectionable merely because an answer to the interrogatory involves an opinion or contention that relates to fact or the application of law to fact, but the court may order that such an interrogatory need not be answered until after designated discovery has been completed or until a pretrial conference or other later time.

(d) Option to Produce Business Records. Where the answers to an interrogatory may be derived or ascertained from the business records of the party upon whom the interrogatory has been served or from an examination, audit or inspection of such business records, or from a compilation, abstract or summary based thereon, and the burden of deriving or ascertaining the answer is substantially the same for the party serving the interrogatory as for the party served, it is a sufficient answer to such interrogatory to specify the records from which the answer may be derived or ascertained and to afford to the party serving the interrogatory reasonable opportunity to examine, audit or inspect such records and to make copies, compilations, abstracts or summaries. A specification shall be in sufficient detail to permit the interrogating party to locate and to identify, as readily as can the party served, the records from which the answer may be ascertained.

HISTORY: Amended February 22, 1982; amended July 9, 1984, effective September 1, 1984; amended September 28, 1992, effective January 1, 1993; amended November 18, 1996, effective March 1, 1997; amended January 28, 1999.

Reporter's Notes (as modified by the Court) to Rule 33:

1. Rule 33 is similar to FRCP 33. Prior Arkansas law was governed by superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-353 (Repl. 1962) which followed former FRCP 33. Although there are several wording changes from prior statutes, there is little substantive change. This rules does, however, extend the time for answering or objecting to interrogatories to 30 days or 45 days after service of summons.

2. Omitted from this rule is the language which was contained in superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-355 (Repl. 1962), which provided that the number of sets of interrogatories was not limited except as may be required to protect a party. These rules do not mention the limiting of interrogatories although it is clear that under Rule 26(a), the court does have discretion to limit the use of discovery techniques. See Wright & Miller, Federal Practice And Procedure, Section 2168.

3. Rule 33(b) abolishes right to object to interrogatories because they call for conclusions or opinions. Under this rule, an interrogatory is not objectionable merely because it calls for an opinion, conclusion of law or contention. Wright & Miller, Federal Practice And Procedure, Section 2167.

4. Section (c) is intended to relieve a party from those situations where a substantial burden is placed upon the party to search through records and documents for the requested information. Under this rule, the party who propounded the interrogatories may be referred to the books and records by designation and he may be required to expend his own time and effort in seeking the information sought.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1982 Amendment:

The second sentence of the second paragraph of Rule 33(a) was added.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1984 Amendment:

Rule 33(a) is amended by changing the fourth sentence in the second paragraph to make it clear that a party responding to interrogatories must do so within 30 days after they are served or 45 days after service of the summons and complaint, whichever period is longer.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1992 Amendment:

Subdivisions (d) and (e), neither of which was based on the corresponding federal rule, have been deleted. Their elimination should not affect Arkansas practice in any meaningful way, since the subjects they addressed are adequately covered by other rules. See generally D. Newbern, Arkansas Practice & Procedure § 17-9 (1985).

Subdivision (d) provided that a party who by interrogatory "requests copies of documents to be attached . . . may be required to pay the reasonable cost of reproduction of each document." This provision allowed a party to use interrogatories for purposes of document production, despite the fact that Rule 34 specifically governs that discovery device. Under Rule 34, the requesting party may "inspect and copy" documents and must bear the expense of making copies. The party from whom discovery is sought is not required to make copies for the convenience of his opponent. See 4A Moore's Federal Practice /P 34.19[2] & [3] (2d ed. 1992).

Under subdivision (e), a court could award costs, including a reasonable attorney's fee, to a party who obtained a protective order on the basis of unnecessary interrogatories propounded by another party. This provision is unnecessary in light of Rules 26(c) and 37, which provide such protection against abusive use of interrogatories.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1997 Amendment:

Subdivision (a) of the former version of this rule has been divided into two subdivisions, and former subdivisions (b) and (c) have been redesignated as (c) and (d), respectively.

Paragraph (1) of subdivision (b) is based on the former second paragraph of subdivision (a). It emphasizes the duty of the responding party to provide full answers to the extent not objectionable. If, for example, an interrogatory seeking information about numerous facilities or products is deemed objectionable, but an interrogatory seeking information about a lesser number of facilities or products would not have been objectionable, the interrogatory should be answered with respect to the latter even though an objection is raised as to the balance of the facilities or products. Similarly, the fact that additional time may be needed to respond to some questions or parts of questions should not justify a delay in responding to those questions or portions that can be answered within the prescribed time.

Paragraph (2) is taken without change from the former second paragraph of subdivision (a). Paragraph (3) provides, in accordance with the prior version of the rule, that the court may shorten or lengthen the time for responding to interrogatories. New language expressly permits the parties to extend or shorten the response time by written agreement, a modification in discovery procedures that is permissible under Rule 29. Paragraph (4), which is new, makes clear that objections must be specifically justified and that unstated or untimely grounds for objection are ordinarily waived.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1999 Amendment:

Subdivision (d) has been amended by adding the last sentence. Taken from the corresponding federal rule, this provision makes clear that a party responding to interrogatories by producing business records has the duty to specify, by category and location, the records from which answers to interrogatories can be derived. Without such guidance, the burden of deriving the answers would not be substantially the same for the party serving the interrogatories as for the responding party. A similar requirement has been added to Rule 34(b).

CASE NOTES

Construction with Other Rules.

The failure of the plaintiffs to serve full and complete answers to interrogatories could not be excused under Ark. R. Civ. P. 37(d) where their objections to some of the interrogatories were not made within 30 days, as required by subsection (b) of this rule, and they did not apply for a protective order under Ark. R. Civ. P. 26(c). Calandro v. Parkerson, 333 Ark. 603, 970 S.W.2d 796 (1998).

Discovery Sanctions.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in imposing the discovery sanction of a default judgment against an alternative medicine practitioner and his school in a suit brought by the state pursuant to the Arkansas Deceptive Trade Practices Act, § 4-88-101 et seq., where the court had already granted the state's motion to compel discovery, yet the practitioner destroyed the very information that the state had sought when the student files were re-dacted. Southern College of Naturopathy v. State ex rel. Beebe, 360 Ark. 543, 203 S.W.3d 111 (2005).

Because a nursing home owner failed to raise a timely objection to interrogatories or requests for production, as required by subsection (b) of this rule and Ark. R. Civ. P. 34(b)(2), a trial court did not err in imposing a sanction striking part of the owner's answer. Lake Vill. Healthcare Ctr., LLC v. Hatchett, 2012 Ark. 223, 407 S.W.3d 521 (2012).

Time for Completion.

Order extending the time for completion of discovery from the 30 days allowed by this rule to 45 days after the issuance of the order was not error. Loosey v. Osmose Wood Preserving Co., 23 Ark. App. 137, 744 S.W.2d 402 (1988).

Use of Interrogatories As Evidence.

The plaintiffs in a personal injury suit could not introduce into evidence the original and amended interrogatories and answers made by the defendant pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule in order to impeach the credibility of the defendants' witnesses, since the plaintiffs did not demonstrate that the answers given fell within a recognized exception to the hearsay rule. Hunter v. McDaniel Constr. Co., 274 Ark. 178, 623 S.W.2d 196 (1981).

Although answers to interrogatories may be used to the extent permitted by the rules of evidence, objections to interrogatories are not answers, and the circuit court correctly sustained defendant's objection at trial when plaintiff sought to present to the jury defendant's objections to certain interrogatories. Piercy v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 311 Ark. 424, 844 S.W.2d 337 (1993).

Answers to interrogatories are hearsay and generally are inadmissible as part of a party's case-in-chief; however, such answers may be admissible to impeach the answering party. Piercy v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 311 Ark. 424, 844 S.W.2d 337 (1993).

Answers to interrogatories may qualify as admissions by a party-opponent which are not hearsay, as defined, and therefore may constitute substantive evidence and be admissible in a party's case-in-chief; if an objection to such answers is raised on foundational or other grounds, it then becomes a matter for the trial court's discretion. Piercy v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 312 Ark. 434, 312 Ark. 434A, 844 S.W.2d 337 (1993).

Answers to interrogatories are admissible for consideration in summary judgment proceedings. Piercy v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 312 Ark. 434, 312 Ark. 434A, 844 S.W.2d 337 (1993).

The defendant could use the plaintiff's answers to interrogatories to impeach her testimony where the answers to interrogatories at issue pertained to an effort to settle her claim with the defendant. J. E. Merit Constructors, Inc. v. Cooper, 345 Ark. 136, 44 S.W.3d 336 (2001).

Rule 34. Production of documents and things and entry upon land for inspection and other purposes.

(a) Scope. Any party may serve on any other party a request (1) to produce and permit the party making the request, or someone acting on his behalf, to inspect and copy any designated documents (including writings, drawings, graphs, charts, photographs, phono-records, and other data compilations from which information can be obtained, translated, if necessary, by the respondent through detection devices into reasonably usable form), or to inspect and copy, test, or sample any tangible things which constitute or contain matters within the scope of Rule 26(b) and which are in the possession, custody or control of the party upon whom the request is served; or (2) to permit entry upon designated land or other property in the possession or control of the party upon whom the request is served for the purpose of inspection and measuring, surveying, photographing, testing, or sampling the property or any designated object or operation thereon, within the scope of Rule 26(b).

(1) The request may, without leave of court, be served upon the plaintiff after commencement of the action and upon any other party with or after service of the summons and complaint upon that party. The request shall set forth the items to be inspected either by individual item or by category, and describe each item and category with reasonable particularity. The request shall specify a reasonable time, place and manner of making the inspection and performing the related acts.

(2) The party upon whom the request has been served shall serve a written response within 30 days after the service of the request, except that a defendant must serve a response within 30 days after the service of the request upon him or within 45 days after the summons and complaint have been served upon him, whichever is longer. A shorter or longer time may be directed by the court or, in the absence of such an order, agreed to in writing by the parties subject to Rule 29. The response shall state, with respect to each item or category, that inspection and related activities will be permitted as requested, unless the request is objected to, in which event the reasons for objection shall be stated. If objection is made to part of an item or category, the part shall be specified and inspection permitted of the remaining parts. The party submitting the request may move for an order under Rule 37(a) with respect to any objection to or other failure to respond to the request or any part thereof, or any failure to permit inspection as requested.

(3) A party who produces documents for inspection shall (A) organize and label them to correspond with the categories in the production request or (B) produce them as kept in the usual course of business if the party seeking discovery can locate and identify the relevant records as readily as can the party who produces the documents.

(c) Persons Not Parties. This rule does not preclude an independent action against a person not a party for permission to enter upon land. As provided in Rule 45(b), a person not a party may be compelled to produce documents or tangible things.

HISTORY: Amended November 18, 1996, effective March 1, 1997; amended January 13, 1997, effective March 1, 1997; amended January 28, 1999; amended June 3, 2010, effective July 1, 2010.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 34:

1. Rule 34 is identical to FRCP 34. Prior Arkansas law was governed by superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-356 (Repl. 1962) which tracked FRCP 34 prior to the 1970 amendments thereto. Under prior Arkansas law, a party seeking the production of documents, etc., was required to show good cause and obtain a court order to permit same. Under this and FRCP 34, the party seeking discovery need only serve a request upon opposing counsel. Should the opposition refuse to produce the document or thing requested, the party seeking discovery must move for an order compelling the production of the item. Thus, unless documents are produced by agreement, a hearing is still required.

2. Rule 34 and FRCP 34 omit any reference to privileged matter. Although this particular rule does not specifically preclude the production and inspecting of privileged matters, Rule 26(b)(1) makes it quite clear that matters which are deemed privileged are beyond the scope of discovery.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1997 Amendment:

The first and second sentences of the second paragraph of Rule 34(b) have been amended to track Rule 33(b)(3). In accordance with the prior version of Rule 34(b), the court may shorten or lengthen the time for responding to requests for production. New language expressly permits the parties to extend or shorten the response time by written agreement, a modification in discovery procedures that is permissible under Rule 29.

The first and second paragraphs of subdivision (b) have been numbered and a new paragraph (3) added. The fourth sentence of the second paragraph has been amended to require a party who objects to part of a request for production to permit inspection with respect to the unobjectionable portions. The corresponding federal rule was so amended in 1993. A similar requirement for answers to interrogatories appears in Rule 33(b)(1).

The new third paragraph, based on Federal Rule 34(b), provides that a party from whom production is sought must (1) organize and label the documents in accordance with the categories set out in the production request, or (2) produce them as kept in the usual course of business. However, the second option is available only if "the party seeking discovery can locate and identify the relevant documents as readily as can the party who produces them." This requirement is intended to eliminate a problem that has arisen under the federal rule, which appears to give the producing party the right to produce records as kept in the usual course of business even though the party seeking discovery would be forced to sift through a jumble of documents in order to find those that are responsive to the production request. A similar requirement has been added to Rule 33(d), which allows the production of business records in response to interrogatories.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2010 Amendment:

Subdivision (c) has been amended to reflect the 2010 amendment to Rule 45(b), which allows subpoenas for the production of books, papers, documents, or tangible things without a related appearance at a deposition, hearing, or trial.

CASE NOTES

In General.

Trial court properly dismissed administrator's tort claim for a third-party's alleged spoliation of the evidence in a wrongful death suit because a remedy had to be sought though a means other than an individual tort claim; criminal sanctions were still available under § 5-53-111, even though a new tort was not recognized, and attorneys who were guilty of spoliation were still subject to discipline. Downen v. Redd, 367 Ark. 551, 242 S.W.3d 273 (2006).

Criminal Proceedings.

The discovery procedures permitted in Ark. R. Civ. P. 30 and this rule, are applicable only to civil actions; they are not applicable in criminal proceedings unless there is a specific statute so providing. Kelley v. State, 7 Ark. App. 130, 644 S.W.2d 638 (1983), superseded by statute as stated in Conner v. State, 75 Ark. App. 418, 58 S.W.3d 865 (2001).

Discovery Sanctions.

Because a nursing home owner failed to raise a timely objection to interrogatories or requests for production, as required by Ark. R. Civ. P. 33(b) and subdivision (b)(2) of this rule, a trial court did not err in imposing a sanction striking part of the owner's answer. Lake Vill. Healthcare Ctr., LLC v. Hatchett, 2012 Ark. 223, 407 S.W.3d 521 (2012).

Circuit court properly imposed discovery sanctions in the form of striking an asset purchaser's answer and counterclaim because the documents produced were not organized or labeled to correspond to the categories of the production request, they were not produced as kept in the usual course of business, and there was no requirement under any rules of civil procedure that the circuit court make a finding of willful or deliberate disregard under the circumstances before sanctions could be imposed for the failure to comply with the discovery requirements. Merica v. S&S Home Improvements, Inc., 2021 Ark. App. 197, 625 S.W.3d 356 (2021).

Rule 35. Physical and mental examination of persons.

(a) Order for Examination. When the mental or physical condition (including the blood group) of a party, or a person in the custody or under the legal control of a party, is in controversy, the court in which the action is pending may order the party to submit to a physical examination by a physician or a mental examination by a physician or a psychologist or to produce for the examination the person in his custody or legal control. The order may be made only on motion for good cause shown and upon notice to the person to be examined and to all parties and shall specify the time, place, manner, conditions and scope of the examination and the person or persons by whom it is to be made.

(b) Report of Examining Physician or Psychologist.

(1) If requested by the party against whom an order is made under Rule 35(a) or the person examined, the party causing the examination to be made shall deliver to him a copy of a detailed written report of the examining physician or psychologist setting out his findings, including results of all tests made, diagnoses and conclusions, together with all like reports of all earlier examinations of the same condition. After delivery, the party causing the examination shall be entitled, upon request to receive from the party against whom the order is made, a like report of any examination, previously or thereafter made, of the same condition, unless, in the case of a report of examination of a person not a party, the party shows that he is unable to obtain it. The court on motion may make an order against a party requiring delivery of a report on such terms as are just and if a physician or psychologist fails or refuses to make a report, the court may exclude his testimony if offered at the trial.

(2) By requesting and obtaining a report of the examination so ordered, or by taking the deposition of the examiner, the party examined waives any privilege he may have in that action or any other involving the same controversy, regarding the testimony of every other person who has examined or may thereafter examine him in respect to the same mental or physical condition.

(3) This subdivision applies to examinations made by agreement of the parties, unless the agreement expressly provides otherwise. This subdivision does not preclude discovery of a report of an examining physician or psychologist or the taking of a deposition of the physician or psychologist in accordance with the provisions of any other rule or statute of this state.

(c) Medical Records.

(1) A party who relies upon his or her physical, mental, or emotional condition as an element of his or her claim or defense shall, within 30 days after the request of any other party, execute an authorization to allow such other party to obtain copies of his or her medical records. A shorter or longer time may be directed by the court or, in the absence of such an order, agreed to in writing by the parties subject to Rule 29. The term "medical records" means any writing, document, or electronically stored information pertaining to or created as a result of treatment, diagnosis, or examination of a patient.

(2) Any informal, ex parte contact or communication between a party or his or her attorney and the physician or psychotherapist of any other party is prohibited, unless the party treated, diagnosed, or examined by the physician or psychotherapist expressly consents. A party shall not be required, by order of court or otherwise, to authorize any communication with his or her physician or psychotherapist other than (A) the furnishing of medical records, and (B) communications in the context of formal discovery procedures.

HISTORY: Amended May 13, 1991, effective July 1, 1991; amended November 18, 1996, effective March 1, 1997; amended January 22, 1998; amended January 22, 2004.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 35:

1. Rule 35 is identical to FRCP 35. Prior Arkansas law was governed by superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-357 (Repl. 1962) which tracked FRCP 35 prior to its 1970 amendments. This rule does not work any appreciable changes in Arkansas law.

2. FRCP 35 provides that it does not preclude the taking of a deposition or discovery of a medical report in accordance with the provisions of any other rule. Rule 35 follows this and provides that any statute of this State may provide for additional discovery. Specifically, this rule does not affect Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-607 (Supp. 1975).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1990 Amendment:

New subdivision (c) of this rule sets out the circumstances under which a party must authorize release of his medical records to another party. It also makes plain that a party may not be required to allow an adversary to communicate with the party's physician or psychotherapist outside the formal discovery process. This safeguard is deemed necessary to protect the confidential relationship between a party and his physician or psychotherapist.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1997 Amendment:

Subdivision (a) has been amended to permit the appointment of psychologists to conduct mental examinations, and subdivision (b) has been revised to reflect this change. As amended, the Arkansas rule is similar to the version of the corresponding federal rule that was in effect from 1988 to 1991. The current federal rule is broader, allowing physical or mental examinations "by a suitably licensed or certified examiner." Because the impact of such an expansive provision at the state level could be considerable, only an incremental step — i.e., permitting mental examinations by psychologists — has been taken at this time, and that step is consistent with Arkansas practice. Under Rule 702 of the Arkansas Rule of Evidence, a psychologist may testify as an expert about the mental condition of a party or other person. See, e.g., Burns v. Burns, 312 Ark. 61, 847

S.W.2d 23 (1993) (divorce); Walker v. Walker, 262 Ark. 648, 559 S.W.2d 716 (1978) (child custody). It makes little sense, therefore, to preclude a psychologist from conducting an examination pursuant to Rule 35. Moreover, psychologists are trained to conduct mental examinations, which are a routine, widely accepted part of the practice of psychology in both forensic and non-forensic settings.

The amendment to subdivision (c) imposes a 30-day deadline for responding to a request for an authorization to obtain copies of a party's medical records. A companion change in Rule 37(a) provides for a motion to compel if the authorization is not provided in a timely manner.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1998 Amendment:

Subdivision (c) has been divided into numbered paragraphs and reorganized. It has been also amended to address an issue on which the Arkansas federal courts have disagreed. Compare Harlan v. Lewis, 141 F.R.D. 107 (E.D. Ark. 1992), aff'd, 982 F.2d 1255 (8th Cir. 1993), with King v. Ahrens, 798 F. Supp. 1371 (W.D. Ark. 1992). Consistent with the result reached in Harlan, the first sentence of paragraph (2) provides that a party or his or her attorney cannot interview or otherwise informally contact another party's treating physician or psychotherapist without that party's consent. This new provision reflects the intent of the original version of the rule, i.e., to limit communications with a party's physician or psychotherapist to the formal discovery process. A corresponding change has been made in Rule 503(d)(3), Ark. R. Evid.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2004 Amendment:

A new sentence has been added to subdivision (c)(1) to provide that the 30-day response time may be lengthened or shortened by the court or by written agreement of the parties. Corresponding provisions appear in Rule 33(b) and Rule 34(b)(2), which apply to interrogatories and production of documents, respectively.

CASE NOTESCommunications with Physician.

In a medical malpractice and wrongful death action, the trial court should have disqualified opposing counsel based on his communications with a mother's doctor under Ark. R. Evid. 503(d)(3)(B) or subdivision (c)(2) of this rule because opposing counsel's advice to and communication with a second doctor were in service to the second doctor. Bulsara v. Watkins, 2009 Ark. App. 409, 319 S.W.3d 274 (2009), dismissed without prejudice, Ketan Bulsara v. Watkins, 2010 Ark. 453 (2010), superseded, 2012 Ark. 108, 387 S.W.3d 165 (2012).

Evaluation Standards.

Although it could be argued that the mental health of parents or guardians was always an issue in cases involving the placement of children, the circuit court abused its discretion where it did not apply the correct legal standard in evaluating the motion for psychological evaluation under subsection (a) of this rule. As such, the circuit court erred in granting the grandparents' motion for psychological evaluation over the mother's objection in her petition to terminate guardianship. Troeskyn v. Herrington, 2012 Ark. 245, 409 S.W.3d 307 (2012), overruled in part, Lineham v. Hyde (In re W.L.), 2015 Ark. 289, 467 S.W.3d 129 (2015).

Medical Records.

Circuit court judge had jurisdiction to enter an order compelling discovery of medical records, pursuant to subsection (c) of this rule, and thus a writ of prohibition to prevent the court from enforcing its order would not be proper. McGlothlin v. Kemp, 314 Ark. 495, 863 S.W.2d 313 (1993).

Writ of certiorari was proper, because the court erred in denying the husband's motion to quash several subpoenas concerning his medical records, when the husband was not a party to the underlying custody dispute, the husband did nothing to bring his medical condition into issue, and the husband's mental health was examined through other admissible evidence; a nonparty's medical records could not be subpoenaed under the circumstances presented in the instant case. McKenzie v. Pierce, 2012 Ark. 190, 403 S.W.3d 565 (2012).

(a) Request for Admission. A party may serve upon any other party a written request for the admission, for purposes of the pending action, of the truth of any matters within the scope of Rule 26(b) set forth in the request that relate to statements or opinions of fact or the application of law to fact, including the genuineness of any documents described in the request. Copies of documents shall be served with the request unless they have been or are otherwise furnished or made available for inspection and copying. The request may, without leave of court, be served upon the plaintiff after commencement of the action and upon any other party with or after service of the summons and complaint upon that party.

Each matter of which an admission is requested shall be separately set forth. The matter is admitted unless, within 30 days after service of the request, the party to whom the request is directed serves upon the party requesting the admission a written answer or objection addressed to the matter, signed by the party or by his attorney. However, a defendant shall have 30 days after service of the request or 45 days after he has been served with the summons and complaint to answer, whichever time is longer. These time periods may be shortened or lengthened by the court. If objection is made, the reasons therefor shall be stated. The party answering requests for admissions shall repeat each request immediately before the answer or objection. The answer shall specifically admit or deny the matter or set forth in detail the reasons why the answering party cannot truthfully admit or deny the matter. A denial shall fairly meet the substance of the requested admission, and when good faith requires that a party qualify his answer or deny only a part of the matter of which an admission is requested, he shall specify so much of it as is true and qualify or deny the remainder. An answering party may not give lack of information or knowledge as a reason for failure to admit or deny unless he states that he has made reasonable inquiry and that the information known or readily obtainable by him is insufficient to enable him to admit or deny. A party who considers that a matter of which an admission has been requested presents a genuine issue for trial may not, on that ground alone, object to the request; he may, subject to the provisions of Rule 37(c), deny the matter or set forth reasons why he cannot admit or deny it.

The party who has requested the admissions may move to determine the sufficiency of the answers or objections. Unless the court determines that an objection is justified, it shall order that an answer be served. If the court determines that an answer does not comply with the requirements of this rule, it may order either that the matter is admitted or that an amended answer be served. The court may, in lieu of these orders, determine that final disposition of the request be made at a pre-trial conference or at a designated time prior to trial. The provisions of Rule 37(a)(4) apply to the award of expenses incurred in relation to the motion.

If an attorney for a party to whom requests for admission are addressed signs an answer, his signature shall be deemed his oath as to the correctness of the answer and his specific authority to bind the party on whose behalf he signs.

(b) Effect of Admission. Any matter admitted under this rule is conclusively established unless the court on motion permits withdrawal or amendment of the admission. Subject to the provisions of Rule 16 governing amendment of a pre-trial order, the court may permit withdrawal or amendment when the presentation of the merits of the action will be subserved thereby and the party who obtained the admission fails to satisfy the court that withdrawal or amendment will prejudice him in maintaining his action or defense on the merits. Any admission made by a party under this rule is for the purpose of the pending action only and is not an admission by him for any other purpose, nor may it be used against him in any other proceeding.

(c) Separate Document. Requests for admissions must be filed in a separate document so titled and shall not be combined with interrogatories, document production requests, or any other material.

HISTORY: Amended February 22, 1982; amended May 16, 1983; amended July 9, 1984, effective September 1, 1984; amended November 11, 1991, effective January 1, 1992.

matters which may be determined through the use of requests to include statements and opinions of fact.

Reporter's Notes (as modified by the Court) to Rule 36:

1. Rule 36 is similar to FRCP 36. Prior Arkansas law was found in superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-358 (Repl. 1962) which tracked the Federal Rule prior to its 1970 amendments. This rule does effect certain changes in Arkansas law. One major change is the extension of time to respond to requests to a full 30 days. Additionally, the rule expands the scope of

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1982 Amendment:

The fourth sentence of the second paragraph of Rule 36(a) was added.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1983 Amendment:

The words "or the application of law to fact" have been added in the first sentence of Rule 36(a).

The second paragraph of Rule 36(a) has been amended to permit an attorney to sign, on behalf of his client, a response to a request for admission. The last paragraph of Rule 36(a) has been added to establish the effect of the attorney's signature.

The word "Rule" has been added to the last sentence of the third paragraph of Rule 36(a).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1984 Amendment:

Rule 36(a) is amended by stating separately the power of the court to shorten or lengthen the response time and by changing the third sentence of the second paragraph to make it clear that a party responding to admissions requests must do so within 30 days after the requests are served or 45 days after service of the summons and complaint, whichever period is longer.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1986 Amendment:

Under new subsection (c), it is impermissible to combine requests for admissions with interrogatories or other discovery devices. The amendment is consistent with the practice followed in the Arkansas federal courts. See Rule 15(e), Rules of the U.S. District Courts for the Eastern and Western Districts of Arkansas (as amended effective May 1, 1985).

CASE NOTES

In General.

Requests for admissions are generally considered to be designed to ascertain an adversary's position; they are not discovery devices to ascertain relevant facts. In re Dailey, 30 Ark. App. 8, 784 S.W.2d 782 (1989).

In an employment discrimination case, where two attorneys should have been admitted pro hac vice, the decisions to grant a default judgment and to deem certain responses admitted were also erroneous. Tobacco Superstore, Inc. v. Darrough, 362 Ark. 103, 207 S.W.3d 511 (2005).

Although two of the appellant's requests for admission from the appellee were improper requests of law under this rule, summary judgment in favor of the appellant was proper as the remaining admissions left no issue of material fact in dispute. Hatchell v. Wren, 363 Ark. 107, 211 S.W.3d 516 (2005).

Effect of Admission.

Where the parties had stipulated that the balance owed defendant by plaintiff on the original contract was $5,000, and there was no motion seeking, or order granting, a withdrawal or amendment of the admission, plaintiff was bound by its response to defendant's request for admissions that it had withheld $5,000. Joccon, Inc. v. Hoover, 61 Ark. App. 10, 964 S.W.2d 213 (1998).

Admissions made in response to requests for admissions cannot be used against the defendant in a criminal proceeding arising from the same facts. Maxwell v. State, 73 Ark. App. 45, 41 S.W.3d 402 (2001).

While admissions by the driver of the vehicle as to fault, liability, and lack of insurance did not bind the insurer by constituting conclusive proof of those elements, they did constitute evidence of those elements; the driver admitted, by failure to respond to the requests for admission, that she believed herself to be at fault, liable, uninsured, and without any defense and, while the insurer was free to offer evidence to the contrary, it did not. Gailey v. Allstate Ins. Co., 362 Ark. 568, 210 S.W.3d 40 (2005).

Where a borrower admitted in response to a lender's request for admissions that he borrowed the money from the lender to buy a vehicle and a trailer and made partial payments by way of direct deposits into the lender's bank account, the admissions conclusively established those facts for purposes of trial. Cobb v. Leyendecker, 89 Ark. App. 167, 200 S.W.3d 924 (2005).

Effect of Nonsuit.

A second cause of action involving the same parties and claims, filed after a previous voluntary nonsuit pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 41, is not an "other proceeding" under this rule and, therefore, admissions made under this rule in the nonsuited action may not be used against a party in the second case. Head v. Giles, 343 Ark. 478, 36 S.W.3d 344 (2001).

Admissions made under this rule in an action that ends in a nonsuit under Ark. R. Civ. P. 41 may not be used against the admitting party in the event the suit is reinstated; such admissions lose their effectiveness upon the grant of a nonsuit under Ark. R. Civ. P. 41. Norrell v. Giles, 343 Ark. 504, 36 S.W.3d 342 (2001).

Failure to File Responses.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that a cotrustee had complied with this rule where it duly considered that the other trustee had an opportunity to cross-examine the cotrustee as to the requests for admissions and noted that the cotrustee had admitted the bulk of the requests. The trial court also considered that the cotrustee had filed a notice of submission of responses, which alerted the court and opposing counsel that responses had been served on all counsel of record. Scott v. Scott, 2016 Ark. App. 390, 499 S.W.3d 653 (2016).

Summary judgment for $12,500,000 was proper against defendants in a class-action suit after they did not respond to the summary judgment motion, because (1) defendants were properly served with process, (2) the complaint's issues were within the trial court's jurisdiction, (3) pleadings, orders, and requests for admission were properly served on the defendants, and (4) the defendants admitted the requests for admission by not timely responding. Gen-Kal Pipe & Steel Corp. v. M.S. Wholesale Plumbing, Inc., 2019 Ark. App. 117, 573 S.W.3d 1 (2019).

The trial court erred in denying the plaintiff's motion to strike the defendant's responses to the plaintiff's requests for admissions where the responses were not served and filed within the 30 days allowed by this rule, and the only excuse offered by the defendant's attorneys was that their secretary must have neglected to send the responses. Barnett Restaurant Supply, Inc. v. Vance, 279 Ark. 222, 650 S.W.2d 568 (1983).

Where the interrogatories and request for admission concerning fact of marriage were never received by widow and undisputed evidence showed that the decedent and his widow were married at the time of his death, summary judgment granted on basis of failure to respond to request would be set aside. Beck v. Merritt, 280 Ark. 331, 657 S.W.2d 549 (1983).

Trial court erred in entered judgment in favor of a promisee in his action against a promisor to recover judgment on a promissory note because the promisee failed to answer the promisor's requests for admission; the promisee was given ample opportunity to respond to the requests or to otherwise request relief from the trial court, but he did neither. Borland v. Travis, 2010 Ark. App. 461 (2010).

Purpose.

The purpose of this rule is to facilitate trial by weeding out facts about which there is no true controversy but which are often difficult or expensive to prove. In re Dailey, 30 Ark. App. 8, 784 S.W.2d 782 (1989).

Request Directed to Party.

This rule contemplates that the request for admission be directed to the adverse party, to be answered by that party not his attorney, and trial judge properly rejected the defendant's attempt to require opposing counsel to respond to such a request. B. & J. Byers Trucking, Inc. v. Robinson, 281 Ark. 442, 665 S.W.2d 258 (1984).

Request Imprecise.

Former husband was properly found in contempt for failing to pay alimony because his requests for admission were too imprecise to bind a former wife to an admission that she had already received 48 months of alimony. Discovery answers in response to imprecise inquiries were not always used against the answering party. Midyett v. Midyett, 2013 Ark. App. 597 (2013).

Request Improper.

A request for admission of a pure matter of law is improper. In re Dailey, 30 Ark. App. 8, 784 S.W.2d 782 (1989).

Although subsection (a) of this rule allows for a request for an admission which concerns the application of law to fact, admissions designed to directly discover what legal conclusions the opposing attorney intends to draw from those facts are improper. In re Dailey, 30 Ark. App. 8, 784 S.W.2d 782 (1989).

In a case alleging conversion and unjust enrichment, even though the requests for admission were improper because they called for bare conclusions of law, summary judgment was still properly granted to a driver as there was no issue of material fact regarding an owner's act of improperly keeping insurance proceeds and a repaired car. Hatchell v. Wren, 363 Ark. 107, 211 S.W.3d 516 (2005).

Request Proper.

Plaintiff's written request that defendant admit that the statements in exhibit were true copies of statements submitted by plaintiff to defendant conformed to the requirements of this rule. Wilkinson v. Amos Enderlin Contracting Co., 7 Ark. App. 56, 644 S.W.2d 313 (1982).

An element of the burden of proof, or even the ultimate issues in the case, may be addressed in a request for admission under this rule, and the admission of these matters may not be avoided because the request calls for application of the facts to the law, the truth of an ultimate issue, or opinion or conclusion, so long as the opinion called for is not on an abstract proposition of law. It is the concession of the issue, otherwise determinable by the trier of fact, which comes into evidence, not the assumptions of the party who makes the admission. In re Dailey, 30 Ark. App. 8, 784 S.W.2d 782 (1989).

Service.

In a medical malpractice case, a trial court did not abuse its discretion by deeming requests for admissions admitted because service was made at the address that the patient had provided; without the responses, the health care provider was prejudiced by being unable to prepare a defense. The patient was not given special treatment due to his status as a pro se litigant, but was held to the same standard as an attorney. Breckenridge v. Lowery, 2015 Ark. App. 157 (2015).

In an action to recover a balance due on a credit card account, a genuine issue of material fact remained as to the credit card company's service of requests for admission on the borrower as there was no trial court finding that the borrower was served with the requests and the trial court's order merely stated that the requests were submitted to the borrower; and because the summary judgment order was entered shortly after the borrower's response to the summary judgment motion was filed, it was unclear whether the trial court had the benefit of considering the argument regarding service. Cooper v. Discover Bank, 2019 Ark. App. 144, 573 S.W.3d 573 (2019).

Timeliness of Response.

Under subsection (b) of this rule the trial court was correct in deeming plaintiffs' requests for admissions admitted because the responses were inexcusably not filed within the 30 days allowed by subsection (a) of this rule. Womack v. Horton, 283 Ark. 227, 674 S.W.2d 935 (1984).

Where excusable neglect was neither pleaded nor proven, and the response to the requests for admission was not timely filed, the untimely response resulted in an admission of the matters contained in the requests for admissions. Borg-Warner Acceptance Corp. v. Kesterson, 288 Ark. 611, 708 S.W.2d 606 (1986).

Supreme Court requires compliance with the rule governing responses to requests for admission, but when the facts warrant, it requires acceptance of late responses. Belcher v. Bowling, 22 Ark. App. 248, 738 S.W.2d 804 (1987).

Where plaintiffs had justifiable reason for delay in response to request for admissions, and defendant was not prejudiced by delay, court properly refused to deem the requests admitted. Belcher v. Bowling, 22 Ark. App. 248, 738 S.W.2d 804 (1987).

Trial court did not err in failing to find the requests for admissions "admitted" due to wife's failure to file a timely response; the trial judge accepted wife's explanation that the requests were not timely answered because she did not receive them at the time the other papers were served on her, and this explanation was consistent with the fact that the wife stood to lose a substantial amount of support in the pending litigation. Gibson v. Gibson, 87 Ark. App. 62, 185 S.W.3d 122 (2004).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to deem certain requests admitted based on a late response because counsel's neglect was excusable where counsel did not simply ignore the requests, but was ill and required surgery. Chiodini v. Lock, 2010 Ark. App. 340, 374 S.W.3d 835 (2010).

Verifications.

To avoid having the matter in a request for admissions deemed admitted, the responses must be sworn to by the responding parties, not merely by their counsel. Thomas v. Poff, 268 Ark. 939, 597 S.W.2d 838 (Ct. App. 1980).

Verification by the parties is no longer necessary on requests for admission. In re Dailey, 30 Ark. App. 8, 784 S.W.2d 782 (1989).

Rule 37. Failure to make discovery; sanctions.

(a) Motion for Order Compelling Discovery. A party, upon reasonable notice to all parties and all persons affected thereby, may apply for an order compelling discovery as follows:

(1) Appropriate Court. An application for an order to a party may be made to the court in which the action is pending, or, on matters relating to a deposition, to the court in the place where the deposition is being taken. An application for an order to a deponent who is not a party shall be made to the court in the place where the deposition is being taken.

(2) Motion. If a deponent fails to answer a question propounded or submitted under Rules 30 or 31, or a corporation or other entity fails to make a designation under Rule 30(b)(6) or 31(a), or a party fails to answer an interrogatory submitted under Rule 33, or if a party, in response to a request for inspection submitted under Rule 34, fails to respond that inspection will be permitted as requested, or fails to permit inspection as requested, or if a party, in response to a request under Rule 35(c), fails to provide an appropriate medical authorization, the discovering party may move for an order compelling an answer, or a designation, or an order compelling inspection in accordance with the request. The motion shall include a statement that the movant has in good faith conferred or attempted to confer with the person or party failing to make the discovery in an effort to secure the information or material without court action. When taking a deposition on oral examination, the proponent of the question may complete or adjourn the examination before he applies for an order.

(3) Evasive or Incomplete Answer or Response. For purposes of this subdivision, an evasive or incomplete answer or response is to be treated as a failure to answer or respond.

(4) Expenses and Sanctions.

(A) If the motion is granted or if the requested discovery is provided after the motion was filed, the court shall, after affording an opportunity to be heard, require the party or deponent whose conduct necessitated the motion or the party or attorney advising such conduct or both of them, to pay to the moving party the reasonable expenses incurred in making the motion, including attorneys' fees, unless the court finds that the motion was filed without the movant's first making a good faith effort to obtain the discovery without court action, or that the opposing party's response or objection was substantially justified or that other circumstances make an award of expenses unjust.

(B) If the motion is denied, the court may enter any protective order authorized under Rule 26(c) and shall, after affording an opportunity to be heard, require the moving party or the attorney filing the motion or both of them to pay to the party or deponent who opposed the motion the reasonable expenses incurred in opposing the motion, including attorneys' fees, unless the court finds that the making of the motion was substantially justified or that other circumstances make an award of expenses unjust.

(C) If the motion is granted in part and denied in part, the court may enter any protective order authorized under Rule 26(c) and may, after affording an opportunity to be heard, apportion the reasonable expenses incurred in relation to the motion among the parties and persons in a just manner.

(b) Failure to Comply with Order.

(1) Sanctions by Court in Place Where Deposition Is Taken. If a deponent fails to be sworn or to answer a question after being directed to do so by the court in the place in which the deposition is being taken, the failure may be considered a contempt of that court.

(2) Sanctions by Court in Which Action Is Pending. If a party or an officer, director or managing agent of a party or a person designated under Rule 30(b)(6) or 31(a) to testify on behalf of a party fails to obey an order to provide or permit discovery, including an order made under subdivision (a) of this rule or Rule 35, the court in which the action is pending may make such orders in regard to the failure as are just, and among others the following:

(A) An order that the matters regarding which the order was made or any other designated facts shall be taken to be established for the purposes of the action in accordance with the claim of the party obtaining the order;

(B) An order refusing to allow the disobedient party to support or oppose designated claims or defenses, or prohibiting him from introducing designated matters in evidence;

(C) An order striking out pleadings or parts thereof, or staying further proceedings until the order is obeyed, or dismissing the action or proceeding or any part thereof, or rendering a judgment by default against the disobedient party;

(D) In lieu of any of the foregoing orders or in addition thereto, an order treating as a contempt of court the failure to obey any orders except an order to submit to a physical or mental examination;

(E) Where a party has failed to comply with an order under Rule 35(a) requiring him to produce another for examination, such orders as are listed in paragraphs (A), (B) and (C) of this subdivision, unless the party failing to comply shows that he is unable to produce such person for examination.

In lieu of any of the foregoing orders or in addition thereto, the court shall require the party failing to obey the order or the attorney advising him or both to pay the reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, caused by the failure, unless the court finds that the failure was substantially justified or that other circumstances make an award of expenses unjust.

(c) Expenses on Failure to Admit. If a party fails to admit the genuineness of any document or the truth of any matter as requested under Rule 36, and if the party requesting the admissions thereafter proves the genuineness of the document or the truth of the matter, he may apply to the court for an order requiring the other party to pay him the reasonable expenses incurred in making that proof, including reasonable attorney's fees. The court shall make the order unless it finds that (1) the request was held objectionable pursuant to Rule 36(a), or (2) the admission sought was of no substantial importance, or (3) the party failing to admit had reasonable ground to believe that he might prevail on the matter, or (4) there was other good reason for the failure to admit.

(d) Failure of Party to Attend at Own Deposition or Serve Answers to Interrogatories or Respond to Request for Inspection. If a party, or an officer, director or managing agent of a party or person designated under Rule 30(b)(6) or 31(a) to testify on behalf of a party, fails (1) to appear before the officer who is to take his deposition, after being served with a proper notice, or (2) to serve answers or objections to interrogatories submitted under Rule 33, after proper service of the interrogatories, or (3) to serve a written response to a request for inspection submitted under Rule 34, after proper service of the request, the court in which the action is pending on motion may make such orders in regard to the failure as are just, and among others it may take any action authorized under paragraphs (A), (B) and (C) of subdivision (b)(2) of this rule. Any motion specifying a failure under clause (2) or (3) of this subdivision shall include a statement that the movant has in good faith conferred or attempted to confer with the party failing to answer or respond in an effort to obtain such answer or response without court action. In lieu of any other order or in addition thereto, the court shall require the party failing to act or the attorney advising him or both to pay the reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, caused by the failure, unless the court finds that the failure was substantially justified or that other circumstances make an award of expenses unjust.

The failure to act described in this subdivision may not be excused on the ground that the discovery sought is objectionable unless the party failing to act has applied for a protective order as provided in Rule 26(c).

(e) Failure to Supplement Responses. If a party fails to supplement responses seasonably as required by Rule 26(e), and another party suffers prejudice, then upon motion of the prejudiced party made before or at trial, the court may make any order which justice requires to protect the moving party, including but not limited to imposing any sanction allowed by subdivision (b)(2)(A)-(C) of this rule.

(f) Expenses Against State. Except to the extent permitted by statute, expenses and fees may not be awarded against the state of Arkansas under this rule.

HISTORY: Amended November 18, 1996, effective March 1, 1997; amended January 13, 1997, effective March 1, 1997; amended March 13, 2003; amended May 25, 2006.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 37:

1. With the exception of minor wording changes and the omission of Section (e) of FRCP 37, this rule [is] identical in substance to the Federal Rule. Prior Arkansas law was found in Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-359 (Repl. 1962) which tracked the Federal Rule prior to its 1970 amendments.

2. As under prior Arkansas law, the imposition of sanctions for failure to make discovery rests in the discretion of the trial court. Diaz v. Southern Drilling Co., 427 F.2d 1118 (C.C.A. 5th, 1970); Marshall v. Ford Motor Company, 446 F.2d 712 (C.C.A. 10th, 1971). Overall, this rule should not effect any significant changes in Arkansas practice.

The major change in this rule appears in paragraph (2) of subdivision (a) and corresponds to an amendment to Rule 26(c). Under paragraph (2), a party moving to compel discovery must state in the motion, subject to Rule II, that it has attempted to resolve the dispute informally before seeking judicial intervention. Another change corresponds to an amendment to Rule 35(c) establishing a 30-day deadline for responding to a request for authorization to obtain medical records. As amended, paragraph (2) provides for a motion to compel if the authorization is not provided in a timely manner. In addition, the last sentence of paragraph (2) has been moved to paragraph (4).

Under revised paragraph (3) of subdivision (a), evasive or incomplete disclosures and responses to interrogatories and production requests are treated as failures to disclose or respond. Interrogatories and requests for inspection should not be read or interpreted in an artificially restrictive or hypertechnical manner to avoid disclosure of information fairly covered by the discovery request, and to do so is subject to appropriate sanctions.

Paragraph (4) of subdivision (a) has been divided into three subparagraphs for ease of reference, and in each the phrase "after opportunity for hearing" has been changed to "after affording an opportunity to be heard" to make clear that the court can consider such questions on written submissions as well as on oral hearings. Subparagraph (A) has been revised to cover the situation in which information that should have been produced without a motion to compel is produced after the motion is filed but before a hearing. It also provides that a party should not be awarded expenses for filing a motion that could have been avoided by conferring with opposing counsel. Subparagraph (C) has been amended to include the provision formerly contained in subdivision (a)(2) with respect to protective orders and to include the same requirement of an opportunity to be heard that is specified in subparagraphs (A) and (B).

Under revised subdivision (d), a party seeking discovery via interrogatory or inspection request must make an effort to obtain responses before filing a motion for sanctions. Similar requirements to attempt resolution of discovery disputes without court action appear in revised Rules 26(c) and 37(a)(2).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2003 Amendment:

In subdivision (b)(2), the word "person" in the first clause has been replaced with "party," thus making the provision consistent with the corresponding federal rule.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2006 Amendment:

The Rule has been amended by adding a new subdivision (e) and renumbering former subdivision (e) as (f). New subdivision (e) draws on the principles embodied in the 2000 amendment to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 37, but establishes a different rule. Under this new Arkansas Rule, when a party fails to supplement discovery responses seasonably with new information, and prejudice results, then the prejudiced party may move the circuit court for relief. New subdivision (e) gives the circuit court wide discretion, including imposing any sanction allowed by Arkansas Rule of Civil Procedure 37, in handling any failure to supplement. This new provision works in tandem with the companion change in Arkansas Rule of Civil Procedure 26(e) to strengthen every party's duty to supplement discovery responses promptly.

CASE NOTES

Collateral Estoppel.

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion when it determined that a prior, related lawsuit involving an accident at a nuclear power plant had a preclusive effect on the nuclear power plant operator's renewed assertions of attorney client privilege and the work product rule regarding the operator's root-cause evaluation reports of the accident; the doctrine of collateral estoppel, which the administratrix of the decedent's estate raised below and was supported by the record, barred the operator from relitigating those claims. Entergy Ark., Inc. v. Allen, 2021 Ark. App. 71, 618 S.W.3d 427 (2021).

Subdivision (b)(2)(C) of this rule does not provide authority for trial courts to award unliquidated damages; judgment may be entered as to liability only. Sphere Drake Ins. Co. v. Bank of Oklahoma, 307 Ark. 122, 817 S.W.2d 870 (1991).

Discretion.

The court did not abuse its discretion when it dismissed the complaint with prejudice where the plaintiffs failed to answer interrogatories in a timely manner and failed to comply with an order which required them to "fully and completely" respond to the interrogatories. Calandro v. Parkerson, 333 Ark. 603, 970 S.W.2d 796 (1998).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in finding an employee's attorney failed to comply with this rule by filing motions to compel without first conferring with opposing counsel because the discovery problems could have been resolved by conferring in writing with opposing counsel, the attorney failed to take advantage of opportunities presented to him to obtain the information, and opposing counsel had already provided the attorney with the only information they had. Lancaster v. Red Robin Int'l, Inc., 2011 Ark. App. 706, 386 S.W.3d 662 (2011).

In a nursing-home abuse and neglect action, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that appellants' failure to produce emails merited imposing sanctions under subdivision (b)(2)(C) of this rule because appellants failed to produce the emails in response to a discovery request, failed to produce them when ordered by the trial court, and failed to timely notify the trial court of compliance problems. Lake Vill. Healthcare Ctr., LLC v. Hatchett, 2012 Ark. 223, 407 S.W.3d 521 (2012).

Husband failed to show that the trial court erred in sanctioning him for failing to comply with discovery by not permitting him to testify at the final hearing, because subdivision (b)(2) of this rule allowed the court to prohibit the husband's testimony. Waggoner v. Waggoner, 2012 Ark. App. 286, 423 S.W.3d 117 (2012).

Court did not abuse its discretion by granting appellee's motion for sanctions, striking appellants' answers to appellee's original and amended complaints, because the record revealed a pattern by appellants of attempting to delay and evade discovery. Harvest Constr. Gen. Contr. Inc. v. Latco Constr. Inc., 2012 Ark. App. 610 (2012).

Circuit court did not err in awarding an ex-wife attorney's fees for services rendered in a dispute regarding the proper amount of child support due by the ex-husband under the parties' divorce decree because it had the inherent authority in domestic-relations proceedings to award attorney's fees independent of § 9-12-309 or this rule. Hudson v. Hudson, 2018 Ark. App. 379, 555 S.W.3d 902 (2018).

Although extremely harsh, discovery sanctions did not amount to an abuse of discretion in a construction contract dispute, where the circuit court struck defendant's defenses and counterclaims and held a number of facts to be admitted, including the amount that defendant owed plaintiff under the contract. The circuit court was expressly authorized to establish as fact the amount defendant owed under the contract as a sanction when defendant failed to respond to an interrogatory that asked for the amount defendant contended it owed; further, defendant did not appear for trial and proffer the evidence that it would have presented but for the imposition of sanctions. S.A.M. Grp., LLC v. CR Crawford Constr., LLC, 2020 Ark. App. 173, 596 S.W.3d 590 (2020).

Motion.

Defense counsel's complaint to the trial court of defendant's non-compliance with the discovery process served as the functional equivalent of a formal motion for purposes of subsection (d) of this rule. Cook v. Wills, 305 Ark. 442, 808 S.W.2d 758 (1991).

In an ironworker's personal injury action, the trial court erred when it ordered a nuclear plant to produce two internal investigation "root-cause evaluation" reports to the ironworker, as he had not requested them, such that he was not a "discovering party." Entergy Ark., Inc. v. Francis, 2018 Ark. App. 250, 549 S.W.3d 362 (2018).

Circuit court abused its discretion when it found that a two-sentence email communication that plaintiff doctor later filed with the circuit court met the requirements of Ark. R. Civ. P. 37(d) where the doctor had not warned that he would seek court intervention if the medical group and others either failed to act on his request or otherwise demonstrate a meaningful attempt to resolve the discovery dispute, and the rule required a statement of good faith in the motion. Jefferson Hosp. Ass'n v. Davis, 2020 Ark. App. 562, 615 S.W.3d 400 (2020).

Plaintiff doctor's failure to state that he in good faith conferred or attempted to confer with defendant medical group before filing the motion for sanctions was fatal to his motion. Because the medical group's discovery responses were evasive, the doctor was required to make a good-faith statement in his motion, and the circuit court abused its discretion when it struck the answer in the absence of this statement. Jefferson Hosp. Ass'n v. Davis, 2020 Ark. App. 562, 615 S.W.3d 400 (2020).

No Hearing Required.

Trial court properly dismissed complaint after plaintiff failed to answer interrogatories within 10 days as required by court order, since subdivision (b)(2)(C) of this rule permits the court to render judgment by default against a disobedient party, and requires no hearing prior to doing so. Burton v. Sparler, 272 Ark. 254, 613 S.W.2d 394 (1981).

Evidentiary hearing was required on a motion for sanctions, under subdivision (a)(4)(A) of this rule, based on the financial statement submitted in response to a discovery request, where a contrary financial statement was obtained from the bank of the party submitting the discovery response, to determine which financial statement was accurate. Allen v. Greenland, 347 Ark. 465, 65 S.W.3d 424 (2002).

No Sanctionable Conduct.

In a slip and fall case, a husband and wife specifically waived their requests to extend a service deadline and to compel discovery responses; because neither of the issues were ruled on by the trial court, they were not preserved and were not subject to appellate review. Even if the arguments had been preserved, no relief was necessary because there was no showing that there was evasive or misleading conduct in responding to discovery; there was a specific denial that service of process was effective, and no factual discovery was necessary to discover the defect of the summons on its face. Deering v. Supermarket Investors, Inc., 2013 Ark. App. 56, 425 S.W.3d 832 (2013).

Circuit court's dismissal of a parent's complaint with prejudice as a discovery sanction for violating a scheduling order was reversed where the order set a discovery deadline that had already passed by the date the order was entered, making it technically impossible for the mother to comply with the deadline. Martin v. Jimenez, 2016 Ark. App. 268, 493 S.W.3d 347 (2016).

Refusal to Respond.

Blanket refusals to answer questions in response to a valid discovery request are insufficient to relieve a party of the duty to respond to each question asked. Such a blanket refusal to answer, coupled with a lack of any particularized showing of the potentially incriminating nature of each question, is not sufficient to meet burden of establishing a foundation for the assertion of the privilege against self-incrimination. Dunkin v. Citizens Bank, 291 Ark. 588, 727 S.W.2d 138 (1987).

A party claiming a privilege to refuse to answer interrogatories may obtain a protective order under Ark. R. Civ. P. 26(c), which would protect the party from discovery or from inquiry into certain matters. Subsection (d) of this rule states that the failure to serve answers or objections to interrogatories "may not be excused on the ground that the discovery sought is objectionable unless the party failing to act has applied for a protective order as provided in Ark. R. Civ. P. 26(c)." Dunkin v. Citizens Bank, 291 Ark. 588, 727 S.W.2d 138 (1987).

This rule does not require a finding of willful or deliberate disregard of discovery obligations where party fails to attend depositions. Cagle v. Fennel, 297 Ark. 353, 761 S.W.2d 926 (1988).

Suit may properly be dismissed with prejudice for failure to attend scheduled depositions and failure to pay costs charged as a result of nonattendance. Cagle v. Fennel, 297 Ark. 353, 761 S.W.2d 926 (1988).

Where claim was controverted, discovery started by the parties before the claim was set for hearing was authorized by the Worker's Compensation Commission's Rule 16, and this rule authorized the law judge to make proper orders pertaining to that discovery, including dismissal of the action for failure to comply with discovery orders. Loosey v. Osmose Wood Preserving Co., 23 Ark. App. 137, 744 S.W.2d 402 (1988).

The failure of the plaintiffs to serve full and complete answers to interrogatories could not be excused under subsection (d) of this rule where their objections to some of the interrogatories were not made within 30 days, as required by Ark. R. Civ. P. 33(b), and they did not apply for a protective order under Ark. R. Civ. P. 26(c). Calandro v. Parkerson, 333 Ark. 603, 970 S.W.2d 796 (1998).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing with prejudice plaintiff's medical-malpractice complaint as a sanction for discovery violations. After the case was refiled, plaintiff failed to respond in any way to defendants' discovery requests for a full seven months. Ramsey v. Dodd, 2015 Ark. App. 122, 456 S.W.3d 790 (2015).

Sanctions.

In an action for breach of contract, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion under Ark. R. Civ. P. 37 in imposing sanctions for discovery violations because appellant produced a falsified email and did not give credible explanations for the fraudulent email. Paschal Heating & Air Conditioning Co. v. Zotti, 2021 Ark. App. 372 (2021).

Imposition of a default judgment on the issue of liability was not erroneous because appellants provided extremely tardy and incomplete responses to interrogatories and requests for production of documents despite having ample time to complete discovery and cure omissions. Endurance Freight Logistics, LLC v. Reddick, 2021 Ark. App. 470, 638 S.W.3d 859 (2021).

The trial court proceeded properly in imposing sanctions and expenses, including attorney's fees, on the attorney for the failure of his clients to appear at the time and place notified for the taking of depositions. Helton v. Fuller, 299 Ark. 341, 772 S.W.2d 343 (1989).

There is no authority under this rule which authorizes sanctions against an attorney for not being prepared for trial. However, such an abdication of responsibility could be the subject of a contempt proceeding or could be referred to the Supreme Court's Committee on Professional Conduct. Helton v. Fuller, 299 Ark. 341, 772 S.W.2d 343 (1989).

The imposition of sanctions for the failure to make discovery rests in the trial court's discretion. Goodwin v. Harrison, 300 Ark. 474, 780 S.W.2d 518 (1989); Rodgers v. McRaven's Cherry Pickers, Inc., 302 Ark. 140, 788 S.W.2d 227 (1990).

This rule does not mandate a showing of bad faith or willfulness, or resulting prejudice to the party seeking discovery, before the sanctions of dismissal or the entry of a default judgment can be imposed. Graham v. Sledge, 28 Ark. App. 122, 771 S.W.2d 296, 771 S.W.2d 297 (1989).

Rules of civil procedure do not require a finding of willful or deliberate disregard under the circumstances before sanctions may be imposed for failure to comply with the discovery rules. Cook v. Wills, 305 Ark. 442, 808 S.W.2d 758 (1991); Viking Ins. Co. v. Jester, 310 Ark. 317, 836 S.W.2d 371 (1992).

Where defendant was ordered to produce her 1988 income tax return, repeatedly agreed to the production yet failed to do so, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in imposing severe sanctions. Cook v. Wills, 305 Ark. 442, 808 S.W.2d 758 (1991).

Where the trial court ordered defendant Insurance Company to produce its "entire claim file," and it did not do so, sanctions for "Failure to Comply with Order" pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule were proper. Viking Ins. Co. v. Jester, 310 Ark. 317, 836 S.W.2d 371 (1992).

A finding of willful or deliberate disregard of the court's order is not required before sanctions may be applied. Tricou v. ACI Mgt., Inc., 37 Ark. App. 51, 823 S.W.2d 924 (1992).

Where the court granted a default judgment after finding that the defendant willfully failed to comply with an order which directed it to furnish information promised in its deposition, until more than seven months after ordered, and then he complied only after counsel warned defendant to furnish the information if he wanted him to stay on the case, the sanction of a default judgment imposed by the court was not an abuse of the court's discretion. Tricou v. ACI Mgt., Inc., 37 Ark. App. 51, 823 S.W.2d 924 (1992).

Where the court awarded liability for compensatory damages for failing to furnish information, to also have awarded liability for punitive damages would smack of double punishment, and an abuse of the court's discretion. Tricou v. ACI Mgt., Inc., 37 Ark. App. 51, 823 S.W.2d 924 (1992).

There is no authority under this rule for sanctions in the amount of damages prayed for when the damages are unliquidated. Clark v. Michael Motor Co., 322 Ark. 570, 910 S.W.2d 697 (1995).

A court has the authority to stay further proceedings where a party fails to comply with discovery orders, pursuant to subdivision (b)(2)(C) of this rule. May Constr. Co. v. Riverdale Dev. Co., LLC, 345 Ark. 239, 45 S.W.3d 815 (2001).

After continued disputes regarding discovery, the circuit court had the authority, pursuant to subdivision (b)(2)(C) of this rule, to stay arbitration pending compliance by a party with the circuit court's discovery orders. May Constr. Co. v. Riverdale Dev. Co., LLC, 345 Ark. 239, 45 S.W.3d 815 (2001).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in entering summary judgment against a business as a sanction for the business's failure to respond to the state's discovery requests and refusal to appear at a hearing on the state's motion to compel discovery set three days before the scheduled trial date after the business had been granted three continuances of the hearing date; trial court did not have to issue an order compelling discovery before imposing

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in striking a corporation's response to interrogatories posed to them by an injured party and his wife where the corporation lied in their response despite the fact that they filed a supplemental response immediately upon realization that incomplete and incorrect information had been furnished; prejudice to the other party and the lack of an order compelling discovery were both irrelevant. Coulson Oil Co. v. Tully, 84 Ark. App. 241, 139 S.W.3d 158 (2003).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in imposing the discovery sanction of a default judgment against an alternative medicine practitioner and his school in a suit brought by the state pursuant to the Arkansas Deceptive Trade Practices Act, § 4-88-101 et seq., where the court had already granted the state's motion to compel discovery, yet the practitioner destroyed the very information that the state had sought when the student files were re-dacted. Southern College of Naturopathy v. State ex rel. Beebe, 360 Ark. 543, 203 S.W.3d 111 (2005).

Court of appeals refused to consider the possibility that plaintiff's case was not dismissed under Ark. R. Civ. P. 41(b) for failure to prosecute but was instead dismissed for failure to comply with discovery rules pursuant to subsection (d) of this rule because there were pending discovery issues to be resolved in the case and there was no indication in the court's statements at the hearing or in the court's order of dismissal that discovery violations were contemplated as a basis for the dismissal. Jones v. Vowell, 99 Ark. App. 193, 258 S.W.3d 383 (2007).

Under subdivision (b)(2) of this rule, the trial court did not err in striking the husband's motion and denying him the right to seek reimbursement of the overpayment of alimony where he had to know the extent of his income, the amount he owed creditors, and his average monthly expenses; his actions were a flagrant disregard of the trial court and its orders. Matthews v. Matthews, 2009 Ark. App. 400, 322 S.W.3d 15 (2009).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in striking appellant's answer as a sanction for discovery violations. The sanction was imposed only after the circuit court considered all of the circumstances surrounding appellant's conduct, including the failure to obey the circuit court's discovery order. Ross Sys. v. Advanced Env'tl. Recycling Techs., Inc., 2011 Ark. 473 (2011).

It was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to dismiss appellant's complaint without prejudice due to appellant's failure to timely complete interrogatories and requests for documents sent because although appellant argued that she was unable to procure an expert witness since she was not provided with her medical records, appellee's counsel stated that he had given them to her prior attorney; by dismissing the case without prejudice, the trial court was allowing appellant more time to procure her records, along with an expert witness, and to then refile her case. Maguire v. Jines, 2011 Ark. App. 359, 384 S.W.3d 71 (2011).

Medical malpractice plaintiff's expert was properly stricken from testifying as a discovery sanction under subdivision (b)(2)(B) of this rule, even though the striking of the expert resulted in summary judgment for the doctor, because plaintiff failed to produce the expert for a second deposition despite a court order, although the expert was unavailable. Young v. Kajkenova, 2012 Ark. App. 594 (2012), superseded, No. 12-961, 2013 Ark. LEXIS 78 (Ark. Feb. 14, 2013).

Trial court did not err in striking a litigant's responses and denying his motion to set aside because his responses to the first set of discovery were not provided until three months after their transmission, despite a letter to the litigant and a motion to compel, the responses that the litigant eventually provided were incomplete, the litigant was given even more time to comply with the trial court's order, and the trial court's decision was not thoughtless or made without due consideration. Terrell v. Hager, 2014 Ark. App. 48 (2014).

Because the wife did not provide statements in advance of the hearing, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in ruling that they would not be admissible at trial. Baker v. Baker, 2013 Ark. App. 543, 429 S.W.3d 389 (2013).

In an action for forcible entry and detainer, assault and outrage, conversion, unjust enrichment, and violation of Arkansas and federal Fair Housing Acts, the defendant lessor's argument that the circuit court erred by awarding compensatory and punitive damages resulting from a default judgment that was entered as a discovery sanction was not addressed on review because the abstract did not reflect that it was presented to or ruled on by the circuit court. If the issue had been addressed, the Court of Appeals would still affirm as the circuit court specifically found that the lessor exhibited willful and malicious conduct warranting punitive damages. Tasha L. Strickland, Note: Establishing Precedent for AFHA Enforcement and Revising Arkansas's Law on Punitive Damages (Watkins v. Turner), 2016 Ark. App. 158 (2016).

In an action for forcible entry and detainer, assault and outrage, conversion, unjust enrichment, and violation of Arkansas and federal Fair Housing Acts, defendant lessor's argument that the circuit court erred by awarding a default judgment as a discovery sanction was precluded on appeal because the lessor did not present the argument to the circuit court. If the issue had been addressed, the Court of Appeals would affirm as Ark. R. Civ. P. 37 clearly allows a trial court to impose severe sanctions, including a default judgment, for discovery violations, and here, the lessor was represented by an attorney yet failed to respond for nearly 18 months. Tasha L. Strickland, Note: Establishing Precedent for AFHA Enforcement and Revising Arkansas's Law on Punitive Damages (Watkins v. Turner, 2016 Ark. App. 158 (2016)).

In an auto accident negligence action, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow defendant to use documents at trial on the ground that it had not provided them to the plaintiff during discovery; due to the defendant's discovery violation, the plaintiff was left unaware that defendant would use the documents at trial. Razorback Cab of Fort Smith, Inc. v. Amon, 2016 Ark. App. 352, 498 S.W.3d 346 (2016).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing plaintiffs' personal injury complaint for failing to supplement his responses to discovery to include his criminal indictment and guilty plea relating to a federal charge for interfering with the administration of the IRS. Roberts v. Wortz, 2017 Ark. App. 349, 525 S.W.3d 485 (2017).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing plaintiffs' case under subsection (e) of this rule; the circuit court found it was offensive that, over the course of years, plaintiffs could not provide answers to standard, simple interrogatories, and defendant had been prejudiced. Contrary to plaintiffs' argument, there was no requirement in this rule that the circuit court make a finding of willful or deliberate disregard under the circumstances before sanctions could be imposed for the failure to comply with the discovery requirements. Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC v. Mickna, 2017 Ark. App. 430 (2017).

In a divorce case, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow the husband's expert to use his written report during his testimony at the hearing regarding which funds he considered to be premarital and the current value of those funds where the husband had violated the scheduling order by untimely presenting the report to opposing counsel; exclusion of the report was properly imposed pursuant to this rule, and in any event, there was no prejudice. Dac Tat Pham v. Anh Thuy Nguyen, 2019 Ark. App. 500, 588 S.W.3d 427 (2019).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in striking plaintiff employer's complaint with prejudice as a sanction for discovery violations; the employer did not respond to defendant's good-faith letters to resolve the dispute and did not respond to the interrogatory concerning damages by the court's deadline, which was nearly 11 months after the interrogatory was served, and the employer's response after the deadline was incomplete. Memphis Scale Works, Inc. v. McNorton, 2020 Ark. App. 77, 595 S.W.3d 412 (2020).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in striking plaintiff employer's claims against both defendants as a discovery sanction, even though only one defendant moved to compel discovery; the defendant competitor's requested discovery was related to the claims against the defendant former employee, plaintiff sought damages against the defendants collectively, the defendants filed a joint answer, and the discovery that was sought would have been used in the employee's defense as well. Memphis Scale Works, Inc. v. McNorton, 2020 Ark. App. 77, 595 S.W.3d 412 (2020).

In a products liability action against a tire manufacturer, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion by excluding the defense expert's additional opinion disclosed in his deposition shortly before trial — as a sanction for defendant's failure to disclose the opinion in the earlier report required by the scheduling order; the circuit court also found that the opinion was unreliable under Ark. R. Evid. 702. Hankook Tire Co. v. Philpot, 2020 Ark. App. 316, 603 S.W.3d 614 (2020).

Circuit court properly imposed discovery sanctions in the form of striking an asset purchaser's answer and counterclaim because the documents produced were not organized or labeled to correspond to the categories of the production request, they were not produced as kept in the usual course of business, and there was no requirement under any rules of civil procedure that the circuit court make a finding of willful or deliberate disregard under the circumstances before sanctions could be imposed for the failure to comply with the discovery requirements. Merica v. S&S Home Improvements, Inc., 2021 Ark. App. 197, 625 S.W.3d 356 (2021).

Rule 38. Jury trial of right.

(a) Demand. Any party may demand a trial by jury of any issue triable of right by a jury by filing with the clerk a demand therefor in writing at any time after the commencement of the action and not later than 20 days prior to the trial date. Such demand may be indorsed upon a pleading of the party.

(b) Same: Specification of Issues. In his demand, a party may specify the issues which he wishes so tried; otherwise he shall be deemed to have demanded trial by jury for all the issues so triable. If he has demanded trial by jury for only some of the issues, any other party within 10 days after service of the demand, or such lesser time as the court may order, may file a demand for trial by jury of any other or all of the issues of fact in the action.

(c) Waiver. The failure of a party to file a demand as required by this rule and as required by Rule 5(c) constitutes a waiver by him of trial by jury. A demand for trial by jury made as herein provided may not be withdrawn without the consent of the parties.

HISTORY: Amended November 11, 1991, effective January 1, 1992; Reporter's Notes; amended May 24, 2001, effective July 1, 2001.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 38:

1. As does FRCP 38, this rule recognizes the constitutional right to trial by jury. Rule 38 does, however, extend the period of time within which a party must request a jury trial. Under FRCP 38, the demand for jury trial must be made not later than 10 days after service of the last pleading directed to the issue subject to jury trial. Under this rule, demand for trial by jury may be made at any time up to 20 days prior to trial. Under prior Arkansas law, the time for demanding a jury trial was governed by Rule 4(c) of the Uniform Rules for Circuit and Chancery Courts. That rule permitted the trial court to determine whether any of the parties desired a trial by jury. Unless one of the parties affirmatively requested a jury trial within 10 days after being contacted by the court, the right was waived, provided, of course, that no prior demand for jury trial had been made. Thus, a party normally had until just prior to trial to request a jury trial and this procedure has seemingly worked well. For this reason, the Committee did not see the need to fix an earlier time by which demand for jury trial has to be made.

2. Since Rule 18(a) permits the joinder of legal and equitable claims, problems could arise when equitable issues are resolved in circuit court; however, Rule 18(b) permits the trial court to make such orders respecting severance and transfer as may be appropriate and this should cure most potential problems. There may be instances, however, where a circuit judge might be called upon to decide equitable issues in a case where a jury is sitting. In those instances, the court should follow the federal practice of having the jury resolve the legal issues with the court itself resolving the equitable issues. Wright & Miller, Federal Practice And Procedure, Sections 2305 and 2306.

3. Under the Federal Rule, demand for a trial by jury is served upon opposing counsel. Under this rule, the demand or request for the jury is filed with the court clerk. The purpose of this provision is to insure that the court itself and its administrators will promptly know if a jury is requested.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2001:

Article 2, Section 7 of the Constitution of 1874 provides, in part, that "[t]he right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate, and shall extend to all cases at law, without regard to the amount in controversy" Rule 38 sets out the procedure for asserting the right to a jury trial.

Constitutional Amendment 80, which merged courts of law and equity, did not repeal or modify Article 2, Section 7. As a result of the merger, however, the Supreme Court will be required to determine the parameters of the right to trial by jury in the new system. The possible impact is most clearly seen in cases involving legal issues formerly decided in chancery court under the cleanup doctrine. In this situation, the Supreme Court held that a litigant was not deprived of his or her right to trial by jury because that right is limited to cases that would have been decided "at law" in 1874. By virtue of the cleanup doctrine, which was well-established by 1874, legal issues could be decided by the chancellor without a jury. Colclasure v. Kansas City Life Ins. Co., 290 Ark. 585, 720 S.W.2d 916 (1986).

In a merged system, the question is whether Article 2, Section 7 requires trial by jury with respect to legal issues which, prior to merger, would have been heard in chancery under the cleanup doctrine. Faced with this question after the merger of law and equity in the federal courts, the U.S. Supreme Court held that in a case involving both legal and equitable issues, the former will ordinarily be tried first to the jury in order to avoid the preclusive effect of an initial decision by the court on the equitable issues. See Dairy Queen, Inc. v. Wood, 369 U.S. 469 (1962); Beacon Theatres v. Westover, 359 U.S. 500 (1958). Federal cases on this point are not binding, because the right to jury trial in state court is governed not by the Seventh Amendment but by state law. Gasperini v. Center for Humanities, Inc., 518 U.S. 415 (1996); Colclasure v. Kansas City Life Ins. Co., supra.

CASE NOTES

Constitutionality.

The Arkansas Constitution is not violated by this rule because Ark. Const., Art. 2, § 7, states "a jury trial may be waived by the parties in all cases in the manner prescribed by law." Venable v. Becker, 287 Ark. 236, 697 S.W.2d 903 (1985).

In General.

This rule simply sets out the procedure by which a party may demand a jury when he has a right to one, rather than guarantee such a right. Colclasure v. Kansas City Life Ins. Co., 290 Ark. 585, 720 S.W.2d 916 (1986), cert. denied, 481 U.S. 1069, 107 S. Ct. 2462, 95 L. Ed. 2d 871 (1987).

Where the $2000 defendant paid an agent for drugs had remained in possession of the drug task force (DTF) without court order as evidence in a case which could not be filed, since the state failed to file timely criminal charges or a timely forfeiture action, the trial court properly held that defendant's $2,000 was the subject of seizure and defendant was entitled to return of the money; moreover, no jury was needed as under Ark. R. Civ. P. 39(a), the right to trial by jury was not absolute, and there were no factual issues to be decided. Drug Task Force v. Hoffman, 353 Ark. 182, 114 S.W.3d 213 (2003).

Plaintiff can never bring an interlocutory appeal of the denial of his request for a jury trial, nor can a defendant who simply requests a jury trial by filing with the clerk a demand therefor in writing. Liberty Life Ins. Co. v. McQueen, 364 Ark. 367, 219 S.W.3d 172 (2005).

While a jury demand may be included in the body of a pleading and thereby be considered by the trial court to meet the requirement that the demand be "indorsed upon a pleading," a demand does not address the merits of the case and, therefore, is not part of an answer for purposes of circumventing the final-order requirement to appeal. Liberty Life Ins. Co. v. McQueen, 364 Ark. 367, 219 S.W.3d 172 (2005).

Court dismissed insurer's appeal of an order denying its demand for a jury trial in insured's action for payment on a claim because a demand for a jury trial, even when requested in an answer, was not "part of the answer" for purposes of the exception set forth in Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2(a)(4). Liberty Life Ins. Co. v. McQueen, 364 Ark. 367, 219 S.W.3d 172 (2005).

Bifurcation of Trial.

The bifurcation of a personal injury trial, pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 42, on the issues of liability and damages does not deprive the plaintiffs of their right to a jury trial as guaranteed by Ark. Const., Art. 2, § 7, and this rule and Ark. R. Civ. P. 39. Hunter v. McDaniel Constr. Co., 274 Ark. 178, 623 S.W.2d 196 (1981).

Demand Timely.

Where the 20th day prior to the scheduled trial date was a Saturday and the following Monday was Labor Day, a legal holiday, a request for a jury trial filed on Tuesday was timely. Delight Oak Flooring Co. v. Arkansas La. Gas Co., 14 Ark. App. 24, 684 S.W.2d 271 (1985).

Demand Untimely.

Where the counsel for defendant had received notice of the trial date, but made no demand whatsoever for a jury trial until the day of the trial, which was over seven months after the action was first commenced, the trial court did not err when it proceeded to trial over the defense counsel's objection that a jury trial had never been waived. Johnson v. Coleman, 4 Ark. App. 58, 627 S.W.2d 564 (1982).

The court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to grant the defendants a trial by jury, where the request for jury trial was filed only 12 days prior to the date the case was set for trial. Duncan v. McGaugh, 19 Ark. App. 276, 719 S.W.2d 710 (1986).

Local Court Rules.

Local court rules which provided that requests for a jury trial had to be made at least 21 days prior to pretrial conflicted with subsection (a) of this rule and were therefore not controlling. Delight Oak Flooring Co. v. Arkansas La. Gas Co., 14 Ark. App. 24, 684 S.W.2d 271 (1985).

Supersession of Statute.

This rule superseded former statute governing waiver of jury trial. Venable v. Becker, 287 Ark. 236, 697 S.W.2d 903 (1985).

Waiver.

Given the absence of a waiver, defendant's argument that she was denied her right to trial by jury may be raised without a contemporaneous objection. Grimming v. City of Pine Bluff, 322 Ark. 45, 907 S.W.2d 690 (1995).

In litigation brought by a secondary beneficiary over the administration of several family trusts, the circuit court erred by denying plaintiff a jury trial on his legal claims (breach of fiduciary duty, conversion, fraud and concealment, and conspiracy); and plaintiff did not waive his jury trial argument because he requested a trial by jury in his petition and, under this rule, no more was required. Dawson v. Stoner-Sellers, 2019 Ark. 410, 591 S.W.3d 299 (2019).

In a medical malpractice case, the circuit court erred in striking a request by defendants doctor and his practice (jointly, the doctor) for a jury trial as a sanction for failing to comply with its scheduling order's mediation requirement because the doctor did not consent to a bench trial, the medical malpractice claim was a legal claim to which the right of a jury trial attached, the circuit court lacked the authority under § 16-7-202 to divest the doctor of his fundamental constitutional right to a jury trial, predispute contractual jury waivers are unenforceable under Ark. Const., Art. 2, § 7, a trial by jury was demanded under Ark. R. Civ. P. 38, and there is no law prescribing a waiver of the right to a jury trial as a sanction for failing to comply with a court's order to mediate. Bandy v. Vick, 2020 Ark. 334, 608 S.W.3d 903 (2020).

Rule 39. Trial by jury or by the court.

(a) By Jury. When trial by jury has been demanded as provided in Rule 38, the action shall be designated upon the docket as a jury action. The trial of all issues so demanded shall be by jury, unless (1) the parties or their attorneys of record, by written stipulation filed with the court or by an oral stipulation made in open court and entered in the record, consent to trial by the court sitting without a jury or (2) the court, upon motion or of its own initiative, finds that a right of trial by jury of some or all of those issues does not exist under the Constitution or statutes of this State.

(b) By the Court. Issues not demanded for trial by jury as provided in Rule 38 shall be tried by the court; but, notwithstanding the failure of a party to demand a jury in an action in which such a demand might have been made of right, the court in its discretion, upon motion, may order a trial by a jury of any or all issues.

(c) Advisory Jury and Trial by Consent. In all actions not triable of right by a jury, the court upon motion or of its own initiative, may try any issue with an advisory jury or, with the consent of all parties, may order a trial with a jury whose verdict has the same effect as if trial by jury had been a matter of right.

Reporter’s Notes to Rule 39:

1. With the exception of minor wording changes in Section (c), Rule 39 is otherwise identical to FRCP 39. The purpose behind this rule is to insure that when a jury trial has been requested, it will be granted on all issues triable by jury unless the parties thereafter affirmatively waive this right. Under Section (b), the trial court retains discretion to grant a trial by jury even though timely request or demand has not been made.

2. Section (c) authorizes the trial court to submit any issue to an advisory jury where it would otherwise not be triable by jury or, with the consent of all parties, may order that the verdict of such jury shall be binding as if the issues were triable by jury as a matter of right.

Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1705 (Repl. 1962) provided that all issues not triable by jury as a matter of right were to be tried by the court, subject to its power to order any issue to be tried by jury, whether at law or in equity. Thus, the trial courts in this State have previously had the inherent right to submit any issue to a jury. This rule would, however, limit the effect of a jury verdict under Section (c) unless all parties consent to a binding effect.

3. Under the circumstances outlined in Section (c), it is possible to have a binding jury verdict in equity proceedings. This is a change in Arkansas law as jury verdicts in chancery court have heretofore been considered as advisory only and not binding upon the court. Sullivan v. Wilson Mercantile Co., 172 Ark. 914, 290 S.W. 938 (1927); City of Magnolia v. Davies, 188 Ark. 19, 64 S.W.2d 85 (1933).

CASE NOTES

Bifurcation of Trial.

The bifurcation of personal injury trial, pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 42, on the issues of liability and damages does not deprive the plaintiffs of their right to a jury trial as guaranteed by Ark. Const., Art. 2, § 7, and Ark. R. Civ. P. 38 and this rule. Hunter v. McDaniel Constr. Co., 274 Ark. 178, 623 S.W.2d 196 (1981).

Directed Verdict.

Where plaintiff in action on promissory note moved for directed verdict and court denied the motion, whereupon defendant also moved for a directed verdict, the trial court erred in taking the case away from the jury and deciding it in favor of plaintiff and such error was a substantive defect so that the case should be reversed irrespective of the fact that counsel for defendant failed to object to the error. Bussey v. Bank of Malvern, 270 Ark. 37, 603 S.W.2d 426 (Ct. App. 1980).

Untimely Demand.

The court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to grant the defendants a trial by jury, where the request for jury trial was filed only 12 days prior to the date the case was set for trial. Duncan v. McGaugh, 19 Ark. App. 276, 719 S.W.2d 710 (1986).

Waiver of Jury Trial.

The right to jury trial is a constitutional right which is so fundamental that the rule that cures error where counsel fails to object ought not to be readily applied to the denial of rights protected in the Constitution of Arkansas and described therein as “inviolable”; procedural rules governing jury trials are not intended to diminish the right to a jury trial and should be interpreted so as not to give effect to dubious waivers of rights. Bussey v. Bank of Malvern, 270 Ark. 37, 603 S.W.2d 426 (Ct. App. 1980).

Jury-waiver clause contained in a loan agreement between a bank and a borrower was unenforceable because predispute contractual jury waivers are unenforceable under the Arkansas Constitution; waivers of the right to a jury trial may take place only after a jury demand had been made. Tilley v. Malvern Nat’l Bank, 2017 Ark. 343, 532 S.W.3d 570 (2017).

Under the mandate rule and law-of-the-case doctrine, Ark. Code Ann. § 16-30-104, enacted in 2018, did not apply to change the Supreme Court’s 2017 holding in this case (2017 Ark. 343) that pre-dispute contractual jury waivers are unenforceable under the Arkansas Constitution; the Supreme Court’s previous holding that there was no provision in the law for a pre-dispute jury waiver clause to divest a litigant of the constitutional right to a jury trial was a statement of fact. Tilley v. Malvern Nat’l Bank, 2019 Ark. 376, 590 S.W.3d 137 (2019).

Rule 40. Trial settings and continuances.

(a) Settings. Cases shall be set for trial at the request of any party after the issues have been joined. The court may assign a trial date, on its own motion, even though neither party has requested a setting. Precedence shall be given to actions entitled thereto by any statute of this State.

(b) Continuances. The court may, upon motion and for good cause shown, continue any case previously set for trial.

(c) Suits in Which Party or Attorney is Member or Officer of Legislature.

(1) Any and all proceedings in suits pending in any of the courts of this State in which any attorney for either party to any suit is a member of the Senate or of the House of Representatives or is a Clerk of either branch of the General Assembly, or Lieutenant Governor, while presiding as president of the Senate, and any and all proceedings in suits pending in any of the courts of this State in which any member of the Legislature or Clerk of either branch of the General Assembly, or Lieutenant-Governor, while presiding as president of the Senate, is a party, shall be stayed for a time not to exceed fifteen (15) days preceding the convening of the General Assembly and not less than thirty (30) days after its adjournment.

(2) Any and all proceedings in suits pending in any of the courts in this State in which any attorney for either party to any suit is a member of the Legislative Council, or the Legislative Audit Committee, or any Joint Interim Committee of the General Assembly, shall be stayed, or reset if scheduled, if said proceeding has been scheduled on any day upon which the Legislative Council, Legislative Audit Committee, or any Joint Interim Committee is meeting, provided, however, that said attorney shall be a member of the Committee, or alternate member attending in place of a regular member, which is meeting, and provided, further, that said attorney shall request the continuance of the Court no less than three (3) days before said proceeding is to commence.

(3) The term "adjournment" as used in subsection (c) shall mean the adjournment without the establishment of a day certain for reconvening, or adjournment or recess to a date more than thirty (30) days in the future.

(4) The provisions of subsection (c) shall be applicable in the case of special or extraordinary sessions of the General Assembly as well as regular sessions.

HISTORY: Amended February 5, 1979.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 40:

1. Rule 40 deviates substantially in its wording from FRCP 40, although the intent of the rule is essentially the same as the Federal Rule. Section (a) basically follows prior Arkansas law as promulgated in Rule 4(a) of the Uniform Rules for Circuit and Chancery Courts. Thus, the method of setting cases for trial in this State will remain unchanged.

2. Section (a) recognizes the practice of giving certain types of cases precedence in the setting of cases for trial. An example of an action which has precedence under Arkansas law is an election contest. Ark. Stat. Ann. § 3-1002 (Repl. 1962).

3. FRCP 40 sets no guidelines for determining when a continuance should be granted. The federal courts have taken the position that the matter of granting or refusing to grant a continuance rests in the discretion of the trial court. McSurely v. McClellan, 426 F. 2d 664 (C.C.A. D.C., 1970); Connell v. Steel Haulers, Inc., 455 F. 2d 688 (C.C.A. 8th, 1972). Prior Arkansas law made a continuance mandatory under superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1401 (Repl. 1962) when a party was represented by an attorney who was in the legislature and it was in session; otherwise, the matter of continuances rested within the discretion of the trial court. Baltimore & Ohio Ry. Co. v. McGill Bros. Rice Mill, 185 Ark. 108, 46 S.W.2d 651 (1932); Wallace v. Hamilton, 238 Ark. 406, 382 S.W.2d 363 (1964). Under this rule, a continuance is never mandatory as was previously the case involving a member of the legislature. To this extent, Rule 40 changes Arkansas law.

4. Rule 40 does not require that a motion for continuance be in writing. Neither does it require that notice be afforded to opposing counsel that a continuance is sought. The court can, in its discretion, require such notice and as a practical matter notice, either orally or in writing, should be given to opposing counsel in most instances.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1979 Amendment:

Section (c) of Rule 40 did not appear in the original version of the Rules of Civil Procedure adopted by the Supreme Court in December 1978 but was added less than two months later. See In re Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 40, 265 Ark. 963 (1979). Thus, this provision was in place when the Rules went into effect on July 1, 1979, although the Reporter's Notes were not modified to reflect its addition. Section (c) is virtually identical to a superseded statute, Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1401 (Repl. 1962), as amended by Act 333 of 1979 [now see § 16-63-406].

CASE NOTES

Denial of Continuance.

Where the trial court denied the defendant's motion for a continuance, which was based on the defense counsel's lack of time to adequately prepare the defense, the trial court did not abuse its discretion because the case had been pending for over two years, it had been called at pretrial at least three times, and the defendant had already been granted one continuance, four months prior to the trial date, in order to obtain counsel. Bolden v. Carter, 269 Ark. 391, 602 S.W.2d 640 (1980).

Where the trial court denied the defendant's motion for a continuance, which was based on the absence of two witnesses who were to testify on the defendant's behalf, the trial court did not abuse its discretion because the motion was made after the jury had begun to deliberate, and the defense counsel made no proffer of what their testimony would be nor was any evidence offered of their unavailability except a statement by the defense counsel. Bolden v. Carter, 269 Ark. 391, 602 S.W.2d 640 (1980).

Where, in an action brought by affected landowners challenging a rezoning decision, the landowners moved for a continuance in order to subpoena certain witnesses, but it was apparent from the record that the plaintiffs had ample opportunity to subpoena whomever they wished before the hearing and that the plaintiffs had waited until eight witnesses had testified before asking for the continuance, the chancellor did not abuse his discretion in refusing to grant the continuance. Smith v. City of Little Rock, 279 Ark. 4, 648 S.W.2d 454 (1983).

Trial court did not err in refusing to grant a continuance to the wife in a divorce and child custody case where the case was filed in July 2003, the wife was served in August 2003, and she filed her pro se answer on September 8, 2003; the trial court found that there was ample time for the wife to have obtained an attorney for the October 14, 2003, trial date; however, the trial court indicated it would consider a continuance in the event that the wife obtained counsel and counsel requested time to prepare. Dorothy v. Dorothy, 88 Ark. App. 358, 199 S.W.3d 107 (2004).

There was no abuse of discretion in the trial court's denial of the motion for a continuance, because the trial court took the steps necessary to ensure the husband's attendance at the hearing by issuing the delivery order and by arranging for the husband's transportation, however, the husband's absence at the hearing was directly attributable to his own misconduct and connivance, when the attack on the officer who was going to transport the husband was unprovoked, and it was plausible that the husband's antics could be construed as a misguided ploy designed to delay the proceedings. Frost v. Frost, 2009 Ark. App. 290, 307 S.W.3d 41 (2009).

Denial of motion to continue proceedings in termination of parental rights case was appropriate because appellant mother, who was incarcerated, was still permitted to testify that she was soon to be released and was attempting to enter a drug-rehabilitation program that allowed mother-child cohabitation. Additionally, a continuance was not required for the mother to complete a psychological evaluation as she had failed to follow through with that recommendation by the lower court, which was made prior to her incarceration. Sanderson v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2012 Ark. App. 481 (2012).

—Absence of Witnesses.

A trial judge does not abuse his discretion in denying a motion for a continuance based on the absence of witnesses where no proffer is made as to what the witnesses would testify to. Bone v. Bone, 12 Ark. App. 163, 671 S.W.2d 217 (1984).

Discretion of Court.

The granting or denial of a continuance is a matter within the sound discretion of the court, and such a ruling will not be disturbed unless the trial court abused that discretion by acting arbitrarily and capriciously. Smith v. City of Little Rock, 279 Ark. 4, 648 S.W.2d 454 (1983).

Whether a motion for continuance should be granted is addressed to the discretion of the trial judge, and his decision will not be overturned unless that discretion is manifestly abused. Bone v. Bone, 12 Ark. App. 163, 671 S.W.2d 217 (1984).

Stay of Proceedings.

Counsel cannot participate in the litigation during the period of the stay, pursuant to subsection (c) of this rule, receive an adverse decision, and then urge that the matter was stayed and seek a second hearing on the matters previously resolved. Tucker v. Lake View Sch. Dist., 321 Ark. 618, 906 S.W.2d 295 (1995).

Rule 41. Dismissal of actions.

(1) Subject to the provisions of Rule 23(e) and Rule 66, an action may be dismissed without prejudice to a future action by the plaintiff before the final submission of the case to the jury, or to the court where the trial is by the court. Although such a dismissal is a matter of right, it is effective only upon entry of a court order dismissing the action.

(2) A voluntary dismissal under paragraph (1) operates as an adjudication on the merits when filed by a plaintiff who has once dismissed in any court of the United States or of any state an action based upon or including the same claim, unless all parties agree by written stipulation that such dismissal is without prejudice.

(3) In any case where a set-off or counterclaim has been previously presented, the defendant shall have the right of proceeding on his claim although the plaintiff may have dismissed his action.

(b) Involuntary Dismissal. In any case in which there has been a failure of the plaintiff to comply with these rules or any order of court or in which there has been no action shown on the record for the past 12 months, the court shall cause notice to be mailed to the attorneys of record, and to any party not represented by an attorney, that the case will be dismissed for want of prosecution unless on a stated day application is made, upon a showing of good cause, to continue the case on the court's docket. A dismissal under this subdivision is without prejudice to a future action by the plaintiff unless the action has been previously dismissed, whether voluntarily or involuntarily, in which event such dismissal operates as an adjudication on the merits.

(c) Dismissal of Counterclaim, Cross-Claim or Third-Party Claim. The provisions of this rule apply to the dismissal of any counterclaim, cross-claim or third-party claim.

(d) Costs of Previously Dismissed Action. If a plaintiff who has once dismissed an action, or who has suffered an involuntary dismissal in any court, commences an action based upon or including the same claim against the same defendant, the court may make such order for the payment of costs of the action previously dismissed as it may deem proper and may stay the proceedings in the action until the plaintiff has complied with the order. For purposes of this rule, the term "costs" means those items taxable as costs under Rule 54(d)(2).

HISTORY: Amended July 9, 1984, effective September 1, 1984; amended November 11, 1991, effective January 1, 1992; amended January 28, 1999; amended March 13, 2003.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 41:

1. Rule 41 differs significantly from FRCP 41 and basically follows prior Arkansas law. Under the Federal Rule, a plaintiff has the unqualified right to dismiss his claim without prejudice only until the defendant has filed his answer. Thereafter, court approval is required in order to dismiss without prejudice and the court has discretion to deny such a motion. Cone v. West Virginia Pulp & Paper Co., 330 U.S. 212, 67 S. Ct. 752 (1947). Indeed, FRCP 41 was purposely adopted to prevent a plaintiff from taking a voluntary non-suit at any stage of the proceedings and to put the control in the hands of the trial judge. Ockert v. Union Barge Line Corp., 190 F. 2d 303 (C.C.A. 3rd, 1951).

2. Section (a) rejects the limitations contained in FRCP 41 and instead follows prior Arkansas law as set forth in superseded Ark.

Stat. Ann. § 27-1405 (Repl. 1962), by permitting one voluntary non-suit at any stage of the case prior to its submission to the jury or the court sitting as the fact finder. This Section does recognize, however, that court approval must be obtained in order to dismiss a claim under Rule 23 (d) and Rule 66.

3. Section (a) retains the provisions of superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1407 (Repl. 1962), which permitted a defendant to proceed on his set-off or counterclaim even though the plaintiff's claim has been dismissed.

4. Section (b) also marks a significant variation from FRCP 41(b). Under this rule, the trial court has the right to dismiss on its own motion a claim for failure to prosecute the action or failure to comply with these rules or any order of the court. Under the Federal Rule, such dismissal must be on motion of the defendant or other party affected. Also, under FRCP 41, a dismissal by the court under Section (b) is generally with prejudice, whereas under this rule, such a dismissal is without prejudice provided the case has not been previously dismissed in which event the second dismissal is with prejudice. The Federal Rule was rejected for the reason that while it states that an involuntary dismissal is with prejudice, the appellate courts have been quick to find an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court in dismissing a claim. Pond v. Braniff Airways, Inc., 453 F.2d 347 (C.C.A. 5th, 1972); Dyotherm Corp. v. Turbo Machine Co., 392 F.2d 146 (C.C.A. 3rd, 1968). The Committee believed that the better practice is to make an involuntary non-suit without prejudice, but limit the number of times a case can be dismissed, whether voluntarily or involuntarily.

5. Omitted from Rule 41 is the provision found in FRCP 41(b) relative to dismissals after the completion of plaintiff's case when it is tried without a jury. Rule 50(a) accomplishes the same purpose whether the case is tried with or without a jury. This is the procedure previously followed in Arkansas and it has seemingly worked well.

6. Section (d) goes beyond the language of FRCP 41(d) by expressly permitting the trial court to impose costs or sanctions against a party who has previously had his claim dismissed, whether voluntarily or involuntarily. While the Federal Rule does not expressly confer such power upon the trial court, it has been held that the court does possess such power. Gainey v. Brotherhood R. & S. S. Clerks, 34 F.R.D. 8 (D.C. Pa., 1963). This rule is designed to clear any misunderstanding or confusion on this point.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1984 Amendment:

Rule 41(b) is amended to make specific the time period after which the court must order cause to be shown why the case should not be dismissed for want of prosecution. While Rule 10 of the Uniform Rules for Circuit and Chancery Courts provided such a dismissal was without prejudice, this rule provides it is with prejudice if it is the second dismissal, whether the previous dismissal was voluntary or involuntary.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1999 Amendment:

Subdivision (a) has been divided into three numbered paragraphs and revised to reflect case law. In Blaylock v. Shearson Lehman Brothers, Inc., 330 Ark. 620, 954 S.W.2d 939 (1997), the Supreme Court noted that it had "long interpreted [Rule 41(a)] as creating an absolute right to a nonsuit prior to submission of the case to the jury or to the court." In the same case, the Court held that "a court order is necessary to grant a nonsuit and the judgment or decree must be entered to be effective."

A new sentence has been added to subdivision (d) defining "costs" as those recoverable under Rule 54(d)(2), a new provision. A definition was deemed advisable in light of continuing confusion as to expenses that can be taxed as costs. See, e.g., Wood v. Tyler, 317 Ark. 319, 877 S.W.2d 582 (1994); Sutton v. Ryder Truck Rental, Inc., 305 Ark. 231, 807 S.W.2d 905 (1991).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2003 Amendment:

The reference to "Rule 23(d)" in subdivision (a)(1) has been corrected to read "Rule 23(e)."

CASE NOTES

In General.

This rule clearly allows a plaintiff to nonsuit a claim, and this court has consistently upheld that provision; it creates an absolute right to such a nonsuit. Whetstone v. Chadduck, 316 Ark. 330, 871 S.W.2d 583 (1994).

A plaintiff is a party who asserts a cause of action against another, and the right to dismiss an action rests only with the plaintiff. M.T. v. Arkansas Dep't of Human Servs., 58 Ark. App. 302, 952 S.W.2d 177 (1997).

Where clinic and its insurer were completely dismissed from the lawsuit pursuant to the first summary-judgment order, and the nonsuit as to the individual doctors excused them in the lawsuit, the order granting summary judgment was final and appealable after the voluntary nonsuit and, as the administrator did not file a notice of appeal within 30 days, the order granting summary judgment could not be reviewed on appeal. Winkler v. Bethell, 362 Ark. 614, 210 S.W.3d 117 (2005).

While the provisions of this rule and res judicata are often discussed and treated in similar manners, they are two separate issues. Jordan v. Circuit Court, 366 Ark. 326, 235 S.W.3d 487 (2006).

Actions Involving Parents.

Because a dismissal with prejudice is void in a paternity action, such a ruling does not bar future proceedings. State Office of Child Support Enforcement v. Flowers, 57 Ark. App. 223, 944 S.W.2d 558 (1997).

Termination of parental rights is a remedy available only to the Department of Human Services (DHS) and not to private litigants; therefore, the right of dismissal accrues to DHS as the petitioner, and not to a parent. M.T. v. Arkansas Dep't of Human Servs., 58 Ark. App. 302, 952 S.W.2d 177 (1997).

Admissions.

A second cause of action involving the same parties and claims, filed after a previous voluntary nonsuit pursuant to this rule, is not an "other proceeding" under Ark. R. Civ. P. 36 and, therefore, admissions made under Ark. R. Civ. P. 36 in the nonsuited action may not be used against a party in the second case. Head v. Giles, 343 Ark. 478, 36 S.W.3d 344 (2001).

Admissions made under Ark. R. Civ. P. 36 in an action that ends in a nonsuit under this rule may not be used against the admitting party in the event the suit is reinstated; such admissions lose their effectiveness upon the grant of a nonsuit under this rule. Norrell v. Giles, 343 Ark. 504, 36 S.W.3d 342 (2001).

Appellate Review.

Where a guardian filed a complaint against a trustee for an accounting, the trial court granted the trustee's motion to dismiss under subsection (b) of this rule because the claims were barred based on dismissals in two previous lawsuits. The Court of Appeals of Arkansas could not review the matter, as the pleadings or orders from the previous cases were not made part of the record on appeal. Merritt v. Thornton, 2009 Ark. App. 735 (2009).

Court erred in denying the borrower's motion to dismiss the lender's third complaint, because dismissal of the lender's second complaint was based on subdivision (b) of this rule, and the second dismissal operated as an adjudication on the merits and barred the third complaint as a matter of law. Evins v. Carvin, 2013 Ark. App. 185, 426 S.W.3d 549 (2013).

Appeal was dismissed for lack of finality where there was no Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(b) certificate, the parties' oral attempt to nonsuit various claims before the trial started was ineffective because the court had not entered a written order, and no final decisions had been entered on various counterclaims. Mary C. Petty Family Trust v. Louton, 2018 Ark. App. 265, 550 S.W.3d 12 (2018).

Applicability.

Where one of two dismissals is on the motion of the defendant and not the plaintiff, subsection (a) of this rule is not applicable. Carton v. Missouri Pac. R.R., 295 Ark. 126, 747 S.W.2d 93 (1988).

Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(i) applies when there is a failure to obtain service and nothing more; subsection (b) of this rule, however, is expressly addressed to a situation where there has been more than one dismissal, whether voluntary or involuntary. Bakker v. Ralston, 326 Ark. 575, 932 S.W.2d 325 (1996).

The one-year statute of limitations in in § 9-9-216(b) provides a special procedure which cannot be annulled by subsection (a) of this rule and the savings statute, § 16-56-126, that allows an action dismissed without prejudice to be refiled within one year of the dismissal. In re Martindale, 327 Ark. 685, 940 S.W.2d 491 (1997).

Subsection (a) of this rule did not apply, because the trial court orally granted defendant's motion to dismiss based upon plaintiff's defective summons and failure to timely serve a corrected summons, and the trial court's second order expressly stated that it was granting defendant's motion to dismiss; since one of the two dismissals was on the motion of defendant, neither subsection (a) nor the written-stipulation exception applied. Mack v. Union Pac. R.R. Co., 2012 Ark. App. 115, 394 S.W.3d 848 (2012).

Dismissal of a Republican candidate's complaint in intervention should have been without prejudice when the dismissal of the complaint for failure to properly serve the defending Democratic candidate was a first dismissal and nothing in Ark. R. Civ. P. 78 purported to supersede the provisions of Ark. R. Civ. P. 41; thus, the plain language in Rule 41 applied. Tollett v. Wilson, 2020 Ark. 326, 608 S.W.3d 602 (2020).

Claim Preclusion.

Claim preclusion did not bar appellee's quiet title counterclaim as a prior suit's dismissal under subsection (b) of this rule was not an adjudication on the merits; there was no indication in the record that appellee previously had a claim dismissed. Sutton v. Gardner, 2011 Ark. App. 737, 387 S.W.3d 185 (2011).

Construction.

From the decision that subsection (a) of this rule permitted a voluntary nonsuit without prejudice after the notice of appeal was filed, it follows that § 16-56-126 allows the appeal to be refiled within one year. Sosebee v. County Line Sch. Dist., 320 Ark. 412, 897 S.W.2d 556 (1995).

Costs of Previous Action.

The court in the first action has no authority under subsection (d) of this rule, once the second action is filed, to do anything in respect to ordering the payment of costs or to stay proceedings in the second action for it no longer has jurisdiction; only the court in which the second action is pending has jurisdiction to make such orders. Therefore, where a state action was nonsuited and an action was filed in federal court, the federal court had jurisdiction to award attorney's fees and expenses relating to the state action. Transit Homes, Inc. v. Belamy, 287 Ark. 487, 701 S.W.2d 126 (1985).

Circuit court erred in assessing against appellant against costs associated with a trial in which he took a voluntary dismissal pursuant to this rule prior to the refiling of the suit because the circuit court ordered the payment of costs on the same day the first nonsuit was entered, and there had been no showing that appellant had commenced the same claim against the same defendant; according to the plain language of subsection (d) of this rule, the refiling of the same suit or the commencement of the same claim against the same defendant is a condition precedent to a court's authority to order the payment of costs associated with the the action previously dismissed. Kesai v. Almand, 2011 Ark. 207, 382 S.W.3d 669 (2011).

Counterclaims.

When appellant law firm nonsuited its Freedom of Information Act claim under § 25-19-105, the circuit court did not err in permitting appellees, several doctors, an attorney, and a hospital, to move forward on their counterclaim. Under subdivision (a)(3) of this rule, a defendant has the right to pursue a counterclaim even though the plaintiff has dismissed its original claim. Harrill & Sutter, PLLC v. Farrar, 2012 Ark. 180, 402 S.W.3d 511 (2012).

Discretion of Court.

This rule is a tool for trial courts to dispose of cases filed and forgotten, and, ordinarily, the disposition for lack of prosecution should be without prejudice, allowing the plaintiff the right to refile the case; but this rule does not absolutely prohibit a trial court from dismissing with prejudice a case for lack of prosecution. Professional Adjustment Bureau v. Strong, 275 Ark. 249, 629 S.W.2d 284 (1982).

Although this rule does not provide for it, the trial court has the discretion to permit a nonsuit without prejudice even after final submission of the case. Blaylock v. Shearson Lehman Bros., 330 Ark. 620, 954 S.W.2d 939 (1997).

Dismissal by Stipulation.

Court erred in dismissing the case with prejudice based on this rule, because the railroad did not dispute that the claimant dismissed his first case at its request and with its agreement, and a dismissal by stipulation entered into by the parties was not a dismissal by the plaintiff for purposes of subdivision (a)(2) of this rule, and a second filing of the cause of action was not barred by the two-dismissal rule. Richard v. Union Pac. R.R. Co., 2012 Ark. 129, 388 S.W.3d 422 (2012).

Dismissal of Federal Court Action.

The dismissal of a federal court action by stipulation of all parties does not constitute a dismissal by the plaintiff under subdivision (a)(2) of this rule and, therefore, does not trigger the two-dismissal rule since federal procedural rules do not allow a plaintiff to unilaterally dismiss an action and the defendant obtains a benefit by stipulating to a dismissal in federal court. Smith v. Washington, 340 Ark. 460, 10 S.W.3d 877 (2000).

Dismissal with Prejudice.

Where dismissal with prejudice did not indicate that the trial court considered whether settlement for medical expenses, past support and future support of child would be to the child's benefit, the order of dismissal violated the public policy protecting minors and was therefore void on its face. Davis v. Office of Child Support Enforcement, 322 Ark. 352, 908 S.W.2d 649 (1995).

Circuit court properly dismissed buyer's action against the car dealership with prejudice where, pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule, the second dismissal was an adjudication on the merits because the involuntary dismissal of the buyer's amended complaint in 2002 operated as the second dismissal against the dealership due to the buyer's previous voluntary nonsuit in 1999. Smith v. Sidney Moncrief Pontiac, Buick, GMC Co., 353 Ark. 701, 120 S.W.3d 525 (2003), superseded by statute as stated in Powell v. Fernandez, 2013 Ark. App. 595 (2013).

Trial court's decision to dismiss the action was proper because guardian's wrongful death claim was derivative of her negligence action, and the negligence action was subject to dismissal with prejudice as it was undisputed that guardian's second complaint contained the same negligence allegations set out in her first suit, which she voluntarily nonsuited; however, the guardian never properly served the second complaint alleging negligence within the extended time for service and Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(i) mandated dismissal of the negligence claim, thus, under subsection (b) of this rule, the dismissal operated as an adjudication of the merits, making the dismissal with prejudice. Brown v. Pine Bluff Nursing Home, 359 Ark. 471, 199 S.W.3d 45 (2004).

Where appellants had previously taken a voluntary nonsuit of their medical malpractice case, the dismissal of their case for failing to strictly comply with the service requirements of Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(i) was with prejudice. Henyan v. Peek, 359 Ark. 486, 199 S.W.3d 51 (2004).

Court granted physician's petition for a writ of certiorari in administratrix's third medical negligence and wrongful death action where the dismissal of the administratrix's second complaint resulted in an adjudication on the merits; the trial judge erred in denying the physician's motion to dismiss the third complaint with prejudice. Jordan v. Circuit Court, 366 Ark. 326, 235 S.W.3d 487 (2006).

Although a court, in dismissing on certain grounds, may specify that its decision is "with prejudice" or "on the merits," a judgment may not have an effect contrary to that prescribed by the statutes, rules of court, or other rules of law operative in the jurisdiction in which the judgment is rendered. Therefore, even though an original case against a city based on a property dispute was dismissed with prejudice for failing to join indispensable parties, this did not mean that res judicata was properly asserted as a defense in a subsequent action because this was contrary to subsection (b) of this rule. Croney v. Lane, 99 Ark. App. 346, 260 S.W.3d 316 (2007).

It was not error to dismiss a breach of contract claim with prejudice because the claim was previously dismissed under Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) with leave to plead further, so the second dismissal triggered the two-dismissal rule in subdivision (b) of this rule, causing the second dismissal to operate as an adjudication on the merits. Ballard Group, Inc. v. BP Lubricants USA, Inc., 2014 Ark. 276, 436 S.W.3d 445 (2014).

Applying the plain language of subdivision (b) of this rule, when a first Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) dismissal is granted with an opportunity to plead further under Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(j), and a second Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) dismissal is suffered on the same claims after the attempt to plead further, then by operation of the two-dismissal component of subdivision (b), the second Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) dismissal is with prejudice and operates as an adjudication on the merits. Ballard Group, Inc. v. BP Lubricants USA, Inc., 2014 Ark. 276, 436 S.W.3d 445 (2014).

In the decree, the circuit court did not expressly dismiss the claim with prejudice, and thus the decree was construed as dismissing the claim without prejudice. Olson v. Olson, 2014 Ark. 537, 453 S.W.3d 128 (2014).

Circuit court properly dismissed the lenders' second complaint against a borrower with prejudice because, while they noted the circumstances behind their failure to timely file the motion for extension of time, explaining that counsel's mother had been unexpectedly killed in a plane crash, the action had previously been dismissed for failure to comply, a matter that was within the sellers' control. Ogden v. Hughes, 2015 Ark. App. 59, 454 S.W.3d 758 (2015).

In a case alleging negligence and other causes of action arising from an allegedly defective casket, an argument that a dismissal should have been without prejudice was rejected because each cause of action had previously been dismissed, either through a voluntary nonsuit or for failure to state a cause of action or plead facts to avoid the statute of limitation. Therefore, a dismissal with prejudice was proper under the two-dismissal rule. Clayton v. Batesville Casket Co., 2015 Ark. App. 361, 465 S.W.3d 441 (2015).

Dismissal with prejudice under the two-dismissal rule of subsection (b) of this rule was appropriate for the equitable accounting claim; equitable accounting is a remedy under Arkansas law, and not a separate claim. Panhandle Oil & Gas, Inc. v. BHP Billiton Petroleum Fayetteville, LLC, 2017 Ark. App. 201, 520 S.W.3d 277 (2017).

Dismissal Without Prejudice.

Where in an action to collect a debt the plaintiff's attorney failed to appear in court on the date of the trial, the trial court should not have dismissed the action with prejudice for lack of prosecution since it was the first trial setting, it was evidently a case of one-time neglect by counsel, and a dismissal without prejudice would have been in order and consistent with the intent of this rule. Professional Adjustment Bureau v. Strong, 275 Ark. 249, 629 S.W.2d 284 (1982).

The probate court's dismissal of will contest was necessarily with prejudice. Any reconsideration of the dismissal would therefore relate to the dismissal itself, and not to the merits of the will contest. Brantley v. Davis, 305 Ark. 68, 805 S.W.2d 75 (1991).

Where the earlier order was a dismissal without prejudice, it was error for the trial judge to grant summary judgment and preclude defendant's claim on the grounds of res judicata. Magness v. McEntire, 305 Ark. 503, 808 S.W.2d 783 (1991).

Trial court's decision to dismiss the buyer's motion to intervene was not an abuse of discretion; however, such dismissals were to be made without prejudice and the dismissal, while affirmed, was modified to be without prejudice. Gore v. Heartland Cmty. Bank, 356 Ark. 665, 158 S.W.3d 123 (2004).

Appellate court affirmed trial court's order denying attorney fees to a firm as the fact that the firm prevailed on the forum selection clause issue did not mean that it was the prevailing party as to the substantive issues, and the former partner's involuntary dismissal of the case without prejudice did not cause the firm to be the prevailing party where the substantive issues remained. BKD, LLP v. Yates, 367 Ark. 391, 240 S.W.3d 588 (2006).

While appellant's compulsory counterclaim was dismissed by the trial court, it was dismissed without prejudice, which gave him the opportunity to refile it, and the judgment on which appellant sought review did not adjudicate his counterclaim, and thus it was a dangling issue that had yet to be decided, such that the judgment was not a final, appealable order; his notice of appeal did not state that he abandoned any unresolved claims, and no certification for an immediate appeal was filed, and thus the appeal was dismissed without prejudice. Horne v. Henson, 2014 Ark. App. 687 (2014).

Failure to Prosecute.

Circuit court granted the wife a divorce, although she did not attend the trial to prosecute her claim, based solely on testimony offered by the husband to prove and corroborate the wife's ground of adultery; the circuit court had the authority to dismiss the wife's amended complaint for failure to prosecute, or the circuit court could have continued the case, but there was no known authority to permit the husband to proceed with the wife's amended complaint, which she declined to prosecute, and the matter was reversed. Olson v. Olson, 2014 Ark. 537, 453 S.W.3d 128 (2014).

Involuntary Dismissal.

Where attorney for plaintiff had not prepared necessary instruction at time of pretrial conference, as required by local rule, and failed to present such instruction at second pretrial conference despite trial judge's specific order that he do so, trial judge was within his authority in dismissing plaintiff's action and dismissal would be without prejudice. Superior Seeds, Inc. v. Crain, 280 Ark. 142, 655 S.W.2d 415 (1983).

Subsection (b) of this rule was intended to allow the trial courts to clean up their dockets and get stale cases off the active docket. Cory v. Mark Twain Life Ins. Corp., 286 Ark. 20, 688 S.W.2d 934 (1985).

Where the claim arose in 1982, the plaintiff filed her complaint in 1983, there were various amendments, and finally in 1989, the trial court gave the moving party ten days to amend the complaint to show that it was the real party in interest, the trial court's dismissal for failure to comply with a ten-day time limitation was not arbitrary or an abuse of discretion. Insurance from CNA v. Keene Corp., 310 Ark. 605, 839 S.W.2d 199 (1992).

Dismissals based on failure to serve defendant should have been with prejudice where plaintiffs had previously taken voluntary nonsuits. Bakker v. Ralston, 326 Ark. 575, 932 S.W.2d 325 (1996).

Suit should not have been dismissed for want of prosecution where a bankruptcy stay order was in effect. Boatmen's Nat'l Bank v. Moss, 330 Ark. 391, 953 S.W.2d 583 (1997).

The appellants were not entitled to an involuntary dismissal under subsection (b) of this rule on the ground that they prevailed on two motions to dismiss under Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), since the plaintiffs's cause of action was not decided by the trial court when it granted the two motions to dismiss under the latter rule. Middleton v. Lockhart, 344 Ark. 572, 43 S.W.3d 113 (2001).

Trial court erred in dismissing a suit pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule for plaintiffs failure to appear at the trial because: (1) she had not received notice; (2) it could not be said that, pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule, there had been no action shown on the record for the past 12 months; (4) the court should have complied with subsection (b) of this rule and given notice of its intention to dismiss; and (5) plaintiffs due process rights were violated. Jones v. Vowell, 99 Ark. App. 193, 258 S.W.3d 383 (2007).

Court of appeals refused to consider the possibility that plaintiffs case was not dismissed under subsection (b) of this rule for failure to prosecute but was instead dismissed for failure to comply with discovery rules pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 37(d) because there were pending discovery issues to be resolved in the case and there was no indication in the court's statements at the hearing or in the court's order of dismissal that discovery violations were contemplated as a basis for the dismissal. Jones v. Vowell, 99 Ark. App. 193, 258 S.W.3d 383 (2007).

Trial court erred in dismissing a suit pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule for plaintiffs failure to appear at the trial because, inter alia, it appeared on the record that plaintiffs case was dismissed based on her failure to attend a hearing of which she had no notice, which violated one of the basic tenets of due process. Jones v. Vowell, 99 Ark. App. 193, 258 S.W.3d 383 (2007).

Because plaintiff did not know until after the entry of the final order that her case had been dismissed, she therefore had no reason prior to the dismissal to apprise the trial court of any argument regarding lack of notice; the trial court had the means to determine the situation regarding notice or lack thereof but instead dismissed the case without inquiry. Although plaintiff might have explained her circumstances in a postjudgment motion, nothing required that she did so. Jones v. Vowell, 99 Ark. App. 193, 258 S.W.3d 383 (2007).

Circuit court did not err in dismissing a corporation's action against a limited liability company without prejudice under subsection (b) of this rule due to the corporation's complaint for failure to obtain service because the corporation's failure to comply with Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(b) operated as an involuntary dismissal for purposes of subsection (b) of this rule and did not trigger the two-dismissal rule of subsection (b); the prior dismissal of the suit in district court was due to a lack of subject-matter jurisdiction and was not a voluntary nonsuit or a voluntary dismissal under subsection (a) of this rule because the corporation had no choice and no unilateral right to allow the case to proceed in district court, and the literal application of subsection (b) to the case would bring about a harsh and absurd result that did not serve the purpose behind the two-dismissal rule. Jonesboro Healthcare Ctr., LLC v. Eaton-Moery Env'tl. Servs., 2011 Ark. 501, 385 S.W.3d 797 (2011).

Dismissal for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction is not contemplated within the two-dismissal rule of subsection (b) of this rule because a dismissal from a court that lacks subject-matter jurisdiction cannot operate under subsection (b) as an adjudication on the merits; dismissal for lack of subject matter-jurisdiction is not the type of voluntary dismissal contemplated by subsection (a) of this rule, nor the type of involuntary dismissal that is contemplated by subsection (b). Jonesboro Healthcare Ctr., LLC v. Eaton-Moery Env'tl. Servs., 2011 Ark. 501, 385 S.W.3d 797 (2011).

Court did not err in dismissing the complaint with prejudice under subsection (b) of this rule, because the second dismissal operated as an adjudication on the merits due to the claimant's prior nonsuit; the claimant nonsuited his first case, then refiled his second case, and the claimant's second case was involuntarily dismissed since he failed to timely effectuate service with a proper summons. Mack v. Union Pac. R.R. Co., 2012 Ark. App. 115, 394 S.W.3d 848 (2012).

Circuit court lost jurisdiction over a case when it dismissed the case for want of prosecution under subdivision (b) of this rule. It did not have jurisdiction to enter a consent judgment presented by the parties several weeks later. The parties could not create jurisdiction by consent, and no motion to vacate was timely filed under Ark. R. Civ. P. 60(a). Crews v. Deere & Co., 2013 Ark. 67 (2013).

As limited to the particular circumstances of this case, the circuit court abused its discretion in dismissing a 10-year-old case without prejudice for lack of prosecution. While the court's order stated that there had been no activity during the two years before the dismissal, and the record and the parties' arguments indicated that there was no case activity for the past four years, and no party requested a hearing on a pending March 2011 motion for summary judgment or prompted the court to rule on it without a hearing, the fact remained that the court did not decide the motion before the case was dismissed. In addition, the plaintiff responded quickly to the circuit court's notice and unequivocally asked—for at least the third time since the case began—that a trial be scheduled, and the circuit court had not prompted or ordered the parties to act during the past two years by its own account, and perhaps as many as four years. Stewart v. Michaelis, 2016 Ark. App. 588, 508 S.W.3d 97 (2016).

Trial court abused its discretion in dismissing a law firm's breach of contract action against another law firm for want of prosecution under subsection (b) of this rule because the attorney in the plaintiff law firm timely responded and requested a trial date each time the trial court prompted action, and the court did not give notice to plaintiff that the case would be dismissed for want of prosecution or give plaintiff an opportunity to show good cause to continue the case. David A. Couch, PLLC v. Grayson & Grayson, P.A., 2020 Ark. App. 108, 594 S.W.3d 892 (2020).

Circuit court erred in ruling that a superseded complaint was dismissed within the meaning of Ark. R. Civ. P. 41 when no order of dismissal had been entered, and there was no authority to equate superseding a complaint to a dismissal. Woodlands Nursing & Ret. Ctr., Inc. v. DeQueen Therapy & Living Ctr., Inc., 2021 Ark. App. 275, 627 S.W.3d 557 (2021).

Jurisdiction.

Trial court did not have subject-matter jurisdiction to grant a voluntary nonsuit without prejudice to the former employer while an interlocutory appeal by the defendant former employee was pending in the appellate court concerning the trial court's grant of a preliminary injunction and temporary restraining order against the former employee; the collateral-matter exception did not apply because the former employer's motion to dismiss was not collateral to the matter on appeal. Thus, the case was remanded for further proceedings, including resolution of the former employee's motion for damages and attorney's fees caused by the dissolved injunction. Box v. J.B. Hunt Transp., Inc., 2019 Ark. App. 334, 578 S.W.3d 719 (2019).

Nonsuit.

The privilege to take a nonsuit before final submission of a case is absolute. Duty v. Watkins, 298 Ark. 437, 768 S.W.2d 526 (1989); Brown v. St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co., 300 Ark. 241, 778 S.W.2d 610 (1989); Jenkins v. Goldsby, 307 Ark. 558, 822 S.W.2d 842 (1992).

A circuit court nonsuit without prejudice, of an appeal from a justice of the peace court ruling, is tantamount to a dismissal of an appeal so as to leave the judgment of the justice court in force. Wilson v. C & M Used Cars, 46 Ark. App. 281, 878 S.W.2d 427 (1994).

A client effectively waived any negligence claim she might have against attorneys for their decision to seek a nonsuit of the client's medical malpractice claim where the client apparently consented to the nonsuit, did not allege that she did not understand the concept of taking a nonsuit, and retained the attorneys well into filing a second complaint. Pugh v. Griggs, 327 Ark. 577, 940 S.W.2d 445 (1997).

A nonsuit is not effective upon filing; a court order is necessary to grant a nonsuit and the judgment or decree must be entered to be effective. Blaylock v. Shearson Lehman Bros., 330 Ark. 620, 954 S.W.2d 939 (1997).

Although res judicata generally does not bar claims that are nonsuited, buyer was precluded from raising claim of breach of contract when he should have raised it earlier in foreclosure action brought by seller. Pentz v. Romine, 75 Ark. App. 274, 57 S.W.3d 235 (2001).

Judgment in favor of a seller in its foreclosure action against purchasers, which also granted the purchasers' motion for nonsuit of their compulsory counterclaims, was not a final, appealable order because the purchasers were not barred from bringing its claims again; therefore, the purchasers' appeal of the judgment was dismissed without prejudice because the record did not contain an order granting Ark. R. Civ. P. 54 certification. Martin v. Kat's Bar & Grill, LLC, 2009 Ark. App. 737 (2009).

Supreme court dismissed for lack of jurisdiction the appeal of a limited liability company and a debtor from a judgment entered in favor of a bank on its petition for foreclosure because there was no final appealable order since there was a counterclaim that had not been resolved; the LLC and debtor were granted a voluntary nonsuit as to two of their three counter claims, negligence and interference with business expectancies, and the voluntary nonsuit did not operate to make the circuit court's order final and appealable because the counterclaims could be refiled. Grand Valley Ridge, LLC v. Metro. Nat'l Bank, 2010 Ark. 402 (2010).

Supreme Court of Arkansas lacked jurisdiction over an appeal by a defendant and a bail bond company because there was not a final order where the circuit court granted their voluntary dismissal of their civil rights claims against two judges and there was no certification from the circuit court in the record regarding the nonsuit. Toland v. Robinson, 2017 Ark. 41 (2017).

Notice.

When a trial court dismissed a matter brought by a driver and arising out of a car accident, although the trial court failed to provide notice of the dismissal, the driver and his attorney had a duty to remain diligent as to how the case was progressing. As a result, the trial court properly denied the driver's motion pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 60. Watson v. Connors, 372 Ark. 56, 270 S.W.3d 826 (2008).

Dismissal of a contractor's action to gain access to a highway for want of prosecution was valid because the failure of the contractor to receive notice of the dismissal under subsection (b) of this rule did not render the dismissal void. City of Little Rock v. McGeorge Contr. Co., 2010 Ark. App. 765, 377 S.W.3d 523 (2010).

Parties.

Dismissal of medical malpractice action against doctor who died properly dismissed where the motion for substitution of parties pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 25 was not timely filed; however, in accordance with subsection (b) of this rule, the dismissal should have been without prejudice. Wolford v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 331 Ark. 426, 961 S.W.2d 743 (1998).

Reinstatement.

Circuit court lost its jurisdiction to vacate an order that dismissed the entire case because a reinstatement order relating to a breach of contract cross-claim was entered more than ninety days after a dismissal had occurred, and there was no clerical mistake or misprision by a clerk shown. Petrohawk Energy Corp. v. Butler, 2014 Ark. App. 89 (2014).

Standing on Appeal.

Where appellees ultimately took a voluntary nonsuit pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule, the appellants have no standing to appeal from rulings of the trial court having to do with the merits of their claim because the litigation has been resolved in their favor. Cowan v. Schmidle, 312 Ark. 256, 848 S.W.2d 421 (1993).

Voluntary Dismissal.

Where, in an action by a mobile home buyer against the seller and the nonresident manufacturer of the mobile home, the defendants argued that two prior voluntary dismissals of the action by the plaintiff operated as an adjudication on the merits, their argument constituted an attack, not on the trial court's authority in the present action, but on the correctness of its ruling regarding their defense of res judicata, a ruling on a defense which could not be tested by a petition for a writ of prohibition. Tucker Enters., Inc. v. Hartje, 278 Ark. 320, 650 S.W.2d 559 (1983).

An interlocutory decree of adoption, while it is in force, has the same legal effect as a final decree of adoption and cannot be voluntarily dismissed. Toai Cong Pham v. Hanh My Truong, 291 Ark. 442, 725 S.W.2d 569 (1987).

After a compulsory counterclaim has been filed, a plaintiff may once voluntarily dismiss his complaint without prejudice, to refile it within one year. Lemon v. Laws, 305 Ark. 143, 806 S.W.2d 1 (1991).

The doctrine of res judicata does not bar a plaintiff from refiling a claim after he has exercised his right to one voluntary dismissal under this rule. Lemon v. Laws, 305 Ark. 143, 806 S.W.2d 1 (1991).

Where the appellant-client exercised his absolute right as a plaintiff to voluntarily dismiss his claim against the attorney, that first dismissal was without prejudice and was not an adjudication on the merits. Lemon v. Laws, 305 Ark. 143, 806 S.W.2d 1 (1991).

Under subsection (a) of this rule, a trial court may grant a request for voluntary nonsuit where the trial court has announced its decision to grant the defendants' motions for summary judgment but the order has not been entered. Wright v. Eddinger, 320 Ark. 151, 894 S.W.2d 937 (1995).

Under this rule, a defendant may once voluntarily dismiss his or her compulsory counterclaim without prejudice to refile it within one year. Linn v. NationsBank, 341 Ark. 57, 14 S.W.3d 500 (2000).

Trial court erred in granting the alleged tortfeasors' motion for summary judgment after it refused to grant the alleged victim's nonsuit pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule, where the alleged victim's submission of his voluntary nonsuit motion prior to the time argument had closed and the case had been submitted to the court meant that the trial court had no choice but to grant the motion. Coombs v. Hot Springs Vill. Prop. Owners Ass'n, 75 Ark. App. 364, 57 S.W.3d 772 (2001).

Trial court erred in not granting individual's motion for a nonsuit without prejudice and instead granting public entities' motion to dismiss where individual's motion was clearly presented to the trial court prior to submission of the case; moreover, entry of an order granting a nonsuit before submission of the case, as required by subsection (a) of this rule, was not discretionary with the trial court as subsection (a) provided that only one voluntary dismissal without prejudice was allowed and an abuse of the nonsuit procedure by substituting plaintiffs for the same cause of action would subject the attorney to sanctions under Ark. R. Civ. P. 11. White v. Perry, 348 Ark. 675, 74 S.W.3d 628 (2002).

Trial court erred in granting state's motion to strike appellant's motion to dismiss a forfeiture action because, after voluntarily dismissing its first forfeiture complaint for failure to complete service of process, the state neglected to toll the limitations period to invoke the one-year savings statute because it did not file the forfeiture complaint within the 120-day period required by § 5-64-505(g)(3). Mitchell v. State, 94 Ark. App. 304, 229 S.W.3d 583 (2006).

Dismissal of the patient's medical malpractice claim was appropriate because it was untimely under § 16-56-126(a)(1) since subdivision (a)(1) of this rule stated that the one-year period began when the circuit court entered an order granting the non-suit; additionally, Ark. R. Civ. P. 58 did not require courts to notify parties of the entry of an order of judgment. The patient also offered no proof that the hospital's attorney defrauded her or intended to defraud her in any way when he told her that the signing date was the date from which the statute would run. Collins v. St. Vincent Doctors, 98 Ark. App. 190, 253 S.W.3d 26, cert. denied, 552 U.S. 902, 128 S. Ct. 233, 169 L. Ed. 2d 174 (2007).

In a bank's foreclosure action, the homeowner's appeal was dismissed as the circuit court's order was not a final, appealable order under subsection (a) of this rule where the written order did not reflect the circuit court's disposition of the homeowner's voluntarily nonsuited counterclaims against the bank. Bevans v. Deutsche Bank Nat'l Trust Co., 373 Ark. 105, 281 S.W.3d 740 (2008).

Where a discharged teacher took a voluntary nonsuit under this rule of the claim under § 6-17-1510(c) she filed in state county court, she had the right to refile that claim within one year, which she did. Richardson v. Booneville Sch. Dist., 766 F. Supp. 2d 910 (W.D. Ark. 2011).

In an action brought by a commercial landlord against two tenants for unpaid rent and property damage, a final appealable order was lacking after a default judgment was granted against tenant #1, partial summary judgment was entered against tenant #2 on the unpaid rent claim, and the landlord took a voluntary nonsuit without prejudice of "all pending but unresolved" claims. The partial summary judgment on the unpaid rent claim was subject to reconsideration and even revision before the final resolution of the case and it could not be considered a "pending but unresolved" claim that was dismissed by the voluntary nonsuit; in addition, the landlord could refile its claim for property damage against tenant #2 after the voluntary nonsuit. A Time for You v. Park H Props., LLC, 2019 Ark. App. 282 (2019).

Will Contest.

Dismissal of a suit contesting a will cannot be done without prejudice, since a probate proceeding is a special proceeding rather than an “action” because it is not a civil action under Ark. R. Civ. P. 2 or 3, and since a will contestant cannot take a nonsuit under this rule because such a contest is not an independent proceeding in itself; thus, dismissal with prejudice is necessary, since it would seriously disrupt the administration and distribution of estates if a will contest would be dismissed voluntarily or without prejudice and refiled at some indefinite later date. Screeton v. Crumpler, 273 Ark. 167, 617 S.W.2d 847 (1981).

Rule 42. Consolidation; separate trials.

(a) Consolidation. When actions involving a common question of law or fact are pending before the court, it may order a joint hearing or trial of any or all the matters in issue in the actions; it may order all the actions consolidated; and it may make such orders concerning proceedings therein as may tend to avoid unnecessary costs or delays.

(b) Separate Trials. (1) The court, in furtherance of convenience or to avoid prejudice, or when separate trials will be conducive to expedition and economy, may order a separate trial of any claim, cross-claim, counterclaim, or third-party claim, or of any separate issue or any number of claims, cross-claims, counterclaims, third-party claims, or issues.

(2) Notwithstanding paragraph (1), all actions tried before a jury in which punitive damages are sought shall, on the motion of any party and if warranted by the evidence, be conducted in a bifurcated trial before the same jury. The jury shall first determine the liability of the defendant or defendants for compensatory damages, the amount of compensatory damages to be awarded, and, at the discretion of the circuit court, the liability of the defendant or defendants for punitive damages. Should it be necessary, the jury will then determine, in a separate proceeding, the liability of the defendant or defendants for punitive damages, if that issue was not decided previously, and the amount of punitive damages to be awarded. Evidence of a defendant’s financial condition shall not be admitted in the first proceeding unless relevant to an issue other than the amount of punitive damages.

HISTORY: Amended February 26, 2015, effective April 1, 2015.

Reporter’s Notes to Rule 42:

1. Rule 42 is substantially the same as FRCP 42. Prior Arkansas law concerning consolidation of cases for trial was found in superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 27-1304 and 27-1305 (Repl. 1962) and little change is effected by this rule. Generally speaking, consolidation of cases is normally permitted for convenience and economy in judicial administration and not to merge claims into a single cause or change parties’ rights. Johnson v. Manhattan R. Co., 289 U.S. 479, 53 S. Ct. 721 (1933). The question of whether to order consolidation rests in the sound discretion of the trial court. United States v. Knauer, 149 F. 2d 519 (C.C.A. 7th, 1945), aff’d, 328 U.S. 654, 66 S. Ct. 1304.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes: 2015 Amendment:

New paragraph (2) has been added to subdivision (b), with its original text designated as paragraph (1). In jury trials, paragraph (2) requires a separate trial, on motion of any party, to determine the amount of punitive damages. The circuit court, in the exercise of its discretion, determines whether liability for punitive damages is to be decided in the first or second phase of the bifurcated proceeding. With the adoption of this amendment, Ark. Code Ann. § 16-55-211 is superseded pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 16-11-301.

Section 16-55-211 required bifurcation of the entire punitive-damages claim on motion of a party, as do statutes elsewhere. E.g., Minn. Stat. Ann. § 549.20(4); S.C. Code § 15-32-520. By contrast, other states require a separate trial only as to the amount of punitive damages. E.g., Mo. Stat. Ann. § 510.263(1)-(3); Tenn. Code Ann. § 29-39-104(a).

The amendment stakes out a middle ground between these approaches; codifies the pre-2003 practice in Arkansas; and, except as to the amount of punitive damages, leaves the extent of bifurcation to the discretion of the circuit court.

CASE NOTES

In General.

While subsection (b) of this rule does allow the trial court to order separate trials, under certain circumstances a separate trial order under this subsection usually results in but one judgment. Barnhart v. City of Fayetteville, 316 Ark. 742, 875 S.W.2d 79 (1994).

Trial court properly granted a change of custody in a dependency-neglect case that had been consolidated with a petition for a change of custody; even though reunification was often the goal throughout much of a dependency-neglect proceeding, it was not necessary to institute reunification if it proved to be against the best interest of the child and where the primary consideration was the welfare and best interest of the child. Miller v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 86 Ark. App. 172, 167 S.W.3d 153 (2004).

Appeal.

An order granting separate trials under this rule is not appealable as a final judgment. Barnhart v. City of Fayetteville, 316 Ark. 742, 875 S.W.2d 79 (1994).

Appellate court could not accept debtors' argument that the order of consolidation in the case somehow changed the procedural posture of their suit against bank; the action which was the subject of the appeal was one initiated by debtors and, thus, the bankruptcy stay was inapplicable. Dwiggins v. Elk Horn Bank & Trust Co., 364 Ark. 344, 219 S.W.3d 181 (2005).

Appealable Order.

Applying Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(b)(2), the appellate court lack an appealable order because the claims against certain defendants had not been dismissed or otherwise resolved, there was uncertainty regarding whether certain defendants were served, and no separate docket numbers were issued to distinguish the severed actions and the trial court continued to issue orders that pertained to all plaintiffs. Ellis v. Agrilience, LLC, 2012 Ark. App. 549 (2012).

Partition action was not a separate action where there were no separate docket numbers issued to distinguish severed actions, the trial court entered orders pertaining to all the parties, and the trial that resulted in the instant order was merely a separate trial that did not result in a final judgment in the absence of an Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(b) certificate. Green v. Stueve, 2016 Ark. App. 46 (2016).

Bifurcation.

A bifurcation should be used on a case by case basis based upon the informed discretion of the court; a routine bifurcation, however, would not be an exercise of discretion and, absent an abuse of discretion, the decision will not be disturbed on appeal. Hunter v. McDaniel Constr. Co., 274 Ark. 178, 623 S.W.2d 196 (1981); LLLL Constr. Co. v. Mehlburger, Tanner, Renshaw & Assocs., 16 Ark. App. 267, 702 S.W.2d 29 (1985).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by bifurcating issues of liability and damages in a personal injury action involving a vehicular collision. Hunter v. McDaniel Constr. Co., 274 Ark. 178, 623 S.W.2d 196 (1981).

The bifurcation of a personal injury trial, pursuant to this rule, on the issues of liability and damages does not deprive the plaintiffs of their right to a jury trial as guaranteed by Ark. Const., Art. 2, § 7, and Ark. R. Civ. P. 38 and 39. Hunter v. McDaniel Constr. Co., 274 Ark. 178, 623 S.W.2d 196 (1981).

Where testimony as to the amount of damages would have consumed a great deal of time as there were four parties to the suit and was unnecessary until the issue of liability had been resolved, bifurcation was not unjustifiable as it resulted in judicial economy and shortened proceeding with no abuse of discretion. Fletcher v. Duke, 5 Ark. App. 223, 635 S.W.2d 2 (1982).

Where the cause involved six parties and their respective tort and contractual claims, and the indemnity claims could not be determined until the issue of who, among four defendants, was liable for the plaintiffs' personal injuries, the trial court had good reason to bifurcate the trial, i.e., to avoid confusion and any resulting prejudice when considering the different and distinct claims of the respective parties. LLLL Constr. Co. v. Mehlburger, Tanner, Renshaw & Assocs., 16 Ark. App. 267, 702 S.W.2d 29 (1985).

Where plaintiff filed suit for breach of a settlement contract claim, strict liability, negligence, breach of warranty, and misrepresentations, allowing all claims to be tried together would result in the admission of evidence of settlement negotiations which would unfairly prejudice the defense of the claims for liability other than breach of the settlement contract; the only way to avoid unfair prejudice would be to bifurcate the breach of settlement contract claim. Ciba-Geigy Corp. v. Alter, 309 Ark. 426, 834 S.W.2d 136 (1992).

Consolidation Improper.

Despite the fact that there were common issues of fact and law in the claims by landowners against railroad for punitive damages and that the consolidation also saved judicial time, ordering the consolidation amounted to an abuse of discretion because of the resulting prejudice where the consolidation of four cases placed undue emphasis on the need to penalize the tortfeasor. Missouri Pac. R.R. v. Arkansas Sheriff's Boys' Ranch, 280 Ark. 53, 655 S.W.2d 389 (1983).

The trial court erred in consolidating the case involving the determination of the amount of child support for the appellant mother's child with another case involving the determination of the amount of child support for another child born to the appellee by another woman where the appellee initiated a petition to consolidate the cases when there was no pending litigation in either case and, in conjunction with this petition, he further sought to reduce the child support he paid to the appellant. Moreland v. Hortman, 72 Ark. App. 363, 39 S.W.3d 23 (2001).

Discretion of Court.

An order of consolidation is a matter of discretion with the trial judge, and will not be reversed except for abuse of that discretion. Missouri Pac. R.R. v. Arkansas Sheriff's Boys' Ranch, 280 Ark. 53, 655 S.W.2d 389 (1983).

Absent an abuse of discretion the decision of the trial court on whether to separate the liability phase from the damage phase of a trial will not be disturbed on appeal. Transit Homes, Inc. v. Bellamy, 282 Ark. 453, 671 S.W.2d 153 (1984), overruled, Peters v. Pierce, 314 Ark. 8, 858 S.W.2d 680 (1993).

A trial court's abuse of discretion in denying severance can be demonstrated by a showing of prejudice to the complaining party. Pennington v. Harvest Foods, Inc., 326 Ark. 704, 934 S.W.2d 485 (1996).

Purpose.

The purpose of this rule is to further convenience, avoid delay and prejudice, and serve the needs of justice, and the primary concern is efficient judicial administration, rather than the wishes of the parties, as long as no party suffers prejudice by the bifurcation. Hunter v. McDaniel Constr. Co., 274 Ark. 178, 623 S.W.2d 196 (1981).

The primary purpose of this rule is to advance judicial economy as long as the parties are not prejudiced. Pennington v. Harvest Foods, Inc., 326 Ark. 704, 934 S.W.2d 485 (1996).

Separate Trials.

Severance should have been granted in case alleging several civil conspiracies involving several defendants. Pennington v. Harvest Foods, Inc., 326 Ark. 704, 934 S.W.2d 485 (1996).

Severance Improper.

In a negligence action, severance of appellants' cross-claims was not proper where the jury, responsible for apportioning fault, heard testimony about third parties' possible negligence but were told that appellees' claims against them were dropped; further, considering the fact that the third parties were present at trial and testified as to their role in the case, it is hard to fathom how severing the cross-claims promoted judicial economy. FMC Corp. v. Helton, 360 Ark. 465, 202 S.W.3d 490 (2005).

Severance of appellants' cross-claims in a negligence case was not proper where the jury heard testimony about third parties' possible negligence but were told that appellees' claims against them were dropped; further, because the third parties were present at trial and testified as to their role in the case, severing the cross-claims did not promote judicial economy. FMC Corp. v. Helton, 360 Ark. 465, 202 S.W.3d 490 (2005).

Rule 43. Taking of testimony.

(a) Form. In all trials, the testimony of witnesses shall be taken in open court, unless otherwise provided by these rules, including Rule 88 relating to virtual and blended court proceedings, or as otherwise provided by law.

(b) Affirmation in Lieu of Oath. Whenever under these rules an oath is required to be taken, a solemn affirmation may be accepted in lieu thereof.

(c) Evidence on Motions. When a motion is based on facts not appearing of record, the court may hear the matter on affidavits presented by the respective parties, or the court may direct that the matter be heard wholly or partly on oral testimony or deposition.

(d) Interpreters. The court may appoint an interpreter of its own selection and may fix his reasonable compensation. The compensation shall be paid out of funds provided by law or by one or more of the parties as the court may direct, and may be taxed ultimately as costs, in the discretion of the court.

HISTORY: Amended February 10, 2005; amended May 19, 2022, effective June 1, 2022.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 43:

1. Prior to the 1975 amendments, FRCP 43 was entitled "Evidence" and provided the basic rule of evidence in civil cases in federal courts. The adoption of the Federal Rules of Evidence abrogated much of FRCP 43; hence its substantial revision in 1975. By enacting Act 723 of 1976, the Arkansas Legislature adopted the Uniform Rules of Evidence which are identical to the Federal Rules of Evidence insofar as the mode and order of interrogation and presentation of testimony are concerned. Hence, Rule 43 is identical to FRCP 43.

2. Sections (b) and (c) do not work any changes in Arkansas procedure. Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-201 (Repl. 1962) permitted the use of affidavits upon motions although inherent in that statute was the right of the trial court to require oral or deposition testimony in lieu of affidavits.

3. Section (d) is identical to FRCP 43(f) and provides for the permissive appointment of an interpreter and the payment of his compensation. Rule 604 of the Uniform Rules of Evidence touches upon the use of interpreters and requires that he be subject to the provisions of the Uniform Rules concerning qualifications as an expert and the administration of an oath or affirmation that he will make a true translation.

CASE NOTES

Contempt Proceeding.

Order entering a permanent restraining order requiring a mother to refrain from interfering with a father's visitation with their minor child, as well as an order holding the mother in contempt of court, were upheld where the trial court was within its discretion in hearing the matter on affidavits pursuant to subsection (c) of this rule; the mother was aware of the contempt hearing but did not appear. Brock v. Eubanks, 102 Ark. App. 165, sub. op., 102 Ark. App. 165, 288 S.W.3d 272 (2008).

Rule 44. Proof of official record.

(a) Authentication.

(1) Domestic Record. An official record kept within the United States, or any state, district or commonwealth, or within a territory subject to the administrative or judicial jurisdiction of the United States, or an entry therein, when admissible for any purpose, may be evidenced by an official publication thereof or by a copy attested by the officer having the legal custody of the record, or by the officer's deputy, and accompanied by a certificate that such officer has the custody. The certificate may be made by a judge of a court of record having jurisdiction in the governmental unit in which the record is kept, authenticated by the seal of the court, or by any public officer having a seal of office and having official duties in the governmental unit in which the record is kept, authenticated by the seal of his office.

(2) Foreign Record. A foreign official record, or an entry therein, when admissible for any purpose, may be evidenced by an official publication, or copy thereof, attested by a person authorized to make attestation, and accompanied by a final certification as to the genuineness of the signature and official position (i) of the attesting person, or (ii) of any foreign official whose certificate of genuineness of signature and official position relates to the attestation or is in a chain of certificates of genuineness of signature and official position relating to the attestation. A final certificate may be made by a secretary of embassy or legation, consul general, consul, vice consul, or consular agent of the United States, or a diplomatic or consular official of the foreign country assigned or accredited to the United States. If a reasonable opportunity has been given to all parties to investigate the authenticity and accuracy of the documents, the court may, for good cause shown, (i) admit an attested copy without final certificate or (ii) permit the foreign official record to be evidenced by an attested summary with or without a final certification. The final certification is unnecessary if the record and the attestation are certified as provided in a treaty or convention to which the United States and the foreign country in which the official record is located are parties.

(b) Alternate Method for Certain Domestic and Foreign Records. The statutes, codes, written laws, executive acts, or legislative or judicial proceedings of any domestic or foreign jurisdiction or governmental unit thereof may also be evidenced by any publication proved to be commonly accepted as proof thereof in the tribunals having jurisdiction in that governmental unit.

(c) Lack of Record. A written statement that after diligent search, no record or entry of a specified tenor is found to exist in the records designated by the statement, authenticated as provided in subdivision (a)(1) of the rule in the case of a domestic record, or complying with the requirements of subdivision (a)(2) of this rule for a summary in the case of a foreign record, is admissible as evidence that the records contain no such record or entry.

(d) Other Proof. This rule does not prevent the proof of official records or of entry or lack of entry therein by an other method authorized by law.

HISTORY: Amended November 8, 1993, effective January 1, 1994.

Reporter’s Notes to Rule 44:

- 1. With the exception of minor wording changes, Rule 44 is substantially identical to FRCP 44. These changes are lifted from superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-2505 (Supp. 1975), which was taken largely from FRCP 44. These changes do not affect the substance of the Federal Rule.
- 2. In the last sentence of Section (a)(1), the phrase “of the district or political subdivision” which is found in the Federal Rule, is omitted and the phrase “having jurisdiction in the governmental unit” is inserted in lieu thereof. The effect of this change is to require that the judge making the certificate be the judge of a court which has jurisdiction.
- 3. Section (b) includes the alternate method of proving certain records previously found in superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-2505(c) (Supp. 1975). Although this provision is not found in FRCP 44, it has been held that such proof is proper. United States v. Aluminum Company of America, 1 F.R.D. 71 (D.C. N.Y., 1939). Also, it should be noted that Rule 902 (5) of the Uniform Rules of Evidence permits the use of official publications without extrinsic evidence of authenticity.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 1993 Amendment:

The changes made in subdivisions (a)(1) and (a)(2) are identical to those made in the corresponding federal rule in 1991. The amendment to subdivision (a)(1) strikes the references to specific territories, two of which are no longer subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, and adds a generic term to describe governments having a relationship with the United States such that their official record should be treated as domestic records.

The amendment to subdivision (a)(2) adds a sentence to dispense with the final certification by diplomatic officers when the United States and the foreign country where the record is located are parties to a treaty or convention that abolishes or displaces the requirement. In that event the treaty or convention is to be followed. This changes the former procedure for authenticating foreign official records only with respect to records from countries that are parties to the Hague Convention Abolishing the Requirement of Legalization for Foreign Public Documents. It does not affect the former practice of attesting the records, but only changes the method of certifying the attestation. See generally Comment, 11 Harv. Int'l L.J. 476 (1970).

CASE NOTES

Applicability.

Petition to revive a foreign judgment was properly granted because it was authenticated under this rule where it was signed by a clerk for a United States Bankruptcy Court; the Arkansas Supreme Court's rule-making authority over procedural matters was exclusive. It was argued that the proper authentication process was not followed when a certified copy of the judgment was attached to an application. Bird v. Shaffer, 2012 Ark. App. 464 (2012).

Uniform Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act, § 16-66-601 et seq., was enacted before Ark. Const. Amend. 80 and § 16-11-301, and Ark. R. Civ. P. 44 therefore supersedes it with respect to how foreign judgments must be filed with an Arkansas court. Agility Fin. Credit Union v. Largent, 2018 Ark. App. 358, 552 S.W.3d 471 (2018).

Registration of Foreign Judgment.

Circuit court did not err in concluding that the creditor's foreign judgment did not serve as a lien on real estate owned by the judgment debtor where the creditor had not registered the judgment as required by Ark. R. Civ. P. 44. Although the foreign judgment was accompanied with a certificate of authenticity, the judgment itself was not attested or certified to be a true copy of the original document. Agility Fin. Credit Union v. Largent, 2018 Ark. App. 358, 552 S.W.3d 471 (2018).

Rule 44.1. Determination of foreign law.

(a) Notice. A party who intends to raise an issue concerning the law of any jurisdiction or governmental unit thereof outside this State shall give notice in his pleading or other reasonable written notice.

(b) Materials to Be Considered. In determining the law of any jurisdiction or governmental unit thereof outside this State, the court may consider any relevant material or source, including testimony, whether or not submitted by a party or admissible under the rules of evidence.

(c) Court Decision and Review. The court, not the jury, shall determine the law of any jurisdiction or governmental unit thereof outside this State. Its determination is subject to review on appeal as a question of law.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 44.1:

1. Rule 44.1 is identical to superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-2504 (Supp. 1975) and therefore works no changes in Arkansas practice. This rule is substantially the same as FRCP 44.1, but the wording is changed to adapt the rule to state practice. Whereas the Federal Rule is concerned only with the determination of the law of a foreign country, this rule applies to the law of any governmental unit outside the State of Arkansas.

CASE NOTES

Federal Law.

Since federal specifications are terms and conditions relating to certain government contracts and are not matters of "federal law," this rule does not apply to litigation involving the interpretation of a specification; the appellate court is not dealing with a question of law which the trial court should have determined, but factual matters relating to the construction of a contractual agreement between the parties in litigation which were properly submitted to the jury. Precision Steel Whse., Inc. v. Anderson-Martin Mach. Co., 313 Ark. 258, 854 S.W.2d 321 (1993).

This rule does not call for the “interpretation” of law but merely provides for notice and “determination” of foreign law. Precision Steel Whse., Inc. v. Anderson-Martin Mach. Co., 313 Ark. 258, 854 S.W.2d 321 (1993).

Given that the circuit court allowed the employee to question witnesses about the OSHA regulations and gave a jury instruction about them, it did not abuse its discretion by refusing to take judicial notice of the OSHA regulations under Ark. R. Evid. 201; this rule provided the best method for invoking federal law. Patterson v. UPS, 102 Ark. App. 378, 285 S.W.3d 683 (2008).

Notice.

Motion made on the date of the trial for the court to take judicial notice of foreign law did not comply with either alternative of this rule

Rule 45. Subpoena.

(a) Form and Issuance. A subpoena issued by the clerk shall be under seal, state the name of the court and the title of the action, and command each person to whom it is directed to appear and give testimony at the time and place therein specified. An attorney admitted to practice in this State, as an officer of the court, may also issue and sign a subpoena in any action pending in a court of this State in which the attorney is counsel of record.

(b) For Production of Documentary Evidence. (1) Any subpoena issued pursuant to this rule may command the person to whom it is directed to produce the books, papers, documents, or tangible things designated therein. The subpoena need not be joined with a subpoena to appear for a deposition, hearing, or trial. If a subpoena does not command an appearance, then it must be served by e-mail, facsimile, or hand delivery on all other parties at least three (3) business days before the subpoena is served on the person to whom it is directed. The party issuing a subpoena that does not command an appearance must promptly provide a copy to all other parties of all material produced in response to the subpoena.

(2) The court, upon motion made promptly and in any event at or before the time specified in the subpoena for compliance therewith, may (i) quash or modify the subpoena if it is unreasonable or oppressive or (ii) condition denial of the motion upon the advancement by the person in whose behalf the subpoena is issued of the reasonable cost of producing the books, papers, documents or tangible things.

(c) Service. A subpoena for a trial or hearing or for a deposition may be served at any place within this State in the manner prescribed in this subdivision. A subpoena for a trial or hearing or for a deposition may be served by the sheriff of the county in which it is to be served, by his deputy, or by any other person who is not a party and is not less than eighteen (18) years of age. Service shall be made by delivering a copy of the subpoena to the person named therein; provided, however, that a subpoena for a trial or hearing may be served by telephone by a sheriff or his deputy when the trial or hearing is to be held in the county of the witness' residence. A subpoena for a trial or hearing or for a deposition may also be served by an attorney of record for a party by any form of mail addressed to the person to be served with a return receipt requested and delivery restricted to the addressee or agent of the addressee.

(d) Subpoena for Trial or Hearing. At the request of any party the clerk of the court before which the action is pending shall issue a subpoena for a trial or hearing, or a subpoena for the production at a trial or hearing of documentary evidence, signed and sealed, but otherwise in blank, to the party requesting it, who shall fill it in before service. The subpoena may also be issued by an attorney pursuant to subdivision (a) of this rule. Notice of the subpoena shall be promptly given to all parties in the manner prescribed by Rule 5(b). A witness, regardless of his county of residence, shall be obligated to attend for examination on trial or hearing in a civil action anywhere in this State when properly served with a subpoena at least two (2) days prior to the trial or hearing. The court may grant leave for a subpoena to be issued within two (2) days of the trial or hearing. The subpoena must be accompanied by a tender of a witness fee calculated at the rate of $30.00 per day for attendance and $0.25 per mile for travel from the witness' residence to the place of the trial or hearing. In the event of telephone service of a subpoena by a sheriff or his deputy, the party who caused the witness to be subpoenaed shall tender the fee prior to or at the time of the witness' appearance at the trial or hearing. If a continuance is granted and if the witness is provided adequate notice thereof, reservice of the subpoena shall not be necessary. Any person subpoenaed for examination at the trial or hearing shall remain in attendance until excused by the party causing him to be subpoenaed or, after giving testimony, by the court.

(e) Subpoena for Taking Depositions: Place of Examination. Upon the filing of a notice of deposition upon oral examination pursuant to Rule 30(b), the clerk of the court in which the action is pending shall, upon the request of the party giving notice, issue a subpoena in accordance with the notice. The subpoena may also be issued by an attorney pursuant to subdivision (a) of this rule. The subpoena may command the person to whom it is directed to produce and permit inspection and copying of designated books, papers, documents, or tangible things which constitute or contain matters within the scope of the examination permitted by Rule 26(b), but in that event the subpoena will be subject to the provisions of Rule 26(c) and subdivision (b) of the rule. The witness must be properly served at least five (5) business days prior to the date of the deposition, unless the court grants leave for subpoena to be issued within that period. The subpoena must be accompanied by a tender of a witness fee calculated at the rate of $30.00 per day for attendance and $0.25 per mile for travel from the witness' residence to the place of the deposition.

The person to whom the subpoena is directed may, within ten (10) days after the service thereof or on or before the time specified in the subpoena for compliance if such time is less than ten (10) days after service, serve upon the attorney causing the subpoena to be issued written objection to inspection or copying of any or all of the designated materials. If objection is made, the party causing the subpoena to be issued shall not be entitled to inspect and copy the materials except pursuant to an order of the court before which the deposition may be used. The party causing the subpoena to be issued may, if objection has been made, move, upon notice to the deponent, for an order at any time before or during the taking of the deposition.

A witness subpoenaed under this subdivision may be required to attend a deposition at any place within 100 miles of where he resides, or is employed, or transacts his business in person, or at such other convenient place as is fixed by an order of court.

(f) Contempt. When a witness fails to attend in obedience to a subpoena or intentionally evades the service of a subpoena by concealment or otherwise, the court may issue a warrant for arresting and bringing the witness before the court at a time and place to be fixed in the warrant, to give testimony and answer for contempt.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 45:

1. Rule 45 contains numerous changes from FRCP 45. These changes are generally designed to continue certain procedures which were provided under superseded Arkansas law. Section (a) provides the mechanics for the issuance of a subpoena and whereas under FRCP 45 a subpoena is issued only by the court clerk, this section retains the authority of officers before whom depositions are taken to issue subpoenas for that purpose under Section (d). Superseded Arkansas law was found in Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-501, et seq. (Repl. 1962), the bulk of which is retained under this rule.

2. Section (b) provides for the issuance of a subpoena duces tecum. Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-357 (Repl. 1962) seemed to suggest that only those items which were admissible in evidence were subject to being subpoenaed. However, superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-540 (Repl. 1962), which was patterned after FRCP 45(b), appeared to make the subpoena just as broad as that under the Federal Rule. The latter provides for the quashing of a subpoena duces tecum only for certain stated grounds and an objection based solely upon the alleged inadmissibility of the items sought is insufficient. United States v. 691.81 Acres of Land, 443 F.2d 461 (C.C.A. 6th, 1971).

3. Section (c) permits any person authorized under Rule 4(c) to serve a summons to also serve a subpoena. Witnesses residing outside the county must receive five days' notice and those within the county three days' notice. Service by telephone is permitted where the witness is to be served in the same county where the trial is to be held. Ark. Stat. Ann.

§ 28-508 (Repl. 1962) is superseded. The rule essentially incorporates provisions of superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 28-510 and 28-514. Those statutes obligated a witness to attend a trial when properly served and tendered expenses and fees, and failure to do so authorized the court to hold the witness in contempt or have the witness arrested and brought before the court for contempt proceedings. Subpoenas to be served within three days of trial must be issued with leave of the court.

4. Section (d) also differs significantly from the Federal Rule concerning subpoenas for deposition purposes. Under the latter, the clerk issues the subpoena after formal notice is filed. Under this rule, following superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-539 (Repl. 1962), the subpoena can be issued by either the court clerk or by an officer authorized to take depositions. The third paragraph of Section (d) is modified from the Federal Rule to provide simply that a witness subpoenaed for purpose of a deposition cannot be required to travel outside the county wherein he resides or transacts his business in order to give the deposition unless ordered to do so by the court.

5. Section (e) permits service of subpoenas throughout the State of Arkansas. It does not, however, attempt to regulate the enforcement of a subpoena which is to be served outside this State. Whether a sister state will honor an Arkansas subpoena depends upon the reciprocity between the two states and ultimately the law of the sister state.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1986 Amendment:

Rule 45(c) is substantially revised. The 1986 amendment changes prior Arkansas practice by permitting any person who is not a party and is not less than 18 years of age to serve a subpoena, thus adopting the federal practice. Moreover, the amended rule permits service of a subpoena by mail in the same manner as service of process under Rule 4(d)(8). The amended rule thus permits an attorney for any party to serve a subpoena by mail, so long as the requirements of Rule 4(d)(8) with respect to restricted delivery, return receipt, etc. are satisfied. The 1986 amendment also eliminates the distinction between witnesses residing in the county of trial and those residing outside the county. All witnesses must be served at least five days prior to trial, unless the court grants leave to allow service within that period, and all must be paid the same attendance fee and travel expenses. These fees, specified in the amended rule, must be paid at the time of trial, a change from the prior practice of requiring payment or tender of the fees at the time of service. Rule 45(c) also now makes plain that re-service of the subpoena is not necessary if a continuance is granted in the matter and the witness is given sufficient notice prior to his attendance. In that situation, the witness would be compelled to attend trial on the new date, and a new subpoena would not be required. Subsection (d) is also amended to make plain that the five-day minimum for service and the attendance and travel fee requirements apply to subpoenas for taking depositions as well as to subpoenas for appearance at trial. However, there is no change in the requirement that a deposition witness can be deposed only in the county where he resides, is employed, or transacts his business in person, absent a court order.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1988 Amendment:

Rule 45 is amended in an attempt to refine some changes made in subsections (c) and (d) in 1986. First, language in both subsections requiring payment of the witness fee at the time and place of the trial or deposition has been deleted. Under the amended rule, the witness fee must be paid or tendered when served with the subpoena, as was the case prior to the 1986 amendment. Second, language in both subsections basing the witness fee on the witness' "reasonable expenses for the loss of time based on [his] earnings" has been deleted. Accordingly, the witness fee is a flat $30 per day. The latter change was made because of problems caused by occurrence witnesses who have claimed extremely high fees based on their earnings for a single day. Such highly paid individuals, like all other citizens, have a societal obligation to come forth and give evidence, much as they have an obligation to serve, when called, as jurors. To vary the witness fee to take into account their high salaries would cause obvious difficulties for litigants unable to pay such a fee. Expert witnesses are covered by Rule 26(b)(4)(C).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1989 Amendment:

Rule 45 has undergone several modifications since it became effective in 1979. Because the 1989 amendment rewrites virtually the entire rule, previous Reporter's Notes are superseded and should be consulted only for historical purposes.

1. Subdivision (a) provides the mechanics for the issuance of a subpoena. Subpoenas may now be issued only by the clerk of court. Authority for the issuance of deposition subpoenas by officers before whom depositions may be taken has been eliminated.

2. Subdivision (b) provides for the issuance of a subpoena duces tecum. Except for minor technical corrections, this provision is unchanged.

3. Subdivision (c) governs service of subpoenas and makes clear that any subpoena, for either trial or deposition, may be served anywhere in the state. Moreover, the subdivision expressly provides that service of a subpoena by mail may be made by an attorney of record for either party. Telephone service of subpoenas is limited to sheriffs and their deputies, who may use this method of service with respect to trial subpoenas directed to witnesses who reside in the county where the trial is to be held. In addition, material from former subdivision (c) governing trial subpoenas has been shifted to subdivision (d). Similarly, provisions regarding contempt have been placed under subdivision (g), which specifically addresses that issue.

4. Subdivision (d) applies to subpoenas for trials or hearings. Most of this material appeared in former subdivision (c). However, the revised rule reduces the period required for service of a subpoena prior to trial without leave of court from five to two days; increases the allowance for witness travel to trial to twenty-five cents per mile; clarifies the authority of the party who subpoenas a witness to excuse the witness prior to testimony by the witness; and eliminates an outdated provision authorizing the taking of depositions of witnesses exempt by law from personal attendance at trial. Pursuant to subdivision (c), a subpoena for a witness to appear at a trial or hearing may be served anywhere in the state.

5. Subdivision (e) governs subpoenas for the taking of depositions, including those for the production of documentary evidence. The 1989 amendment eliminates the authority of an officer authorized to take a deposition to issue subpoenas for depositions. Under the revised procedure, the clerk of court is to issue a subpoena for a deposition upon the request of a party and the filing by that party of a notice of the deposition complying with Rule 30. Consistent with the increase in travel allowance for trial witnesses under subdivision (d), the travel allowance for deposition witnesses is also increased to twenty-five cents per mile. However, although the period of notice to a witness prior to trial has been reduced to two days under subdivision (d), the period of notice to a deposition witness is five business days. In addition, the geographic limits within which a deposition witness is required to attend a deposition have been expanded from the county of the witness' residence to any place within 100 miles of where the witness resides, is employed, or transacts business in person. Pursuant to subdivision (c), a subpoena for a deposition may be served anywhere in the state.

6. Subdivision (f) establishes a procedure for the taking of depositions within the state for use in proceedings pending in other states. In conjunction with the adoption of this provision, Rule 28(c) has been modified to apply only to proceedings pending in foreign countries.

7. Subdivision (g) governs contempt proceedings. It is a condensed version of language that appeared in former subdivision (c), which seemed to apply only to trial subpoenas. This subdivision replaces a more general contempt provision found in former subdivision (f).

Subdivision (a) has been amended to permit an attorney admitted to practice in Arkansas, as an officer of the court, to issue subpoenas in Arkansas cases in which he or she is counsel of record. Cross-references to subdivision (a) have also been added to subdivisions (d) and (e) of the rule. This authority does not apply to subpoenas pursuant to subdivision (f), which governs depositions for use in out-of-state proceedings; accordingly, a subpoena under subdivision (f) may be issued only by the clerk. The phrase "admitted to practice" in amended subdivision (a) refers not only to attorneys licensed in Arkansas, but also to those admitted pro hac vice.

In 1991, the corresponding federal rule was amended to allow attorneys to issue subpoenas. See Rule 45(a)(3), Fed. R. Civ. P. The federal rule expressly provides for sanctions, including lost earnings and reasonable attorneys' fees, against an attorney "responsible for issuance and service of a subpoena" that "impos[es] an undue burden or expense on the person subject to that subpoena." Rule 45(c)(1), Fed. R. Civ. P. While a similar provision has not been added to the Arkansas rule, the courts have inherent authority to sanction attorneys who abuse their power to issue subpoenas.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, [February] 2001 Amendment:

Subdivision (b) of the rule has been amended to emphasize that a subpoena duces tecum is permissible only in connection with a deposition, hearing, or trial. This has always been the case under Rule 45, but a clarifying amendment was deemed advisable in light of recent cases in which lawyers have employed subpoenas to obtain documents from non-parties without a deposition. The Supreme Court has not adopted a provision authorizing a subpoena solely to compel a non-party to produce documents or submit to an inspection. Compare Rules 34(c) & 45(a)(1)(C), Fed. R.Civ. P.

It also appears that some attorneys construed Rule 45 as not only allowing such a subpoena, but permitting one without notice to opposing counsel. Under the amended rule, there is no doubt but that these so-called "stealth subpoenas" are improper and that notice is necessary for any subpoena. If the subpoena is issued in connection with a deposition, subdivisions (e) and (f) expressly require notice of the deposition. Moreover, a new sentence has been added to subdivision (d) requiring that notice of a subpoena for a trial or hearing "be promptly given to all parties in the manner prescribed by Rule 5(b)."

Addition to Reporter's Notes, [May] 2001 Amendment:

Subdivision (f) has been amended by deleting the reference to chancery judges. Constitutional Amendment 80 established circuit courts as the "trial courts of original jurisdiction" in the state and abolished the separate chancery and probate courts.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2002 Amendment:

The third sentence of subdivision (f) has been amended to expressly provide that a deposition taken for use in an out-of-state proceeding is subject to the Rules of Civil Procedure, as well as to any rule or statute "creating a privilege or immunity from discovery." Previously, this sentence stated only that the Rules applied to subpoenas issued for such depositions. Also, the last sentence of subdivision (f) has been revised to include a specific reference to motions for protective orders made with respect to the deposition pursuant to Rule 26(c). The former version of this sentence mentioned only objections.

The following form for subpoenas is adopted and shall be published in the notes immediately following Rule 45 in the Court Rules volume of the Arkansas Code:

NOTICE TO PERSONS SUBJECT TO SUBPOENAS Regardless of his or her county of residence, a witness subpoenaed for examination at a trial or hearing must be properly served with a subpoena at least two days prior to the trial or hearing, or within a shorter time if the court so orders. The subpoena must be accompanied by a witness fee calculated at the rate of $30.00 per day for attendance and $0.25 per mile for travel from the witness' residence to the place of the trial or hearing. Rule 45(d), Ark. R. Civ. P.

A witness subpoenaed in connection with a deposition must be properly served with a subpoena at least five business days prior to a deposition, or within a shorter time if the court so orders. The witness is required to attend a deposition at any place within 100 miles of where he or she resides, is employed, or transacts business in person, or at such other convenient place set by court order. The subpoena must be accompanied by a witness fee calculated at the rate of $30.00 per day for attendance and $0.25 per mile for travel from the witness' residence to the place of the deposition.
Rule 45(e), Ark. R. Civ. P.

A subpoena may command the person to whom it is directed to produce for inspection any books, papers, documents, or tangible things designated in the subpoena. The person subpoenaed may ask the court to quash or modify the subpoena if it is unreasonable or oppressive or to require that the person on whose behalf the subpoena is issued pay the reasonable cost of such production. Rule 45(b), Ark. R. Civ. P. If the subpoena is issued in connection with a deposition, the person subpoenaed may object in writing to inspection or copying of any or all of the designated materials or seek a protective order from the court. If a written objection is made within ten days of service of the subpoena or on or before the time specified for compliance if such time is less than ten days, the party causing the subpoena to be issued is not entitled to inspect the materials unless the court so orders. Rule 45(d), Ark. R.
Civ. P.

When a witness fails to attend in obedience to a subpoena or intentionally evades the service of a subpoena by concealment or otherwise, the court may issue a warrant for arresting and bringing the witness before the court to give testimony and answer for contempt. Rule 45(g),
Ark. R. Civ. P.

Addition to Reporter's Notes Regarding Subpoena Form (January 2002):

This form was designed for civil cases, including probate and juvenile matters, and should not be used in criminal proceedings. It is based on the form used in the federal courts. See Form AO 88, Subpoena in a Civil Case (Rev.
1994), reprinted in 1B Federal Procedural Forms §§ 1:1270 (1999). However, it departs from the federal model as necessary to accommodate differences between the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure and the federal rules.

Rule 45 does not mention the form, but the Supreme Court's order of adoption describes it as "official." In re Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure, 340 Ark. 731, 733 (2000). Although use of an exact reproduction of the form is not mandatory, a subpoena must include all information called for by the form. For example, the second page of the form contains a "notice to persons subject to subpoenas" intended to advise those persons of their rights and duties under Rule 45. A subpoena without this information would be subject to challenge. However, so long as the necessary information is included, use of a "home-grown" document should not be fatal.

Additional information may be included if it is not inconsistent with Rule 45 or the form itself. For instance, a subpoena issued by the clerk might contain the name, address and phone number of the attorney who requested its issuance. Other information can be added in certain spaces on the form. The division in which the case is pending may also be included along with the street address in the box labeled "place of testimony."

On the other hand, modification of the form in such a way that distorts the controlling law or misleads the recipient is impermissible. Under Rule 45(b), for example, a subpoena duces tecum directed to a non-party is permissible only in connection with a deposition, hearing, or trial. Consequently, adding to the form a box to be checked and an accompanying statement to the effect that the recipient is commanded to permit inspection of specified documents at counsel's office on a given date, is not permissible. By contrast, the federal form offers this option, which is available under the federal rules. See Rules 34(c) & 45(a)(1)(C), Fed. R. Civ. P.

Unless a statute provides a procedure different from that specified in Rule 45, the rule and the form are applicable in probate and juvenile cases. Certain probate matters - such as will contests and adoptions - are "special proceedings" within the meaning of Rule 81(a) and thus excepted from the Rules of Civil Procedure if a statute sets out a different procedure. E.g., Brantley v. Davis, 305 Ark. 68, 805 S.W.2d 75 (1991). Some juvenile matters may also be special proceedings. See Kelley v. State, 191 Ark. 848, 88 S.W.2d 65 (1935). If there is no such statute, then the rules apply. Norton v. Hinson, 337 Ark. 487, 989 S.W.2d 535 (1999).

There appears to be only one statute that uses the word "subpoena" in connection with probate cases, and it does not conflict with Rule 45. See Ark. Code Ann. § 5-2-317(b)(3). By statute, the Rules of Civil Procedure apply to "all proceedings" in juvenile cases "until rules of procedure for juvenile court are developed and in effect," except as otherwise provided by the juvenile code. Ark. Code Ann. §§ 9-27-325(f). No such rules have been promulgated, and the only statute dealing with subpoenas in juvenile cases is not inconsistent with Rule 45. See Ark. Code Ann. § 9-27-310(e). Accordingly, the rule and the subpoena form apply in probate and juvenile proceedings.

Subdivision (b) has been divided into two numbered paragraphs and amended to allow subpoenas solely for the production of books, papers, documents, or tangible things. The official form and notice have been revised to accommodate subpoenas of this type, and a corresponding change has been made in Rule 34.

The amendment eliminates the long-standing requirement under Arkansas law that a subpoena duces tecum had to be joined with a subpoena for a witness to appear at a deposition, trial, or hearing. This requirement did not reflect actual discovery practice, for lawyers routinely cancelled depositions of nonparties who produced requested documents before the deposition date.

In addition, the amendment aligns Rule 45 with its federal counterpart. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 45(a)(1)(C). Unlike the federal rule, however, this rule does not permit a stand-alone subpoena to permit entry on and inspection of land. In that situation, an independent action must be brought against the nonparty to accomplish this discovery. See Ark. R. Civ. P. 34(c).

Revised Rule 45(b) also includes greater protections for other parties than the Federal Rules. A party who subpoenas only documents or things must serve the subpoena on all other parties at least three business days before serving the subpoena on the person in possession of the materials. This requirement will insure pre-production notice to, and an opportunity to object by, all other parties in the case. Moreover, the requesting party must provide a copy to all other parties of all materials—books, papers, documents, or tangible things—produced in response to the subpoena.

CASE NOTES

In General.

Motion to quash a subpoena is a "motion under these rules" for purposes of Ark. R. Civ. P. 52 and, therefore, no findings of fact and conclusions of law are required; moreover, the decision to quash a subpoena in a child support case was not overturned because there was no prejudice shown since fathers support obligation would not have been different, even if bank records showing the amount that children received from a trust had been introduced into evidence. Lee v. Lee, 95 Ark. App. 69, 233 S.W.3d 698 (2006).

Applicability.

This rule only relates to enforcement of subpoenas served inside state. Thomas v. Pacheco, 293 Ark. 564, 740 S.W.2d 123 (1987), limited, R.N. v. J.M., 347 Ark. 203, 61 S.W.3d 149 (2001), superseded by statute as stated in Keahey v. Cox, No. CA05-1415, 2006 Ark. App. LEXIS 575 (Ark. Ct. App. Sept. 20, 2006).

Subsection (c) of this rule does not provide for subpoena power over out-of-state witnesses testifying in a civil case. McNees v. Mountain Home, 993 F.2d 1359 (8th Cir. 1993).

Where plaintiffs counsel sought newspaper photographs of the accident scene, the trial court abused its discretion by refusing to quash the subpoena because it abrogated the newspaper's property rights by requiring the newspaper to create and produce photographic prints for use in a lawsuit to which it was not a party, while prohibiting it from recovering reasonable compensation for the use of its intellectual property; however, as to standing, the newspaper was a non-party, and permissive intervention under Ark. R. Civ. P. 24(b) did not apply, nor did Ark. R. Civ. P. 60(k), because there was not a judgment entered in the case and, while there was a long-standing exception to the general standing rules for one who was peculiarly affected by a judgment, that exception did not apply either. Ark. Democrat-Gazette, Inc. v. Brantley, 359 Ark. 75, 194 S.W.3d 748 (2004).

Trial court properly dismissed administratrix's tort claim for a third-party's alleged spoliation of the evidence in a wrongful death suit because a remedy had to be sought though a means other than an individual tort claim; criminal sanctions were still available under § 5-53-111, even though a new tort was not recognized, and attorneys who were guilty of spoliation were still subject to discipline. Downen v. Redd, 367 Ark. 551, 242 S.W.3d 273 (2006).

Fees.

In Arkansas, filing fees and service fees for subpoenas are authorized by statute; the trial court was exactly correct in assessing these costs. Wood v. Tyler, 317 Ark. 319, 877 S.W.2d 582 (1994).

Service.

Subpoena directing medical doctor to appear at paternity trial and bring mother's medical records was served by defendant, a party to the case, therefore, service was improper. Barnes v. Barnes, 311 Ark. 287, 843 S.W.2d 835 (1992).

Where subpoena was not served at least two days prior to trial, service was untimely. Barnes v. Barnes, 311 Ark. 287, 843 S.W.2d 835 (1992).

Witnesses.

Because this rule does not give the chancery court authority to compel an out-of-state witness to appear to testify, a witness' appearance would be voluntary, and the witness would not be entitled to immunity from arrest under § 16-43-102. McNees v. Mountain Home, 993 F.2d 1359 (8th Cir. 1993).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for a continuance when the State did not provide notice of a witness subpoena; defendant failed to clearly demonstrate how the granting of a continuance would have altered the outcome of the probation revocation hearing. Defendant failed to point to any specific information the continuance would have garnered that would have impacted or changed his cross-examination of the probation officer, and a recess granted for him to interview the officer cured a discovery violation. Arnold v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 22, 540 S.W.3d 298 (2018).

Trial court did not err in ruling that the battery victim was unavailable as a witness and in admitting his prior sworn testimony into evidence as he was properly subpoenaed well before trial; the State was not aware until the afternoon before trial that the victim had left the jurisdiction or that he did not intend to comply with the subpoena; and the State actively tried to locate the victim to secure his attendance at trial. Johnson v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 157, 596 S.W.3d 83 (2020).

Rule 45.1. Subpoena for Interstate Depositions and Discovery.

(a) Purpose. This rule governs depositions and discovery conducted in Arkansas in connection with a civil action pending in another state.

(b) Definitions.

(1) "Foreign jurisdiction" means a state other than Arkansas.

(2) "Foreign subpoena" means a subpoena issued under authority of a court of record of a foreign jurisdiction.

(3) "Person" means an individual, corporation, business trust, estate, trust, partnership, limited liability company, association, joint venture, public corporation, government, or governmental subdivision, agency or instrumentality, or any other legal or commercial entity.

(4) "State" means a state of the United States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the United States Virgin Islands, a federally recognized Indian tribe, or any territory or insular possession subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

(5) "Subpoena" means a document, however denominated, issued under authority of a court of record requiring a person to:

(A) attend and give testimony at a deposition; or

(B) produce and permit inspection and copying of designated books, documents, records, electronically stored information, or tangible things in the possession, custody, or control of the person.

(c) Issuance of Subpoena for Interstate Depositions and Discovery.

(1) To request issuance of a subpoena under this rule, a party must submit a foreign subpoena to the circuit clerk in the county in which discovery is sought to be conducted. A request for the issuance of a subpoena under this rule does not constitute an appearance in the courts of this state.

(2) When a party submits a foreign subpoena to a circuit clerk, the clerk, in accordance with the court's procedure, shall promptly issue a subpoena for service upon the person to which the foreign subpoena is directed. At the time of issuance of the subpoena, the circuit clerk shall not open a case and shall not collect a fee other than that provided by Ark. Code Ann. section 21-6-402(b)(1). Return or proof of service shall not be made to the circuit clerk but to the attorney who requested the subpoena, and he or she shall retain it and furnish a copy to any party or to the deponent upon request.

(3) The person to whom the subpoena is directed may within ten days after the service or on or before the time specified in the subpoena for compliance if such time is less than ten days, serve upon the attorney causing the subpoena to be issued written objection to the subpoena or discovery sought. If objection is made, the party who requested the subpoena shall not be entitled to proceed with the deposition or discovery except pursuant to an order of the court. Upon an objection, the party who requested the subpoena may move to enforce the subpoena by filing a motion, with notice to the subject of the subpoena, for an order to enforce the subpoena and proceed with discovery. The motion shall be filed with the circuit clerk. Upon the filing of the motion, the circuit clerk shall assign the matter a case number and collect the applicable fee. An application under subdivision (f) of this rule for a protective order or to quash or modify the subpoena shall be filed and heard in this case, and no additional fees shall be assessed.

(4) A subpoena under subdivision (c)(2) of this rule must:

(A) conform to the requirements of Rule 45, including the approved Form of Subpoena and Notice to Person Subject to Subpoenas, but may otherwise incorporate the terms used in the foreign subpoena so long as they conform to these rules; and

(B) contain or be accompanied by the names, addresses, and telephone numbers of all counsel of record in the proceeding to which the subpoena relates and of any party not represented by counsel.

(d) Service of Subpoena. A subpoena issued under subdivision (c) of this rule must be served in compliance with Rule 45(c).

(e) Deposition, Production, and Inspection. Provisions of these rules, including Rule 26.1(j), Rule 34, and Rule 45(b) and (e), relating to compliance with subpoenas to attend and give testimony, produce designated books, documents, records, electronically stored information, or tangible things apply to subpoenas issued under subdivision (c) of this rule.

(f) Application to Court. An application to the court for a protective order or to enforce, quash, or modify a subpoena issued under subdivision (c) of this rule must comply with these rules, including Rule 26(c), Rule 45(b) and (e), and be submitted to the court in the county in which discovery is to be conducted.

HISTORY: Added December 7, 2017, effective January 1, 2018.

Reporter's Notes (2018).

Rule 45(f), "Depositions for Use in Out-of-State Proceedings," was replaced with new Rule 45.1. This new procedure is based on the Uniform Interstate Depositions and Discovery Act that was adopted by the National Conference of Commissioners of Uniform State Laws in 2007.

Rule 45.1 is limited to discovery in state courts, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the United States Virgin Islands, and the territories of the United States, but does not extend to include foreign countries.

Arkansas's adoption of the uniform provision does not include section (2)(5)(C) ("permit inspection of premises under the control of the person") in light of Ark. R. Civ. P. 34(c).

The Uniform Law Commission describes the use of the procedure by way of an example in which a case filed in Kansas (the trial state) has a witness to be deposed that lives in Arkansas (the discovery state). A lawyer in the Kansas case will issue a subpoena in Kansas. That lawyer will then prepare an Arkansas subpoena that has the same terms as the Kansas subpoena. The lawyer will present the completed and issued Kansas subpoena and the Arkansas subpoena to the clerk in Arkansas. The Arkansas clerk, upon being given the Kansas subpoena, will then issue the Arkansas subpoena. The Arkansas subpoena will be served on the deponent in accordance with Arkansas law. The advantages of this process are readily apparent. The only documents that need to be presented to the Arkansas clerk are the subpoena issued in the trial state and the draft Arkansas subpoena. There is no requirement to hire local counsel to have the subpoena issued in Arkansas, and there is no need to present the matter to a judge before the subpoena can be issued. In effect, the Arkansas clerk simply reissues the subpoena of the trial state, and the new subpoena is then served on the deponent. Nothing in this rule limits any party from applying for appropriate relief in the trial state. Applications to the court that affect only the parties to the action can be made in the trial state and would presumably be made and ruled on before the deposition subpoena is ever presented to the clerk in Arkansas. The issuance of the Arkansas subpoena invokes Arkansas jurisdiction in order to: enforce the subpoena; quash or modify the subpoena; issue any protective order or resolve any other dispute relating to the subpoena; and impose sanctions. The discovery to be conducted in Arkansas must comply with the laws of Arkansas, which has a significant interest in protecting its residents who become nonparty witnesses in an action pending in a foreign jurisdiction from any unreasonable or unduly burdensome discovery request. Any application to the Arkansas court relating to the discovery must comply with the law of Arkansas, including Arkansas's law governing lawyers appearing in its courts. This rule does not change existing state rules governing out-of-state lawyers appearing in its courts.

Subsections (c)(2) and (3) address when a case is opened under this rule. In the routine case, a file is not opened, and the only fee charged is the fee under Ark. Code Ann. section 21-6-402(b)(1). In the event, the person to whom the subpoena is directed makes an objection, and the party requesting the subpoena wants to enforce the subpoena, then the party seeking to enforce the subpoena opens a case with the circuit clerk, a case number is assigned, and the applicable filing fee under Ark. Code Ann. section 21-6-403 is assessed.

Rule 46. Exceptions unnecessary.

Formal exceptions to rulings or orders of the court are unnecessary; but for all purposes for which an exception has heretofore been necessary, it is sufficient that a party, at the time the ruling or order of the court is made or sought, makes known to the court the action which he desires the court to take or his objection to the action of the court and his grounds therefor; and, if a party has no opportunity to object to a ruling or order at the time it is made, the absence of an objection does not thereafter prejudice him.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 46:

1. Rule 46 is identical to FRCP 46 and to superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1762 (Repl.

1962). This rule makes no changes in Arkansas practice and procedure.

CASE NOTES

Objections.

Unless a party has no opportunity to object to a ruling of the court, an objection must be made at the time of the ruling, and the objecting party must make known to the court the action desired and the grounds of the objection. Pearrow v. Feagin, 300 Ark. 274, 778 S.W.2d 941 (1989).

Preservation for Appeal.

Where in an automobile damage case the defendant brought the subject of insurance to the attention of the jury by asking the plaintiff if he had made a collision claim against his insurance carrier for an unrelated accident occurring several months after the accident at issue, and the plaintiff's attorney neither requested that the jury be instructed to disregard the question nor asked for a mistrial, the alleged prejudicial error was not preserved for purposes of appeal under this rule by merely making an objection since the attorney did not indicate to the court the action which he desired the court to take. Faught v. Ligon Specialized Hauler, Inc., 273 Ark. 259, 619 S.W.2d 627 (1981).

Mother's argument that a trial court erred in failing to appoint counsel to represent her in adoption proceedings was not preserved for appeal; the mother had filed a motion for a continuance in the trial court, not a motion for the appointment of counsel. The stated reason for wanting the delay was so that she could "seek" counsel, not obtain the appointment of counsel. Lucas v. Jones, 2012 Ark. 365, 423 S.W.3d 580 (2012).

Rehearing on Instructions.

On a rehearing concerning instructions presented to a jury, Ark. R. Civ. P. 51, which is specifically directed toward jury instructions, controls over this rule. Dodson Creek, Inc. v. Fred Walton Realty Co., 2 Ark. App. 128, 620 S.W.2d 947 (1981).

Waiver.

Where, at a hearing concerning a city's denial of a petition for the creation of a street improvement district, both the trial judge and the city's attorney orally agreed that mandamus was the proper remedy, and the intervening property owner failed to raise an objection, the property owner in effect agreed that mandamus was the proper procedure and he thereby waived his right to make an objection at a later time. Powell v. Bishop, 279 Ark. 365, 652 S.W.2d 9 (1983).

Rule 47. Jurors.

(a) Examination of Jurors. The Court shall either permit the parties or their attorneys to conduct the examination of prospective jurors or itself conduct the examination. In the latter event, the court shall permit the parties or their attorneys to supplement the examination by such further inquiry as it deems proper.

(b) Alternate Jurors. The court may direct that not more than two jurors in addition to the regular jury be called and impanelled to sit as alternate jurors. Alternate jurors in the order in which they are called shall replace jurors who, prior to the time the jury retires to consider its verdict, become or are found to be unable or disqualified to perform their duties. Alternate jurors shall be drawn in the same manner, shall have the qualifications, shall take the same oath, and shall have the same functions, powers, facilities, and privileges as the regular jurors. An alternate juror who does not replace a regular juror shall be discharged after the jury retires to consider its verdict. Each side is entitled to one peremptory challenge in addition to those otherwise allowed by law if one or two alternate jurors are to be impanelled. The additional peremptory challenge may be used against an alternate juror only and the other peremptory challenges allowed by law shall not be used against an alternate juror.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 47:

1. Section of this rule is identical to FRCP 47(a) and confers upon the trial court broad discretion in the examination of prospective jurors. Labbee v. Roadway Express, Inc., 469 F.2d 169 (C.C.A. 8th, 1972), Kiernan v. Van Schaik, 347 F.2d 775 (C.C.A. 3rd, 1965). Prior Arkansas law was governed by superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 39-226 (Repl. 1962), which likewise left the mode and manner of voir dire to the discretion of the trial court. This discretion did not, however, vest the trial court with arbitrary authority to prohibit voir dire by counsel. Missouri Pacific Transp. Co. v. Johnson, 197 Ark. 1129, 126 S.W.2d 931 (1939). In drafting this rule, the Committee intended to vest the trial court with sufficient authority to limit voir dire to a reasonable inquiry, but not to prohibit reasonable voir dire by counsel.

2. Section (b) is substantially the same as FRCP 47(b) as it existed prior to the 1966 amendments. Prior thereto, the Federal Rule limited alternate jurors to one or two in number, whereas the present Federal Rule permits the court to seat as many as six alternates. The Committee doubted the need for more than two alternates in civil cases in this State and in most court facilities there is insufficient room to seat a large number of alternate jurors. Accordingly, the Committee determined that alternate jurors should be limited to two in number.

3. Prior Arkansas law was governed by superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 39-232 (Repl. 1962), which provided that not more than three alternate jurors could be called and impanelled. This rule continues the provisions of superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 39-234 (Repl. 1962) wherein it provided that one additional peremptory challenge was allowed when alternate jurors were used, but that such additional challenge could be used only against an alternate juror. Thus the only change in Arkansas law effected by Section (b) is the reduction from three to two in the number of alternate jurors which may be used.

CASE NOTESPeremptory Challenges.

In a tort action arising out of an automobile accident, it was error for the trial court to order a new trial on the ground that after the jury had been sworn, but before commencement of trial, a juror was excused for a family emergency and was replaced by a juror from the panel without giving either party an additional peremptory challenge, where neither party could demonstrate that this irregularity materially affected their substantial rights to a fair trial. Arkansas Kraft Corp. v. Coble, 15 Ark. App. 25, 688 S.W.2d 319 (1985).

The right of peremptory challenges is conferred as a means to reject jurors — not to select jurors, and until such time as a party is forced to take an objectionable juror without the privilege of exercising a peremptory challenge, he has shown no prejudice. Goodwin v. Harrison, 300 Ark. 474, 780 S.W.2d 518 (1989).

Voir Dire.

The trial court is given great discretion with regard to the voir dire of jurors. So long as that discretion is not abused, and voir dire is not prohibited arbitrarily, the trial court's decision on the appropriate extent of voir dire will be upheld. Goodwin v. Harrison, 300 Ark. 474, 780 S.W.2d 518 (1989); National Bank of Commerce v. Beavers, 304 Ark. 81, 802 S.W.2d 132 (1990).

Rule 48. Number of jurors -- Verdict.

Where as many as nine out of twelve jurors in a civil case agree upon a verdict, the verdict shall be returned as the verdict of such jury. The parties may, however, stipulate that a jury shall consist of any number less than twelve and that a verdict or finding of a stated majority thereof shall be taken as the verdict or finding of the jury. In any case where a verdict is less than unanimous, all jurors consenting to such verdict shall sign the same. If the verdict is unanimous, then the foreman only shall sign.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 48:

1. Rule 48 varies substantially from FRCP 48 and instead follows prior Arkansas law. This rule takes into account Amendment 16 to the Arkansas Constitution which permits nine or more jurors to agree upon a verdict. Under the Federal Rule, a unanimous verdict is required in every case unless the parties have agreed otherwise. Curry v. Moore-McCormick Lines, Inc., 51 F. R. D. 301 (D.C. N.Y., 1970).

2. Rule 48 goes further than prior Arkansas statutory law by permitting the parties to stipulate that fewer than twelve jurors may try a case and that a stated majority thereof may return a verdict. Under actual prior practice in this State, juries with fewer than twelve members have been quite common. This practice has not been officially sanctioned previously, however.

3. This rule continues the requirement that where the verdict is less than unanimous, those consenting must sign the verdict.

CASE NOTES

Signature.

Although a special verdict finding appellant liable was not signed by one juror, but the special verdict finding 100% liability on the part of appellant was signed by such juror, this inconsistency did not entitle appellant to a new trial where appellant had waived its objection. Carroll Elec. Coop. Corp. v. Carlton, 319 Ark. 555, 892 S.W.2d 496 (1995), overruled in part, Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Sauer, 358 Ark. 89, 186 S.W.3d 229 (2004).

Rule 49. Verdicts and interrogatories.

(a) General Verdicts and General Verdicts with Interrogatories. The court may require a jury to return only a general verdict which pronounces generally upon all the issues, or the court may submit to the jury, together with appropriate forms for a general verdict, written interrogatories upon one or more issues of fact the decision of which is necessary to a verdict. The court shall give such explanation or instruction as may be necessary to enable the jury both to make answers to the interrogatories and to render a general verdict, and the court shall direct the jury both to make written answers and to render a general verdict. When the general verdict and the answers are harmonious, the appropriate judgment upon the verdict and answers shall be entered pursuant to Rule 58. When the answers are consistent with each other but one or more is inconsistent with the general verdict, judgment may be entered pursuant to Rule 58 in accordance with the answers, notwithstanding the general verdict, or the court may return the jury for further consideration of its answers and verdict or may order a new trial. When the answers are inconsistent with each other and one or more is likewise inconsistent with the general verdict, judgment shall not be entered, but the court shall return the jury for further consideration of its answers and verdict or shall order a new trial.

(b) Special Verdicts. The court may require a jury to return only a special verdict in the form of a special written finding upon each issue of fact. In that event, the court may submit to the jury written questions susceptible of categorical or other brief answer or may submit written forms of the several special findings which might properly be made under the pleadings and evidence; or it may use such other method of submitting the issues and requiring the written findings thereon as it deems most appropriate. The court shall give to the jury such explanation and instruction concerning the matter thus submitted as may be necessary to enable the jury to make its findings upon each issue. If in so doing the court omits any issue of fact raised by the pleadings or by the evidence, each party waives his right to a trial by jury of the issue so omitted unless before the jury retires he demands its submission to the jury. As to an issue omitted without such demand, the court may make a finding; or, if it fails to do so, it shall be deemed to have made a finding in accord with the judgment on the special verdict.

(c) Allocation of Fault.

(1) In an action for personal injury, medical injury, wrongful death, or property damage, the jury shall determine the fault of all persons or entities, including those not made parties, who may have joint liability or several liability for the alleged injury, death, or damage to property. However, the jury shall determine the fault of a nonparty only if:

(A) the claimant entered into a settlement agreement with the nonparty, or a defending party has given notice, as provided in Rule 9(h), that the nonparty was wholly or partially at fault; and

(B) the defending party has carried the burden of establishing a prima facie case of the nonparty's fault.

(2) The jury shall allocate the fault, on a percentage basis, among those persons or entities, including those not made parties, found to have contributed to the injury, death, or property damage.

(3) Assessment of the percentage of a nonparty's fault shall be used only for determining the percentage of fault of the parties. A finding of fault shall not subject a nonparty to liability in any action or be introduced as evidence of liability in any action.

HISTORY: Amended May 16, 1983; amended November 8, 1993, effective January 1, 1994; amended August 7, 2014, effective January 1, 2015.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 49:

1. Rule 49 is substantially the same as FRCP 49 and to prior Arkansas law as embodied in superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1741.1, et seq. (Repl. 1962). Implicit in the Federal Rule is the right of the trial court to use a general verdict; however, it is believed that less confusion and uncertainty will result if the use of general verdicts is expressly permitted in this rule. Hence, superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1741.1 (Repl. 1962), is retained in principle in this rule.

2. Section (b) does not specifically consider the possibility of inconsistent answers to interrogatories submitted to the jury; however, the courts do have the power and authority to rectify inconsistent answers, particularly where the inconsistency is due in part to incorrect instructions to the jury. Stephenson v. College Misericordia, 376 F. Supp. 1324 (D. C. Pa., 1974). The court can ask the jury to reconsider its verdict in an attempt to remove the inconsistency, Alston v. West, 340 F. 2d 856 (C.C.A. 7th, 1965), or order a new trial. Wright v. Kroeger Corp., 422 F. 2d 176 (C.C.A. 5th, 1970).

3. Overall, Rule 49 should have little effect on prior Arkansas practice and procedure as it is essentially the same as the prior law.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1983 Amendment:

Rule 49(a) is amended by adding all of the words after the first comma in the first sentence and by adding the remaining sentences. The effect is to add to the Rule provisions for a general verdict accompanied by answers to jury interrogatories.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2014 Amendment:

Subdivision (c) implements Ark. Code Ann. §§ 16-61-201 & 16-61-202(c), as amended by Act 1116 of 2013. It is based in part on section 2 of Act 649 of 2003, codified at Ark. Code Ann. § 16-55-202(a), which was invalidated on separation-of-powers grounds in Johnson v. Rockwell Automation, Inc., 2009 Ark. 241, 308 S.W.3d 135. A corresponding change has been made to Rule 52(a), which applies in bench trials. Rule 9(h), cross-referenced in paragraph (1)(A), is the sole procedural mechanism for asserting the right to an allocation of nonparty fault created by Ark. Code Ann. § 16-61-202(c).

Paragraph (1) of subdivision (c) provides that, if certain conditions are met, the jury must determine “the fault of all persons and entities, including those not made parties, who may have joint liability or several liability” for the alleged harm. The italicized language is taken from Ark. Code Ann. § 16-61-201 and is intended to be coextensive with the statute. In tracking the statutory language, the rule is neutral on questions as to its scope, e.g., whether the phrase “may have joint liability or several liability” includes persons or entities who are immune from suit or are beyond the court's jurisdiction.

As stated in paragraph (1)(A), the fault of a nonparty will be determined only if the claimant has settled with the nonparty or the defending party has given the notice required by Rule 9(h). Paragraph (1)(B) imposes another condition: “the defending party has carried the burden of establishing a prima facie case of the nonparty's fault.” In other words, the defending party must produce sufficient evidence to warrant submission of the case to the jury. Health Facilities Mgmt. Corp. v. Hughes, 365 Ark. 237, 244-45, 227 S.W.3d 910, 917 (2006). Placing this burden on the defending party is consistent with Act 649. See Ark. Code Ann. § 16-55-215 (Act 649 does not affect “existing law that provides that the burden of alleging and proving fault is upon the person who seeks to establish fault.”).

Paragraph (2) is based on language in former section 16-55-202(a), and paragraph (3) is taken from former section 16-55-202(c)(2) & (3).

CASE NOTES

Consistency in Interrogatory Answers.

Where in a breach of contract action brought by the prospective seller of a radio station, the trial court submitted seven interrogatories to the jury, and the jury answered the first six in favor of the defendant buyers but in its answer to the seventh the jury awarded damages to the plaintiff seller, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in holding that the jury's answers established that the buyers were not liable under the contract, because the jury's consistent answers to the first six interrogatories were in conflict with their answer to the seventh interrogatory. KLRA, Inc. v. Long, 6 Ark. App. 125, 639 S.W.2d 60 (1982).

Special Interrogatories.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in rejecting defendant's proffered special interrogatories as they did not address ultimate or determinative issue, which was the amount of lost profits plaintiff suffered due to the defective clear coat finish supplied by defendant. Neste Polyester, Inc. v. Burnett, 92 Ark. App. 413, 214 S.W.3d 882 (2005).

Surgeon failed to preserve for appeal his arguments that the trial court submitted an incomplete description of damages in a single interrogatory, violating this rule and that this rule was also violated when the jurors signed a single interrogatory rather than separate interrogatories. Other than to request a general verdict, the surgeon never raised an objection with regard to the verdict forms and he also failed to object on the grounds that the jurors did not sign separate interrogatories. McCoy v. Montgomery, 370 Ark. 333, 259 S.W.3d 430 (2007).

Special Verdicts.

Each interrogatory answered by the jury is a special verdict on that particular fact. Carroll-Boone Water Dist. v. M. & P. Equip. Co., 280 Ark. 560, 661 S.W.2d 345 (1983).

Rule 50. Motion for directed verdict and for judgment notwithstanding verdict.

(a) Motion for Directed Verdict or Dismissal When Made; Effect. A party may move for a directed verdict at the close of the evidence offered by an opponent and may offer evidence in the event that the motion is not granted, without having reserved the right to do so and to the extent as if the motion had not been made. A party may also move for a directed verdict at the close of all of the evidence. A motion for a directed verdict which is not granted is not a waiver of trial by jury even though all parties to the action have moved for directed verdicts. A motion for a directed verdict shall state the specific grounds therefor. The order of the court granting a motion for a directed verdict is effective without any assent of the jury. In nonjury cases a party may challenge the sufficiency of the evidence at the conclusion of the opponent's evidence by moving either orally or in writing to dismiss the opposing party's claim for relief. The motion may also be made at the close of all of the evidence and in every instance the motion shall state the specific grounds therefor.

(b) Motion for Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict.

(1) Whenever a motion for a directed verdict made at the close of all the evidence is denied or for any reason is not granted, the court is deemed to have submitted the action to the jury subject to a later determination of the legal questions raised by the motion.

(2) Not later than 10 days after entry of judgment, a party who has moved for a directed verdict may move to have the verdict and any judgment thereon set aside and to have judgment entered in accordance with his motion for a directed verdict; or if a verdict was not returned, such party within 10 days after the jury has been discharged may move for judgment in accordance with his motion for directed verdict. A motion made before entry of judgment shall become effective and be treated as filed on the day after the judgment is entered. If the court neither grants nor denies the motion within 30 days of the date on which it is filed or treated as filed, it shall be deemed denied as of the 30th day.

(3) A motion for a new trial may be joined with a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, or a new trial be prayed in the alternative. If a verdict was returned the court may allow the judgment to stand or may reopen the judgment and either order a new trial or direct the entry of judgment as if the requested verdict had been directed. If no verdict was returned, the court may direct the entry of judgment as if the requested verdict had been directed or may order a new trial.

(c) Same: Conditional Rulings on Grant of Motion.

(1) If the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict provided for in subdivision (b) of this rule is granted, the court shall also rule on the motion for a new trial, if any, by determining whether it should be granted if the judgment is thereafter vacated or reversed, and shall specify the grounds for granting or denying the motion for the new trial. If the motion for a new trial is thus conditionally granted, the order thereon does not affect the finality of the judgment. In case the motion for a new trial has been conditionally granted and the judgment is reversed on appeal, the new trial shall proceed unless the appellate court has otherwise ordered. In case the motion for a new trial has been conditionally denied, the appellee on appeal may assert error in that denial; and if the judgment is reversed on appeal, subsequent proceedings shall be in accordance with the order of the appellate court.

(2) The party whose verdict has been set aside on motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict may file a motion for a new trial pursuant to Rule 59 not later than 10 days after entry of the judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

(d) Same: Denial of Motion. If the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is denied, the party who prevailed on that motion may, as appellee, assert grounds entitling him to a new trial in the event the appellate court concludes that the trial court erred in denying the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. If the appellate court reverses the judgment, nothing in this rule precludes it from determining that the appellee is entitled to a new trial or from directing the trial court to determine whether a new trial shall be granted.

(e) Appellate Review. In a jury trial, a party who does not have the burden of proof on a claim or defense must move for a directed verdict based on insufficient evidence at the conclusion of all the evidence to preserve a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence for appellate review. A party who has the burden of proof on a claim or defense need not make such a motion to challenge on appeal the sufficiency of the evidence supporting a jury verdict adverse to that party. If for any reason the motion is not ruled upon, it is deemed denied for purposes of obtaining appellate review on the question of the sufficiency of the evidence.

HISTORY: Amended May 16, 1983; amended July 9, 1984, effective September 1, 1984; amended December 10, 1990, effective February 1, 1991; amended January 22, 1998; amended January 28, 1999; amended February 10, 2005; amended October 9, 2008, effective January 1, 2009.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 50:

1. With the exception of minor wording changes, Rule 50(a) is essentially the same as FRCP 50(a). The changes from the Federal Rule are patterned after Rules 50(a) of the Rhode Island and Massachusetts Rules of Civil Procedure and are designed to clarify the language of the Federal Rule. Section (a) goes further, however, and incorporates the essential provisions of superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1729 (Repl. 1962) concerning the mechanics for challenging the sufficiency of the evidence presented. The demurrer to the evidence previously used in equity proceedings is not retained as such under this rule, but the motion to dismiss which is authorized under Section (a) will serve the same purpose.

2. Rule 50(a) does abolish the rule that where both parties move for a directed verdict and no instructions are requested by either party, the parties waive trial by jury. American Colonial Ins. Co. v. Mabry Co., 245 Ark. 288, 432 S.W.2d 15 (1968), Tucker v. Lisenbee, 209 Ark. 117, 189 S.W.2d 661 (1945). This section also abolishes the former practice of having the jury foreman sign a verdict form where the court has granted a directed verdict.

3. Section (b) is identical to FRCP 50(b) and effects significant changes in Arkansas law.

Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 29-111 (Repl. 1962) permitted the court to enter a judgment N.O.V., but required that a motion therefor had to be filed before the entry of judgment. Oil Fields Corp. v. Cubage, 180 Ark. 1018, 24 S.W.2d 328 (1930). Under this rule, such motion can be filed within ten days after the judgment is filed. Also, there was some confusion under prior Arkansas law as to whether a motion for directed verdict was a condition precedent for a later motion for judgment N.O.V. Under this rule, as under the Federal Rule, the motion for a directed verdict is a condition precedent.

4. Sections (c) and (d) are identical to FRCP 50(c) and (d). There were no comparable provisions under prior Arkansas law; however, these sections do not appear to significantly change prior practice and procedure in this State.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1983 Amendment:

Rule 50(e) is amended to omit the reference to the motion for new trial as a means of challenging the sufficiency of the evidence. Motions for directed verdict and judgment notwithstanding the verdict are used to challenge the sufficiency of the evidence.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1984 Amendment:

Rule 50(a) is amended to substitute the words "non-jury" for the word "equity" in the sixth sentence. This makes clear the means of raising the issue of sufficiency of a party's evidence to warrant further proceedings, regardless of the nature of a non-jury case. For example, the motion should be made by the defendant at the close of the plaintiff's evidence in a bench trial in circuit court.

Rule 50(e) is amended to make it clear that a timely, oral directed verdict or n.o.v. motion satisfies the requirement of the rule and thus precludes waiver of the issues raised by those motions though they may not be in writing or "filed" as was previously required.

Addition to Reporter's Note, 1990 Amendment:

Subdivision (e) of the rule has been amended to eliminate a potential conflict with subdivision (b). Under the latter, a party may not move for judgment n.o.v. unless he has made a motion for directed verdict at the close of all evidence. However, subdivision (e) provided that a party's failure "to move for a directed verdict at the conclusion of all the evidence, or to move for judgment notwithstanding the verdict" precluded challenging the sufficiency of the evidence on appeal. The use of the disjunctive suggested, contrary to subdivision (b), that a party could preserve a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence by moving for a judgment n.o.v. even if he had not previously moved for a directed verdict at the close of all the evidence. Accordingly, subdivision (e) has been amended to delete the phrase "or to move for judgment notwithstanding the verdict."

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1998 Amendment:

A new sentence has been added to subdivision (e) of the rule to make clear that a party's failure to obtain a ruling on his or her motion for directed verdict at the close of all the evidence is not a waiver of the issue of the sufficiency of the evidence for purposes of appellate review. Compare Danzie v. State, 326 Ark. 34, 930 S.W.2d 310 (1996) (sufficiency of evidence issue was not preserved for appeal in a criminal case where there was not ruling on the defendant's motion for directed verdict at the close of all the evidence). The new sentence provides that the motion is deemed denied if for any reason it is not ruled upon.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1999 Amendment:

Subdivision (b) has been divided into three numbered paragraphs. The new second sentence of paragraph (2) makes plain that a pre-judgment motion for JNOV is permissible. This is so under the corresponding federal rule, but prior Arkansas case law suggested that such a motion was ineffective. See Benedict v.

National Bank of Commerce, 329 Ark. 590, 951 S.W.2d 562 (1997) (motion for new trial). The new third sentence provides that a motion for JNOV not ruled on by the court within 30 days of its filing (or within 30 days of the date it is treated as filed) is "deemed denied as of the 30th day." This provision also appears in Rule 4(b)(1) of the Rules of Appellate Procedure-Civil but was added here as a reminder to counsel.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2005 Amendment:

Rule 50(c)(2) has been clarified by substituting the word "file" for the word "serve." Under Rule 59, a motion for a new trial must be made in writing and filed with the clerk. Rule of Civil Procedure 59(b)&(c). This amendment removes the potentially confusing reference to service of the motion and harmonizes this part of Rule 50 with Rule 59.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2008 Amendment:

Subdivision (e) has been amended and clarified. In a series of cases, the court of appeals had interpreted former subdivision (e) to require the party with the burden of proof to move for a directed verdict on the party's own claim or defense in order to challenge on appeal the sufficiency of the evidence supporting the fact-finder's decision for the opposing party. Laird v. Weigh Sys. S. II, Inc., 98 Ark. App. 393, 255 S.W. 3d 900 (2007); King v. Powell, 85 Ark. App. 212, 148 S.W.3d 792 (2004); Sw. Bell Tel. Co. v. Garner, 83 Ark. App. 226, 125 S.W.3d 844 (2003). This interpretation required a motion that would rarely be granted and served no useful purpose. King, 85 Ark. App. at 228'29, 148 S.W.3d at 802 (Bird, J., concurring). Revised subdivision (e) makes clear that only the party against whom a claim or defense is asserted must move for a directed verdict to preserve its right to challenge on appeal the sufficiency of the evidence. The amendment overrules the contrary holdings in Garner, King, and Laird.

CASE NOTES

In General.

In 1988, former Ark. R. Crim. P. 36.21(b)

(now ARCrp 33.1) was adopted, requiring the defense to move for a directed verdict both at the close of the state's case and at the close of all of the evidence in order to preserve an argument on sufficiency of the evidence on appeal; this procedural step brought the criminal rule more in line with this rule, which similarly requires that the motion be made following the plaintiff's case and after all evidence has been presented. Reagan v. State, 318 Ark. 380, 885 S.W.2d 849 (1994).

Appellate Review.

On appeal, the appellate court will uphold the decision of the trial court's denial of a motion for judgment n.o.v. if there is any substantial evidence to support the jury's verdict. Arkansas Power & Light Co. v. Adcock, 281 Ark. 104, 661 S.W.2d 392 (1983).

Reviewing a motion for a directed verdict requires that the evidence be examined most favorably to the party against whom the verdict is directed, including all reasonable inferences that could be drawn from the evidence; if any substantial evidence exists tending to establish an issue of fact in favor of that party, it is error for the trial court to take the case from the jury. Ikani v. Bennett, 284 Ark. 409, 682 S.W.2d 747 (1985).

In reviewing the denial of a motion for a directed verdict, the appellate court will give the proof its strongest probative force. Such proof, with all reasonable inferences, is examined in the light most favorable to the party against whom the motion is sought, and, if there is any substantial evidence to support the verdict, the appellate court will affirm the trial court. Grendell v. Kiehl, 291 Ark. 228, 723 S.W.2d 830 (1987).

Failure to state the specific grounds of a motion for a directed verdict constitutes a waiver of that argument on appeal. Mine Creek Contractors v. Grandstaff, 300 Ark. 516, 780 S.W.2d 543 (1989).

The burden to obtain a ruling is on the movant, and questions left unresolved are waived and may not be relied upon on appeal. Mine Creek Contractors v. Grandstaff, 300 Ark. 516, 780 S.W.2d 543 (1989).

In a nonjury trial, a party who does not challenge the sufficiency of evidence does not waive the right to do so on appeal. Jones v. Jones, 27 Ark. App. 297, 770 S.W.2d 174 (1989).

The standard of review in determining the propriety of refusing a directed verdict is whether the verdict of the jury is supported by substantial evidence, that is, evidence that is sufficient to compel a conclusion one way or the other and that goes beyond suspicion or conjecture. Barnes, Quinn, Flake & Anderson, Inc. v. Rankins, 312 Ark. 240, 848 S.W.2d 924 (1993).

Appellate review of a motion for a directed verdict entails determining whether plaintiff's proof was so insubstantial as to require a jury verdict, if entered in his behalf, to be set aside; in reviewing a directed verdict that has been granted, the appellate court will view the evidence that is most favorable to the party against whom the verdict was granted and give it its highest probative value, taking into account all reasonable inferences deducible from it. Nicholson v. Simmons First Nat'l Corp., 312 Ark. 291, 849 S.W.2d 483 (1993).

In order to preserve a sufficiency of the evidence argument for an appellate court's consideration, a motion for directed verdict must have been made at the close of the plaintiffs' case-in-chief, and again at the conclusion of all the evidence under subsections (a) and (e) of this rule; under S. Ct. & Ct. App. Rule 4-2, the appellate brief must contain an abstract of the motions for directed verdict and a recitation of the grounds for such relief. Stroud Crop, Inc. v. Hagler, 317 Ark. 139, 875 S.W.2d 851 (1994), overruled in part, McCourt Mfg. Corp. v. Rycroft, 2009 Ark. 332, 322 S.W.3d 491 (2009).

Absent rare circumstances, the Supreme Court does not affirm the grant of a directed verdict, or a subsequent motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, in favor of the party with the burden of proof in a negligence case. Potlatch Corp. v. Missouri Pac. R.R., 321 Ark. 314, 902 S.W.2d 217 (1995).

Where the issue of due process was not raised at trial by the employer, it could not raise it in a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict in an attempt to preserve the issue for appeal. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Lee, 348 Ark. 707, 74 S.W.3d 634 (2002).

Appellant's argument that appellee could not recover damages for future lost profits for a distributorship in Oklahoma was not preserved for review because appellant failed to move for a directed verdict on this point during the trial and failed to obtain a ruling on it from the circuit court. S. Beach Bev. Co. v. Harris Brands, Inc., 355 Ark. 347, 138 S.W.3d 102 (2003).

Bank was procedurally barred from arguing on appeal that there was not substantial evidence to support an award of punitive damages to a contractor because the bank made no directed verdict motion to dismiss the contractor's claim for punitive damages, nor did it object to the jury being instructed on punitive damages; however, the bank could appeal the alleged excessiveness of the amount of punitive damages that was awarded. Superior Fed. Bank v. Mackey, 84 Ark. App. 1, 129 S.W.3d 324 (2003).

Where it was unclear from the record as to whether defendant had renewed her motion for a directed verdict at the close of evidence, the issue was not preserved for review. $ 735 in United States Currency v. State, 364 Ark. 526, 222 S.W.3d 209, overruled in part, $15,956 in U.S. Currency v. State, 366 Ark. 70, 233 S.W.3d 598 (2006).

Directed verdict, or motion to dismiss under subsection (a) of this rule, after a bench trial was properly granted because mills that purchased gateway timber from an owner were buyers in the ordinary course of business under §§ 4-9-201(9) (now 4-1-201(b)(9)), 4-9-320, and timber, once cut, became inventory goods under §§ 4-9-501, 4-9-102(48); thus, the mills had no duty to conduct a lien search to find a creditor's perfected security interest in the timber. Fordyce Bank & Trust Co. v. Bean Timberland, Inc., 369 Ark. 90, 251 S.W.3d 267 (2007).

Directed verdict in favor of appellees on appellant's breach of contract action was affirmed, as appellees did not tacitly agree to be liable for appellant's lost profit consequential damages; although appellees knew appellant was in business of selling materials for post-and-beam structures along with drawings, there was no evidence that they tacitly agreed to pay full "Component Package" price if they used appellant's drawings without authorization. Deck House, Inc. v. Link, 98 Ark. App. 17, 249 S.W.3d 817 (2007).

Two individuals entered into a "Pre-Contract Service Agreement" with appellant, which supplied plans and materials for post-and-beam structures, to purchase architectural drawings from appellant, but appellees later built a less expensive house for the individuals that was similar to appellant's plans. A directed verdict in favor of appellees on appellant's claim for tortious interference with a business expectancy was affirmed, as the contingent nature of the dealings of two individuals with appellant made the tort claim untenable as a matter of law. Deck House, Inc. v. Link, 98 Ark. App. 17, 249 S.W.3d 817 (2007).

Cross-appeal in a case involving fraudulent transfers was barred from consideration on review because the party asserting such did not move for a directed verdict challenging the sufficiency-of-the-evidence. This rule applied to litigants on both sides of a case. Laird v. Weigh Sys. South II, Inc., 98 Ark. App. 393, 255 S.W.3d 900 (2007).

In a client's appeal of an order awarding judgment to a company on its tortious interference with a contract claim, pursuant to subsection (e) of this rule, any arguments made in the client's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict that were not made in its motion for a directed verdict could not be taken up on appeal. Advanced Envntl. Recycling Techs. v. Advanced Control Solutions, Inc., 372 Ark. 286, 275 S.W.3d 162 (2008).

Current owner's remaining arguments had not been preserved for review, as the requirement that specific grounds be stated in the motion was especially necessary when a case involved multiple issues, like this one, and to the extent she raised certain arguments in a posttrial motion, those arguments were barred if they were not previously raised in her motion. Trakru v. Mathews, 2014 Ark. App. 154, 434 S.W.3d 10 (2014).

In a medical negligence case, the doctor's directed verdict motion mentioned proximate cause only generically and did not specifically mention negligence or informed consent; neither of the doctor's specific arguments made on appeal was presented to the trial court, and thus he failed to preserve his argument for appeal. Williams v. Shackelford, 2017 Ark. App. 149, 515 S.W.3d 642 (2017).

Property owners' arguments challenging the jury's punitive damages award were procedurally barred as the property owners had not moved for a directed verdict at the jury trial, as required by subsection (e) of this rule, nor had they objected to the jury instruction concerning such damages. Roberts v. Riege, 2018 Ark. App. 262, 550 S.W.3d 400 (2018).

Applicability.

Subsection (e) of this rule does not apply to a nonjury trial. Igwe v. State, 312 Ark. 220, 849 S.W.2d 462 (1993), superseded by statute as stated in Harvey v. State, 2004 Ark. App. LEXIS 334 (Ark. Ct. App. Apr. 28, 2004).

Trial court properly denied bank's motion for a directed verdict on a contractor's defamation action against the bank as substantial evidence supported the contractor's claims that the bank told a potential client of the contractor's that he was not on the bank's list of approved contractors for a financing loan and the contractor showed damages as a result of the statement. Superior Fed. Bank v. Mackey, 84 Ark. App. 1, 129 S.W.3d 324 (2003).

This rule does not apply to civil bench trials; therefore, the failure to renew a motion for a directed verdict in a forfeiture proceeding in a bench trial did not result in a waiver of appellate rights. $ 15,956 in U. S. Currency v. State, 366 Ark. 70, 233 S.W.3d 598 (2006).

Construction.

Subsection (e) of this rule by use of the disjunctive "or" does not provide for either a motion for a directed verdict at the conclusion of all of the evidence or a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict as such an interpretation would be contrary to the clear language of subsection (b) of this rule. Willson Safety Prods. v. Eschenbrenner, 302 Ark. 228, 788 S.W.2d 729 (1990).

Former Ark. R. Crim. P. 36.21(b) (now Ark. R. Crim. P. 33.1) is to be read in alignment with subsection (a) of this rule; if a motion for directed verdict is general and does not specify a basis for the motion, it will be insufficient to preserve a specific argument for appellate review. Walker v. State, 318 Ark. 107, 883 S.W.2d 831 (1994).

The motion for a directed verdict is a condition precedent to moving for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict; the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is technically only a renewal of the motion for directed verdict made at the close of the evidence. Pennington v. Rhodes, 55 Ark. App. 42, 929 S.W.2d 169 (1996).

The standard for granting a directed verdict is somewhat different from the summary-judgment standard under Ark. R. Civ. P. 56(c). Wallace v. Broyles, 332 Ark. 189, 961 S.W.2d 712 (1998).

Credibility Improperly Evaluated.

Circuit court granted the motion for dismissal because it did not find certain testimony or evidence to be credible; because the trial court improperly evaluated the credibility of the evidence in ruling on appellees' motion to dismiss, the judgment was reversed and the case was remanded. Rutland v. McWhorter, 2016 Ark. App. 163, 485 S.W.3d 722 (2016).

Credibility of the witnesses is a matter for the court acting as a finder of fact at the close of all the evidence, not as a matter for the court in evaluating whether the petitioner had presented a prima facie case for purposes of a motion to dismiss. Rutland v. McWhorter, 2016 Ark. App. 163, 485 S.W.3d 722 (2016).

Directed Verdict.

- Denial.
- Jury Trial.
- Renewal of Motion.
- Specific Grounds.
- Waiver of Error.

Where plaintiff in action on promissory note moved for directed verdict and court denied the motion, whereupon defendant also moved for a directed verdict, the trial court erred in taking the case away from the jury and deciding it in favor of plaintiff and such error was a substantive defect so that the case should be reversed irrespective of the fact that counsel for defendant failed to object to the error. Bussey v. Bank of Malvern, 270 Ark. 37, 603 S.W.2d 426 (Ct. App. 1980).

The abstract was flagrantly deficient with regard to defendant's claim of insubstantial evidence, in that he did not include a motion for directed verdict, a material part of the proceedings with regard to this issue. Samples v. Samples, 306 Ark. 184, 810 S.W.2d 951 (1991).

In ruling on a motion for directed verdict the trial court views the evidence most favorably to the non-moving party and gives that evidence its highest probative value, taking into account all reasonable inferences deducible from it. The motion should only be granted where the evidence is so insubstantial as to require that a jury verdict for the non-moving party be set aside. Dorton v. Francisco, 309 Ark. 472, 833 S.W.2d 362 (1992).

A motion for a directed verdict is a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence. Gilkey v. State, 41 Ark. App. 100, 848 S.W.2d 439 (1993).

In a tort action, where there was substantial evidence to support the jury's verdict on the issues of negligence and causation, the trial court committed no error in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict. Ouachita Wilderness Inst. v. Mergen, 329 Ark. 405, 947 S.W.2d 780 (1997).

Although the evidence to prove an oral contract to make a will must be clear, cogent, satisfactory and convincing, the standard to be applied to determine a motion under this rule for a directed verdict is whether there was sufficient evidence to present such issue to the jury. Jones v. Abraham, 341 Ark. 66, 15 S.W.3d 310 (2000).

Under subsection (a) of this rule, a response to an opposing party's motion for a directed verdict is insufficient for purposes of satisfying this rule, and failure to comply with the requirements of this rule is a sufficient basis for denial of a motion for directed verdict and for affirmance on appeal; therefore, where buyer's arguments were made in response to defense counsel's request for a directed verdict on the contract claim, the issue was not preserved for appellate review. Thomas v. Olson, 364 Ark. 444, 220 S.W.3d 627 (2005).

Grocery store should have been granted a directed verdict on patron's negligence claim as the store had no duty to warn patron of any danger associated with handling a fully-loaded shopping cart; there was no duty to warn where the dangerous condition was known or obvious to the invitee. Kroger Co. v. Smith, 93 Ark. App. 270, 218 S.W.3d 359 (2005).

Appellants' directed verdict motion on the student's outrage claim arising out of surveillance allegations should have been granted where the record failed to reflect any evidence that the video camera in student's classroom ever recorded any footage at the school; the mere possibility that the school could have taped student did not support a claim for outrage. Calvary Christian Sch., Inc. v. Huffstutler, 367 Ark. 117, 238 S.W.3d 58 (2006).

Where minor was injured while riding his bicycle on a sidewalk in front of a business, the owner of the business owned no duty to inspect the premises to be certain they were safe and the trial court erred in failing to grant a directed verdict for the business. Ken's Disc. Bldg. Materials, Inc. v. Meeks, 95 Ark. App. 37, 233 S.W.3d 176 (2006).

Property owner's argument that there was insufficient evidence for a jury to find that a property owners association disapproved her request to erect a fence was not preserved for review because the owner failed to move for a directed verdict on the issue at the close of all of the evidence. Lineberry v. Riley Farms Prop. Owners Ass'n, 95 Ark. App. 286, 236 S.W.3d 534 (2006).

Memorandum provided that bonus-pool monies were to go to employees who were responsible for the production of accounts and servicing and maintaining them; it was the jurors' prerogative to believe or disbelieve the evidence on this point and the court's task on appeal was only to determine whether the verdict was supported by substantial evidence, and the court did not find that the employer was entitled to a directed verdict on this point. Aon Risk Servs. v. Meadors, 100 Ark. App. 272, 267 S.W.3d 603 (2007).

Jury might have found that the employer's acceptance of a lesser commission from the insurer was a bad-faith hindrance of the bonus-pool process that prevented money from being placed in the pool and thus prevented it from being distributed to an employee, and the presence of substantial evidence meant that the court was unable to say that the trial court was required to grant a directed verdict on this point. Aon Risk Servs. v. Meadors, 100 Ark. App. 272, 267 S.W.3d 603 (2007).

Court rejected an employer's claim that because the trial court found a memorandum ambiguous in some respects, it was too indefinite to have constituted an offer; the court disagreed that an ambiguous offer was necessarily indefinite, and the court saw no error in the trial court's refusal to grant a directed verdict on that basis. Aon Risk Servs. v. Meadors, 100 Ark. App. 272, 267 S.W.3d 603 (2007).

Employer was not required to make a motion for directed verdict at the end of an employee's presentation of evidence to be able to challenge a jury's verdict in a dispute over commissions. McCourt Mfg. Corp. v. Rycroft, 2009 Ark. 332, 322 S.W.3d 491 (2009).

Circuit court erred in granting a bank's motion for a directed verdict and in finding that the bank's floor-plan agreement with a company provided for a fixed-interest rate because the language in the interest-rate clause of the parties' agreement was ambiguous, and its meaning presented a factual question for the jury; the bank's evidence that it intended that the rate be fixed and that the interest-rate clause contained "variable" language since the floor-plan agreement was drafted on a form used for both fixed and variable-rate loans, along with the company's evidence, should have been submitted to the fact-finder as criteria for resolving the meaning of the ambiguous interest-rate clause. Tri-Eagle Enters. v. Regions Bank, 2010 Ark. App. 64, 373 S.W.3d 399 (2010).

Trial court did not err in granting a mother's motion for a directed verdict and in denying a father's petition to change primary custody because the father did not make a prima facie case of a material change of circumstances. Lawhead v. Harris, 2010 Ark. App. 77, 374 S.W.3d 71 (2010).

Trial court properly granted a bank a directed verdict on appellee's abuse-of-process claim, as he did not establish an ulterior purpose or an improper act on the part of the bank in suing him to collect its debt. Nat'l Bank of Ark. v. River Crossing Partners, LLC, 2011 Ark. 475, 385 S.W.3d 754 (2011).

Appellants did not show that appellee actually released the water that flooded their yard, and appellants did not prove that if appellee did release the water, such was the cause of the house damage, and therefore the trial court's dismissal was not error, and the court affirmed the granting of a directed verdict. Sammons v. Seeco, Inc., 2012 Ark. App. 650, 425 S.W.3d 38 (2012).

Appellants claimed the trial court erred in granting appellee a directed verdict because res ipsa loquitur applied, but the court disagreed; there was no evidence that the ponds in question were under appellee's exclusive control. Sammons v. Seeco, Inc., 2012 Ark. App. 650, 425 S.W.3d 38 (2012).

In connection with the former owner's breach of contract claim, the writing was sufficiently definite to comprise an option contract, there was substantial evidence that the former owner conferred a benefit on the current owner in exchange for the option to invest in the company, and the court found no merit in the argument regarding lack of consideration, such that the denial of the current owner's motion for directed verdict was not error. Trakru v. Mathews, 2014 Ark. App. 154, 434 S.W.3d 10 (2014).

As to the fraud claim, substantial evidence supported a finding that the current owner made a false promise, knowing at the time it would not be kept, and the options rights in question were material to the former owner, such that the denial of the current owner's motion for directed verdict was not error. Trakru v. Mathews, 2014 Ark. App. 154, 434 S.W.3d 10 (2014).

Trial court correctly granted the motion for a directed verdict against appellant, as she failed to introduce the document purporting to be the amendment to the trust into evidence, and whether the document was effective to amend the trust could not be considered. Grunwald v. McCall, 2014 Ark. App. 596, 446 S.W.3d 217 (2014).

—Denial.

Where a secured creditor sold the collateral and then brought a deficiency action against the accommodation maker for the balance due on the note, the trial court did not err in denying the accommodation maker's motion for a directed verdict, which was based on the ground that the proof adduced was sufficient to allow the court to determine that a usurious rate of interest was sought, for three reasons: (1) the motion was made at the conclusion of the plaintiff's case and not made or renewed after all the evidence had been presented; (2) the accommodation maker failed to state specific grounds for his motion, and (3) there was still an issue of fact for the jury on the proper application of a $1,000 payment made by the debtor. Svestka v. First Nat'l Bank, 269 Ark. 237, 602 S.W.2d 604 (1980).

Motion for judgment on verdict denied. Bell v. McManus, 294 Ark. 275, 742 S.W.2d 559 (1988).

If there is substantial evidence to support the jury verdict, the motion for directed verdict should be denied. Substantial evidence is evidence of sufficient force and character that it will compel a conclusion one way or the other, and it must induce the mind to pass beyond mere suspicion or conjecture. Dorton v. Francisco, 309 Ark. 472, 833 S.W.2d 362 (1992).

Trial court did not err in denying a corporate owner of a concession trailer's motion for a directed verdict in an action for personal injury damages and loss of consortium brought by a high school custodian and the custodian's spouse; the custodian, who was severely injured by an electrical shock when the custodian raised the windows of the trailer, was a foreseeable plaintiff to whom the owner owed a duty to take ordinary, prudent precautions of protection, which the owner failed to do. Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. Gill, 352 Ark. 240, 100 S.W.3d 715 (2003).

Where a bank engaged in a continuous course of conduct seeking the prosecution of a mortgagor by misrepresenting material facts to the prosecutor regarding assets that were allegedly wrongfully disposed of, with the deliberate intent to injure the mortgagor such that the mortgagor's reputation and business prospects in the community were severely damaged, substantial evidence supported the elements of malicious prosecution, and the bank's motions for directed verdicts were properly denied. Bank of Eureka Springs v. Evans, 353 Ark. 438, 109 S.W.3d 672 (2003).

Trial court did not err in refusing to grant attorneys' motions for directed verdict and judgment notwithstanding the verdict where there was no evidence that the jury did not follow the law they were instructed upon; where the jury was instructed on both negligence and breach of contract and awarded damages, but did not specify a basis, without indication of how the jury reached its award of damages and without evidence that the jury members did not follow the trial court's instructions, the appellate court would not reverse. Hyden v. Highcouch, Inc., 353 Ark. 609, 110 S.W.3d 760 (2003).

Appellate court's judgment affirming the trial court's denial of the construction company and its truck driver's motion for directed verdict on the issue of punitive damages was supported by substantial evidence as ample evidence showed that they knew, or should have known, about the dangerous condition of their truck that veered into an oncoming lane of traffic on a highway and struck a vehicle head-on, killing two people and injuring two other people in the

Motion for directed verdict at the close of all of the evidence was still a precondition under subsection (b) of this rule for making the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict; thus, where the sellers failed to move for a directed verdict at the close of all of the proof, they could not appeal the trial court's denial of their motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Randles v. Cole, 80 Ark. App. 334, 96 S.W.3d 768 (2003).

Trial court did not err in declining to direct a verdict in a conversion action where the lessee farmer whose farm equipment was converted testified to specific facts surrounding the lessee's purchase of the equipment, including the down payment and the purchase price and, in any event, the matter was a factual issue and there was sufficient evidence for the question of ownership, and the extent thereof, to go to the jury. Hudson v. Cook, 82 Ark. App. 246, 105 S.W.3d 821 (2003).

Where a telephone company failed to move for a directed verdict at the conclusion of all the evidence in its negligence action against a contractor, it could not challenge the sufficiency of the evidence for the first time on appeal. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co. v. Garner, 83 Ark. App. 226, 125 S.W.3d 844 (2003).

In a policy owner's action against insurer and its agent, the denial of the insurer's and agent's motions for a directed verdict on the tort of outrage, based on the rescission of a life insurance policy after policy owner's son was killed, was affirmed on appeal because there was evidence that the enrolling agent misrepresented himself to be the agent's manager when he was really unlicensed in Arkansas as an insurance agent; in addition, neither the application, the insurer's manual, nor the policy defined "dependent" and the insurer relied on the agent's personnel to define the term to the owner. Cincinnati Life Ins. v. Mickles, 85 Ark. App. 188, 148 S.W.3d 768 (2004).

Where the express terms of purchase orders sent by a manufacturer to a supplier did not clearly require written confirmation as a prerequisite to the formation of a contract, the purchase order term requiring written confirmation by the supplier did not govern over the parties course of conduct in which the manufacturer had paid invoices despite the lack of written confirmation from the supplier; hence, in the supplier's action to recover for goods sold, the manufacturer's motion for a directed verdict was properly denied. Bio-Tech Pharmacal, Inc. v. Int'l Bus. Connections, LLC, 86 Ark. App. 220, 184 S.W.3d 447 (2004).

In a personal injury suit brought by a hotel guest who fell when the toilet lid detached from the toilet assembly, the trial court erred when it denied her motion for a directed verdict on comparative fault; there was no substantial evidence of the guest's negligence and the issue of comparative fault should not have been presented to the jury. Marx v. Huron Little Rock, 88 Ark. App. 284, 198 S.W.3d 127 (2004).

Court properly directed a verdict for insurer on a bad faith claim where plaintiff submitted no evidence of any affirmative misconduct on the part of the insurer in handling a settlement; to the contrary, the insurer investigated the claim, reviewed accident reports, and determined that it was in the best interest of its insured to settle. Switzer v. Shelter Mut. Ins. Co., 362 Ark. 419, 208 S.W.3d 792 (2005).

Directed verdict in favor of biological daughter in step-daughters' action to set aside deeds that had been conveyed in favor of the daughter was proper as the daughter did not have the burden of proving her father's mental capacity and freedom from undue influence. Stanley v. Burchett, 93 Ark. App. 54, 216 S.W.3d 615 (2005).

—Jury Trial.

In a trial by jury, a trial court is not required to grant a directed verdict on its own motion. Mikel v. Hubbard, 317 Ark. 125, 876 S.W.2d 558 (1994).

—Renewal of Motion.

A civil defendant is not required to restate his grounds for directed verdict where he has made a specific motion at the close of the plaintiff's case, and incorporates the same arguments by the later renewal. Aronson v. Harriman, 321 Ark. 359, 901 S.W.2d 832 (1995).

Despite the "in every instance" language in subsection (a) of this rule, as long as a specific basis was articulated for the original directed-verdict motion, a general renewal is sufficient. Dale v. State, 55 Ark. App. 184, 935 S.W.2d 274 (1996).

—Specific Grounds.

A statement of the specific grounds for a directed verdict is required so that a judgment will not be entered upon a ground that might have been met with proof if the ground had been specified. Standridge v. City of Hot Springs, 271 Ark. 754, 610 S.W.2d 574 (1981); Lytle v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 309 Ark. 139, 827 S.W.2d 652 (1992).

Where defendant moved at the end of the case for a directed verdict, but failed to state in the motion the specific grounds relied upon, this failure was sufficient basis under subsection (a) of this rule to deny the motion, since the requirement of stating specific grounds is mandatory. Dodson Creek, Inc. v. Fred Walton Realty Co., 2 Ark. App. 128, 620 S.W.2d 947 (1981).

Failure of a motion for directed verdict to comply with this rule's requirement, that the specific grounds relied on be stated, is a sufficient basis for denial of the motion and for affirmance on appeal; the requirement that the directed verdict motion state the specific grounds therefor is especially necessary when a case involves multiple issues. Security Pac. Hous. Servs., Inc. v. Friddle, 315 Ark. 178, 866 S.W.2d 375 (1993).

Although the trial court interrupted defense counsel when he made his initial motion for a directed verdict and was very quick to deny the second one and the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, counsel should nevertheless have asked to put the grounds for those motions on the record. Yam's, Inc. v. Moore, 319 Ark. 111, 890 S.W.2d 246 (1994).

Where the residence was constructed in 1987, but appellant's suit was not filed until 1995, in the absence of fraudulent concealment of the alleged deficiencies in construction of their home, appellant's suit was barred as of 1992 by the statute of limitations found in § 16-56-112(a) and the builder was properly granted a directed verdict. Curry v. Thornsberry, 354 Ark. 631, 128 S.W.3d 438 (2003).

Where appellant never articulated that the basis for its motion was the alleged technical failure of appellee's experts to opine with a "reasonable degree of medical certainty" in connection with the element of proximate cause, appellant's failure to specify in what respect the evidence was deficient caused its motion for a directed verdict not to have been specific enough to preserve the issue for appeal. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Kilgore, 85 Ark. App. 231, 148 S.W.3d 754 (2004).

—Waiver of Error.

The creation of subsection (a) of this rule, which states that a party may move for a directed verdict at the close of his opponent's evidence without reserving the right to offer evidence if the motion is not granted, does not change the settled rule that failure to renew a motion for a directed verdict following the overruling of a motion for directed verdict after the plaintiff has introduced its evidence but before defendant has introduced its evidence, waives any error. Sanson v. Pullum, 273 Ark. 325, 619 S.W.2d 641 (1981).

The adoption of subsection (a) of this rule did not change the settled rule that, by going forward with proof after the motion for a directed verdict is denied, the defendant waives any error in the trial court's failure to direct a verdict at the close of the plaintiff's case. Higgins v. Hines, 289 Ark. 281, 711 S.W.2d 783 (1986).

In a wrongful death action brought by the administrator of the deceased patient's estate against a nursing center and its parent company, because the center and the company failed to renew their motion for directed verdict following the conclusion of the administrator's rebuttal, they waived any question pertaining to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the jury's award of punitive damages. Advocat, Inc. v. Sauer, 353 Ark. 29, 111 S.W.3d 346, cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1012, 124 S. Ct. 532, 157 L. Ed. 2d 424 (2003), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1004, 124 S. Ct. 535, 157 L. Ed. 2d 409 (2003).

Disposition of Motion.

Former ARAP 4(c), by its terms, is applicable to specific civil motions including a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict under subsection (b) of this rule, a motion to amend findings of fact or to make additional findings of fact under Ark. R. Civ. P. 52(b), and a motion for a new trial under Ark. R. Civ. P. 59(b); however, ARAP 4(c) has been applied to criminal matters where the motion made following the judgment of conviction was analogous to a civil motion made under subsection (b) of this rule, Ark. R. Civ. P. 52(b), or Ark. R. Civ. P. 59(b). Fuller v. State, 316 Ark. 341, 872 S.W.2d 54 (1994).

Trial court improperly denied a bank's directed verdict motion against a contractor on the contractor's breach of contract claim because the alleged loan commitment letter by the bank to the contractor did not constitute an enforceable contract as essential terms of the alleged contract were missing from the letter. Superior Fed. Bank v. Mackey, 84 Ark. App. 1, 129 S.W.3d 324 (2003).

Error Waived.

Trial court erred by evaluating the witnesses' credibility prematurely, because the credibility of the builder's witnesses was a matter for the trial court as the finder of fact, not a matter for the trial court in evaluating whether the builder made a prima facie case on its breach of contract claim. However, the builder waived the error because it failed to argue the point until its reply brief. Rymor Builders, Inc. v. Tanglewood Plumbing Co., 100 Ark. App. 141, 265 S.W.3d 151 (2007).

Under subsection (e) of this rule, because appellants failed to renew their motion for a directed verdict at the close of the evidence, they waived any challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence regarding a punitive damages award. Bronakowski v. Lindhurst, 2009 Ark. App. 513, 324 S.W.3d 719 (2009).

How Motion Treated.

While appellees styled their motion as one for directed verdict, the motion was treated as one for dismissal because the underlying matter was resolved at a bench trial. Rutland v. McWhorter, 2016 Ark. App. 163, 485 S.W.3d 722 (2016).

Judgment Notwithstanding Verdict.

The trial court may enter judgment notwithstanding the verdict only if there is no substantial evidence to support the jury verdict, and one party is entitled by law to a judgment in his favor; and on appeal the Supreme Court reviews the evidence and all reasonable inferences deducible therefrom in the light most favorable to the party against whom the judgment notwithstanding the verdict was entered. McCuiston v. City of Siloam Springs, 268 Ark. 148, 594 S.W.2d 233 (1980).

There was substantial evidence to support the jury's verdict that power company willfully cut timber on plaintiff's land, and the trial court did not err in denying power company's motion for judgment n.o.v. Arkansas Power & Light Co. v. Adcock, 281 Ark. 104, 661 S.W.2d 392 (1983).

Motion for JNOV proper where verdict failed to award compensatory damages to support punitive damages which were awarded. Bell v. McManus, 294 Ark. 275, 742 S.W.2d 559 (1988).

A trial court may not substitute its view of the evidence for that of the jury and grant a new trial, unless the verdict is clearly against the preponderance of the evidence. Razorback Cab of Fort Smith, Inc. v. Martin, 313 Ark. 445, 856 S.W.2d 2 (1993).

Under subsection (b) of this rule, a motion for a directed verdict is a condition precedent to moving for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict; a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is technically only a renewal of the motion for directed verdict made at the close of the evidence. Wheeler Motor Co. v. Roth, 315 Ark. 318, 867 S.W.2d 446 (1993).

The evidence presented by plaintiff in her effort to assign liability to the manufacturer was not substantial enough to negate the existence of other possibilities of sources of contamination and therefore required the setting aside of the jury's verdict. Campbell Soup Co. v. Gates, 319 Ark. 54, 889 S.W.2d 750 (1994).

Since Arkansas does not recognize the principle of additur, a motion for additur does not qualify as a motion for judgment nov or a motion for new trial. Routh Wrecker Serv., Inc. v. Washington, 335 Ark. 232, 980 S.W.2d 240 (1998).

Nowhere in the rule, nor in any rule of appellate procedure, was a party permitted to appeal the denial of a motion for JNOV where there had been no final determination of the merits. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Running M Farms, Inc., 348 Ark. 313, 72 S.W.3d 502 (2002).

In a slip and fall case, there was no evidence from which the jury could have determined, without speculation and conjecture, how the strapping band came to be on the floor or how long it was there prior to the accident, and the trial court's entry of judgment notwithstanding the verdict for the department store was proper. Tomlin v. Wal-Mart Stores, 81 Ark. App. 198, 100 S.W.3d 57 (2003).

In a dispute over uninsured motorist benefits, insurer's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict should have been granted because, even though a front-end loader could have been both "special mobile equipment" and an “auto” under an insurance policy, there was no showing that the vehicle was designed primarily for use on public roads. S. Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. Co. v. Spears, 360 Ark. 200, 200 S.W.3d 436 (2004).

Trial court erred in granting appellants’ motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict as to a prescriptive easement because they did not move for a directed verdict at the close of all of the evidence on this ground and substantial evidence supported the jury’s finding that there was no such easement. King v. Powell, 85 Ark. App. 212, 148 S.W.3d 792 (2004).

Where jury returned a verdict in favor of the teacher in her claim of outrage against the principal, trial court’s failure to act on the principal’s motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict within 30 days constituted a denial of that motion, and the trial court’s subsequent granting of that motion 137 days after entry of judgment was void and of no effect; the civil order entered by the court the day after the jury returned its verdict constituted the entry of judgment in the case. White v. Mattingly, 89 Ark. App. 55, 199 S.W.3d 724 (2004).

Appellate court declined to address the merits of the denial of buyer’s motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict (JNOV) where it had already concluded that buyer’s motion for directed verdict was not supported by specific grounds and, thus, the merits of the denial were not preserved for appellate review; buyer’s motion for JNOV, which was essentially a renewal of the motion for a directed verdict, was also not preserved for appellate review. Thomas v. Olson, 364 Ark. 444, 220 S.W.3d 627 (2005).

Because seller failed to file a timely motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and a new trial in purchaser’s fraud action against it, the time to file its notice of appeal was not extended under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(b), and the failure to file a notice of appeal within 30 days of the August 3, 2005, judgment required the appellate court to dismiss the appeal because it lacked jurisdiction to consider it. River Valley Motors, Inc. v. Ramey, 96 Ark. App. 180, 239 S.W.3d 555 (2006).

Judgment notwithstanding the verdict was properly granted in a malicious prosecution case where the passenger of a truck was arrested when the vehicle bumped a key-card entry gate; even if there was no damage to the gate or a mistake about such, there was still probable cause for an arrest for criminal mischief or attempt under Ark. R. Crim. P. 4.1(c). Coombs v. Hot Springs Vill. Prop. Owners Ass’n, 98 Ark. App. 226, 254 S.W.3d 5 (2007).

Motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was denied in a case involving fraudulent transfers to a wife, as an insider, by a judgment debtor under § 4-59-204(a)(1) because the debtor and the wife were unable to substantiate the claim that wife purchased the stocks with money won at a horse race or that a transfer was due to the debtor’s poor health. Laird v. Weigh Sys. South II, Inc., 98 Ark. App. 393, 255 S.W.3d 900 (2007).

Because the evidence supported a punitive damage award in favor of appellees, the trial court did not err in denying appellants’ motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Bronakowski v. Lindhurst, 2009 Ark. App. 513, 324 S.W.3d 719 (2009).

Sellers sued a prospective home buyer for breach of contract; as the contract was subject to the buyer’s ability to obtain financing, and that condition was not met, the trial court erred in denying his motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. That he had provided the sellers with a letter of financing approval was immaterial, because that approval was later revoked due to a material change in his financial circumstances. Carter v. Cline, 2011 Ark. 474, 385 S.W.3d 745 (2011).

Jurisdiction.

Where appellee’s August 9 motion for j.n.o.v. or a new trial was timely filed within 10 days of the August 5 judgment, but the trial court neither granted nor denied the motion within 30 days of its filing, so that the motion was deemed denied as of the 30th day, September 8, the trial court’s failure to act on appellee’s motion within 30 days of its filing resulted, by operation of law, in that court’s loss of jurisdiction to decide the motion; therefore, the September 23 order purporting to grant appellee’s j.n.o.v. motion was void and of no effect. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Sudrick, 49 Ark. App. 84, 896 S.W.2d 452 (1995).

Non-Jury Case.

Proper motion to challenge the sufficiency of an opponent’s evidence in a non-jury case is a motion to dismiss. Rymor Builders, Inc. v. Tanglewood Plumbing Co., 100 Ark. App. 141, 265 S.W.3d 151 (2007).

Purpose.

The intent of subsection (a) of this rule is to require a party testing the sufficiency of the evidence first to submit the question to the trial court, thereby permitting the court to make a ruling at the conclusion of all the evidence but prior to verdict, thus preserving the specific question for appeal. On the other hand, the motion for judgment n.o.v. is permitted by the rule for the express purpose of not only again raising the question of sufficiency of the evidence but also all other questions of law properly preserved during trial, all of which are to be considered by the court in light of the verdict rendered. Willson Safety Prods. v. Eschenbrenner, 302 Ark. 228, 788 S.W.2d 729 (1990).

The intent of subsection (a) of this rule is to require a party testing the sufficiency of the evidence to first submit the question to the trial court, thereby permitting that court to rule at the conclusion of all the evidence but prior to verdict, and thus preserving the specific question for appeal. Pennington v. Rhodes, 55 Ark. App. 42, 929 S.W.2d 169 (1996).

Record on Appeal.

Appellate court remanded a case to settle and supplement the record because the court could not determine whether it had jurisdiction to hear the appeal; in the absence of an order or judgment entered pursuant to the jury's verdict, the court was unable to determine from the record whether a motion for JNOV was timely filed, which was critical to determining whether the notice of appeal was timely filed. Moreover, the jury verdict forms were not in the addendum or the record filed with the court. Air Masters Mech., Inc. v. Goodman Distrib., 2015 Ark. App. 315 (2015).

Sufficiency of the Evidence.

In order for an appellant to challenge the sufficiency of the evidence in a jury trial, he must either move for a directed verdict at the conclusion of all the evidence, move for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, or move for a new trial because of insufficiency of the evidence. The failure to do one of these three requirements precludes raising the issue on appeal. McFall Chevrolet Co. v. Collins, 271 Ark. 469, 609 S.W.2d 118 (Ct. App. 1980).

Subsection (e) of this rule applies only to jury trials. Bass v. Koller, 276 Ark. 93, 632 S.W.2d 410 (1982); Sipes v. Munro, 287 Ark. 244, 697 S.W.2d 905 (1985).

In equity cases, a party may challenge the sufficiency of the evidence at the conclusion of the opponent's evidence by moving either orally or in writing to dismiss the opposing party's claim for relief; however, in a nonjury trial, a party who does not challenge the sufficiency of evidence does not waive the right to do so on appeal. Harpole v. Harpole, 10 Ark. App. 298, 664 S.W.2d 480 (1984).

Appellant could not question the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict where appellant failed to renew its motion for a directed verdict at the conclusion of all the evidence, nor did appellant file a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. B.J. McAdams, Inc. v. Doggett Leasing Co., 13 Ark. App. 162, 681 S.W.2d 406 (1984); City of Helena v. Chrestman, 17 Ark. App. 235, 707 S.W.2d 338 (1986).

Since a motion for a new trial may be granted under Ark. R. Civ. P. 59 where the verdict is clearly contrary to the preponderance of the evidence, and such a motion does not test the sufficiency of the evidence, the plaintiffs were not precluded by subsection (e) of this rule from moving for a new trial because they had failed to move for directed verdict. Yeager v. Roberts, 288 Ark. 156, 702 S.W.2d 793 (1986).

Before a party may question the sufficiency of the evidence in a jury trial, he must comply with subsection (e) of this rule. Where appellant does not properly request the trial court to rule on the sufficiency of the evidence, the reviewing court will not consider the matter on appeal. Copelin v. Corter, 291 Ark. 218, 724 S.W.2d 146 (1987); Laster v. Tilley, 295 Ark. 488, 749 S.W.2d 326 (1988); Mitchell v. Goodall, 297 Ark. 332, 761 S.W.2d 919 (1988).

A party must test the sufficiency of the evidence by motions for directed verdict and judgment notwithstanding the verdict, not by a motion for new trial. Majewski v. Cantrell, 293 Ark. 360, 737 S.W.2d 649 (1987).

Subsection (e) of this rule applies to the issue of sufficiency of the evidence in criminal cases except for certain phases of death penalty cases, errors made by the trial judge at a time when there was no opportunity to object, errors so flagrant and highly prejudicial as to require the court to intervene sua sponte and errors relating to the admission or exclusion of evidence which affect substantial rights. Ballew v. State, 21 Ark. App. 215, 731 S.W.2d 222 (1987).

In the absence of a proper objection or motion in the trial court, appellate court would not review the sufficiency of the evidence. Ballew v. State, 21 Ark. App. 215, 731 S.W.2d 222 (1987).

At the conclusion of all the evidence, a failure to renew the motion for directed verdict attacking the sufficiency of all the evidence constitutes a waiver of the issue. Willson Safety Prods. v. Eschenbrenner, 302 Ark. 228, 788 S.W.2d 729 (1990).

Neither a motion for new trial, nor an appeal arguing that the jury's verdict was against the preponderance of the evidence under Ark. R. Civ. P. 59(a) and (f), tests the sufficiency of the evidence to go to the jury and neither is precluded by subsection (e) of this rule. Hall v. Grimmer, 318 Ark. 309, 885 S.W.2d 297 (1994).

Although Ark. R. Civ. P. 59 specifically states that a motion for a new trial may be granted where the verdict is clearly contrary to a preponderance of the evidence, such a motion does not test the sufficiency of the evidence to go to the jury; a party must test the sufficiency of the evidence by a motion for a directed verdict or judgment notwithstanding the verdict, not by a motion for new trial. Benton v. Barnett, 53 Ark. App. 146, 920 S.W.2d 30 (1996).

A party testing the sufficiency of the evidence must move for a directed verdict at the end of plaintiff's case-in-chief and again at the close of all evidence, and state specific grounds upon which it seeks such relief. Houston v. Knoedl, 329 Ark. 91, 947 S.W.2d 745 (1997), overruled in part, McCourt Mfg. Corp. v. Rycroft, 2009 Ark. 332, 322 S.W.3d 491 (2009).

Finding in favor of the spouse that a pharmacist incorrectly filled the decedent's prescription resulting in his death was proper where the store's point on appeal was a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence, under subsection (e) of this rule, and not a motion for a new trial, under Ark. R. Civ. P. 59; because the motion for a new trial was really a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence supporting the proximate-cause element of the spouse's action for medical injury, it had not been properly preserved. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Tucker, 353 Ark. 730, 120 S.W.3d 61 (2003).

In a trespass suit, the trial court properly denied defendant's motion for directed verdict on the issue of damages; plaintiff produced substantial evidence that her use of her property was recreational and that the trees defendant destroyed had aesthetic value, thus, the cost to replace the trees and not the property's diminution in value was the proper measure of damages. King v. Powell, 85 Ark. App. 212, 148 S.W.3d 792 (2004).

Where parents filed suit against an aunt and the aunt's former husband to recover for a burn suffered by the child while in the aunt's care, a directed verdict was improperly granted to the aunt and the husband because the trial court improperly evaluated the claim using the standard of care for a licensee when the proper standard of care was whether the aunt used ordinary care to avoid injury to the child. Anderson v. Mitts, 87 Ark. App. 19, 185 S.W.3d 154 (2004).

In a personal injury case, plaintiff's motion for a new trial did not preserve a sufficiency of the evidence argument for appeal because he did not raise the argument in a motion for directed verdict at the close of all the evidence. Switzer v. Shelter Mut. Ins. Co., 362 Ark. 419, 208 S.W.3d 792 (2005).

Circuit court did not err in failing to direct a verdict in favor of insurer on accident victim's claim where neither the driver nor the owner of the vehicle at fault presented proof of insurance such that the evidence presented went beyond mere suspicion and conjecture and was sufficient to support the jury's conclusion that the vehicle was uninsured. Gailey v. Allstate Ins. Co., 362 Ark. 568, 210 S.W.3d 40 (2005).

Insurer's motion for a directed verdict should have been granted where insurer determined that the documentation submitted failed to prove that insured was disabled under the policy, and the insured offered no other evidence that insurer engaged in any affirmative acts of bad faith. Unum Life Ins. Co. of Am. v. Edwards, 362 Ark. 624, 210 S.W.3d 84 (2005).

Where the judge in a bench trial awarded plaintiff damages, defendant was not precluded from raising a sufficiency of the evidence argument on appeal where he did not first file a motion for directed verdict before the trial court. Jackson v. Pitts, 93 Ark. App. 466, 220 S.W.3d 265 (2005).

Directed verdicts in favor of the administrative service and consulting service shareholder were affirmed because the daughter did not provide substantial evidence that the administrative service supervised the nursing home employees or had any responsibility for the number of staff on duty during her mother's time there, and the daughter offered no evidence that the shareholder failed to implement proper policies or that he hired an ineffective administrator; however, the daughter did present evidence from which a jury could reasonably conclude that the consulting service was negligent and that its negligence was a proximate cause of the mother's injuries and death. Scott v. Cent. Ark. Nursing Ctrs., Inc., 101 Ark. App. 424, 278 S.W.3d 587 (2008).

Circuit court did not err in denying the medical center's insurer's motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and directed verdict as there was sufficient evidence to support the determination that the medical center negligently supervised and retained the offending employee; the negligent supervision or retention of the employee was the proximate cause of the child's injuries, and was foreseeable. Medical Assur. Co. v. Castro, 2009 Ark. 93, 302 S.W.3d 592 (2009).

Had appellants properly preserved the issue regarding the denial of their motion for directed verdict for review, sufficient evidence supported the trial court's decision to submit the punitive damages issue to the jury, given that (1) the jury could and did find that appellants intentionally cut trees from appellees' property and caused the clearing of that property in order to obtain a lake view, (2) appellants did so despite being repeatedly warned to stay off the property, and (3) appellants ultimately profited from their wrongful actions. Bronakowski v. Lindhurst, 2009 Ark. App. 513, 324 S.W.3d 719 (2009).

Pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule, an attorney and his firm were entitled to a directed verdict in a legal malpractice case based on the creation of an unsuccessful employee stock ownership plan (ESOP) because, without expert testimony, nothing in the evidence established the standard of care or showed that the attorney breached it; the client produced no evidence that a feasibility study had predicted that the ESOP might not work. Grassi v. Hyden, 2010 Ark. App. 203, 374 S.W.3d 183 (2010).

Time for Motion.

The plaintiff's motion for directed was offered at a time other than that contemplated by subsection (a) of this rule where the motion was made at the close of the plaintiff's case. Scott Truck & Tractor Co. v. Alma Tractor & Equip., Inc., 72 Ark. App. 79, 35 S.W.3d 815 (2000).

Although a circuit court's grant of a directed verdict by the Department of Human Services at the close of its case in chief in a dependency-neglect proceeding was improper under subsection (a) of this rule, the appellate court refused to reverse the adjudication order because the parents failed to raise their Rule 50 argument in the trial court. Reid v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2010 Ark. App. 156 (2010).

Motion for a directed verdict was made “at the conclusion of all the evidence” and complied with subsection (e) of this rule as the motion was made after the last witness had testified and before any instructions or arguments were made to the jury. Further, no additional proof was introduced after the movant renewed its directed-verdict motion. Holiday Inn Franchising v. Hotel Assocs., 2011 Ark. App. 147, 382 S.W.3d 6 (2011), cert. denied, 565 U.S. 1275, 132 S. Ct. 1768, 182 L. Ed. 2d 558 (2012).

Written Record.

If parties plan to base their arguments on the timeliness of the notice of appeal from the denial of a motion for a judgment n.o.v. or a new trial motion upon a “written record” that a hearing has been set or held, the “written record,” a transcript of the hearing or other record of its having been held must be filed and made an official record of the court within 30 days from the making of the motion for judgment n.o.v. or for a new trial. Brittenum & Assocs. v. Mayall, 286 Ark. 427, 692 S.W.2d 248 (1985).

Rule 51. Instructions to jury: objection.

At the close of the evidence or at such earlier time as the court may reasonably direct, any party may submit requested jury instructions to the court. The court shall inform counsel of its proposed action upon the requested instructions and also inform counsel of all other instructions it proposes to submit to the jury. The court shall instruct the jury prior to the arguments of counsel. No party may assign as error the giving or the failure to give an instruction unless he objects thereto before or at the time the instruction is given, stating distinctly the matter to which he objects and the grounds of his objection, and no party may assign as error the failure to instruct on any issue unless such party has submitted a proposed instruction on that issue. Opportunity shall be given to make objections to instructions out of the hearing of the jury.

A mere general objection shall not be sufficient to obtain appellate review of the court's action relating to instructions to the jury except as to an instruction directing a verdict or the court's action in declining to do so.

HISTORY: Amended May 24, 2001, effective July 1, 2001.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 51:

1. Rule 51 varies materially from FRCP 51 and instead tracks prior Arkansas law. Article 7, Section 23 of the Arkansas Constitution requires trial judges to declare the law and reduce the charge to writing at the request of either party. There was no specific statutory provision under prior Arkansas law which required that a party's requested jury instructions had to be submitted to the court by a certain time. Many courts adopted local rules specifying such time and this rule will have no effect on such local rules, provided, of course, that the time limit specified therein is reasonable.

2. This rule requires the trial court to inform counsel of the action taken on requested jury instructions and also inform counsel of the instructions which the court intends to submit to the jury. This is to enable counsel to review the instructions to be given and frame such objections thereto as may be desired. Also, this rule continues the prior Arkansas procedure of having jury instructions given prior to the arguments of counsel as provided in superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1727 (Repl. 1962).

3. The provisions of this rule concerning objections to instructions are lifted from Rule 13 of the Uniform Rules for Circuit and Chancery Judges [abolished]. Under the Federal Rule, objections may be made at any time prior to the retirement of the jury for deliberations. Under this rule, objections must be made before or at the time the instructions are given.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2001 Amendment:

The word "trial," which modified "court's" the second paragraph, has been deleted in light of Constitutional Amendment 80, which established the circuit courts as the "trial courts of original jurisdiction" in the state and abolished the separate chancery and probate courts.

CASE NOTES

Appeals.

On appeal, the court will not consider arguments on those instructions to which there was no objection or, where necessary, an instruction was not offered. In order to preserve an objection regarding an erroneous instruction of law, the party appealing must make a timely objection by telling the trial judge why the instruction is wrong, and when the point of appeal is that the court failed to give an instruction, the party appealing must submit a proposed instruction on the issue. Peoples Bank & Trust Co. v. Wallace, 290 Ark. 589, 721 S.W.2d 659 (1986); Viking Ins. Co. v. Jester, 310 Ark. 317, 836 S.W.2d 371 (1992).

Simply giving a set of instructions to the trial judge prior to trial is not sufficient to allow the appellate court to address the propriety of proposed instructions on appeal, as the responsibility of bringing a record up on appeal from which the court can fully review the proceedings rests with appellant. City of Little Rock v. Weber, 298 Ark. 382, 767 S.W.2d 529 (1989).

Where appellant was denied a jury instruction, her failure to proffer or abstract the desired instruction as part of her appeal was fatal to her appellate argument. Kelley v. Medlin, 309 Ark. 146, 827 S.W.2d 655 (1992).

Jury instruction issues were not preserved for review where it could not be determined from the record whether, or in what form, the proposed jury instructions were proffered. Fisher v. Valco Farms, 328 Ark. 741, 945 S.W.2d 369 (1997).

Discretion of Court.

Where in a personal injury action, the trial court instructed the jury before any evidence was presented that the parent's cause of action for her child's injuries was derivative and subject to the comparative negligence of the child, the court did not abuse its discretion even though it would have been better practice to instruct the jury after the evidence was closed. Kirkendoll v. Hogan, 267 Ark. 1083, 593 S.W.2d 498 (Ct. App. 1980).

Due Process.

Slight difference between jury instruction given for punitive damages and proffered one did not violate defendant's right to due process, and this was especially so in light of the fact that the trial court had already granted a default as to "liability for actual and punitive" claims. Viking Ins. Co. v. Jester, 310 Ark. 317, 836 S.W.2d 371 (1992).

Failure to Make Proper Objection.

Where counsel made only a general objection to the court's instruction on the measure of damages, saying that "it did not set out the proper measure of damages for the case at bar," such a broad statement did not tell the trial court exactly why the instruction was wrong and therefore was not sufficiently specific to present any question for review. Chandler v. Kirkpatrick, 270 Ark. 74, 603 S.W.2d 406 (1980).

Objections to instructions must be specific; a general objection is insufficient. The objection that challenged instructions were "an incorrect statement of the law" raised no point for review. Carroll-Boone Water Dist. v. M. & P. Equip. Co., 280 Ark. 560, 661 S.W.2d 345 (1983).

Where the trial court erroneously instructed the jury as to prior convictions, but defendant failed to object to the jury instruction or to proffer one of his own, his failure to do so precluded consideration of the issue on appeal. Shockley v. State, 282 Ark. 281, 668 S.W.2d 22 (1984).

A party's failure to object to an instruction at trial precludes argument on appeal that the instruction was improper. Wallace v. Dustin, 284 Ark. 318, 681 S.W.2d 375 (1984).

Failure to object to the giving of an erroneous jury instruction before the case is submitted to the jury is a waiver of any error committed by the court in giving it. Delta Sch. of Commerce, Inc. v. Wood, 298 Ark. 195, 766 S.W.2d 424 (1989).

Court of appeals erred in overturning a judgment in favor of appellee in appellant's personal injury suit because appellant's objection regarding a jury instruction on comparative fault was a general objection, insufficient to preserve appellant's argument for review; appellant did not state the specific grounds for the objection. Bell v. Misenheimer, 2009 Ark. 222, 308 S.W.3d 120 (2009).

General Objection.

A general objection is sufficient against a binding instruction that is inherently erroneous. Stephens v. West Pontiac-GMC, Inc., 7 Ark. App. 275, 647 S.W.2d 492 (1983).

An objection which merely complains that a jury instruction is an incorrect declaration of the law, is a general objection, preserving no point for review. AAA T.V. & Stereo Rentals, Inc. v. Crawley, 284 Ark. 83, 679 S.W.2d 190 (1984); Hess v. Treece, 286 Ark. 434, 693 S.W.2d 792 (1985), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1036, 106 S. Ct. 1245, 89 L. Ed. 2d 354 (1986).

In a case involving breach of fiduciary duty, a failure to make a specific objection to jury instructions resulted in a procedural bar, pursuant to this rule. A general objection did not suffice because the instruction was not binding in nature since it did not direct or require the jury to make any particular finding. Agracat, Inc. v. AFS-NWA, LLC, 2012 Ark. App. 372 (2012).

In a negligence case based on property damage, the jury instruction arguments were not preserved for review because the objection to a proposed instruction was too general, and there was no argument that the instruction given was inherently erroneous; moreover, arguments were presented on appeal that were not first made to the circuit court. Platinum Peaks, Inc. v. Bradford, 2015 Ark. App. 548, 473 S.W.3d 70 (2015).

Objection Procedure.

No instruction is required to be proffered in substitution for the instruction to which objection is made. All that is required to preserve an objection for appeal regarding an erroneous instruction of law is to make a timely objection and state valid reasons for the objection. Tandy Corp. v. Bone, 283 Ark. 399, 678 S.W.2d 312 (1984), limited, City of Green Forest v. Morse, 316 Ark. 540, 873 S.W.2d 155 (1994); Thomas Auto Co. v. Craft, 297 Ark. 492, 763 S.W.2d 651 (1989).

When a party objects to an erroneous instruction of law which should not be given, all that is required is to timely state valid reasons for the objection. City of Little Rock v. Weber, 298 Ark. 382, 767 S.W.2d 529 (1989).

For a party to preserve for appeal any objection to the trial court's failure to give an instruction, that party must make a proffer of the instruction to the judge and make his specific objections; simply giving a set of instructions to the trial judge prior to trial is not sufficient to allow the appellate court to address the propriety of appellant's proposed instructions. Precision Steel Whse., Inc. v. Anderson-Martin Mach. Co., 313 Ark. 258, 854 S.W.2d 321 (1993).

Insurer's claim that the trial court gave two binding instructions to the jury that in effect directed the jury to rule in the insured's favor was improper because the insurer never presented arguments to the trial court as to why Special Instruction No. 2 as a binding instruction and why § 17-93-301 should have been given to the jury. Thus, the argument was not preserved on appeal. Allstate Ins. Co. v. Dodson, 2011 Ark. 19, 376 S.W.3d 414 (2011).

Party claimed the trial court did not make a record of two hearings on jury instructions, but she did not place the basis for her objection to one instruction on the record, and she did not recreate a record, although she was given the opportunity to do so. Trakru v. Mathews, 2014 Ark. App. 154, 434 S.W.3d 10 (2014).

Refusal to Give Instruction.

Since Arkansas does not have the "same" or "similar" locality rule concerning standards of care for any profession other than medical it was not error for the court to reject the defendant engineer's proffered instruction which included such standard of care. Carroll-Boone Water Dist. v. M. & P. Equip. Co., 280 Ark. 560, 661 S.W.2d 345 (1983).

Rehearing on Instructions.

On a rehearing concerning instructions presented to a jury, this rule which is specifically directed toward jury instructions controls over Ark. R. Civ. P. 46. Dodson Creek, Inc. v. Fred Walton Realty Co., 2 Ark. App. 128, 620 S.W.2d 947 (1981).

Specific Objection Required.

Party did not meet the standard under the rule and thus did not preserve for review her claim about a jury instruction; the instruction at issue did not tell the jury to return a verdict and was not binding, and thus a specific objection was required to challenge the instruction. Trakru v. Mathews, 2014 Ark. App. 154, 434 S.W.3d 10 (2014).

Timeliness.

In order to be timely, objections to instructions must be made either before or at the time the jury instructions are given; waiting to object until after the jury has been instructed on the law and has retired is untimely, for it gives the circuit court no opportunity to react to the instructions at issue or to amend them. MIC v. Barrett, 313 Ark. 527, 855 S.W.2d 326 (1993).

Waiver.

If appellant's claim was that the trial court failed to give any instruction regarding substantial performance, this was waived because appellant did not proffer the model instruction or object regarding the failure to instruct on the issue; this rule required submission of a proposed instruction and an objection, and while appellant claimed the issue was preserved because the federal pattern instruction was proffered, such was insufficient because a state model instruction was on point, and it was not argued that had the trial court not given the proffered instruction, the model instruction should have been given in the alternative. Armstrong Remodeling & Constr., LLC v. Cardenas, 2012 Ark. App. 387, 417 S.W.3d 748 (2012).

Even though they objected, appellants did not proffer special interrogatories or special-verdict forms for the jury to award separate damages for each successful claim, and thus their argument that the trial court failed to correctly instruct the jury regarding separate damages for each defendant was waived under this rule. Roggasch v. Sims, 2016 Ark. App. 44, 481 S.W.3d 440 (2016).

Rule 52. Findings by the court.

(a)(1) Effect. If requested by a party at any time prior to entry of judgment, in all contested actions tried upon the facts without a jury, the court shall find the facts specially and state separately its conclusions of law thereon, and judgment shall be entered pursuant to Rule 58; and in granting or refusing interlocutory injunctions, the court shall similarly set forth the findings of fact and conclusions of law that constitute the grounds of its action. Requests for findings are not necessary for purposes of review. Findings of fact, whether based on oral or documentary evidence, shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous (clearly against the preponderance of the evidence), and due regard shall be given to the opportunity of the circuit court to judge the credibility of the witnesses. The findings of a master, to the extent that the court adopts them, shall be considered as the findings of the court. If an opinion or memorandum of decision is filed, it will be sufficient if the findings of fact and conclusions of law appear therein. Findings of fact and conclusions of law are unnecessary on decisions of motions under these rules.

(2) Allocation of Fault.

(A) In an action for personal injury, medical injury, wrongful death, or property damage tried without a jury, the court shall determine the fault of all persons or entities, including those not made parties, who may have joint liability or several liability for the alleged injury, death, or damage to property. However, the court shall determine the fault of a nonparty only if:

(i) the claimant entered into a settlement agreement with the nonparty, or a defending party has given notice, as provided in Rule 9(h), that the nonparty was wholly or partially at fault; and

(ii) the defending party has carried the burden of establishing a prima facie case of the nonparty's fault.

(B) The court shall allocate the fault, on a percentage basis, among those persons or entities, including those not made parties, found to have contributed to the injury, death, or property damage.

(C) Assessment of the percentage of a nonparty's fault shall be used only for determining the percentage of fault of the parties. A finding of fault shall not subject a nonparty to liability in any action or be introduced as evidence of liability in any action.

(b) Amendment.

(1) Upon motion of a party made not later than 10 days after entry of judgment, the court may amend its findings of fact previously made or make additional findings and may amend the judgment accordingly. The motion may be made with a motion for a new trial pursuant to Rule 59. A motion made before entry of judgment shall become effective and be treated as filed on the day after the judgment is entered. If the court neither grants nor denies the motion within 30 days of the date on which it is filed or treated as filed, it shall be deemed denied as of the 30th day.

(2) When findings of fact are made in actions tried by the court without a jury, the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings may thereafter be raised whether or not the party raising the question has made in the circuit court an objection to such findings or has made a motion to amend them or a motion for judgment.

HISTORY: Amended November 20, 1989, effective January 1, 1990; amended January 28, 1999; amended May 24, 2001, effective July 1, 2001; amended January 22, 2004; amended August 7, 2014, effective January 1, 2015.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 52:

1. Rule 52 is similar to FRCP 52, but it retains prior Arkansas law by which the failure of a party to request special findings of fact by the court amounted to a waiver of that right. Anderson v. West Bend Co., 240 Ark. 519, 400 S.W.2d 495 (1966); Doup v. Almand, 212 Ark. 687, 207 S.W.2d 601 (1948).

2. Prior Arkansas law was codified in superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1744 (Repl. 1962) which required the trial court to state findings of fact separately from conclusions of law. Where there was any substantial evidence to support the findings of the circuit judge, his decision had to be affirmed on appeal. Fanning v. Hembree Oil Company, 245 Ark. 825, 434 S.W.2d 822 (1968). Under this rule, the findings of the trial judge must be affirmed on appeal unless clearly erroneous, which is the same as clearly against the preponderance of the evidence. The rule, however, does not alter the fact that in some cases an issue must be proved by clear and convincing evidence.

3. Section (b) does not appreciably change prior Arkansas law, as it has been commonly understood that courts had the inherent power to amend its findings or make additional findings during term time. See Vaughn v. Vaughn, 223 Ark. 934, 270 S.W.2d 915 (1954), although this power was severely restricted after term time to those grounds specified in superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 29-506 (Repl. 1962).

4. Under this rule, motions to have the court amend its findings or make additional findings must be filed within ten days after the entry of judgment. This time period cannot be extended by the trial court as provided in Rule 6 herein and in FRCP 6.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1989 Amendment:

Rule 52(a) is amended to make clear that the same standard of appellate review applies, regardless of whether a trial court's findings of fact are based on oral or documentary evidence. The corresponding federal rule was so amended in 1985. Prior to that amendment, some federal courts had held that a more searching appellate review was appropriate when the trial court's findings were based solely on documentary evidence.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1999 Amendment:

Subdivision (b) has been divided into two numbered paragraphs. The new third sentence of paragraph (1) makes plain that a pre-judgment motion to amend findings or to make additional findings is permissible. This is so under the corresponding federal rule, but prior Arkansas case law suggested that such a motion was not effective. See Benedict v. National Bank of Commerce, 329 Ark. 590, 951 S.W.2d 562 (1997) (motion for new trial). The new fourth sentence provides that a motion to amend findings or for additional findings not ruled on by the court within 30 days of its filing (or within 30 days of the date it is treated as filed) is "deemed denied as of the 30th day." This provision also appears in Rule 4(b)(1) of the Rules of Appellate Procedure—Civil but was added here as a reminder to counsel.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2001 Amendment:

The references to "trial court" in subdivisions (a) and (b)(2) have been replaced with "circuit court.” Constitutional Amendment 80 established the circuit courts as the “trial courts of original jurisdiction” in the state and abolished the separate probate and chancery courts.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 2004 Amendment:

Subdivision (a) has been amended to make plain that a request for findings of fact and conclusions of law may be made “at any time prior to entry of judgment.” A companion change in subdivision (b)(1) emphasizes that a motion after entry of judgment pursuant to that provision is for a different purpose, i.e., to amend findings “previously made” or to make additional findings. The effect of these changes is to overrule Apollo Coating RSC, Inc. v. Brookridge Funding Corp., 103 S.W.3d 682 (Ark. App. 2003), which held that a motion for findings and conclusions pursuant to Rule 52(a) could be made after entry of judgment.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 2014 Amendment:

The text of subdivision (a) has been designated as paragraph (1) and paragraph (2) has been added. The latter implements Ark. Code

Ann. §§ 16-61-201 & 16-61-202(c), as amended by Act 1116 of 2013. It is based in part on section 2 of Act 649 of 2003, codified at Ark. Code Ann. § 16-55-202(a), which was invalidated on separation-of-powers grounds in Johnson v. Rockwell Automation, Inc., 2009 Ark. 241, 308 S.W.3d 135. A corresponding change has been made in Rule 49, which applies to jury verdicts. For discussion, see the notes accompanying that rule.

CASE NOTES

In General.

If findings under this rule are timely requested, the trial court is required to make specific findings of fact and conclusions of law and to file the same with the clerk of the trial court so that such findings may be made part of the record. McWhorter v. McWhorter, 70 Ark. App. 41, 14 S.W.3d 528 (2000).

Court rejected a taxpayer’s argument on appeal that the taxpayer’s motion should have been treated by the trial court as being governed by this rule, rather than Ark. R. Civ. P. 59, because the taxpayer never suggested to the trial court that it should have considered the motion under this rule. Jones v. Double ?D’ Props., 352 Ark. 39, 98 S.W.3d 405 (2003).

Where it was clear from the record that the circuit court did an independent review of the evidence, it did not defer to or impermissibly rely on the obiter dictum of the Court of Appeals and thereby fail to satisfy its role as factfinder. Ward v. Williams, 354 Ark. 168, 118 S.W.3d 513 (2003).

Trial court’s oral and written pronouncements set forth sufficient findings on which to base the appointment of the brother as guardian of the mother and the trial court was not required to make further findings upon the sister’s motion. Kimbrough v. Kimbrough, 83 Ark. App. 179, 119 S.W.3d 66 (2003).

Trial judge relied upon the psychologist’s report to make judgmental statements and to reach conclusions concerning the mother before the report was admitted into evidence, thus, the trial judge improperly treated the report as evidence before it became part of the official record of the case; accordingly, the trial court committed reversible error in admitting the report. Rodriguez v. Ark. Dep’t of Human Servs., 84 Ark. App. 177, 137 S.W.3d 432 (2003), rev’d, 360 Ark. 180, 200 S.W.3d 431 (2004).

It was not incumbent upon the son to ask the trial court to consider the relevant statutes that must be satisfied prior to a finding of incapacity of the mother; furthermore, subdivision (b)(2) of this rule provides that, in a bench trial, the sufficiency of the evidence to support the trial court’s findings could be raised whether or not any objection was made below. Cogburn v. Wolfenbarger, 85 Ark. App. 206, 148 S.W.3d 787 (2004).

In considering plaintiff’s motion to amend a judgment in which plaintiff’s medical damages were reduced, the circuit court did not err in refusing to consider an affidavit from plaintiff’s chiropractor stating that nine months of treatment was reasonable and necessary as the affidavit had not been submitted at trial and, thus, was too late to be considered. Young v. Barbera, 366 Ark. 120, 233 S.W.3d 651 (2006).

Appellate court overruled appellant’s assertion that the award of costs and attorney’s fees to the neighbors’ was improper without a record to establish a basis for the award, because appellant could not demonstrate error since she made no attempt to make a record in the case; objections to the circuit court's award of costs and attorney's fees must be raised in the trial court, perhaps via a motion to amend the judgment pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule. Turner v. Brandt, 100 Ark. App. 350, 268 S.W.3d 924 (2007).

Absence of Findings.

Court saw no clear error in the trial court's finding that the water diverted by the landowner was a watercourse and the court was not dissuaded by the trial court's lack of findings regarding the presence of well-defined bed and banks; their absence could be explained by the fact that the water had been diverted and had begun to coalesce along the course once again after a street was constructed. Bilo v. El Dorado Broad. Co., 101 Ark. App. 267, 275 S.W.3d 660 (2008).

Although it may be the better practice for the circuit court to make findings on motions, the circuit court's failure to do so was not error and did not indicate that the circuit court lacked a proper basis for denying the motion to dismiss, because subsection (a) of this rule specifically provided that findings of fact and conclusions of law were unnecessary on decisions of motions under these rules. Peterson v. Davis, 2012 Ark. App. 166 (2012).

Where the grant of summary judgment encompassed the sole issue of an agency relationship presented to the court in motions, briefs, and arguments by counsel, the court was not required to make specific findings of fact and conclusions of law, and its failure to do so did not preclude appellate review; because the court granted summary judgment on the agency issue, it was not required to rule on the alternative ground of damages. Hardin v. India Bishop, 2013 Ark. 395, 430 S.W.3d 49 (2013).

Amendment of Findings.

Under a motion to amend the court's findings of fact or to make additional findings under subsection (b) of this rule, or a motion for new trial under Ark. R. Civ. P. 59(b), the time to appeal runs from the entry of an order on the motion or from the 30th day after the filing of the motion, whichever comes first. Mitchell v. Mitchell, 40 Ark. App. 81, 842 S.W.2d 66 (1992).

Creditor's motion under subsection (b) of this rule for clarification that resulted in an order that said, in essence, that the trial court had rejected the creditor's fraudulent conveyance claim, did not extend the time for filing a cross-appeal. Although the creditor's notice of cross-appeal was filed within thirty days of the order of clarification, it was untimely with respect to the initial order, and the creditor's appeal was therefore dismissed. Howe Now, Inc. v. Fishing Univ., 2009 Ark. App. 851 (2009).

Amendment of Pleadings.

Trial court properly considered pleadings amended to conform to the proof. Hegg v. Dick- ens, 270 Ark. 641, 606 S.W.2d 106 (Ct. App. 1980).

Applicability.

The Rules of Civil Procedure do not apply to civil actions brought under the Administrative Procedure Act. Wright v. Arkansas State Plant Bd., 311 Ark. 125, 842 S.W.2d 42 (1992).

A motion for findings of fact following a jury trial does not qualify as a motion under subsection (b) of this rule since the rule applies only to trials where the trial court has made findings of fact. Routh Wrecker Serv., Inc. v. Washington, 335 Ark. 232, 980 S.W.2d 240 (1998).

In accordance with Ark. R. Civ. P. 81, it is precisely because the probate code and the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure set forth different time limits on the court's authority to modify or vacate prior orders that § 28-1-115 applies in probate proceedings; therefore, an appeal under § 28-1-116 was timely since this rule was not implicated in an appeal from a denial of reconsideration arising from a denial of intervention in a probate case. Helena Reg'l Med. Ctr. v. Wilson, 362 Ark. 117, 207 S.W.3d 541 (2005).

Motion to quash a subpoena is a "motion under these rules" and, therefore, no findings of fact and conclusions of law are required; moreover, the decision to quash a subpoena in a child support case was not overturned because there was no prejudice shown since father's support obligation would not have been different, even if bank records showing the amount that children received from a trust had been introduced into evidence. Lee v. Lee, 95 Ark. App. 69, 233 S.W.3d 698 (2006).

Clarification of findings made pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule was required in a suit for money allegedly owed because, in a letter opinion that was not made part of the judgment, the circuit court may have simply reversed the parties' names. The circuit court was entitled to the opportunity to clarify its findings in what was essentially a swearing-match. T&S Mach. Shop, Inc. v. KD Sales, 2009 Ark. App. 836, 372 S.W.3d 410 (2009).

In granting summary judgment under Ark. R. Civ. P. 56 dismissing appellant's civil rights claims for arrest and seizure without probable cause, malicious prosecution, and the tort of outrage, the trial court did not err in denying appellant's request for specific findings of fact and conclusions of law under this rule. This rule was inapplicable to a court's decision pursuant to Rule 56. Summers v. Byrd, 2012 Ark. App. 171, 392 S.W.3d 374 (2012).

Circuit court did not err in refusing to issue findings of fact and conclusions of law in its order denying defendant's motion to compel arbitration because findings of fact and conclusions of law under this rule apply only to the entry of judgments in "contested actions tried upon the facts without a jury", and are not required for decisions on motions to compel arbitration. Colonel Glenn Health & Rehab, LLC v. Aldrich, 2020 Ark. App. 222, 599 S.W.3d 344 (2020).

Attorney's Fees.

Motions for attorney's fees are not required to be filed within the ten-day period set out in Ark. R. Civ. P. 59(b) and subsection (b) of this rule. Sunbelt Exploration Co. v. Stephens Prod. Co., 320 Ark. 298, 896 S.W.2d 867 (1995).

Stout v. Stout, 2011 Ark. App. 201, 378 S.W.3d 844, and its progeny are overruled to the extent those cases require the circuit court to make written findings on and/or specific reference to the Chrisco factors in awarding attorney's fees in domestic-relations cases. Tiner v. Tiner, 2012 Ark. App. 483, 422 S.W.3d 178 (2012).

Trial court awarded the company attorney fees, but the business did not object and failed to make a record before the trial court as required, and thus the court did not address the attorney fee issue. Washington v. Kingridge Enters., 2014 Ark. App. 705, 450 S.W.3d 685 (2014).

Class Actions.

Ark. R. Civ. P. 23 is not as exacting as Ark. R. Civ. P. 52, which imposes a heightened standard because it requires the circuit court to make specific findings of fact and conclusions of law. Indus. Welding Supplies of Hattiesburg, LLC v. Pinson, 2017 Ark. 315, 530 S.W.3d 854 (2017).

Ark. R. Civ. P. 23 requires, at a minimum, that the circuit court define the class claims, issues, or defenses. Even in the absence of a Rule 52 motion, the circuit court must still comply with the mandatory language contained in Rule 23 in order for the appellate court to conduct a meaningful review. Indus. Welding Supplies of Hattiesburg, LLC v. Pinson, 2017 Ark. 315, 530 S.W.3d 854 (2017).

Circuit court's order denying class certification was inadequate where the plaintiff had requested specific findings of fact and conclusions of law pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 23 and 52, the order spoke nothing of adequacy, predominance, or superiority, and only alluded to the other Rule 23 factors, and nothing in case law suggested that Rule 52's requirements were only applicable when the circuit court granted class certification. Conley v. Boll Weevil Pawn Co., 2019 Ark. 31, 566 S.W.3d 125 (2019).

When Ark. R. Civ. P. 52 is invoked, its requirements for specific findings of fact and conclusions of law must apply regardless of whether class certification is granted or denied. All six factors in Rule 23 must be analyzed by the court. Conley v. Boll Weevil Pawn Co., 2019 Ark. 31, 566 S.W.3d 125 (2019).

In granting class certification to nursing employees at a health and rehabilitation facility in their action alleging that the facility's meal-deduction policy violated minimum-wage and overtime provisions of state law, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in either its class-certification order or its Rule 52 order, which used the multipage form that defendants provided for the circuit court to use in making its findings of fact and conclusions of law. Infinity Healthcare Mgmt. of Ark., LLC v. Boyd, 2019 Ark. 346, 588 S.W.3d 22 (2019).

Costs.

Objections to the trial court's award of costs must be raised in the trial court by a motion to amend the judgment pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. David, 324 Ark. 387, 921 S.W.2d 930 (1996).

Credibility of Witnesses.

It is the province of the trier of fact to determine the credibility of the witnesses and resolve any conflicting testimony. First State Bank v. Phillips, 13 Ark. App. 157, 681 S.W.2d 408 (1984).

Discretion of Court.

It was not incumbent upon the chancellor in a child support proceeding to specify the amount of income imputed to one of the parties, particularly in the absence of a request to do so by the parties. McJunkins v. Lemons, 52 Ark. App. 1, 913 S.W.2d 306 (1996).

Since a trial court had previously made findings of fact and conclusions of law in its letter opinion, subsection (b) of this rule controlled and granted the trial court discretion to amend its findings or make additional findings. Pruitt v. Dickerson Excavation, Inc., 2010 Ark. App. 849, 379 S.W.3d 766 (2010).

Disposition of Motion.

ARAP 4(c), by its terms, is applicable to specific civil motions including a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict under Ark. R. Civ. P. 50(b), a motion to amend findings of fact or to make additional findings of fact under subsection (b) of this rule, and a motion for a new trial under Ark. R. Civ. P. 59(b); however, ARAP 4(c) has been applied to criminal matters where the motion made following the judgment of conviction was analogous to a civil motion made under Ark. R. Civ. P. 50(b), this rule, or Ark. R. Civ. P. 59(b). Fuller v. State, 316 Ark. 341, 872 S.W.2d 54 (1994).

Although a circuit court did not explain its decision in ruling from the bench on the constitutionality of a statutory cap on punitive damages, it was not required to make findings of fact or conclusions of law in ruling on a pretrial motion to declare the statute unconstitutional. Bayer CropScience LP v. Schafer, 2011 Ark. 518, 385 S.W.3d 822 (2011).

Facsimile Transmission.

A motion for amendment of judgment was not timely filed where it was sent to the court clerk's office by facsimile transmission just before midnight on the last day it could be filed and was received by the clerk on the next day, i.e., one day late. Osburn v. Busbee, 339 Ark. 260, 4 S.W.3d 127 (1999).

Failure to Object.

Ex-husband's argument about the improper sale of the parties marital home under § 9-12-315(a)(3)(B) was not considered on appeal because he failed to object to such sale, thereby waiving the argument, and it was not a sufficiency of the evidence question under which the court could review the issue without an objection under subdivision (b)(2) of this rule. Roberts v. Yanyan Yang, 102 Ark. App. 384, 285 S.W.3d 689 (2008), superseded, Roberts v. Roberts, 2009 Ark. 567, 349 S.W.3d 886 (2009).

Trial court complied with subsection (a) of this rule in an action by members of a cemetery association against appellants because when the trial court invited appellants to object to the proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law, appellants declined; hence, the trial court did not err by adopting the order prepared by the members' counsel as its own. Powhatan Cemetery, Inc. v. Colbert, 104 Ark. App. 290, 292 S.W.3d 302 (2009).

Because there was no indication in the record that a landowner challenged—in a postjudgment motion or otherwise—a circuit court's failure to make specific findings when it awarded attorney's fees to a contractor, the issue was not preserved for appellate review. Reynolds Forestry Consulting & Real Estate, PLLC v. Colbey, 2019 Ark. App. 209, 575 S.W.3d 176 (2019).

Final Judgment.

Before a judgment can be final it must be final as to one or more of the claims presented in the action, and in order for there to be such a judgment, the action of the court must finally determine a claim; a mere declaration of law does not finally determine any claim. Boyett v. Boyett, 269 Ark. 36, 598 S.W.2d 86 (1980).

Where the judgment appealed from ordered the sellers to convey the subject land to the buyer, as he was entitled to specific performance of the underlying oral contract, such was a final order from which an appeal could be taken; the absence of a supersedeas bond and the granting of the land to the buyer as part and parcel to execution on a judgment did not nullify an appeal from that underlying judgment. Ward v. Williams, 354 Ark. 168, 118 S.W.3d 513 (2003).

Appellate court lacked jurisdiction to consider an order granting summary judgment to an insurer or its motions to dismiss because the order was not final where it did not adjudicate or dismiss the insureds' negligence claim and lacked a file mark, the court did not issue a certificate allowing an immediate appeal, and the insureds' notice of appeal contained no statement that they had abandoned any pending, but unresolved claim. Clark v. Southern Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. Co., 2014 Ark. App. 391 (2014).

Findings and Summary Judgment.

Borrowers claimed the circuit court erred in denying their request for findings and conclusions, but this argument had been rejected in case law because the rule was inapplicable to a court's decision pursuant to the summary judgment rule, and a party was not entitled to a direct answer on every specific requested finding if the findings adequately addressed the issues. Anderson v. CitiMortgage, Inc., 2014 Ark. App. 683, 450 S.W.3d 251 (2014).

Although a circuit court did not err in not making specific findings in granting summary judgment regarding all claims alleged by the former employees, it did err by failing to make the specific findings required for their Arkansas Civil Rights Act claims where there was no mention of the McDonnell-Douglas framework or any of its requirements. Fennell v. City of Pine Bluff, 2016 Ark. App. 275, 492 S.W.3d 887 (2016).

Illustrative Cases.

Where the mother of a child divorced her father after he was incarcerated for sexual assault and possession of child pornography, the trial court did not err by denying the paternal grandparents' petition for visitation pursuant to § 9-13-103 and their motion to modify the judgment pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule. The Court of Appeals of Arkansas upheld the trial court's finding that grandparents lacked the capacity to provide guidance to the child, because of their willingness to allow her to visit her biological father in prison; the grandparents also failed to rebut the presumption that the mother's denial or limitation of visitation was in the best interest of the child. Painter v. Kerr, 2009 Ark. App. 580, 336 S.W.3d 425 (2009).

Finding in favor of the purchaser and against the seller in a products-liability action was improper because the circuit court's finding inferring from the evidence that the trailer was not only defective but also unreasonably dangerous was clearly erroneous under subsection (a) of this rule. Mason v. Mitcham, 2011 Ark. App. 189, 382 S.W.3d 717 (2011).

Police officer's termination was appropriate because his argument that the circuit court's decision was not a de novo review, but was instead merely a review of the correctness or incorrectness of the Civil Service Commission's decision was without merit. Counsel for both parties and the court had a specific exchange regarding the nature of the review to be conducted by the court and the record showed that a de novo hearing was in fact conducted by the circuit court and that the police officer failed to request specific findings. Edgmon v. Little Rock Police Dep't, 2013 Ark. App. 470 (2013).

Matter of Law.

While appellate court will not set aside a trial court's finding of fact unless it is clearly erroneous, the determination of whether a contract is ambiguous is a matter of law. Arkansas Burial Ass'n v. Dixon Funeral Home, 25 Ark. App. 18, 751 S.W.2d 356 (1988).

Request for Findings.

Circuit court failed to make necessary findings of fact and conclusions of law because the father submitted clear and unequivocal requests for the court to issue findings of fact and conclusions of law, such a request was all that was required, and the court ignored the request and failed to respond in any way. House v. House, 2021 Ark. App. 380 (2021).

A remark made by a judge who tried a case without a jury could not be construed as his entire findings of fact and conclusions of law when neither party had asked him to set out separate findings and conclusions. Legate v. Passmore, 268 Ark. 1161, 599 S.W.2d 151 (Ct. App. 1980).

A request for findings of fact and conclusions of law filed after an order has become final cannot be used as a means of resurrecting a claim already barred by finality. Majors v. Pulaski County Election Comm'n, 287 Ark. 208, 697 S.W.2d 535 (1985).

Where the trial court is not required to give detailed reasons for its action, under this rule, the court can be requested to set out facts and conclusions of law which constitute the grounds for its decision. Miles v. Southern, 297 Ark. 274, 760 S.W.2d 868 (1988).

Trial court's findings, although they could have been more detailed, adequately covered the issues where the court made nine findings and then clearly stated its orders; it would have been repetitive and nonproductive for the court to address all of the 84 proposed findings set out in appellants' request. Southeast Ark. Landfill, Inc. v. State, 313 Ark. 669, 858 S.W.2d 665 (1993).

In Title VII claim, where there was nothing in the record to show that plaintiff requested the trial court to make specific findings of fact and conclusions of law either prior to or after entry of the judgment, she waived her right under this rule. Smith v. Quality Ford, Inc., 324 Ark. 272, 920 S.W.2d 497 (1996).

Where the insurer failed to request specific findings in regard to the Ark. R. Civ. P. 23(b) elements either prior to or after the entry of the order of certification, it waived the issue on appeal. Mega Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Jacola, 330 Ark. 261, 954 S.W.2d 898 (1997), superseded by statute as stated in Indus. Welding Supplies of Hattiesburg, LLC v. Pinson, 2017 Ark. 315, 530 S.W.3d 854 (2017).

Trial court's order certifying a suit as a class action was reversed on appeal where the trial court was required but failed to make specific findings and conclusions, even though a request for such findings was timely made; more was required of the trial court than a cursory mention of the six criteria for a class action or bare conclusions that those criteria had been satisfied. Lenders Title Co. v. Chandler, 353 Ark. 339, 107 S.W.3d 157 (2003).

Trial court erred in refusing to issue findings of fact and conclusions of law upon receipt of a timely request therefore following a bench trial; recognizing that its holding in Price v. Garrett, 79 Ark. App. 84, 84 S.W.3d 63 (2002), contained language that was contradictory to its holding in the present case, the Arkansas Court of Appeals limited the holding in Price to the rule that a post-judgment motion for findings of fact and conclusions of law made under subsection (a) of this rule did not extend the time for filing a notice of appeal under Ark. R. Civ. P. 4, and overruled Price to the extent that it conflicted with the present opinion. Apollo Coating RCS, Inc. v. Brookridge Funding Corp., 81 Ark. App. 396, 103 S.W.3d 682 (2003), superseded by statute as stated in In re Ark. Rules of Civ. Procedure v. Dix, In re Ark. Rules of Civ. Procedure, 2004 Ark. LEXIS 39 (Ark. Jan. 22, 2004), superseded by statute as stated in Ark. Dept of Human Servs. v. Dix, 94 Ark. App. 139, 227 S.W.3d 456 (2006).

Pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule, a telecommunications company could have requested that the trial court make additional findings of fact after the trial court's order merely stated that the company's motion for attorney's fees and costs was denied, following the denial of a city's declaratory judgment action against the company. City of Fort Smith v. Didicom Towers, Inc., 362 Ark. 469, 209 S.W.3d 344 (2005).

In "self-pay" patients' action that alleged a hospital charged them significantly more than it charged patients with private insurance or patients insured under government health plans, such as Medicare, the trial court erred in certifying the case for class-action status because the trial court's order did not provide the parties or the appellate court with an analysis of the requirements of Ark. R. Civ. P. 23 or specific findings of fact or conclusions of law pursuant to this rule. Baptist Health v. Haynes, 367 Ark. 382, 240 S.W.3d 576 (2006).

Order denying mother's petition to relocate to Oklahoma with the parties' two children was upheld where the effect of the relocation on the father, who lived approximately 75 minutes away in Arkansas, weighed in favor of rebutting the presumption in favor of relocation; where mother failed to make a request for specific findings from the trial court, she could not argue that the trial court somehow erred in failing to specifically discuss each Hollandsworth factor. Sill v. Sill, 94 Ark. App. 211, 228 S.W.3d 538 (2006).

In a case alleging an illegal exaction relating to a settlement agreement, an argument that there were no findings of fact made was meritless because a request under this rule was in error; no class certification was required to proceed under Ark. R. Civ. P. 23.2. Stromwall v. Van Hoose, 371 Ark. 267, 265 S.W.3d 93 (2007).

On appeal of an order terminating the father's parental rights, the first possible time he could have known that the trial court erroneously checked provisions citing to a repealed provision in the termination order and granted a motion to incorporate into the record all the pleadings and testimony in the case was when he received the order. The father was not required to file a motion for the trial court to make specific findings of fact or conclusions of law to preserve the issue for review, because a party need not file post-trial motions in termination proceedings. Kelso v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2013 Ark. App. 509 (2013).

In reading the order's plain language, the trial court found that a material change of circumstance had not occurred for modification of custody purposes; if the father had specific findings he wanted the trial court to make, he could have requested them, but as the record stood, he did not offer a reason to reverse the order. Baker v. Murray, 2014 Ark. App. 243, 434 S.W.3d 409 (2014).

Appellants argued that the order was clearly erroneous because they proved that the mother's consent to the adoption was not required, but the merits of this argument did not need to be reached because the trial court did not make any findings on this issue and such findings were not necessary based on the conclusion that the adoption was not in the child's best interest; furthermore, as appellants made no request for findings, they waived their right under the rule. Hollis v. Hollis, 2015 Ark. App. 441, 468 S.W.3d 316 (2015).

As to the father's assertion that the circuit court failed to consider the facts about the mother's lifestyle and the absence of her boyfriend from the hearing, the circuit court was not required to make specific findings on every allegation in considering best interests for purposes of child custody, and if the father wanted such findings, he could have asked for them pursuant to this rule; even so, the court's oral statements showed that the court weighed the circumstances and the court stated that it had considered all the evidence. Hortelano v. Hortelano, 2017 Ark. App. 98, 513 S.W.3d 890 (2017).

Requirements Met.

Circuit court's findings were sufficient to comply with this rule where the judgment provided that the shareholders had a proper purpose for their demand to inspect corporate records and that they made the demand in good faith, and the judgment further stated that the shareholders were qualified and entitled to inspect and make copies of all requested documents. Ashley Bancstock Co. v. Meredith, 2017 Ark. App. 598, 534 S.W.3d 762 (2017).

Reviewability.

Reviewing court did not address the argument that the circuit court's order was vague, ambiguous and lacked specific findings, because it had not been preserved for review, because although appellants filed a motion for clarification of the circuit court's findings, which would ordinarily be sufficient to preserve their arguments for appeal, they did so in an untimely fashion. Middleton v. Lockhart, 2012 Ark. 131, 388 S.W.3d 451 (2012).

Supreme court was not precluded from reviewing the merits of a creditor's appeal of an order denying its motion to compel arbitration because the circuit court's blanket denial of the motion to compel constituted a ruling on all of the issues raised by the parties; the creditor and debtor both briefed the issues of assent, mutuality, and waiver, among others, to the circuit court. Asset Acceptance, LLC v. Newby, 2014 Ark. 280, 437 S.W.3d 119 (2014).

In a guardianship case, an appellate court was able to review whether a circuit court erred by failing to obtain a professional evaluation prior to hearing, even though the argument was not raised below; moreover, the sufficiency of the evidence in a bench trial could have been raised whether or not an objection was made below. Autry v. Beckham, 2014 Ark. App. 692, 450 S.W.3d 247 (2014).

Store purchasers' argument challenging the circuit court's damages award was not preserved for appeal where their motion to amend had been deemed denied pursuant to subdivision (b)(1) of this rule after they filed a notice appealing a summary judgment order, pursuant to Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(b)(2), the notice of appeal was effective to appeal only the underlying summary judgment order, the purchasers had not moved to amend the notice of appeal, and the purchasers had not raised the damages argument prior to entry of the summary judgment order. Sexton v. Sowell, 2016 Ark. App. 574, 506 S.W.3d 889 (2016).

Circuit court erred in granting a co-guardian's motion to reconsider the court's order holding both guardians equally responsible for unexplainable or unauthorized expenses and for the cost of the forensic accounting because the court did not have jurisdiction to grant the motion since the order was not entered until more than 30 days after the filing of the motion to reconsider. Powell v. Parker, 2021 Ark. App. 290, 626 S.W.3d 461 (2021).

Standard of Appellate Review.

- Applied to Various Proceedings.
- Findings Held Erroneous.
- Findings Held Not Erroneous.

This rule has altered the standard of review on appeal as to cases tried by a circuit judge, sitting as a jury, on appellate review; the substantial evidence test will not be applicable to cases tried on or after July 1, 1979. Taylor v. Richardson, 266 Ark. 447, 585 S.W.2d 934 (1979).

The adoption of this rule did not amount to a partial merger of law and equity; this rule merely established the same standard of "clearly erroneous" for appellate review of findings of fact made by a chancellor and a circuit judge sitting as a jury. Sharp County v. Northeast Ark. Planning & Consulting Co., 269 Ark. 336, 602 S.W.2d 627 (1980).

After the effective date of this rule, the standard of review on appeal is not whether there is any substantial evidence to support the finding of the court, but whether the judge's findings are clearly erroneous (clearly against the preponderance of the evidence). Superior Imp. Co. v. Mastic Corp., 270 Ark. 471, 604 S.W.2d 950 (1980).

Although prior case law held that in order to reverse findings regarding a case the Supreme Court must find that the decree was clearly against the preponderance of the evidence, this rule has been redefined to mean that the court must affirm unless the findings are clearly erroneous. Riddell v. City of Brinkley, 272 Ark. 84, 612 S.W.2d 116 (1981).

Appellant is not obligated to request the trial court to find the facts specially and state its conclusions of law in an action as a prerequisite to review of the findings on appeal. Gorchik v. Gorchik, 10 Ark. App. 331, 663 S.W.2d 941 (1984), overruled, Liles v. Liles, 289 Ark. 159, 711 S.W.2d 447 (1986).

Notwithstanding the language in this rule that makes findings of fact and conclusions of law unnecessary in decisions on motions, the better practice is for the trial court to give an explanation of its decision on Ark. R. Civ. P. 11 motions sufficient for the appellate courts to review. Bratton v. Gunn, 300 Ark. 140, 777 S.W.2d 219 (1989).

Upon review, the test is not whether the appellate court is convinced that there is clear and convincing evidence to support the findings of the judge, but whether the court can say that the judge was clearly wrong in his findings. Hoover v. Arkoma Prod. Co., 29 Ark. App. 238, 780 S.W.2d 585 (1989).

The supreme court reviews chancery cases de novo, and will not reverse a chancellor's findings unless clearly erroneous. Magnolia Sch. Dist. No. 14 v. Arkansas State Bd. of Educ., 303 Ark. 666, 799 S.W.2d 791 (1990); Lee v. Lee, 35 Ark. App. 192, 816 S.W.2d 625 (1991).

In reviewing the chancellor's findings, the court will not reverse unless it finds that they are clearly erroneous or clearly against a preponderance of the evidence. Riddick v. Streett, 313 Ark. 706, 858 S.W.2d 62 (1993).

Where business served a writ of garnishment on a bank, but the bank had a secured interest in "proceeds" from the customer's accounts receivables, the trial court imposed an erroneous standard of proof when it concluded that the deposits in the customer's account were not "identifiable proceeds"; consequently, the matter was remanded so that the trial court could apply the "lowest-intermediate-balance rule." Metro. Nat'l Bank v. La Sher Oil Co., 81 Ark. App. 269, 101 S.W.3d 252 (2003).

In claimant's negligence action, summary judgment in favor of a hospital and health system was proper as the charitable-immunity doctrine barred recover against the hospital, a charitable facility, the health system's pooled comprehensive liability program did not meet the statutory definition of insurance, and the health system did not meet the statutory definition of an insurer under the Arkansas Insurance Code. Sowders v. St. Joseph's Mercy Health Ctr., 368 Ark. 466, 247 S.W.3d 514 (2007), superseded by statute as stated in Archer v. Sisters of Mercy Health Sys., 375 Ark. 523, 294 S.W.3d 414 (2009), superseded by statute as stated in Henry v. Cont'l Cas. Co., 2011 Ark. 224, 381 S.W.3d 802 (2011).

Circuit court clearly erred by entering the agreed decree, finding that the parties settled the litigation, because the circuit court made a contract for the parties when they had tried but failed to make one, when the record contained no writings, testimony, or agreements in open court showing that the parties' mutually assented to all material settlement terms in the agreed decree. Roberts v. Green Bay Packaging, Inc., 101 Ark. App. 160, 272 S.W.3d 125 (2008).

Circuit court did not clearly err in finding that no common-law marriage existed between the parties, because the parties lived in Arkansas, which did not recognize common-law marriages, the wedding ceremony took place in Texas without obtaining a marriage license or certificate, and there was no evidence that the parties lived together in Texas after the ceremony. Crane v. Taliaferro, 2009 Ark. App. 336, 308 S.W.3d 648 (2009).

Arkansas appellate courts should review all appeals from bench trials, including declaratory judgment actions, under the clearly erroneous standard of subsection (a) of this rule, overruling Hoffman v. Gregory, 361 Ark. 73, 204 S.W.3d 541 (2005). The clearly erroneous standard applied to bench trials and not necessarily to all declaratory judgment actions. Poff v. Peedin, 2010 Ark. 136, 366 S.W.3d 347 (2010).

Circuit court clearly erred in its decision that a prosecutor could subpoena an accident report; the accident reconstruction report and testimony of the accident reconstructionist's employee were confidential, privileged communications that could not be subpoenaed. Holt v. McCastlain, 357 Ark. 455, 182 S.W.3d 112 (2004).

—Findings Held Not Erroneous.

Findings held not clearly against a preponderance of the evidence. Cheshire v. Walt Bennett Ford, Inc., 31 Ark. App. 90, 788 S.W.2d 490 (1990); Stacy v. Williams, 38 Ark. App. 192, 834 S.W.2d 156 (1992).

In annexation case concerning unincorporated property within the city limits, where the trial court heard testimony and viewed exhibits regarding the use of the farm property and determined that the best use of the property would be industrial and recreational, not agricultural, the trial court's findings were not clearly erroneous. Chandler v. City of Little Rock, 351 Ark. 172, 89 S.W.3d 913 (2002).

Trial court's decision not to include a father's gambling losses in the calculation of child support was not clearly erroneous because the father was unable to substantiate his losses by keeping a diary, as required by Internal Revenue Service rules; moreover, the father's ATM withdrawal slips were not records of regularly conducted business activity under Ark. R. Evid. 803(6). McWhorter v. McWhorter, 351 Ark. 622, 97 S.W.3d 408, cert. denied, 540 U.S. 904, 124 S. Ct. 261, 157 L. Ed. 2d 189 (2003).

Because trial court's finding that two mortgagors suffered actual monetary damages as a result of a mortgagee's failure to cancel a mortgage was not clearly erroneous, a penalty was properly awarded; however, the court did not have the authority to cancel the mortgage where debt was still owed, and the record did not show that the court intended to cancel the mortgage in lieu of awarding damages. NationsBanc Mortg. Corp. v. Hopkins, 82 Ark. App. 91, 114 S.W.3d 757 (2003).

According to the court's standard of review under subsection (a) of this rule, the trial court did not err in finding that a former attorney for a city, taxpayers, and citizens was operating with the ambit of the attorney's authority when the attorney entered into a stipulation of facts because the mayor and city council, absent one member, were present at the meeting when the stipulations were discussed and no complaints or disagreements were voiced at that time. City of Rockport v. City of Malvern, 356 Ark. 393, 155 S.W.3d 9 (2004).

In a bench trial to quiet title arising from the alleged forgery of deeds, the standard of review on appeal was not whether there was substantial evidence to support the finding of the court, but whether the judge's findings were clearly erroneous or clearly against the preponderance of the evidence; the trial judge made a factual finding that both quitclaim and warranty deeds were forgeries and that finding was entitled to substantial deference from the Arkansas Supreme Court. Flagstar Bank v. Gibbins, 367 Ark. 225, 238 S.W.3d 912 (2006).

In a father's petition to change custody, a trial court did not clearly err in denying the petition because the trial court had superior position, ability, and opportunity to observe the parties, which carried a greater weight. Williams v. Williams, 2009 Ark. App. 484 (2009).

Time of Motion.

Even when an appealable order has been entered and a notice of appeal has been filed within 30 days thereafter, the filing of a motion provided for in ARAP 4(b) will extend the time for filing the notice of appeal, and the notice of appeal filed before the time is extended will be ineffective. Mitchell v. Mitchell, 40 Ark. App. 81, 842 S.W.2d 66 (1992).

Court properly denied appellees' motion to dismiss appellant's challenge to an order holding him in contempt for failing to provide financial information where appellant filed his motion under this rule within 10 days of the entry of judgment on January 18, 2005; because appellant filed a motion to amend under this rule, the time for filing a notice of appeal was extended under Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(b). Stilley v. Fort Smith Sch. Dist., 367 Ark. 193, 238 S.W.3d 902 (2006).

Where Arkansas Department of Human Services' motion for findings of fact and conclusions of law was filed before the entry of the adjudication order, it fell within subsection (a) of this rule, and the time within which to appeal the adjudication order expired prior to the filing of a notice of appeal. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs. v. Dix, 94 Ark. App. 139, 227 S.W.3d 456 (2006).

Circuit court did not err in failing to rule on the municipality's Ark. R. Civ. P. 52(b) motion where the motion was filed on the eleventh day after entry of judgment, and thus was untimely.

Rule 53. Masters.

(a) Appointment and Compensation. Subject to the limitations contained herein, each court in which an action is pending may appoint a special master therein. As used in this rule, the word "master" includes a referee, an auditor, an examiner, a commissioner and an assessor. The compensation to be allowed a master shall be fixed by the court and shall be charged upon such of the parties or paid out of any fund or subject matter of the action, which is in the custody and control of the court as the court may direct. The master shall not retain his report as security for his compensation; but, when the party ordered to pay the compensation allowed by the court does not pay it after notice and within the time prescribed by the court, the master is entitled to a writ of execution against the delinquent party.

(b) Reference. A reference to a master shall be the exception and not the rule. Reference shall be made in only those cases where there is no right to trial by jury or where such right has been waived. Except in matters of account and difficult computation of damages, a reference shall be made only upon a showing that some exceptional condition requires it.

(c) Powers. The order of reference to a master may specify or limit his powers and may direct him to report only upon particular issues or to do or perform particular acts or to receive and report evidence only and may fix the time and place for beginning and closing the hearings and for the filing of the master's report. Subject to the specifications and limitations stated in the order, the master has and shall exercise the power to regulate all proceedings in every hearing before him and to do all acts and take all measures necessary or proper for the efficient performance of his duties under the order. He may require the production before him of evidence upon all matters embraced in the reference, including the production of all books, papers, vouchers, documents and writings applicable thereto. He may rule upon the admissibility of evidence unless otherwise directed by the order of reference and has the authority to put witnesses on oath and may himself examine them and may call the parties to the action and examine them upon oath. The master shall cause a record to be made of the evidence offered and excluded.

(1) Meetings. When a reference is made, the clerk shall forthwith furnish the master with a copy of the order of reference. Upon receipt thereof, unless the order of reference otherwise provides, the master shall set a time and place for the first meeting of the parties or their attorneys to be held within the time specified by the court or otherwise within a reasonable time after receipt of the order of reference. It is the duty of the master to proceed with all reasonable diligence. Either party, on notice to parties and master, may apply to the court for an order requiring the master to speed the proceedings and to make his report. If a party fails to appear at the time and place appointed, the master may proceed ex parte or, in his discretion, adjourn the proceedings to a future day, giving notice to the absent party of the adjournment.

(2) Witnesses. The parties may procure the attendance of witnesses before the master by the issuance and service of subpoenas as provided in Rule 45. If without adequate excuse a witness fails to appear to give evidence, he may be punished as for a contempt and be subject to the consequences, penalties and remedies provided in Rules 37 and 45.

(3) Statement of Accounts. When matters of accounting are in issue before the master, he may prescribe the form in which the account shall be submitted and in any proper case may receive or require in evidence a statement by a certified public accountant who is called as a witness. Upon objection of a party to any of the items thus submitted or upon a showing that the form of statement is insufficient, the master may require a different form of statement to be furnished or the accounts or specific items thereof to be proved by oral examination of the accounting parties or upon written interrogatories or in such other manner as he directs.

(e) Report.

(1) Contents and Filing. The master shall prepare a report upon the matters submitted to him by the order of reference, and, if required to make findings of fact and conclusions of law, he shall set them forth in his report. He shall file the report with the clerk of the court and unless directed by the order of reference shall file with it a transcript of the proceedings and of the evidence and the original exhibits. The clerk shall forthwith mail to all parties notice of the filing.

(2) Effect. The court shall accept the master's findings of fact unless clearly erroneous. Within 20 days after being served with notice of the filing of the report, any party may serve written objections thereto upon the other parties. Application to the court for action upon the report and upon objections thereto shall be by motion and upon notice as prescribed in Rule 6(c). The court after hearing may adopt the report or modify it or may reject it in whole or in part or may receive further evidence or may recommit it with instructions.

(3) Stipulation as to Findings. The effect of a master's report is the same whether or not the parties have consented to the reference; but, when the parties stipulate that a master's findings of fact shall be final, only questions of law arising upon the report shall thereafter be considered.

(4) Draft Report. Before filing his report, a master may submit a draft thereof to counsel for all parties for the purpose of receiving their suggestions.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 53:

1. Rule 53 represents a merger of various provisions from FRCP 53 and prior Arkansas law. This rule does, however, contain several changes from federal and Arkansas law. The latter was codified as superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1801, et seq. (Repl. 1962), and permitted a reference to a master only in courts of equity. Under FRCP 53, both legal and equitable issues may be referred to a master regardless of whether a jury is involved. In Re Peterson, 253 U.S. 300, 40 S. Ct. 543 (1920). Under Rule 53, masters may be used in law courts, but only in cases where a jury trial has been waived.

2. Under this rule and under FRCP 53, the use of masters is the exception and should be used only in rare cases. Arthur Murray, Inc. v. Oliver, 364 F. 2d 28 (C.C.A. 8th, 1966), Adventures in Good Eating, Inc. v. Best Places to Eat, Inc., 131 F. 2d 809 (C.C.A. 7th, 1942). Masters have been used sparingly in Arkansas although equity courts have had the discretionary power to appoint masters in complex accounting matters. State ex rel. Purcell v. Nelson, 246 Ark. 210, 438 S.W.2d 33 (1969).

3. Section (c) is substantially the same as FRCP 53(c) and defines the powers possessed by a master. These powers may be restricted by the referring court, but generally the master has the right to conduct hearings as if he were the judge sitting on the case. A record of the proceedings before the master is required under this section whereas the Federal Rule does not require that a record be made unless requested by a party. Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1806 (Repl. 1962) made a record mandatory and this requirement is brought forward in this rule.

4. Section (d) follows the Federal Rule regarding the conduct of the proceedings with the exception of the time limit contained therein. Under the latter, a meeting with the parties on their attorneys must be held within twenty days after the receipt of the referral by the master. Under this rule, the court may specify a time for such meeting and if none is specified, it must be held within a reasonable period of time following the referral.

5. Omitted from Section (e) of Rule 53 is FRCP 53(e)(3). Since masters are limited to non-jury situations under this rule, the federal provision is inapplicable. Otherwise, Section (e) is substantially the same as its federal counterpart. Under (e)(2), the findings of a master are binding upon the court unless clearly erroneous. A finding is clearly erroneous when, although there is evidence to support it, the court, on the entire evidence is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been made by the master. McGraw Edison Co. v. Central Transformer Corp., 196 F. Supp. 664 (D.C. Ark., 1961); United States v. 620.98 Acres of Land, 255 F. Supp. 427 (D.D. Ark., 1966). The substantial evidence rule is not the test. WRB Corp. v. Geer, 313 F. 2d 750 (C.C.A. 5th, 1963). Under prior Arkansas law, equity courts were not required to accept the master's report. Griffin v. Isgrig, 227 Ark. 931, 302 S.W.2d 777 (1957); Ferguson v. Rogers, 129 Ark. 197, 195 S.W. 22 (1917). Thus, this rule modifies prior Arkansas law by making the master's report mandatory unless it is clearly erroneous. Also, under this rule, a party has twenty days within which to make objection to the report which is an increase over the ten days allowed under FRCP 53.

6. Sections (e)(3) and (e)(4) are identical to Sections (e)(4) and (e)(5) of the Federal Rule. Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1813 (Repl. 1962) provided that a reference to a master by consent of the parties did not make the findings any more conclusive. Under this rule, however, where the parties stipulate as to the binding effect of the master's findings, only questions of law may thereafter be considered.

Acceptance of Findings.

To the extent that the court adopts the master's findings, they are considered the findings of the court. Beasley v. Archer, 22 Ark. App. 284, 739 S.W.2d 695 (1987).

Discretion of Court.

In litigation brought by a secondary beneficiary over the administration of several family trusts, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in declining to appoint a special master; the language of this rule is discretionary. Dawson v. Stoner-Sellers, 2019 Ark. 410, 591 S.W.3d 299 (2019).

Illustrative Case.

Master appointed and directed to conduct proceedings in accordance with S. Ct. & Ct. App. R. 6-5(a) and this rule in a case involving a proposed constitutional amendment. Holt v. Priest, 326 Ark. 277, 930 S.W.2d 359 (1996).

Reference to Master.

Legislation authorizing circuit and probate judges to appoint masters or referees to hear juvenile cases with circuit and probate judges, and purporting to vest those masters or referees with all the powers and authority of the judges, violated Ark. Const., Art. 7, § 34 [repealed], and subsection (b) of this rule. Hutton v. Savage, 298 Ark. 256, 769 S.W.2d 394 (1989).

A crowded or congested docket has never been determined a valid purpose for the appointment of a master under this rule; nor is a master appropriate because he is more familiar with the case or because the judge is unavailable. Arkansas Dep't of Human Servs. v.

Templeton, 298 Ark. 390, 769 S.W.2d 404 (1989).

—Exceptional Conditions.

A simple statement of unavailability or conflict by the trial judge is not a showing of exceptional conditions pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule. Arkansas Dep't of Human Servs. v. Templeton, 298 Ark. 390, 769 S.W.2d 404 (1989).

Report.

Judge

(2) Lack of Certification. Absent the executed certificate required by paragraph (1) of this subdivision, any judgment, order, or other form of decision, however designated, which adjudicates fewer than all the claims or the rights and liabilities of fewer than all the parties shall not terminate the action as to any of the claims or parties, and the judgment, order, or other form of decision is subject to revision at any time before the entry of judgment adjudicating all the claims and the rights and liabilities of all of the parties.

(3) Review of Finality. The finality of a judgment, order, or other form of decision containing the certificate required by paragraph (1) of this subdivision may be reviewed only pursuant to a timely notice of appeal filed in accordance with Rule 4, Ark. R. App. P.—Civ.

(4) Retention of Jurisdiction. An appeal of a judgment, order, or other form of decision containing the certificate required by paragraph (1) of this subdivision shall not affect the trial court’s jurisdiction over other claims or parties.

(5) Named but Unserved Defendant. Any claim against a named but unserved defendant, including a “John Doe” defendant, is dismissed by the circuit court’s final judgment or decree.

(c) Demand for Judgment. A judgment by default shall not be different in kind from or exceed in amount that prayed for in the demand for judgment. Except as to a party against whom a judgment is entered by default, every final judgment shall grant the relief to which the party in whose favor it is rendered is entitled, even if the party has not demanded such relief in his pleadings.

(1) Costs shall be allowed to the prevailing party if the court so directs, unless a statute or rule makes an award mandatory.

(2) Costs taxable under this rule are limited to the following: filing fees and other fees charged by the clerk; fees for service of process and subpoenas; fees for the publication of warning orders and other notices; fees for interpreters appointed under Rule 43; witness fees and mileage allowances as provided in Rule 45; fees of a master appointed pursuant to Rule 53; fees of experts appointed by the court pursuant to Rule 706 of the Arkansas Rules of Evidence; fees of translators appointed by the court pursuant to Rule 1009 of the Arkansas Rules of Evidence; and expenses, excluding attorney's fees, specifically authorized by statute to be taxed as costs.

(e) Attorneys' Fees. (1) Claims for attorneys' fees and related nontaxable expenses shall be made by motion unless the substantive law governing the action provides for the recovery of such fees as an element of damages to be proved at trial.

(2) Unless otherwise provided by statute or order of the court, the motion must be filed and served no later than 14 days after entry of judgment; must specify the judgment and the statute or rule entitling the moving party to the award; and must state the amount or provide a fair estimate of the amount sought. If directed by the court, the motion, shall also disclose the terms of any agreement with respect to fees to be paid for the services for which the claim is made.

(3) On request of a party or class member, the court shall afford an opportunity for adversary submissions with respect to the motion in accordance with Rule 43(c) or Rule 78. The court may determine issues of liability for fees before receiving submissions bearing on issues of evaluation of services for which liability is imposed by the court. The court shall find the facts and state its conclusions of law, and a judgment shall be set forth in a separate document as provided in Rule 58.

(4) The court may refer issues relating to the value of services to a special master under Rule 53 without regard to the provisions of subdivision (b) thereof.

(5) The provisions of subparagraphs (1) through (4) do not apply to claims for fees and expenses as sanctions for violations of these rules.

HISTORY: Amended September 28, 1992, effective January 1, 1993; amended December 5, 1994, effective January 15, 1995; amended November 18, 1996, effective March 1, 1997; amended January 28, 1999; amended February 1, 2001; amended October 9, 2008, effective January 1, 2009.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 54:

1. With exception of the changes in Section (c), Rule 54 is otherwise identical to FRCP 54.

2. Under FRCP 54(b), the practice is to wait until all claims have been finally determined before entering judgment on any particular claim. The purpose is to prevent piecemeal appeals while portions of the litigation remain unresolved. There may be situations, however, where a particular claim should be finally determined before the entire case is concluded. Accordingly, the trial court may direct the entry of a final judgment on fewer than all claims involved upon the express determination that there is no good reason for delay. Thus, a party will always know whether a judgment in a Rule 54(b) situation is ripe for appeal. Unless this determination has been made by the trial court, there can be no appeal. RePass v. Vreeland, 357 F. 2d 801 (C.C.A. 3rd, 1966); Oak Construction Co. v. Huron Cement Co., 475 F. 2d 1220 (C.C.A. 6th, 1973).

3. Section (c) formulates the standard that except for default judgments, the form of relief and nature of the order are to be determined by what the facts establish as opposed to what counsel has pleaded. South Falls Corp. v. Rochelle, 329 F. 2d 611 (C.C.A. 5th, 1964); Molnar

v. Gulfcoast Transit Co., 371 F.2d 639 (C.C.A. 5th, 1967). With reference to default judgments, however, the first sentence of Section (c) expressly provides that relief may not be different in kind or amount from that prayed for by the claimant.

4. Section (d) contains the only changes from FRCP 54. It removes the power contained in the Federal Rule for the clerk to tax costs and leaves such power with the trial judge as under prior Arkansas law. Unless otherwise ordered by the trial judge, costs are taxed against the losing party as was the case under superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 27-2308, 27-2310 and 27-2312 (Repl. 1962).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1992 Amendment:

The first sentence of Rule 54(b) is amended to expressly state the trial court's obligation to make findings of fact with respect to the required determination that there is "no just reason for delay" for the entry of judgment. The amendment reflects the Supreme Court's holding to that effect in Franklin v. Osca, Inc., 308 Ark. 409, 825 S.W.2d 812 (1992) (trial court "must factually set forth reasons . . . explaining why a hardship or injustice would result if an appeal is not permitted").

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1994 Amendment:

Subdivision (d) of the rule is rewritten for purposes of clarity. No substantive change is intended. The original version of the rule was awkward and led to confusion. See, e.g., Wood v. Tyler, 317 Ark. 319, 877 S.W.2d 582 (1994).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1997 Amendment:

New subdivision (e) establishes a procedure for presenting claims for attorney's fees, a frequently recurring form of litigation not initially contemplated by the rules. It is based on federal Rule 54(d)(2), as amended in 1993.

Paragraph (1) makes plain that the subdivision does not apply to attorneys' fees recoverable as an element of damages, as when sought under the terms of a contract. Such damages typically are to be claimed in a pleading and may involve issues to be resolved by a jury. Paragraph (2) provides a deadline for motions for attorneys' fees — 14 days after final judgment unless the court or a statute specifies some other time. Prior law did not prescribe any specific time limit on claims for attorneys' fees. See Marsh & McLennan v. Herget, 321 Ark. 180, 900 S.W.2d 195 (1995).

One purpose of this provision is to assure that the opposing party is informed of the claim before the time for appeal has elapsed. Prompt filing affords an opportunity for the court to resolve fee disputes shortly after trial, while the services performed are freshly in mind. It also enables the court in appropriate cases to make its ruling on a fee request in time for any appellate review of a dispute over fees to proceed at the same time as review on the merits.

Filing a motion for fees under subdivision (e) does not affect the finality or appealability of a judgment. If an appeal on the merits of the case is taken, the court may rule on the claim for fees, defer its ruling on the motion, or deny the motion without prejudice and direct under paragraph (2) a new period for filing after the appeal has been resolved. A notice of appeal does not extend the time for filing a fee claim based on the initial judgment, but the court may effectively extend the period by permitting claims to be filed after resolution of the appeal. A new period for filing will automatically begin if a new judgment is entered following a reversal or remand by the appellate court or the granting of a motion under Rule 59.

The new subdivision does not require that the motion for attorneys' fees be supported at the time of filing with the evidentiary material bearing on the fees. This material must be submitted in due course, according to such schedule as the court may direct in light of the circumstances of the case. What is required is the filing of a motion sufficient to alert the adversary and the court that there is a claim for fees and the amount of such fees or a fair estimate.

If directed by the court, the moving party is required to disclose any fee agreement, including those between attorney and client, between attorneys sharing a fee to be awarded, and between adversaries made in partial settlement of a dispute where the settlement must be implemented by court action, as required by Rule 23 and similar provisions. This subdivision does not affect the practice in class action cases whereby claims for fees are presented in advance of hearings to consider approval of the proposed settlement, since the court is permitted to require submissions of fee claims in advance of the entry of judgment.

Paragraph (3) assures the parties of an opportunity to make an appropriate presentation with respect to issues involving the evaluation of legal services. In some cases, an evidentiary hearing may be needed, but this is not required in every case. The amount of time to be allowed for the preparation of submissions both in support of and in opposition to awards should be tailored to the particular case. The court is expressly authorized to make a determination of the liability for fees before receiving submissions by the parties bearing on the amount of an award. This option may be appropriate in actions in which the liability issue is doubtful and the evaluation issues are numerous and complex.

The court may order disclosure of additional information, such as that bearing on prevailing local rates or on the appropriateness of particular services for which compensation is sought. On rare occasion, the court may determine that discovery would be useful to the parties. Fee awards should be made in the form of a separate judgment under Rule 58 since such awards are subject to appellate review. To facilitate such review, paragraph (3) requires the court to set forth its findings of fact and conclusions of law. It is anticipated that this explanation will be quite brief in most cases.

Paragraph (4) authorizes the court to refer issues regarding the amount of a fee to a master under Rule 53. This authorization eliminates any controversy as to whether such references are permitted under Rule 53(b) as “matters of account and difficult computation of damages.” Paragraph (5) excludes from this rule the award of fees as sanctions for violations of these rules.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 1999 Amendment:

A new paragraph has been added to subdivision (d) defining the term “costs.” A definition was deemed advisable in light of continuing confusion as to expenses that can be taxed as costs. See, e.g., Wood v. Tyler, 317 Ark. 319, 877 S.W.2d 582 (1994); Sutton v. Ryder Truck Rental, Inc., 305 Ark. 231, 807 S.W.2d 905 (1991).

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 2001 Amendment:

Rule 54(b) has caused problems for lawyers and judges alike. See generally Watkins, The Mysteries of Rule 54(b), 1996 Ark. L. Notes 117. Although subdivision (b) has not been radically altered, the revisions are intended to emphasize the steps that must be taken to secure immediate appellate review. The subdivision has been divided into four numbered paragraphs, and the most significant change is the trial court’s certificate required by paragraph (1). By virtue of paragraph (2), the absence of the certificate means that a final portion of a case involving multiple parties or claims is not immediately appealable. Except for requiring a certificate and setting out its form, paragraph (1) differs little from the first sentence of the prior version of subdivision (b). Similarly, paragraph (2) largely tracks the second sentence but has been amended to refer to the certificate. Paragraphs (3) and (4) are new but do not work any change in the law.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 2008 Amendment:

Subdivision (b) has been amended by adding a new paragraph (5), which addresses the “named but not served defendant” problem.

Cases asserting claims against multiple defendants are commonplace. In some of those cases, a defendant is never served but nonetheless remains listed as a party and is never dismissed even though the circuit court has resolved all the claims against all the other parties. This situation creates problems on appeal. It wastes litigants’ time and money and scarce judicial resources when, after the case has been appealed and briefed, the appellate court discovers a forgotten defendant whose presence destroys the finality of the judgment being appealed. E.g., Grooms v. Myers, 308 Ark. 324, 823 S.W.2d 901 (1992). This problem often arises with “John Doe” defendants. E.g., Downing v. Lawrence Hall Nursing Ctr., 368 Ark. 51, 243 S.W.3d 263 (2006). New paragraph (5) solves this problem by mandating that any claim against a named but unserved defendant (including any John Doe) is dismissed by the circuit court’s final judgment or decree.

Paragraph (d)(2) has also been amended. The change reflects that Rule of Evidence 1009, also adopted in 2008, authorizes the circuit court to appoint a qualified translator and requires the court to tax the reasonable value of the appointed translator’s services as costs.

CASE NOTES

Appealable Order.

Reviewing court was without jurisdiction to review the appeal because the notice of appeal was not properly and timely filed within thirty (30) days of the "order appealed from," and a review of case law revealed no instance where a reviewing court had ever dismissed a case for a lack of a final order without the notice of appeal and record having been timely filed; whether an order had properly been appealed pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule was a jurisdictional question, which the reviewing court could address sua sponte, however, such a determination for Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2 purposes was always secondary to whether a timely notice of appeal and record had been filed. Sloan v. Ark. Rural Med. Prac. Loan & Scholarship Bd., 369 Ark. 442, 255 S.W.3d 834 (2007).

Appeals from a circuit court's order construing a decedent's will in the widow's favor were timely, under § 28-1-116(a) and (g), because (1) any attempt to appeal from the partial summary judgment would have been a nullity because the partial summary judgment lacked finality because it was obviously partial and other issues remained, and the partial summary judgment did not contain a certification under subsection (b) of this rule allowing for an immediate appeal; (2) the partial summary judgment became final on July 31, 2006, when judgment was entered disposing of the remaining claims; (3) motions for new trial were filed and, under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(b), such motions extended the time for all parties to file their notice of appeal; and (4) the older children filed their notice of appeal on September 18, 2006. Taylor v. Woods, 102 Ark. App. 92, 282 S.W.3d 285 (2008).

Reviewing court dismissed an employee's appeal of an order granting a motion for a directed verdict filed by an employer's client in a negligence action because there could be issues concerning the intervention by an employer's insurer that remained outstanding and could be subject to appeal; the employee failed to show that the jurisdictional requirements of subdivision (b) of this rule were met. Schubert v. Target Stores, Inc., 2009 Ark. 89, 302 S.W.3d 33 (2009).

Judgment in favor of a seller in its foreclosure action against purchasers, which also granted the purchasers' motion for nonsuit of their compulsory counterclaims, was not a final, appealable order because the purchasers were not barred from bringing their claims again; therefore, the purchasers' appeal of the judgment was dismissed without prejudice because the record did not contain an order granting certification under this rule. Martin v. Kat's Bar & Grill, LLC, 2009 Ark. App. 737 (2009).

Partial summary judgment was not a final appealable judgment under this rule because one party's counterclaims arose out of the same transaction or occurrence as the other party's breach-of-contract claim, on which summary judgment was granted, and thus were compulsory counterclaims. Killian v. Gibson, 2011 Ark. App. 245 (2011).

Pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule, there was a final, appealable order in a case between insureds and an insurer, disputing the failure of the insurer to pay under a policy, as the rights of the parties were definitively adjudicated in the language of the trial court's summary judgment order. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. of Ark., Inc. v. Guyer, 2011 Ark. App. 710, 386 S.W.3d 682 (2011).

Pursuant to the operation of subdivision (b)(5) of this rule, any claims against a police department were dismissed by the entry of the circuit court's order, and language in the order regarding keeping the case file open as to the police department was without effect. The order of the circuit court was a final, appealable order. Daugherty v. Sipes, 2012 Ark. App. 233 (2012).

Dismissal of a school district's appeal from a circuit court order granting a motion to dismiss was required because the order was not a final, appealable order. In addition, there was no certificate under subsection (b) of this rule in the record, and it was clear from the record that the requirements of subsection (b) had not been met. Deer/Mt. Judea Sch. Dist. v. Beebe, 2012 Ark. 93 (2012).

Appeal of an order dismissing a breach of contract and fraud action was dismissed without prejudice because the record did not reflect that one party had ever been dismissed from the case; the trial court had not attached a certificate under subsection (b) of this rule to its order. Hotfoot Logistics, LLC v. Shipping Point Mktg., 2012 Ark. 76 (2012).

Insured's cross-appeal regarding the denial of its motion for attorney fees was dismissed without prejudice because a certificate under subsection (b) of this rule issued by the trial court did not certify the issue regarding attorney fees. Scottsdale Ins. Co. v. Morrow Land Valley Co., LLC, 2012 Ark. 247, 411 S.W.3d 184 (2012).

Reviewing court lacked jurisdiction to consider the appeal, because the order appealed was not a final order, when it contemplated further action, and the order did not satisfy subsection (b) of this rule, when the order did not contain specific factual findings of any danger of hardship or injustice that could be alleviated by an immediate appeal. Robinson v. Villines, 2012 Ark. 211 (2012).

Applying subdivision (b)(2) of this rule, the appellate court lack an appealable order because the claims against certain defendants had not been dismissed or otherwise resolved, there was uncertainty regarding whether certain defendants were served, and no separate docket numbers were issued to distinguish the severed actions and the trial court continued to issue orders that pertained to all plaintiffs. Ellis v. Agrilience, LLC, 2012 Ark. App. 549 (2012).

In an airport employee's action for defamation and tortious interference against airplane owners at another airport, the employee's appeal from a summary judgment in favor of pilots was dismissed because the pilots' third-party complaint against the employee's boss was still pending. Thus, the order appealed from was not final. Fureigh v. Hogan, 2013 Ark. App. 287 (2013).

Court of appeals lacked jurisdiction over parents' appeal from the denial of attorney's fees because the letter that they appealed from was not the final order in the case since the final order was entered eight days after the letter had been filed; the rule does not contemplate a motion for, or an award of, attorney's fees prior to the entry of judgment. Peraza v. United Fin. Cas. Co., 2015 Ark. App. 5, 453 S.W.3d 693 (2015).

Permanency planning order was final and appealable because a Rule 54(b) certificate was attached to the first amended permanency planning order; the certificate contained the court's finding that a danger of hardship or injustice could occur without an immediate appeal. Cogburn v. Arkansas Dep't of Human Servs., 2015 Ark. App. 271, 461 S.W.3d 380 (2015).

Parents' appeal of a permanency-planning order denying their Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(b) certification was dismissed where the order did not dismiss the parties or conclude their rights, and an exception to Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2 was unwarranted where the denial simply precluded the parents from filing an interlocutory appeal before the entire case was concluded. Bean v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2016 Ark. App. 58 (2016).

Property owners were not required to appeal an order within 30 days where there was no written order dismissing a counterclaim in the record, the order did not include an Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(b) certificate, and thus, the order was not final. Barton v. Brockinton, 2016 Ark. App. 138, 487 S.W.3d 820 (2016).

Appeal was dismissed for lack of a final order where the amended order dismissing a counterclaim did not actually dismiss the counterclaim, but simply stated that it was amending the order to add the Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(b) certificate, the counterclaim was dismissed without prejudice and appellant remained free to refile it in the event that appellee returned to occupy the home, and the Rule 54(b) certificate did not contain any factual findings explaining why hardship or injustice would have resulted if an immediate appeal was not permitted.

Applicability.

A decree that orders a judicial sale of property and places the court's directive into execution is a final order and appealable under ARAP 2(a)(1); when there is such an order, a certification under subsection (b) of this rule is not necessary. Scherz v. Mundaca Inv. Corp., 318 Ark. 595, 886 S.W.2d 631 (1994).

Subsection (b) of this rule did not apply to allow plaintiff to appeal trial court's denial of her motion to prosecute her lawsuit under a pseudonym where the order involved a ruling on a preliminary legal issue and did not dispose of one of several claims or one of several parties. Doe v. Union Pac. R.R., 323 Ark. 237, 914 S.W.2d 312 (1996).

In members' breach of contract action against a country club, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in awarding attorney fees to the members; further, an award of fees under § 16-22-308 obviated the need for a motion to be filed requesting the fees under this rule. Millwood-RAB Mktg., Inc. v. Blackburn, 95 Ark. App. 253, 236 S.W.3d 551 (2006).

In an underlying suit, a property owner alleged that all of his real property was sold over his objection; a circuit court judgment was later voided ab initio by another circuit court, which maintained that it had exclusive jurisdiction due to the dissolution of a business entity that was allegedly involved in the sale of the property. The property owner's request for writ of certiorari or writ of prohibition was denied because he still had an adequate remedy at law—the appeal of the second circuit court's order; although the property owner needed to comply with subsection (b) of this rule. Sims v. Circuit Court, 368 Ark. 498, 247 S.W.3d 493 (2007).

Bankruptcy Stay Lifted.

An order granting summary judgment to one of two defendants was not a final appealable order and an appeal would be piecemeal and violate of the principles that subsection (b) of this rule is intended to protect where the claims against the remaining defendant were no longer afforded the protection of a bankruptcy stay as the bankruptcy case had been dismissed. Bank of Ark. v. First Union Nat'l Bank, 342 Ark. 705, 30 S.W.3d 110 (2000).

Burden of Proof.

It is the duty of the appellant to produce a record on appeal showing that the jurisdictional requirements of subsection (b) of this rule have been met. Cortese v. Atlantic Richfield, 320 Ark. 639, 898 S.W.2d 467 (1995).

Certificate.

Because the record did not include a certificate under subdivision (b)(2) of this rule, it was likely that there was not yet a final order and that the appellate court had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Pursuant to Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 6(c), the appellate court remanded the case for supplementation of the record and rebriefing. Edgin v. Cent. United Life Ins. Co., 2012 Ark. App. 216 (2012).

Order being appealed was not final and did not satisfy the requirements of subsection (b) of this rule, because the order contained no factual findings explaining why hardship or injustice would result if an immediate appeal was not permitted, when the order merely stated a conclusion that hardship and injustice would result on the basis that the case involved an issue of first impression. Kyle v. Gray, 2012 Ark. 268 (2012).

Court dismissed the appeal from the trial court's denial of attorney's fees for lack of final order under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2(a)(1) because the notice of appeal did not contain the statement that the appealing party abandoned any pending but unresolved claims as required by Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 3(e)(vi), and there was no certificate under subdivision (b) of this rule. Nier v. Hearn, 2013 Ark. App. 152 (2013).

Notice of appeal asserted that a company appealed from an order on a motion to confirm settlement and for attorney fees, but there was not a certificate under subdivision (b) of this rule, plus the notice did not contain a statement; thus, at a minimum, the addendum submitted did not contain the order confirming the settlement, and without this order, the court had nothing to review and the court was not able to determine if it had jurisdiction to hear the appeal, and thus the court ordered the company to file a supplemental addendum under Ark. Sup. Ct. & Ct. App. P. 4-2(a)(8). Stephens Prod. Co. v. Blackard, 2013 Ark. App. 289 (2013).

Because there was no valid final judgment certificate, an appeal relating to the conveyance of land and reservation of mineral interests was dismissed without reaching the merits of the arguments; the circuit court's order did not dispose of claims for monetary damages. The certificate merely tracked the language of the rule; it did not explain why a hardship or injustice would occur without the appeal. JEA L.P. v. Reynolds, 2013 Ark. App. 468 (2013).

Circuit court's purported certificate was insufficient to permit an appeal because the circuit court nunc pro tunc "addendum" did not qualify as a certificate and the purported certificate was not located on the judgment. Watkins v. City of Paragould, 2013 Ark. App. 539 (2013).

Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(b) certification was ineffective where it neither identified potential hardships or injustices likely to occur apart from the typical stress and expense of civil litigation, nor detailed facts that established exigent circumstances. Barton v. Brockinton, 2016 Ark. App. 138, 487 S.W.3d 820 (2016).

Appellate court lacked jurisdiction to hear the appeal of a permanency-planning order that was entered in a dependency-neglect case; although the certificate of appeal did set forth findings that the circuit court made in its permanency-planning order and concluded by stating that a hardship or injustice might result if an appeal was not permitted, the certificate did not tie the findings to its conclusion by explaining exactly what constituted the hardship or injustice or explaining how it was to be alleviated by an immediate appeal. Bushee v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2016 Ark. App. 339, 492 S.W.3d 559 (2016).

Circuit court's Rule 54(b) certificate was not effective to give the appellate court jurisdiction where the suggestion that, because so much time had passed during the pendency of the litigation, an appeal was appropriate regardless of a final order was not persuasive. Ellis v. Ellis, 2016 Ark. App. 411, 501 S.W.3d 387 (2016).

Supreme Court of Arkansas lacked jurisdiction over an appeal by a defendant and a bail bond company because there was not a final order where the circuit court granted their voluntary dismissal of their civil rights claims against two judges and there was no certification from the circuit court in the record regarding the nonsuit. Toland v. Robinson, 2017 Ark. 41 (2017).

Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(b) certificate was insufficient to vest jurisdiction in the appellate court where it was not attached to the court's order, it did not reiterate the order's findings and conclusions of law, and did not provide a proper justification for its entry. Prescott Sch. Dist. v. Steed, 2018 Ark. App. 424, 559 S.W.3d 759 (2018).

Appeal was dismissed without reaching the merits because there was no final, appealable order. Specifically, although the circuit court issued a Rule 54(b) certificate, it was insufficient in both form and substance where the certificate was not attached to the court's order, did not reiterate the findings and conclusions of law from the order, and did not incorporate or replicate the order in any way. Even if the certificate had complied with the rule as to form, dismissal was appropriate on finality grounds as the certificate did not identify potential hardships or injustices likely to occur apart from the typical expenses, time, and resources of civil litigation against multiple defendants. Joy v. TM State Truss Co., 2020 Ark. App. 225, 599 S.W.3d 651 (2020).

Despite appellee's argument that the circuit court's Rule 54(b) certification was inadequate, the certification properly gave the Supreme Court jurisdiction of the interlocutory appeal in the dependency-neglect proceeding. While much of the certification recited the parent's arguments, the circuit court nonetheless made the essential finding that if the appellate court agreed with the parent, there was manifest injustice or hardship in having the parent's religious and philosophical opposition to vaccinating her child usurped by the Department of Human Services before there could be a judicial determination of the extent of her parental rights in the matter. Macklin v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2021 Ark. 151, 624 S.W.3d 869 (2021).

Child Support Payments.

Accumulated or past-due child support payments do not constitute a judgment. Brun v. Rembert, 227 Ark. 241, 297 S.W.2d 940 (1957).

Claim for Relief.

Motion requesting sanctions under Ark. R. Civ. P. 11 is collateral to the merits of the underlying action and does not constitute a "claim for relief" as that term is used in subsection (b) of this rule. Spring Creek Living Ctr. Ltd. Partnership v. Sarrett, 318 Ark. 173, 883 S.W.2d 820 (1994).

In a breach of contract action, the buyers of a mobile home did not comply with subdivision (e)(2) of this rule when seeking attorney fees because they did not specifically mention in their motion the statute entitling them to the award; hence, a court could not reach the merits of their claim on appeal. Roop v. Cook, 2009 Ark. App. 540, 334 S.W.3d 412 (2009).

Appeal was dismissed without prejudice because the circuit court's order certifying an issue as final failed to even include a one-sentence factual finding and did not provide specific factual findings of any danger of hardship or injustice that could be alleviated by an immediate appeal. Billingsley v. Benton NWA Props., LLC, 2014 Ark. 65 (2014).

Compliance.

The failure to comply with subsection (b) of this rule is a jurisdictional issue that the Supreme Court is obligated to raise on its own. Richardson v. Rodgers, 329 Ark. 402, 947 S.W.2d 778 (1997).

Trial court erred when it certified an appeal as to fewer than all of the claims where the court's certificate did not conform to the requirements of subsection (b) of this rule in that it did not specify that the likely danger of hardship or injustice could only be alleviated by an immediate appeal. Rutledge v. Christ is the Answer Fellowship, Inc., 82 Ark. App. 221, 105 S.W.3d 816 (2003).

Construction.

The specific provision for appeal when an answer is stricken under ARAP 2(a)(4), must control over the general provisions contained in ARAP 2(a)(1) and subsection (b) of this rule.

Arnold Fireworks Display, Inc. v. Schmidt, 307 Ark. 316, 820 S.W.2d 444 (1991).

ARAP 2(a)(6), providing for appeals from injunctions, represents an exception to subsection (b) of this rule, which requires that all claims relating to all parties be disposed of prefatory to appeal; the specific authority for an appeal from an injunction should control over the absence of finality in the court's order. East Poinsett County Sch. Dist. No. 14 v. Massey, 317 Ark. 219, 876 S.W.2d 573 (1994).

Pursuant to ARAP 2(a)(3), a party may appeal from an order which grants or refuses a new trial; however, when the cause of action involves multiple parties and multiple claims, the finality of the trial court's judgment is determined by subsection (b) of this rule. GMAC v. Eubanks, 318 Ark. 640, 887 S.W.2d 292 (1994).

RAP-Civ 2(a)(4), allowing an appeal from an order striking an answer, or any part of an answer, or any pleading in an action, controls over subsection (b) of this rule, restricting appeals to final orders. Allen v. Greenland, 347 Ark. 465, 65 S.W.3d 424 (2002).

Subdivision (b)(5) of this rule is procedural and remedial and certainly does not disturb vested rights or create new obligations, and the new rule merely attempts to avoid the problems on appeal created by a certain situation; therefore, the Arkansas Supreme Court would apply the new rule retroactively and allow it to serve its intended purpose, allowing the estate administrator's appeal to continue despite the lack of a final order as to several defendants. Jackson v. Sparks Reg'l Med. Ctr., 375 Ark. 533, 294 S.W.3d 1 (2009).

Requirement in subdivision (e)(2) of this rule that a motion for attorney fees contain the specific rule or statute providing for attorney fees is the essence of the thing to be done by the rule. Roop v. Cook, 2009 Ark. App. 540, 334 S.W.3d 412 (2009).

Costs.

Circuit court did not lack jurisdiction to award attorney's fees for litigation that occurred in its court, included fees requested in the supplemental petition, as noncompliance with this rule was not jurisdictional. Hamilton v. Bank of the Ozarks, 2022 Ark. App. 254.

The trial court did not err in taxing the costs of a will contest against the losing party, in the absence of a specific statute or rule which requires that a court direct that the costs of an unsuccessful contest of a will be borne by the estate since this rule, which applies to probate proceedings through Ark. R. Civ. P. 1, expressly provides that costs shall be allowed as a matter of course to the other party unless the court otherwise directs. Gautney v. Rapley, 2 Ark. App. 116, 617 S.W.2d 377 (1981).

If no offer of judgment is made, or if one is made and the judgment exceeds the offer, costs are paid under subsection (d) of this rule, which gives the trial judge discretion in awarding authorized costs. Darragh Poultry & Livestock Equip. Co. v. Piney Creek Sales, Inc., 294 Ark. 427, 743 S.W.2d 804 (1988).

Where the only documentary proof of the court reporter fee was its inclusion on an unnotarized itemization of expenses attached as “Exhibit A” on appellee’s post-trial brief for attorney fees and expenses, such unsubstantiated proof was deficient for purposes of an award of costs under subsection (d) of this rule. Truck Ctr. of Tulsa, Inc. v. Autrey, 310 Ark. 260, 836 S.W.2d 359 (1992).

Taxable costs must be recognized by rule or by statute. Wood v. Tyler, 317 Ark. 319, 877 S.W.2d 582 (1994).

Expert witness fees and deposition expenses are not authorized by statute or by rule. Wood v. Tyler, 317 Ark. 319, 877 S.W.2d 582 (1994).

Subsection (d) of this rule does permit the court to “otherwise direct” payment of costs, because this authority relates to the ability of the court to disallow costs authorized by rule or statute; it does not authorize the court to assess costs outside the ambit of costs expressly contemplated by rule or by statute. Wood v. Tyler, 317 Ark. 319, 877 S.W.2d 582 (1994).

Subsection (d) of this rule gives the trial judge discretion in awarding authorized costs. Zhan v. Sherman, 323 Ark. 172, 913 S.W.2d 776 (1996).

Where the lease provided that the prevailing party in any suit brought in connection with the leased property was entitled to “all costs . . . including reasonable attorney’s fees,” subdivision (d)(2) of this rule had no application to the issue; thus, the prevailing party was entitled to recover the full amount of their deposition costs, despite the fact that the trial court found these costs to be excessive. Phi Kappa Tau Hous. Corp. v. Wengert, 350 Ark. 335, 86 S.W.3d 856 (2002).

The provisions of subsection (d) of this rule relating to the recovery of costs by the prevailing party in a lawsuit are not mutually exclusive with the provisions of Ark. R. Civ. P. 68, which allow a defendant to recover his post-offer costs if the defendant makes a settlement offer that is rejected and the plaintiff receives an award at trial that is less than the amount of the offer; therefore, while the trial court did not err in granting a request for post-offer costs by a defendant in a personal injury action whose pretrial offer was rejected, the plaintiff was also entitled to recover her pre-offer costs because the jury found for the plaintiff. Bell v. Bershears, 351 Ark. 260, 92 S.W.3d 32 (2002).

In a customer’s action against a truck manufacturer under the Arkansas New Motor Vehicle Quality Assurance Act, the trial court did not err in interpreting § 4-90-415(c) to allow for the recovery of copy costs and mileage expenses; even if it was assumed that costs were limited to those items set forth in subsection (d) of this rule, § 4-90-415(c) also allowed a consumer who prevailed to recover “expenses,” including attorney fees. DaimlerChrysler Corp. v. Smelser, 375 Ark. 216, 289 S.W.3d 466 (2008).

Debtor’s costs related to hiring an analyst, service by a sheriff, a deposition charge, and transportation to the court were reasonable and allowable under subsection (d) of this rule and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7054. First State Bank of Crossett v. Fowler, 427 B.R. 1 (W.D. Ark. 2010).

Appellant who was found liable for conversion was incorrect in asserting that there was no authority permitting recovery of costs in a tort case because the costs awarded were for appellee’s filing fees and were expressly allowed under subdivision (d)(2) of this rule. Volgelgesang v. Vogelgesang, 2010 Ark. App. 178 (2010).

In an action by home buyers against the sellers for recovery of the earnest money, in which the sellers asserted a counterclaim for damages for breach of contract, which resulted in a decision that the sellers were not entitled to damages but were entitled to keep the earnest money, neither party was the prevailing party for purposes of awarding attorney’s fees under § 16-22-308 or the terms of the parties’ real estate contract, or for costs under subdivision (d)(2) of this rule. Brackelsberg v. Heffin, 2011 Ark. App. 678, 386 S.W.3d 636 (2011).

In a divorce case, a trial court erred by awarding a former wife her travel expenses because they were not authorized by subsection (d) of this rule; moreover, § 9-19-305(c) had no application as it concerned the registration of child-custody determinations. Clowers v. Stickel, 414 S.W.3d 396 (Ark. Ct. App.), overruled in part, Tiner v. Tiner, 2012 Ark. App. 483, 422 S.W.3d 178 (2012).

Plaintiff who obtained a favorable judgment, including allowable costs, in an action for personal injury arising from a motor vehicle accident could not obtain appellate relief on a claim that his right to recover court costs under subdivision (d) of this rule was erroneously foreclosed by the circuit court’s allowing defendant to file a satisfaction of judgment after offsetting the judgment by insurance proceeds previously paid to plaintiff because plaintiff never raised the issue of court costs to the circuit court; took no action on the allowance of court costs after judgment was entered; never filed any motion or affidavit with the circuit court detailing his costs; and, in the two times he objected to the offset and satisfaction of judgment, he never raised the issue of entitlement to court costs. Brown v. Lee, 2012 Ark. 417, 424 S.W.3d 817 (2012).

Circuit court did not err by awarding litigation-related expenses, such as court-reporter fees and postage, in addition to attorney’s fees; subdivision (d)(2) of this rule states that other expenses specifically authorized by statute are allowed, and Ark. Code Ann. § 9-12-309(a)(2) provides that in a divorce action, the circuit court may award either the wife or the husband costs of court, in addition to a reasonable attorney's fee. Foster v. Foster, 2016 Ark. 456, 506 S.W.3d 808 (2016).

Award of costs to the landowners in a boundary dispute was reversed where the landowners had not filed a motion or affidavit detailing those costs. Cross v. Cross, 2016 Ark. App. 327, 497 S.W.3d 712 (2016) (substituted op. on reh'g).

Because an award of filing fees was within the discretion of the trial court under this rule, the trial court did not err in refusing to award the cost of filing fees in a condemnation action governed by § 18-15-307. Brown v. City of Bryant, 2017 Ark. App. 239, 520 S.W.3d 287 (2017).

Arkansas courts have made clear that miscellaneous litigation expenses, whether described as costs or as nontaxable expenses, may not be recovered absent statutory authority for doing so. A litigant's request for nontaxable costs was therefore denied. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Cuker Interactive, LLC, No. 5:14-CV-5262, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55242 (W.D. Ark. Mar. 31, 2018), aff'd, Walmart Inc. v. Cuker Interactive, LLC, 949 F.3d 1101 (8th Cir. 2020).

In determining the amount to award for "other costs" under § 18-15-307 in a condemnation proceeding, the circuit court awarded only the percentage the trust recovered above that which was offered by the city, and the appellate court could not say on the record before it that this was an abuse of discretion. City of Bryant v. Boone Trust, 2018 Ark. App. 547, 564 S.W.3d 550 (2018).

In an easement dispute between adjoining landowners dismissed on res judicata grounds, the award for mileage was reversed, as the circuit court did not identify why it awarded mileage and it was not apparent from the record why the prevailing party was entitled to receive mileage. Shonting v. Connor, 2020 Ark. App. 154, 597 S.W.3d 129 (2020).

—Attorneys' Fees.

Since the right to recover attorneys' fees from one's opponent in litigation as a part of the costs thereof does not exist at common law, such an item of expense is not allowable in the absence of a statute or rule of the court, or some agreement expressly authorizing the taxing of attorneys' fees in addition to the ordinary statutory court costs. Lewallen v. Bethune, 267 Ark. 976, 593 S.W.2d 64 (Ct. App. 1980), overruled, Elliott v. Boone County Indep. Living, 56 Ark. App. 113, 939 S.W.2d 844 (1997).

The term "costs" or "expenses" as used, even in a statute, is not understood ordinarily to include attorneys' fees. Lewallen v. Bethune, 267 Ark. 976, 593 S.W.2d 64 (Ct. App. 1980), overruled, Elliott v. Boone County Indep. Living, 56 Ark. App. 113, 939 S.W.2d 844 (1997);

Elliott v. Boone County Indep. Living, Inc., 56 Ark. App. 113, 939 S.W.2d 844 (1997).

The unliquidated award of attorney's fees pursuant to § 16-22-309 is not a final order. Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Cassill, 41 Ark. App. 22, 847 S.W.2d 465 (1993).

Subdivision (e)(1) of this rule does not require a written motion. State Auto Property & Cas. Ins. Co. v. Swaim, 338 Ark. 49, 991 S.W.2d 555 (1999).

Although a motion for attorney's fees was timely filed, the failure of the motion to recite the specific statute or rule entitling the movant to the claimed fees was fatal to the motion. Crawford & Lewis v. Boatmen's Trust Co., 338 Ark. 679, 1 S.W.3d 417 (1999).

Husband was not entitled to receive attorney's fees in dissolution modification action where he did not timely request fees, nor cite to any authority for the granting of fees. Norman v. Norman, 347 Ark. 682, 66 S.W.3d 635 (2002).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying consumer's motion for attorney's fees where the trial court denied the request in the same order in which it granted the bank's motion for new trial and, while the trial court did not explicitly state why it had chosen to deny the motion, it was clear that the trial court's decision was based on the fact that, once it had determined that a new trial was in order, the consumer was no longer the prevailing party and, therefore, no longer entitled to attorney's fees. Phelan v. Discover Bank, 361 Ark. 138, 205 S.W.3d 145 (2005).

In a motion to modify a divorce decree, where trial court's order denying ex-husband relief was filed on November 4, 2003, but ex-wife's motion for attorney's fees was not filed until December 2, 2003, wife's motion was untimely under subsection (e) of this rule; thus, the trial court erred in awarding the wife's attorney's fees. Morehouse v. Lawson, 90 Ark. App. 379, 206 S.W.3d 295 (2005).

In an action brought under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983, the state argued that a taxpayer's request for attorney's fees pursuant to 42 U.S.C.S. § 1988 was untimely; however, a final judgment triggering subsection (e) of this rule did not occur until the circuit court issued its order that denied the Commissioner of State Lands' request to reopen the question of liability, ordered that the taxpayer be given his house back, denied the taxpayer his requested attorney's fees, and ordered the clerk to close the case. Only upon the final resolution of the respective parties' rights was a motion for attorney's fees appropriate. Jones v. Flowers, 373 Ark. 213, 283 S.W.3d 551 (2008).

While a circuit court erred in fragmenting a jury verdict, and awarding the borrowers attorney fees outside the time limits of subdivision (e)(2) of this rule, and post-judgment interest in excess of that authorized by Ark. Const. Art. 19, § 13, their amended complaint was properly dismissed as untimely under Ark. R. Civ. P. 15(a). Mfrs. & Traders Trust Co. v. Nickelson, 2011 Ark. App. 557, 386 S.W.3d 41 (2011).

In a boundary dispute between adjoining property owners involving an alleged “spite” fence, the circuit court did not err in failing to award attorney fees to appellees where appellees did not file a motion seeking attorney fees pursuant to subdivision (e)(1) of this rule, and where there was not an affidavit nor other information before the circuit court indicating the number of hours counsel spent on the case. Appellees thus failed to bring up a record sufficient to demonstrate that the circuit court was in error. Jenkins v. Fogerty, 2011 Ark. App. 720, 386 S.W.3d 704 (2011).

Where a wife appealed a circuit court’s order granting attorney’s fees to her husband, her argument failed, in her brief and in her reply, to address this rule or the circuit court’s inherent authority to grant attorney’s fees in domestic-relations cases. Watkins v. Watkins, No. CV-13-300, 2013 Ark. App. LEXIS 684 (Ark. Ct. App. Nov. 6, 2013).

In a domestic-relations case in which a wife appealed a circuit court’s order granting attorney’s fees to her husband, the wife cited no law in support of her assertion that the trial court abused its discretion by awarding $1500 in attorney’s fees to the husband without any evidence of the time or costs spent by his counsel. Watkins v. Watkins, No. CV-13-300, 2013 Ark. App. LEXIS 684 (Ark. Ct. App. Nov. 6, 2013).

Although the circuit court properly recognized that this section mandated that plaintiff be awarded a reasonable attorney’s fee after defendant failed to put forth a meritorious defense showing why payment of plaintiff’s small claim was not made within the 60 days allowed under this section, the circuit court abused its discretion by deciding on the amount of the attorney’s fee before giving plaintiff the opportunity he requested to submit a fee petition, and by reiterating its decision without further explanation even after the fee petition was submitted. Bateman v. Heird, 2013 Ark. App. 671 (2013).

In a domestic relations case, it was not a violation of procedural due process under the Fourteenth Amendment for the circuit court to deny ex-wife’s request for an evidentiary hearing on the issue of attorney’s fees. Hargis v. Hargis, 2019 Ark. 321, 587 S.W.3d 208 (2019).

Trial court did not lack authority to award a wife attorney’s fees because it had inherent power in domestic-relations proceedings to award fees independent of any statute or rule. John v. Bolinder, 2019 Ark. App. 96, 572 S.W.3d 418 (2019).

Counterclaim.

Although the circuit court entered a judgment for plaintiff, this decree was not appeal-able until the order dismissing defendant’s personal counterclaim was entered as the earlier judgment was not did not adjudicate all of the claims of the parties. Jordan v. Thomas, 332 Ark. 268, 964 S.W.2d 399 (1998).

In a case involving the judicial dissolution of a law firm, an appeal summarily denying several creditors’ claims was dismissed without prejudice since there was no final appealable judgment under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2(a)(1) and this rule where a counterclaim filed by a law firm’s shareholder was not decided. Sims v. Fletcher, 368 Ark. 178, 243 S.W.3d 863 (2006).

Default Judgment.

Divorce decree that was entered in a default judgment was not void under subsection (c) of this rule even though the wife did not request an unequal division of marital property and debt in the divorce complaint; the circuit court did not exceed its power in determining the property and debt matters as the relief that the wife requested was not different in kind from that granted and the wife’s complaint provided the husband with sufficient notice of the matters the court was to decide. Riggs v. Riggs, 2020 Ark. App. 381, 606 S.W.3d 588 (2020).

Directed Verdict.

Trial court erred in directing a verdict against a successful bidder on its bid-rigging claims against former employees, regarding the bidder’s purchase of the employees’ former employer, because the bidder presented sufficient evidence of proximate cause, in that it would not have bid on or purchased the business if it had known the employees were planning to leave the business and pirate the customer accounts, and of damages, which the bidder calculated as 50 percent of the purchase price. Phillippy v. ANB Fin. Servs., LLC, 2011 Ark. App. 639, 386 S.W.3d 553 (2011).

Final Judgment.

Circuit court’s September 2018 order was not a final order because the passenger’s negligence claim and the tire manufacturer’s cross-claim remained outstanding, and thus the driver’s notice of appeal had no effect; the circuit court did not enter a final order and Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(b) certificate until December 2018, and the driver did not file any notice of appeal from that order. Even if he filed a brief or taken any other steps to pursue his appeal, it was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. Garner v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 2021 Ark. App. 332 (2021).

A judgment is final and appealable if the issue between the parties has been passed upon by the court and the merits of the cause finally determined. Melton v. St. Louis, I.M. & S. Ry., 99 Ark. 433, 139 S.W. 289 (1911).

When the decision has been reached, announced by the Court, and a sufficient docket memorandum entered to show a final settlement of the case, it is a final judgment although it has not been spread in full upon the record. McConnell v. Bourland, 175 Ark. 253, 299 S.W. 44 (1927).

An entry which contained a finding as to the contractual relationship between the parties was not a judgment within the meaning of this section. Thomas v. McElroy, 243 Ark. 465, 420 S.W.2d 530 (1967).

A jury verdict finding against the defendant on his counterclaim and disagreeing as to the issues formed by plaintiff's complaint and the defendant's general denial thereto was not "a final determination of the rights of the parties" in the action. Martin v. Romes, 249 Ark. 927, 462 S.W.2d 460 (1971).

The plaintiffs' appeal would be dismissed since there was no final order from which to appeal as the order at issue did not mention either counterclaims made by the defendants or one claim made by one of the plaintiffs. Stockton v. Sentry Ins., 332 Ark. 417, 965 S.W.2d 762 (1998).

A summary judgment order was not a final, appealable order where the order did not dispose of the complaint against one of the defendants. Hodges v. Huckabee, 333 Ark. 247, 968 S.W.2d 619 (1998).

The court would dismiss without prejudice the appeal of a teacher from the grant of summary judgment against her in her action seeking reinstatement and renewal of her contract with a school district since there was no final, appealable order where the court did not rule on the teacher's complaint for back pay. Henderson v. Little Rock Sch. Dist., 333 Ark. 448, 969 S.W.2d 662 (1998).

Subsection (b) of this rule does not obviate the requirement of finality, but instead merely provides that a judgment that is final as to less than all of the litigants or the claims is subject to appeal in accordance with the conditions recited in this rule. Haase v. Starnes, 337 Ark. 193, 987 S.W.2d 704 (1999).

In an action seeking an equitable one-half interest in certain real property and requesting an order directing partition of the real property and a division of proceeds between the parties, a decree finding that the real property was the property of a partnership between the parties and finding that the plaintiff was entitled to a credit should the property ever be sold was not a final appealable order as it failed to grant or deny the requested relief of partition and there was no attempt to comply with subsection (b) of this rule. Rigsby v. Rigsby, 340 Ark. 544, 11 S.W.3d 551 (2000).

The landholders sought to quiet title as against all the world and not merely the state, therefore, the U.S. should have been joined as a necessary party; because judgment was entered for one or more but fewer than all the claims or parties, judgment was not final and no appeal could be taken. Eason v. Flannigan, 349 Ark. 1, 75 S.W.3d 702 (2002).

Order appellants appealed from was not final because it did not resolve an outstanding counterclaim; thus, the order was not a final, appealable order, and the appeal had to be dismissed. Dodge v. Lee, 350 Ark. 480, 88 S.W.3d 843 (2002).

Plan of distribution to pay back illegally exacted funds to certain taxpayers entered by the trial court was not a final, appealable order for the purposes of appellate jurisdiction and the circuit court had not certified the plan for appeal pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule; therefore, the appeal was ordered dismissed. Fisher v. Chavers, 351 Ark. 318, 92 S.W.3d 30 (2002).

In a child custody modification action, although the trial court's nunc pro tunc order did not fix the amount of the mother's child support payments, but instead directed the mother to produce pay stubs so that the amount could be determined in the future, the trial court's order changed custody from joint custody in both parents to sole custody in the father and was final for purposes of an appeal under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2(d). Lewellyn v. Lewellyn, 351 Ark. 346, 93 S.W.3d 681 (2002).

Appellate court lacked jurisdiction to hear an injured glass worker's appeal of a summary judgment in favor of a florist on premises liability where the trial court order did not constitute a final judgment against John Doe defendants or intervenors; thus, there was not a final order as to all parties or a certification under subsection (b) of this rule that would justify an immediate appeal. Van DeVeer v. George's Flower's, Inc., 76 Ark. App. 408, 65 S.W.3d 488 (2002).

In a class action proceeding, where the bank was arguing on appeal that the partial summary-judgment order entered in the circuit court was final even though no damages had been awarded, and at the same time arguing in the circuit court that no final order had been entered, even though the bank eventually conceded that the partial summary-judgment order was not final, the bank failed to show good cause against the entry of sanctions. United States Bank, N.A. v. Milburn, 352 Ark. 144, 100 S.W.3d 674 (2003).

Appellate court dismissed an appeal from an order of summary judgment because the order did not dispose of claims against 10 John Doe defendants and had not been certified as final pursuant to this rule; absent a final appealable order, the appellate court lacked jurisdiction to consider the appeal. Moses v. Hanna's Candle Co., 353 Ark. 101, 110 S.W.3d 725 (2003).

Appeal and cross appeal from the divorce decree entered by the trial court was dismissed for lack of appellate jurisdiction because there was no final appealable order, as required by Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2(a)(1) and this rule, where the trial court held in abeyance its final decision regarding the division of the parties' home and personal property. Farrell v. Farrell, 359 Ark. 1, 193 S.W.3d 734 (2004).

An appeal from the circuit court's order of December 31, 2003, was subject to dismissal as the order was not a final order because the unjust-enrichment claim was still pending and the order contained no certification pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule. Servewell Plumbing, LLC v. Summit Contrs., Inc., 360 Ark. 521, 202 S.W.3d 525 (2005).

Circuit court's order granting distributor's motion to dismiss did not resolve several of the claims alleged by the corporation or distributor in its complaint as it merely disposed of any claim, whether federal or otherwise, related to the alleged illegal tying arrangement; further, the corporation failed to request certification and, in the absence of such a determination, the order was not a final appealable order. Carquest of Hot Springs, Inc. v. Gen. Parts, Inc., 361 Ark. 25, 204 S.W.3d 53 (2005).

Where the trial court's March 4, 2004, order was not a final order because the health care company's counterclaim was still pending, the health care company's subsequent notice of appeal was a nullity. NCS Healthcare of Ark., Inc. v. W.P. Malone, Inc., 362 Ark. 169, 207 S.W.3d 552 (2005).

Trial court retained jurisdiction of company's claims against appellees after it denied company's motion for a final order pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule because, where some of the claims were resolved by nonsuit and some by summary judgment, there were no final appealable orders under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2(a) granting the appellate court jurisdiction. Mountain Pure LLC v. Affiliated Foods Southwest, Inc., 366 Ark. 62, 233 S.W.3d 609 (2006).

Appeal in a contract dispute was dismissed because a counterclaim was not considered by a trial court; therefore, there was not a final judgment under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2(a)(1) and subsection (b) of this rule. Hanners v. Giant Oil Co. of Ark., Inc., 369 Ark. 226, 253 S.W.3d 424 (2007).

A mother's appeal from an order in a dependency-neglect case granting permanent custody of her children to their father was an appeal from a final, appealable order under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2(d) because Rule 2(d) applied to permanent custody orders in dependency-neglect cases, and, thus, there was no direct conflict with Ark. Sup. Ct. & Ct. App. R. 6-9, as (1) Rule 6-9 did not state that permanent custody orders were not final, appealable orders or that a certificate under subsection (b) of this rule was necessary for a permanent custody order relative to one child to be appealable, (2) Rule 2(d) specifically stated that custody orders were final, appealable orders; and (3) a certificate under subsection (b) of this rule was not required under Rule 6-9 for an appeal of the order regarding the two children in question. West v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 373 Ark. 100, 281 S.W.3d 733 (2008).

In a bank's foreclosure action, the homeowner's appeal was dismissed as the circuit court's order was not a final, appealable order under Ark. R. Civ. P. 41(a) where the written order did not reflect the circuit court's disposition of the homeowner's voluntarily nonsuited counterclaims against the bank. Further, the homeowner nonsuited her compulsory counterclaims against the bank, but both parties remained in the case until the bank's claims were decided. Bevans v. Deutsche Bank Nat'l Trust Co., 373 Ark. 105, 281 S.W.3d 740 (2008).

Arkansas Supreme Court could not reach the merits of appellants' arguments because the judgment was not final and appealable, and there was neither a final judgment as to all the parties and claims, nor was there a under subsection (b) of this rule; the judgment only dismissed certain claims and the other claims the administratrix alleged in her complaints had yet to be adjudicated or properly dismissed with respect to all named appellants. Beverly Enters. v. Keaton, 2009 Ark. 431 (2009), dismissed without prejudice, 2011 Ark. 7 (2011).

Where a decedent sustained injuries leading to her death as a result of inadequate care rendered by the nursing home at which she was a resident, where her estate filed suit against the nursing home as well as its corporate owner and the chief executive officer (CEO), and where the trial court granted the CEO's motion to dismiss under Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state sufficient facts to establish his individual liability, the trial court did not err in certifying the order of dismissal as a final and appealable order because all claims against the CEO had been dismissed, the remaining defendants' liability would be determined on legal theories separate and distinct from the dismissed defendant, and judicial economy would be served by an immediate appeal because, if appellate review was delayed, reversal of the dismissal would likely require duplicative depositions and a largely duplicative second trial with possible inconsistent verdicts. Bayird v. Floyd, 2009 Ark. 455, 344 S.W.3d 80 (2009).

Order denying a husband's motion for declaratory judgment and his motion for reconsideration of his discovery requests for the medical records of his wife was not a final, appealable order under subsection (b) of this rule and Ark. R. App. P. Civ. (2)(a)(1); the appeal was dismissed without prejudice. Hardy v. Hardy, 2010 Ark. 41 (2010).

Shareholder's appeal of an order reaffirming the grant of summary judgment in favor of a corporation was dismissed because the order was not final pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule; the order did not mention, much less adjudicate, the corporation's counterclaim, and the voluntary nonsuit of the counterclaim did not operate to make the original order granting the corporation summary judgment final and appealable because the counterclaim could be refiled. Crockett v. C.A.G. Invs., Inc., 2010 Ark. 90, 361 S.W.3d 262 (2010).

Where there was no order in the record in a medical malpractice case disposing of a physician's crossclaim against a hospital, a reviewing court was without jurisdiction under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2(a)(1) and had to dismiss the appeal without prejudice so that the trial court could enter a final order under subsection (b) of this rule as to the pending crossclaim. Ketan Bulsara v. Watkins, 2010 Ark. 453 (2010).

Biological father's appeal from a trial court's order that denied his motion to dismiss an annulment between a husband and a wife based on lack of subject matter jurisdiction to award custody and visitation rights was not a final order under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2, nor was it properly certified under subsection (b) of this rule. Thus, his appeal was dismissed. Rees v. McLaughlin, 2010 Ark. App. 617 (2010).

Home seller's appeal of an order awarding judgment to a buyer on a claim of breach of the implied warranty of habitability was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2(a)(1) because the record did not reflect a certificate under subsection (b) of this rule; it was not apparent that there was a final order disposing of the buyer's claim against the seller. Progressive Southeast Ark. Hous. Dev. Corp. v. Abraham, 2010 Ark. App. 760 (2010).

Because the circuit court had not yet adjudicated all of the claims in the action or the rights and liabilities of all of the parties, and because no certificate had been executed under subsection (b) of this rule to permit an immediate appeal, the appellate court lacked jurisdiction to hear the case. Trakru v. Mathews, 2011 Ark. App. 750 (2011).

In a case seeking the enforcement of a settlement agreement, an appeal was dismissed because there was no final disposition as to a bank's claims against two parties; moreover, there was no certification under subsection (b) of this rule. Labry v. Metro. Nat'l Bank, 2012 Ark. App. 189 (2012).

Appeal was dismissed for lack of a final order under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2(a)(1) because several of the claims had not yet been resolved, there was no certificate under subdivision (b)(2) of this rule, and a voluntary nonsuit on some claims did not operate to make the order appealed from final and appealable. There was no statement in a cross-appeal that pending, but unresolved claims, were being abandoned. Aceva Techs., LLC v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 2012 Ark. App. 382 (2012).

Judgment and orders being challenged were not final, because the company's claims against the former associate were never adjudicated, and the judgment appealed from lacked finality since it did not address the company's claims for equitable relief, i.e., accounting and imposition of a constructive trust or equitable lien. Jenkins v. APS Ins., LLC, 2012 Ark. App. 368 (2012).

Where the county court entered an order granting annexation, appellants' complaint was barred by the statute limiting the time for filing jurisdictional claims challenging annexation. Therefore, the court dismissed the complaint and certified that the order of annexation was a final judgment pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule. Thompson v. City of Bauxite, 2012 Ark. App. 580 (2012).

Appeal was dismissed because the order from which the appeal was taken was not final due to the failure to dispose of the claim for declaratory relief raised by one of the parties, and the dictates of subdivision (b) of this rule were not satisfied. McCall v. Grunwald, 2013 Ark. App. 232 (2013).

Nowhere in the order did the trial court actually state that it was quieting title in the property, nor was a sufficient legal description of the lots provided, plus the order contemplated future action; because the order did not adjudicate all claims or rights of all parties, the court dismissed the appeal for lack of a final order. Kendall v. Golden, 2014 Ark. App. 172 (2014).

Where, as here, there is no language under the rule as to no just reason for delay of an appeal, there is no final order from which the mother and father could have appealed on the no-reunification-services issue, and their arguments were not procedurally barred. Henson v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2014 Ark. App. 225, 434 S.W.3d 371 (2014).

Landowners' appeal of a trial court order dismissing their complaint and amended complaint as untimely under the relevant limitations period was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction where the order did not address the lease assignee's counterclaim for breach of warranty to defend title, and as a result, it was not final. McDougal v. Sabine River Land Co., 2014 Ark. App. 210 (2014).

Circuit court's order denying the plaintiffs' motion to vacate was not a final, appealable order because the circuit court in the caption listed only two defendants, the record did not reflect that any action had been taken with regard to a third named defendant, in either his individual or official capacity, and the record did not reveal whether he was served. Fennell v. City of Pine Bluff, 2015 Ark. App. 216 (2015).

Husband's appeal of an order modifying a child support and property settlement agreement was dismissed for lack of finality where there was no ruling on the wife's motion for contempt in the final order, and thus the order did not address all of the claims raised. Howell v. Howell, 2021 Ark. App. 97 (2021).

Interlocutory Appeal.

—Allowed.

—Dismissed.

—Scope.

—Specific Factual Findings.

Because the specific provision authorizing an appeal under RAP-Civ 2(a)(6) controls over the general provisions in RAP-Civ 2(a)(1) and subsection (b) of this rule without regard to the provisions of subsection (b), the purchaser's appeal of a mandatory injunction issued against the purchaser enjoining him from maintaining property or possessory rights was properly appealed despite not being a final order. Crain v. Burns, 82 Ark. App. 88, 112 S.W.3d 371 (2003).

—Allowed.

When a foreclosure decree's directives have been placed into execution, an appeal may be filed from that final decree without a determination under subsection (b) of this rule. Watanabe v. Webb, 320 Ark. 375, 896 S.W.2d 597 (1995).

—Dismissed.

Appeal from summary judgment dismissed because not all of the claims against all of the parties had been resolved and there had been no certification pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule that there was no need for delay in deciding the case. Ashmore v. Paccar, Inc., 315 Ark. 490, 868 S.W.2d 80 (1994).

Where the court did not decide all of the claims, and did not make the required certification under subsection (b) of this rule justifying an immediate appeal, the order was not appealable. Freeman v. Colonia Ins. Co., 319 Ark. 211, 890 S.W.2d 270 (1995).

Where order establishing arrearage did not finally resolve the amount of the arrearage husband owed or end the litigation concerning the claim for arrearage, the action was not terminated, and the supreme court lacked jurisdiction to hear an appeal. Office of Child Support Enforcement v. Oliver, 324 Ark. 447, 921 S.W.2d 602 (1996).

Appeal of a case involving an intervenor dismissed where appellant failed to include in the record an order adjudication the rights of all parties; the appellant failed to meet its burden of showing that the jurisdictional requirements of subsection (b) of this rule have been met. Richardson v. Rodgers, 329 Ark. 402, 947 S.W.2d 778 (1997).

Where the trial court did not give a directive that a final judgment be entered but only granted partial summary judgment, the judgment lacked finality and thus was not appealable. French v. Brooks Sports Ctr., Inc., 57 Ark. App. 30, 940 S.W.2d 507 (1997).

An interlocutory order in a divorce action which held in abeyance any determination on alimony or division of the husband's military retirement was not appealable where the chancellor made no determination that there was no just reason for delay. Morton v. Morton, 61 Ark. App. 161, 965 S.W.2d 809 (1998).

Interlocutory appeal of a default judgment would not lie when seed company failed to answer farmers' and farming companies' complaint; seed company could not assert arbitration without having filed a timely answer, as arbitration was a defense. Tri-State Delta Chems., Inc. v. Crow, 347 Ark. 255, 61 S.W.3d 172 (2001).

Court did not have jurisdiction to address the appeal of a partial summary judgment motion because there were issues remaining to be resolved in the underlying action and the trial court did not certify its order for review pursuant to this rule. Brasfield v. Murray, 96 Ark. App. 207, 239 S.W.3d 551 (2006).

Because the proper order from which to file an appeal in a partition action was the order confirming the sale of the property, and the circuit court had not entered a certification pursuant to subdivision (b)(1) of this rule, dismissal of an appeal from an order of partition was proper. Trafford v. Lilley, 2010 Ark. App. 158 (2010).

In a suit for unlawful detainer and writ of possession, appellant buyer's appeal was not addressed on the merits because neither the writ of possession or the damages order issued by the circuit court adjudicated the buyer's compulsory counterclaim, and the counterclaim remained unresolved; the circuit court did not certify either the writ or the damages order pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule. Daniels v. Davis, 2010 Ark. App. 260 (2010).

Dismissal of an appeal was appropriate because the appellate court lacked jurisdiction as a final order was not entered disposing of all the claims when the circuit court granted one party's motion to dismiss the complaint, but that party filed a counterclaim that the circuit court did not address. Jacobs v. Collison, 2015 Ark. App. 420 (2015).

Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(b) certificate appended to the order on appeal was wholly lacking in supportive facts to permit immediate appeal of an order for attorney's fees for discovery obstruction; the only specific findings of fact in the body of the order related to the factual underpinning of the reasonableness and amount of the attorney's fees ultimately awarded. Hankook Tire Co. v. Philpot, 2016 Ark. App. 386, 499 S.W.3d 250 (2016).

Appeal was dismissed for lack of finality where there was no Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(b) certificate, the parties' oral attempt to nonsuit various claims before the trial started was ineffective because the court had not entered a written order, and no final decisions had been entered on various counterclaims. Mary C. Petty Family Trust v. Louton, 2018 Ark. App. 265, 550 S.W.3d 12 (2018).

—Scope.

When the trial court permits an interlocutory appeal under subsection (b) of this rule, the issues raised must be reasonably related to the order or orders appealed from; an order under subsection (b) of this rule may not be used as a vehicle to bring up for review matters which are still pending before the trial court. Coleman's Serv. Ctr., Inc. v. Southern Inns Mgt., Inc., 44 Ark. App. 45, 866 S.W.2d 427 (1993).

Where the issues appellant raised on an interlocutory appeal under subsection (b) of this rule were totally unrelated to the interlocutory order that it was permitted to appeal, and all of the issues raised related to the primary cause of action, the suit for unlawful detainer under § 18-60-307, which was still pending in the circuit court, the issues raised were not within the scope of the appeal. Coleman's Serv. Ctr., Inc. v. Southern Inns Mgt., Inc., 44 Ark. App. 45, 866 S.W.2d 427 (1993).

—Specific Factual Findings.

Where the judgment granting the motion for interlocutory appeal does not include specific findings of any danger of hardship or injustice which could be alleviated by an immediate appeal, nor detail facts which establish that such a hardship or injustice is likely, the judgment is not in compliance with subsection (b) of this rule, and the appeal may be dismissed without prejudice to refile it at a later date. Davis v. Wausau Ins. Cos., 315 Ark. 330, 867 S.W.2d 444 (1993).

Where trial court order failed to set forth the requisite express determination, supported by specific factual findings, that there was no just reason to delay the entry of a final judgment, the supreme court would dismiss the appeal for noncompliance with subsection (b) of this rule. Stratton v. Arkansas State Hwy. Comm'n, 323 Ark. 740, 917 S.W.2d 538 (1996).

Interlocutory Decisions.

Appellant's notice of appeal from a trial court's final judgment was not ineffective to appeal the trial court's earlier dismissal of a funeral services company from his lawsuit as, until the entire case was disposed of, there was no final order to appeal pursuant to Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2(a)(11) and subsection (b) of this rule. An appeal from a final order also brought up for review any intermediate order involving the merits and necessarily affecting the judgment, pursuant to Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2(b) and 3(a). King v. French, 2011 Ark. App. 257, 383 S.W.3d 426 (2011).

Judgment.

An order of remand, from the Workers Compensation Commission to the administrative law judge, which neither awards nor denies workers' compensation, is a decision on an incidental matter that is not reviewable because of its lack of finality. Rogers v. Wood Mfg., 46 Ark. App. 43, 877 S.W.2d 94 (1994).

Civil order entered the day after a jury verdict which (1) contained a caption with the designation of the court, the names of the parties, and the case number, (2) stated that the cause came on for a jury trial and that the parties appeared with counsel, (3) noted that a jury was selected, evidence received, and a verdict rendered in the amount of $5,000 compensatory and $5,000 punitive, (4) was signed by the trial judge, file-marked by the clerk, and contained in a handwritten notation the date of the jury's verdict, contained the substantive aspects of a judgment and differed from an ordinary, typewritten judgment in form only. White v. Mattingly, 89 Ark. App. 55, 199 S.W.3d 724 (2004).

Multiple Claims or Parties.

Order appealed from in this case was a permanency-planning order; therefore, in order for it to be appealed, the circuit court must have complied with the requirements of Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(b). There was no Rule 54(b) certificate in the record, and accordingly, the court lacked jurisdiction. York v. Ark. Dept of Human Servs., 2021 Ark. App. 490 (2021).

Despite an oral pronouncement, because there was no written judgment regarding a default judgment entered in a foreclosure action, the case was dismissed without prejudice under subsection (b) of this rule; the record was void of any proof that one alleged interest holder was served, so it was impossible to tell if a default judgment was appropriate. Nat'l Home Ctrs., Inc. v. Coleman, 370 Ark. 119, 257 S.W.3d 862 (2007).

In a land use dispute, the trial court granted a directed verdict in favor of the owners of a bed and breakfast inn and dismissed the trustee's adverse possession claim against them; because the trial court did not resolve a third-party action and the trial court's certification under subsection (b) of this rule was deficient, the order was not final. The certification under subsection (b) merely stated the conclusion that there was no just reason for delay of the entry of a final judgment, based upon the finding that appellees were entitled to a directed verdict; this was not specific enough. Follett v. Fitzsimmons, 100 Ark. App. 347, 268 S.W.3d 902 (2007).

Estate's appeal was dismissed without prejudice for failure to comply with subsection (b) of this rule; the circuit court's order did not include specific findings of any danger of hardship or injustice that could be alleviated by an immediate appeal, nor did it detail facts that established such a hardship or injustice. Kowalski v. Rose Drugs of Dardanelle, Inc., 2009 Ark. 524, 357 S.W.3d 432 (2009).

Dismissal of the appeal from a finding in favor of a parent and his son in their action after the son was injured in an all-terrain vehicle accident was proper because there were parties who were orally dismissed from the case without entry of subsequent written orders of dismissal; thus, the supreme court lacked jurisdiction. No written orders of dismissal were entered of record, and because the oral dismissals were not effective until reduced to writing, the order currently appealed, which did not include a certificate under subsection (b) of this rule, was not a final order. Carr v. Nance, 2010 Ark. 25 (2010).

—Appealable Orders.

In absence of express direction for entry of judgment and express determination that there was no just reason for delay, order to dismiss one or more but fewer than all parties was not final and appealable. Clark v. Fitzgerald, 270 Ark. 240, 605 S.W.2d 1 (1980); Odom v. First Nat'l Bank, 5 Ark. App. 35, 631 S.W.2d 846 (1982); Vermeer Mfg. Co. v. Vandiver, 279 Ark. 218, 650 S.W.2d 244 (1983); Arkhola Sand & Gravel Co. v. Hutchinson, 289 Ark. 313, 711 S.W.2d 474 (1986); City of Marianna v. Arkansas Mun. League, 289 Ark. 473, 712 S.W.2d 305 (1986); Tackett v. Robbs, 293 Ark. 171, 735 S.W.2d 700 (1987); Bullock v. Shelter Mut. Ins. Co., 21 Ark. App. 160, 729 S.W.2d 436 (1987); Rusin v. Midwest Enamelers, Inc., 21 Ark. App. 226, 731 S.W.2d 226 (1987); Wylie v. Tull, 295 Ark. 481, 749 S.W.2d 325 (1988); St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. First Com. Bank, 304 Ark. 298, 801 S.W.2d 652 (1991); Budget Tire & Supply Co. v. First Nat'l Bank, 51 Ark. App. 188, 912 S.W.2d 938 (1995).

Where the trial court did not dismiss the parties from the court, nor discharge them from the action, nor conclude their rights to the subject matter in controversy, but did make findings of fact and conclusions of law which narrowed the issues raised by the amended complaint, and continued the case for a jury trial, such procedure was contemplated by Ark. R. Civ. P. 56(d) and was not the equivalent of a final determination of the case so as to constitute an appealable order. Heffner v. Harrod, 278 Ark. 188, 644 S.W.2d 579 (1983).

The granting of partial summary judgment on fewer than all claims or parties was not an appealable order. Tulio v. Arkansas Blue Cross & Blue Shield, Inc., 283 Ark. 278, 675 S.W.2d 369 (1984); City of Marianna v. Arkansas Mun. League, 289 Ark. 473, 712 S.W.2d 305 (1986); Howard v. Wood Mfg. Co., 291 Ark. 1, 722 S.W.2d 265 (1987); Pitts v. Sipes, 293 Ark. 340, 737 S.W.2d 647 (1987).

Where an order dismissed a complaint against one of two defendants and dismissed portion of the complaint, leaving remaining claims intact, the order disposed neither of all the parties nor all the claims, and inasmuch as the order did not comply with this rule, no final judgment had been entered and no appeal could be taken at that stage of the proceedings. 3-W Lumber Co. v. Housing Auth., 287 Ark. 70, 696

S.W.2d 725 (1985); King v. Little Rock Sch. Dist., 296 Ark. 552, 758 S.W.2d 708 (1988).

Ruling on applicability of statute was not on a separable branch of the litigation and was not final or appealable. Budd v. Davis, 289 Ark. 373, 711 S.W.2d 478 (1986).

Where trial court dismissed party from the suit as immune under Arkansas law, the order entered was not an appealable order, for subsection (b) of this rule governs, and its requirements were not met. Burnley v. Mutual of Omaha, 291 Ark. 185, 723 S.W.2d 363 (1987).

Appeals are not permitted in cases where defendants are dismissed and other defendants remain unless there is compliance with subsection (b) of this rule. Kilcrease v. Butler, 291 Ark. 275, 724 S.W.2d 169 (1987); Tackett v. Robbs, 293 Ark. 171, 735 S.W.2d 700 (1987).

Order granting joint motion to dismiss all but one defendant was not an appealable order. Rone v. Little, 293 Ark. 242, 737 S.W.2d 152 (1987).

Where there was no final judgment as to one or more but fewer than all of the claims or parties and, by the express terms of the order appealed from, the matters of appropriate damages, attorney fees, and costs were yet to be determined by the trial court, the case was not ripe for appeal. Bryan Farms, Inc. v. State, 295 Ark. 180, 747 S.W.2d 115 (1988).

Where trial court bifurcated the issues before it and reserved determination of the issue of damages for a later date, its decree was not a final judgment or decree under ARAP 2 and subsection (b) of this rule. Mueller v. Killam, 295 Ark. 270, 748 S.W.2d 141 (1988).

Although the appellants could have asked for certification under subsection (b) of this rule in order to appeal from the intermediate orders, they had no duty to do so as the underlying policy of subsection (b) is to avoid piecemeal appeals, not encourage them. McCrorry v. Johnson, 296 Ark. 231, 755 S.W.2d 566 (1988).

Where trial court granted a party's motion for summary judgment and dismissed it from the suit, but other defendants remained in the suit, according to subsection (b) of this rule, this order was not an appealable one. King v. Little Rock Sch. Dist., 296 Ark. 552, 758 S.W.2d 708 (1988).

In order to be final and appealable under ARAP 2 and subsection (b) of this rule, a trial court's order must dismiss the parties from the court, discharge them from the action, or conclude their rights to the subject matter in the controversy. Wilburn v. Keenan Cos., 297 Ark. 74, 759 S.W.2d 554 (1988).

Where interpleader was not filed as an original, independent action and the appellants injected themselves into an existing lawsuit, as a result, the order dismissing them left other claims and parties remaining in the case and was not a final order. Otter Creek Mall v. Quinn Cos., 297 Ark. 136, 759 S.W.2d 810 (1988).

The question of a final order is a jurisdictional requirement which the appellate court can raise on its own in order to avoid piecemeal litigation. Central Prod. Credit Assoc. v. Pearson, 26 Ark. App. 277, 764 S.W.2d 468 (1989).

Although there can be no precise standard for determining when the trial court should issue the direction that the judgment be considered final as to one of several claims or claimants when others are left for trial, such an order should issue only in exigent cases. Central Prod. Credit Assoc. v. Pearson, 26 Ark. App. 277, 764 S.W.2d 468 (1989).

Where order dismissing appellant neither reflected that any determination was made concerning just reason for delay nor expressly directed the entry of judgment, it was not an appealable order. Black v. Crawley, 304 Ark. 716, 804 S.W.2d 366 (1991).

An order which merely determines liability and defers a determination as to damages is not final. John Cheeseman Trucking, Inc. v. Dougan, 305 Ark. 49, 805 S.W.2d 69 (1991).

The final rulings on those issues common to the class were not rendered nonappealable when coupled with the ruling awarding attorney's fees in an unliquidated amount, and a requirement that the defendants submit a plan for providing notice to the class of their rights to a refund and establishing the procedures for such refunds, for such was a collateral ministerial order. Pledger v. Bosnick, 306 Ark. 45, 811 S.W.2d 286 (1991), cert. denied, 509 U.S. 921, 113 S. Ct. 3034, 125 L. Ed. 2d 721 (1993), overruled, Department of Fin. & Admin. v. Staton, 325 Ark. 341, 942 S.W.2d 804 (1996).

Where the order appealed from was styled as all six original plaintiffs against both original defendants, but entered judgment against one defendant in favor of only two plaintiffs, but not the instant plaintiff, the order appealed from did not conclude the instant plaintiffs' rights in the action as there was never any evidence of his claim or damages presented to the trial court. Quality Ford, Inc. v. Faust, 307 Ark. 371, 820 S.W.2d 61 (1991); Smith v. Leonard, 310 Ark. 782, 840 S.W.2d 167 (1992).

Where two of the three defendants were granted motions for judgments on the pleadings, plaintiffs' appeal was dismissed because the third separate defendant remained, thus the trial court did not grant a final judgment. Poston v. Fears, 309 Ark. 413, 828 S.W.2d 845 (1992).

It is not enough to dismiss some of the parties; the trial court's order must cover all the parties and all the claims in order to be an appealable order. South County, Inc. v. First W. Loan Co., 311 Ark. 501, 845 S.W.2d 3 (1993).

Appeal was dismissed where the summary judgment from which one party sought to appeal was not a final order as to all of the parties, and the trial court did not find a likelihood of hardship or injustice which would be alleviated by an immediate appeal. Pardon v. Southern Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. Co., 312 Ark. 198, 848 S.W.2d 412 (1993).

For an order to be final and appealable, it must dismiss the parties from the court, discharge them from the action, or conclude their rights to the subject matter in controversy. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 312 Ark. 429, 850 S.W.2d 4 (1993).

It is not enough to dismiss some of the parties; the order must cover all parties and all claims in order to be appealable. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 312 Ark. 429, 850 S.W.2d 4 (1993).

The burden is on the appellant to bring a record that shows that all claims in a matter have been brought to conclusion, and that the circuit court's judgment was final. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 312 Ark. 429, 850 S.W.2d 4 (1993).

An appeal from an order granting a motion to dismiss one claim of a multi-party, multi-claim lawsuit is permissible under subsection (b) of this rule when the trial court directs the entry of a final judgment as to one or more of the claims or parties and makes express findings that there is no just reason to delay the appeal. Wormald United States, Inc. v. Cedar Chem. Corp., 316 Ark. 434, 873 S.W.2d 152 (1994).

Where the chancellor failed to appropriately treat two counterclaims, as well as a cross-complaint, the appeal was dismissed as not final, pursuant to ARAP 2(a) and subsection (b) of this rule. Maroney v. City of Malvern, 317 Ark. 177, 876 S.W.2d 585 (1994).

An order which granted summary judgment to less than all the defendants, without making an express determination there was no just reason for delay and directing the entry of a final judgment, the order was not a final order according to subsection (b) of this rule. Cortese v. Atlantic Richfield, 317 Ark. 207, 876 S.W.2d 581 (1994).

The decree foreclosing a mortgage and a later decree confirming the foreclosure sale are both final and appealable orders. Scherz v. Mundaca Inv. Corp., 318 Ark. 595, 886 S.W.2d 631 (1994).

An order is not appealable when it fails to mention an intervenor's claim and contains no recitation of facts which would allow a piecemeal appeal under subsection (b) of this rule. Richardson v. Rodgers, 329 Ark. 402, 947 S.W.2d 778 (1997).

The court would dismiss an appeal of the grant of summary judgment in a wrongful death and survival action since the order did not apply to or determine claims against 2 John Doe defendants and, therefore, there was no final, appealable order. Shackelford v. Arkansas Power & Light Co., 334 Ark. 634, 976 S.W.2d 950 (1998).

The court would dismiss an appeal since there was no final order where the court below did not address one count of the complaint.

Hambay v. Williams, 335 Ark. 352, 980 S.W.2d 263 (1998).

An order for costs is not what is contemplated by subsection (b) of this rule and is not an appealable order. Warren v. Kelso, 339 Ark. 70, 3 S.W.3d 302 (1999).

There was no final appealable order in a paternity proceeding where the court dismissed the paternity action, but failed to address the putative father's cross-claims for fraud and outrage and also failed to issue a certification under this rule. Office of Child Support Enforcement v. Willis, 341 Ark. 378, 17 S.W.3d 85 (2000).

The order of dismissal entered by the trial court was a final appealable order because the dismissal of the widower's wrongful death claim for lack of standing concluded all claims against all parties and the amended complaint could not relate back to the original complaint for statute of limitations purposes because the original complaint was a nullity. McKibben v. Mullis, 79 Ark. App. 382, 90 S.W.3d 442 (2002).

Appeal was properly dismissed without prejudice as the trial court's order awarding attorney's fees was not an appealable order pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule; the order failed to resolve the bank's claim for attorney's fees and provided contingencies based upon action taken by the appellate court or by the families. Coleman v. Regions Bank, 364 Ark. 85, 216 S.W.3d 579 (2005).

In an insurance coverage dispute involving multiple defendants, the court lacked jurisdiction over the appeal of the order granting partial summary judgment in favor of five defendants as an order that did not adjudicate the liabilities of all parties was not a final, appealable order. Ver Weire v. CNA Fin. Corp., 92 Ark. App. 353, 213 S.W.3d 646 (2005).

Appellant's appeal from the circuit court's order granting appellee's motion for summary judgment was dismissed because the appellate court was barred from considering the appeal under subsection (b) of this rule due to the lack of a final order as claims against multiple parties might remain viable, and further, the addendum prepared by appellant appeared to be deficient because it did not contain a copy of the city ordinance that was mandated by § 14-90-801 to provide for the payment of an assessment of special improvement district taxes. Wilkins & Assocs. v. Vimy Ridge Mun. Water Improvement Dist. 139, 369 Ark. 50, 250 S.W.3d 246 (2007).

Estate administrator's appeal was dismissed without prejudice where there was not a final order as to John Does 1-10 nor a certification under subsection (b) of this rule; thus, the Arkansas Supreme Court did not have jurisdiction to hear the case. McKinney v. Bishop, 369 Ark. 191, 252 S.W.3d 123 (2007), superseded by statute as stated in Southern Dev. Corp. v.

Freightliner of New Hampshire, Inc., 2009 Ark. App. 286, 307 S.W.3d 597 (2009).

When a summary judgment failed to dispose of all defendants listed in a water district's complaint of foreclosure against property owners, the supreme court lacked jurisdiction over the appeal because there was no final judgment. Vimy Ridge Mun. Water Improvement Dist. No. 139 v. Ryles, 369 Ark. 217, 253 S.W.3d 436 (2007).

Court of appeals lacked jurisdiction to hear an appeal because plaintiff did not file a timely appeal from the trial court's final order under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(b); the order made it clear that all of the named and served defendants were dismissed, and pursuant to subdivision (b)(5) of this rule, the remaining defendants, who had not been served, were also dismissed. Global Econ. Res., Inc. v. Swaminathan, 2011 Ark. App. 349, 389 S.W.3d 631 (2011).

Court of appeals had jurisdiction to hear an appeal against some defendants even though a summary judgment order did not affect all of the defendants, which ordinarily would render the judgment not final and appealable, because in an amended certificate under subsection (b) of this rule, the trial court made the requisite findings of fact under Rule 54(b). Bussey v. Bearden, 2011 Ark. App. 353, 384 S.W.3d 41 (2011).

In a case involving the disposition of county property in which a taxpayers group appealed a county court's entry of summary judgment in favor of a county judge, there was no final appealable order under subsection (b) of this rule as the grant of summary judgment did not dispose of the complaint against all defendants. There was a remaining defendant that had been served, and the group failed to include a statement in its notice of appeal that it was abandoning any pending but unresolved claim, which would have operated as a dismissal with prejudice of its claim against that defendant. Searcy County Counsel for Ethical Gov't v. Hinchey, 2011 Ark. 533 (2011).

Lienholder's appeal of an order holding that its lien was second in priority to a mortgagee's lien was dismissed; because there was not a final order in the case, nor certification under subsection (b) of this rule, the reviewing court did not have jurisdiction to hear the case. Crafton, Tull, Sparks & Assocs. v. Ruskin Heights, LLC, 2012 Ark. 56 (2012).

Appellant's appeal from an order that granted summary judgment in favor of appellee on appellant's counterclaim was dismissed because appellee's complaint against appellant remained unresolved, and there was no proper certification pursuant to subdivision (b) of this rule that would render the summary judgment order final and appealable. Jackson v. Sewell Oil Co., 2013 Ark. App. 347 (2013).

In a homeowner's claim against defendant contractor, because the record contained no order dismissing the contractor's third-party claims against a grading subcontractor, the grading sub's cross-claims against a plumbing subcontractor, and the plumbing sub's cross-claims against a marble subcontractor, the judgment was not final and appealable under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2. J-McDaniel Constr. Co. v. Dale E. Peters Plumbing Ltd., 2013 Ark. 177 (2013).

Trial court's order was not final or appealable because although it purported to enter a directed verdict for all defendants on all claims, it did not attach a certificate under subdivision (b) of this rule to its order with respect to a council of co-owners, and it was unclear whether the council was served. Hall v. Bd. of Admin. of the Willow Cove Horizontal Prop. Regime, 2012 Ark. App. 677 (2012).

In multi-party litigation where the circuit court granted summary judgment for the buyers and ordered the specific performance of a contract for the purchase of real property, the order was not appealable because it did not decide a counterclaim or a cross-claim for damages. Ditch 56 Farms, LLC v. Foster, 2013 Ark. App. 505 (2013).

Appellate court lacked jurisdiction to decide an owner's appeal of an order vacating a street because, although a timely notice of appeal was filed, there was no order disposing of the buyers' cross-claim against the sellers and there was no certificate of appealability. Trs. of Pruitt Family Trust v. Gladden, 2014 Ark. App. 88 (2014).

In a case arising from a divorce in which the husband appealed a trial court's order addressing multiple concerning controversies, there were claims that had not been disposed of by the trial court, and no certificate under subdivision (b) of this rule was filed in the case. The trial court's order was not final and appealable, and the appellate court lacked jurisdiction over the appeal. Jerry v. Jerry, 2014 Ark. App. 63 (2014).

Appeal of a circuit court order dismissing the trucking company owners' claims against the operator of a separate trucking company was dismissed where the circuit court had not disposed of the operator's third-party complaint against the owners, and thus, the court had not issued a final order. Ives Transp., Inc. v. Ives, 2014 Ark. App. 202 (2014).

Contractor's cross-appeal of the dismissal of a due-process claim against state agencies was dismissed because, inter alia, the contractor's equal-protection claim remained alive, so the order was not final, and there was no attempt to certify the order as final for purposes of appeal. Ark. State Claims Comm'n v. Duit Constr. Co., 2014 Ark. 432, 445 S.W.3d 496 (2014), superseded, 2015 Ark. 462, 476 S.W.3d 791 (2015).

Father's appeal was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction because the circuit court's order was not final or appealable; even though the circuit court orally dismissed the grandchildren's counterclaims at the bench trial, it failed to address the ruling in the judgment, the written order controlled, and the appellate court had to assume that the circuit court did not dispose of the counterclaims. Derrick v. Derrick, 2015 Ark. App. 272 (2015).

Partition action was not a separate action under Ark. R. Civ. P. 42(b) where there were no separate docket numbers issued to distinguish severed actions, the trial court entered orders pertaining to all the parties, and the trial that resulted in the instant order was merely a separate trial that did not result in a final judgment in the absence of an Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(b) certificate. Green v. Stueve, 2016 Ark. App. 46 (2016).

Order setting aside two deeds based on undue influence and failure of consideration was not final for purposes of appeal where there were outstanding claims for partition, an injunction, and damages and the order did not prevent a judgment from which an appeal could be taken later. Green v. Stueve, 2016 Ark. App. 46 (2016).

Because the record did not reflect that the circuit court disposed of appellee's pending motion to compel and to show cause, and the circuit court's order did not include a Rule 54(b) certificate, the Court of Appeals lacked jurisdiction over the appeal; the fact that the circuit court declared that a statute was constitutional did not alter this result. Artie Green's Auto Repair & Body Shop, Inc. v. Johnson, 2017 Ark. App. 323, 523 S.W.3d 378 (2017).

Summary judgment order awarding judgment against a guarantor on the default of a promissory note was not a final, appealable order as it failed to dispose of the claims against the borrower, there was no accompanying Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(b) certificate, and Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(b)(5) was inapplicable as the record conclusively showed that both the borrower and guarantor were served via warning order. The borrower's bankruptcy did not affect the lack of finality. Jackson v. IberiaBank, 2020 Ark. App. 372 (2020).

—Certification.

A certification in the chancellor's order, pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule, must contain: express findings that there is no just reason to delay the appeal; a finding that a likelihood of hardship or injustice will occur unless there is an immediate appeal; and must set forth facts to support the trial court's conclusion. Guebert v. Williams, 319 Ark. 43, 889 S.W.2d 30 (1994).

Appellate court lacked jurisdiction over a mother's appeal of a summary judgment granted in favor of a merchant for the death of one of her children and the injury of another child who were struck by a vehicle while riding an amusement ride outside the merchant's store because the mother's claims against the manufacturer of the vehicle were unresolved and the trial court had refused to certify the judgment as final for the purpose of appeal. Chapman v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 351 Ark. 1, 89 S.W.3d 906 (2002).

Appellate court dismissed plaintiff home buyer's appeal of a summary judgment in favor of co-defendant real estate listing agent because the certificate executed by the trial court did not contain specific factual findings upon which the decision to enter a final judgment was based; the certificate did not conform to the requirements of this rule and was therefore ineffective to certify the appeal. Stouffer v. Kralicek Realty Co., 81 Ark. App. 89, 98 S.W.3d 475 (2003).

Ordered disclosure of an email under a FOIA request where there were issues as to when the email was deleted and redacted was not a final order and, absent certification of an appeal of the order under subdivision (b)(1) of this rule, appellate jurisdiction did not lie. Ark. Ins. Dep't v. Baker, 358 Ark. 289, 188 S.W.3d 897 (2004).

Where the circuit court issued a certification under subsection (b) of this rule on April 8, 2005, and the personal representative filed a notice of appeal on May 3, 2005, and an amended notice of appeal on May 6, 2005, both of which were filed within 30 days of the judgment as required under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(a), the Supreme Court clerk erred in refusing to lodge the record; it was not until the personal representative obtained the certification under this rule that she could appeal the summary judgment and, thus, the record was timely presented to the clerk on July 26, 2005. Lee v. Martindale, 363 Ark. 249, 213 S.W.3d 1 (2005).

Appeal of a judgment disposing of fewer than all claims in a consolidated case requires certification by subsection (b) of this rule. Grand River Enters. Six Nations, Ltd. v. Beebe, 372 Ark. 384, 277 S.W.3d 171 (2008).

Tobacco manufacturer's appeal was premature because (1) the matter was consolidated with another pending action; (2) subsection (b) of this rule was substantially identical to Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(b); (3) an appeal of a judgment disposing of fewer than all claims in a consolidated case required Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(b) certification; and (4) the issues were similar and intertwined, and the manufacturer argued in a lower court that the consolidated cases both concerned the alleged obligation of the manufacturer to make escrow payments to the State pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 26-57-260. Grand River Enters. Six Nations, Ltd. v. Beebe, 372 Ark. 384, 277 S.W.3d 171 (2008).

In its notice of cross-appeal, the company specifically said that a statement that it abandoned any pending but unresolved claim was not necessary because it was appealing from a judgment containing a multiple claims or parties certification, but as the certification was ineffective, compliance with the rule was necessary. Larue v. Ground Zero Constr., Inc., 2014 Ark. App. 93 (2014).

Record contained no disposition of appellees' third-party complaint, and as the order being appealed from failed to adjudicate all of the claims as to all of the parties, and there was no certification, there was no final, appealable order, and the appeal was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. Edwards v. Synergy Bus. Servs., LLC, 2014 Ark. App. 708 (2014).

While appellant's compulsory counterclaim was dismissed by the trial court, it was dismissed without prejudice, which gave him the opportunity to refile it, and the judgment on which appellant sought review did not adjudicate his counterclaim, and thus it was a dangling issue that had yet to be decided, such that the judgment was not a final, appealable order; his notice of appeal did not state that he abandoned any unresolved claims, and no certification for an immediate appeal was filed, and thus the appeal was dismissed without prejudice. Horne v. Henson, 2014 Ark. App. 687 (2014).

Rule 54(b) certificate was flawed by stating that summary judgment was granted in favor of the company, plus the order from which the appeal was brought merely set forth the language of the rule without stating any facts in support of the finding there was no just cause for delay; because the certificate did not conform to the rule and relevant case law, it was ineffective to certify the appeal, and the appeal was dismissed without prejudice. Dunn v. American Mortgage Assocs., 2015 Ark. App. 358 (2015).

Patient's appeal of an order of dismissal was dismissed for lack of a final order where the order did not contain factual findings explaining why hardship or injustice would have resulted if an immediate appeal was not permitted, but merely stated a conclusion that an injustice would have resulted, and thus, it did not satisfy the requirements of Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(b). Gray v. White River Health Sys., 2016 Ark. 73, 483 S.W.3d 293 (2016).

Circuit court's Rule 54(b) certification tracked the language of the rule, but did not contain any factual findings explaining why hardship or injustice would result if an immediate appeal was not permitted; without specific findings to support this conclusion, the order did not satisfy the requirements of this rule and the appeal was dismissed. Elmore v. Gemini Capital Grp., LLC, 2017 Ark. App. 360, 523 S.W.3d 393 (2017).

Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(b) certification was insufficient to vest appellate jurisdiction where the sparse factual findings did not discuss the cross-claims that acted as a bar to jurisdiction, and no factual findings were made to demonstrate why there was no just reason to delay the action because of the pending cross-claims. Park Plaza Mall CMBS, LLC v. Powell, 2017 Ark. App. 453, 529 S.W.3d 637 (2017), op. withdrawn, sub. op., 2018 Ark. App. 48 (2018).

Circuit court's denial of defendants' motion for summary judgment on plaintiff administrator's outrage claim was not properly before the Supreme Court on defendants' cross-appeal despite the Rule 54(b) certification because (1) the circuit court did not make any final judgment with respect to the outrage claim but determined only that material facts remained in dispute, (2) the circuit court's ruling would not prevent the presentation of any defense at trial, and (3) the Supreme Court's consideration of the denied motion for summary judgment was not necessary to sustain the part of the motion that was granted. Cannady v. St. Vincent Infirmary Med. Ctr., 2018 Ark. 35, 537 S.W.3d 259 (2018).

Circuit court's Rule 54(b) certificate did not include specific factual findings to support the determination that there was no just reason for delay or any finding that there was a likelihood of hardship or injustice that would be alleviated by an immediate appeal; the failure to include such findings meant that the certificate did not satisfy the requirements of the rule, and the court lacked jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Nicholas v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2018 Ark. App. 471, 561 S.W.3d 752 (2018).

Appeal of an order granting summary judgment to an insurer was dismissed for lack of a final order where the circuit court did not recite facts that established exceptional circumstances or why a compelling, discernible hardship would have been alleviated by an appeal, the court gave no reason why the lender's dangling cross-claim against the insureds should not have precluded an interlocutory appeal, there was no class-action related order in the record nor any argument from any party on why that hole in the record did or did not affect the Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(b) request, and the certificate did not give any factual reasons why the appeal should have proceeded before the lender's cross-claim against the insureds had been adjudicated by the circuit court. Betts v. USAA Gen. Indem. Co., 2019 Ark. App. 250, 576 S.W.3d 478 (2019).

Appellate court lacked jurisdiction to review an appeal from an attorney's former client and the appeal was dismissed with prejudice because it was untimely where the notice of appeal was not filed within 30 days of the order that contained a Rule 54 certificate; whether a notice of appeal designates a final or nonfinal order is of secondary importance to the notice of appeal's timing. Pockrus v. Morris, 2020 Ark. App. 364, 608 S.W.3d 159 (2020).

—Determination and Direction.

Where the trial judge never considered an intervenor's claim when finding some likelihood of hardship or injustice existed which would be alleviated by an immediate appeal, its efforts to present a record and order with specific facts to support its permitting an appeal under subsection (b) of this rule fell short because the order altogether omitted any reference to or consideration of the intervenor's claim. South County, Inc. v. First W. Loan Co., 311 Ark. 501, 845 S.W.2d 3 (1993).

When an appropriate certification is made by the trial court, the judgment is final for purposes of appeal. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 312 Ark. 429, 850 S.W.2d 4 (1993).

A decree that orders a judicial sale of property and places the court's directive into execution is a final order and appealable under ARAP 2(a)(1); when there is such an order, a certification under subsection (b) of this rule is not necessary. Alberty v. Wideman, 312 Ark. 434, 850 S.W.2d 314 (1993).

The court will dismiss an appeal where not all of the claims against all of the parties have been resolved, and there has been no certification pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule that there is no need for delay in deciding the case. Barr v. Richardson, 314 Ark. 294, 862 S.W.2d 253 (1993).

Circuit court's certificate under subdivision (b) of this rule failed to comply with the rule's requirement that it include specific findings of hardship that could be alleviated by an immediate appeal and set out the factual underpinnings of such hardship; it merely stated that its finding that sales tax applied to the provision of medical records rendered other claims moot. Holbrook v. Healthport, Inc., 2013 Ark. 87 (2013).

Certification under subdivision (b) of this rule was improper in an insurance dispute because it was premised on the finding that a trial court ruled on both the issues of exclusive remedy and preemption; because the trial court only ruled on the exclusive remedy issue, this would have not avoided piecemeal appeals. Pyramid Life Ins. Co. v. Parsons, 2013 Ark. 125 (2013).

—In General.

Before entering final judgment on one or more but fewer than all claims or parties, court must make express determination that there is danger of hardship or injustice which immediate appeal would alleviate. Sherman v. G & H Transp., Inc., 287 Ark. 25, 695 S.W.2d 832 (1985); Murry v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 291 Ark. 445, 725 S.W.2d 571 (1987); Ark-hola Sand & Gravel Co. v. Hutchinson, 291 Ark. 570, 726 S.W.2d 674 (1987); Pitts v. Sipes, 293 Ark. 340, 737 S.W.2d 647 (1987); First Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Drake, 298 Ark. 287, 766 S.W.2d 617 (1989); Bolts v. Deltic Farm & Timber Co., 298 Ark. 464, 768 S.W.2d 532 (1989); Franklin v. Osca, Inc., 308 Ark. 409, 825

S.W.2d 812 (1992); Wallner v. McDonald, 308 Ark. 590, 825 S.W.2d 265 (1992).

The fundamental policy of subsection (b) of this rule is to avoid piecemeal appeals. Sherman v. G & H Transp., Inc., 287 Ark. 25, 695 S.W.2d 832 (1985); Murry v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 291 Ark. 445, 725 S.W.2d 571 (1987); Pitts v. Sipes, 293 Ark. 340, 737 S.W.2d 647 (1987).

The discretionary power vested in the trial court to grant an immediate appeal under subsection (b) of this rule is to be exercised infrequently, and only in harsh cases. Sherman v. G & H Transp., Inc., 287 Ark. 25, 695 S.W.2d 832 (1985); Murry v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 291 Ark. 445, 725 S.W.2d 571 (1987); Pitts v. Sipes, 293 Ark. 340, 737 S.W.2d 647 (1987).

Compliance with subsection (b) of this rule is a jurisdictional requirement which the court is obligated to raise even though the parties do not. Tackett v. Robbs, 293 Ark. 171, 735 S.W.2d 700 (1987); St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. First Com. Bank, 304 Ark. 298, 801 S.W.2d 652 (1991); Stratton v. Arkansas State Hwy. Comm'n, 323 Ark. 740, 917 S.W.2d 538 (1996).

Where the order appealed from does not comply with the requirements of this rule, it is not an appealable one, and the court is obliged to raise the point because it is a jurisdictional requirement. Bradley v. French, 297 Ark. 567, 764 S.W.2d 605 (1989).

The failure to comply with subsection (b) of this rule presents a jurisdictional issue in an appellate court which it will raise on its own and, absent compliance, will dismiss the appeal for lack of a final order. Middleton v. Stilwell, 301 Ark. 110, 782 S.W.2d 44 (1990); Parks v. Hillhaven Nursing Home, 309 Ark. 106, 827 S.W.2d 148 (1992).

Subsection (b) of this rule does not provide a mechanism for appeal from bifurcated trials of liability/damages issues. John Cheeseman Trucking, Inc. v. Dougan, 305 Ark. 49, 805 S.W.2d 69 (1991).

Where the order entered by the trial court merely recited the language of subsection (b) of this rule without stating any facts to support a conclusion of possible danger of hardship or injustice which would be alleviated by an immediate appeal of the punitive damages issue, the order was not a final order pursuant to subsection (b). Austin v. First Nat'l Bank, 305 Ark. 456, 808 S.W.2d 773 (1991).

Merely tracking the language of subsection (b) of this rule will not suffice; the record must show facts to support the conclusion that there is likelihood of hardship or injustice which would be alleviated by an immediate appeal rather than at the conclusion of the case. Fisher v. Citizens Bank, 307 Ark. 258, 819 S.W.2d 8 (1991).

This rule requires in a case where there are multiple parties that a single judgment embody the ruling of the court with respect to all parties, unless the court expressly directs the entry of a partial judgment. Fitzhugh v. Committee on Professional Conduct, 308 Ark. 313, 823 S.W.2d 896 (1992).

A judgment which adjudicates fewer than all of the claims of all of the parties does not terminate the action. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 312 Ark. 429, 850 S.W.2d 4 (1993).

A party who has several claims against multiple parties may take a voluntary nonsuit against the claims of one party and appeal an adverse judgment as to the remaining parties' claims. Driggers v. Locke, 323 Ark. 63, 913 S.W.2d 269 (1996).

Appeal dismissed for failure to comply with subsection (b) of this rule. Kinthead v. Spillers, 327 Ark. 552, 940 S.W.2d 437 (1997); Bank of Ark. v. First Union Nat'l Bank, 342 Ark. 705, 30 S.W.3d 110 (2000).

Where the trial court entered a final order disposing of each and every claim against each and every party to the litigation, subsection (b) of this rule did not require that the appeal be dismissed; any claims that were asserted against the two identified John Does were considered abandoned, and no issues remained to be decided. D'Arbonne Constr. Co. v. Foster, 348 Ark. 375, 72 S.W.3d 862 (2002).

Arkansas law prohibits a plaintiff from circumventing this rule by non-suiting certain claims. Mountain Pure, LLC v. Turner Holdings, LLC, 439 F.3d 920 (8th Cir. 2006).

In an action by the parents of a deceased minor for wrongful death and survival, where the circuit court dismissed the wrongful death claim as time-barred but had not disposed of the survival action, the Supreme Court of Arkansas had no jurisdiction to hear an appeal as there was no certification from the circuit court. Myers v. McAdams, 366 Ark. 435, 236 S.W.3d 504 (2006).

Claim for conversion against mortgagors, a husband and wife, filed by the purchaser of property that was sold at a foreclosure sale was still pending against wife where the trial court only entered judgment against husband; hence, the judgment was not appealable as it did not dispose of all pending claims and the trial court did not comply with this rule. Seay v. C.A.R. Transp. Brokerage Co., 366 Ark. 527, 237 S.W.3d 48 (2006).

Failure to comply with this rule and to adjudicate all claims against all parties is jurisdictional and renders the matter not final for purposes of appeal. Seay v. C.A.R. Transp. Brokerage Co., 366 Ark. 527, 237 S.W.3d 48 (2006).

In a wrongful-death case, an appeal was dismissed because there was no final order under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2(a)(1) and subsection (b) of this rule where there was no disposition regarding several John Doe parties named in the case. Downing ex rel. Estate of Harris v.

Lawrence Hall Nursing Ctr., 368 Ark. 51, 243 S.W.3d 263 (2006).

Pursuant to Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2(a)(1), an appeal could be taken only from a final judgment or decree entered by the trial court, pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule, due to the lack of a final order; the insurer's appeal was dismissed as the trial court never ruled upon appellees' counterclaim. S. Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. Co. v. Easter, 369 Ark. 101, 251 S.W.3d 251 (2007).

Appellate court lacked subject-matter jurisdiction in a candidate's appeal because the trial court's order did not comply with subsection (b) of this rule; the order was not final because the claims against the governor were dismissed, and the claims against the mayor were transferred. Further, the trial court's certificate did not comply with subsection (b)'s requirement as it did not state the specific factual findings to support a determination that there was no just reason for delay. Zolliecoffer v. Beebe, 2010 Ark. 329 (2010).

Supreme court dismissed for lack of jurisdiction the appeal of a limited liability company and a debtor from a judgment entered in favor of a bank on its petition for foreclosure because there was no final appealable order since there was a counterclaim that had not been resolved; the LLC and debtor were granted a voluntary nonsuit as to two of their three counter claims, negligence and interference with business expectancies, and the voluntary nonsuit did not operate to make the circuit court's order final and appealable because the counterclaims could be refiled. Grand Valley Ridge, LLC v. Metro. Nat'l Bank, 2010 Ark. 402 (2010).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in certifying the judgment as final under subsection (b) of this rule, as it found that this would avoid unreasonable delay of the final resolution of home sellers' claims against the prospective buyer, and the record supported its conclusions that all of the parties' claims had been resolved and that the outcome of a subsequent trial between the buyer and his real estate agent and brokerage would have no effect on the sellers' judgment against the buyer. Carter v. Cline, 2011 Ark. 474, 385 S.W.3d 745 (2011).

Where the trial court entered judgment dismissing one of appellant's claims, as its letter opinion purporting to dismiss the remainder of the claims was not incorporated into the judgment, there was no final order under subsection (b) of this rule; therefore, the appellate court lacked jurisdiction over his appeal pursuant to Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2(a)(1). Wilkinson v. Smith, 2012 Ark. App. 604 (2012).

Because a trial court's order was unclear as to whether some of the plaintiffs' claims against a crop duster for pesticide drift had been nonsuited and therefore survived, remand was required for clarification of the order so that the appellate court could determine whether the order appealed from was a final order. The problem could have been avoided had the plaintiffs included the statement required by Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 3(e)(vi), that all claims but the pending claim were abandoned. Wilson v. Greg Williams Farm, Inc., 2013 Ark. App. 248 (2013).

Appellate court lacked jurisdiction to hear an appeal because an order being challenged was not final; a home buyer's claim for negligence was never adjudicated, and a statement in the construction company owners' notices of appeal could not have abandoned the buyer's negligence claim. Murl Caldwell & Son, Inc. v. Proctor, 2015 Ark. App. 325 (2015).

Appellate court lacked jurisdiction over an appeal in a foreclosure case where timely notices of appeal were filed from July 2013 orders containing a certificate of appeal, but the record on appeal was not filed; even if the certificate was invalid, a determination of appealability was secondary to whether a timely notice of appeal and record were filed. Orders not mentioned in the notice of appeal were not properly before the appellate court. Fire Systems Technology, Inc. v. First Community Bank, 2015 Ark. App. 334, 464 S.W.3d 125 (2015).

—Jurisdiction.

The failure to comply with subsection (b) of this rule presents a jurisdictional issue which the court may raise on its own, and absent compliance, can dismiss the appeal for lack of a final order. Barr v. Richardson, 314 Ark. 294, 862 S.W.2d 253 (1993).

Although the trial court erred in permitting the appellant to take an interlocutory appeal under subsection (b) of this rule, the appellate court was not without jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Coleman's Serv. Ctr., Inc. v. Southern Inns Mgt., Inc., 44 Ark. App. 45, 866 S.W.2d 427 (1993).

The failure to comply with subsection (b) of this rule presents a jurisdictional issue which the Supreme Court will raise on its own and, absent compliance with the rule, the court will dismiss the appeal for lack of a final order. Ashmore v. Paccar, Inc., 315 Ark. 490, 868 S.W.2d 80 (1994).

Supreme Court was unable to reach the merits of appellant's claim because the trial court did not, on record, dispose of an intervenor's claim as is necessary pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule. Martin v. National Bank of Commerce, 316 Ark. 83, 870 S.W.2d 738 (1994).

The finality of an order is a jurisdictional requirement the Supreme Court is obliged to raise even when the parties do not. Martin v. National Bank of Commerce, 316 Ark. 83, 870 S.W.2d 738 (1994).

The failure to comply with subsection (b) of this rule by the absence of an order adjudicating the rights of all parties is a jurisdictional issue that the appellate court is obligated to raise on its own. Maroney v. City of Malvern, 317 Ark. 177, 876 S.W.2d 585 (1994).

It is appellant's burden to produce a record on appeal showing the jurisdictional requirements of subsection (b) of this rule have been met. Cortese v. Atlantic Richfield, 317 Ark. 207, 876 S.W.2d 581 (1994).

The failure to comply with subsection (b) of this rule presents a jurisdictional issue which the appellate court will raise on its own, and absent compliance with the rule, the appeal may be dismissed for lack of a final order. State Office of Child Support Enforcement v. Morrison, 318 Ark. 563, 885 S.W.2d 900 (1994).

Trial court's order of dismissal of one defendant did not constitute a final judgment where claims against another defendant remained pending; thus, the appellate court lacked jurisdiction as the order was not certified as a final judgment that would justify an immediate appeal pursuant to subdivisions (b)(1) and (b)(2) of this rule. Jackson v. Delis, 76 Ark. App. 436, 67 S.W.3d 596 (2002).

Appellate court had jurisdiction to hear the denial of relief from a default judgment entered in a medical malpractice case where the patient's motion to strike an answer was granted; the specific provisions of Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2(a)(4) controlled over Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2(a)(1) and subsection (b) of this rule. Fields v. Byrd, 96 Ark. App. 174, 239 S.W.3d 543 (2006).

Appellate court lacked jurisdiction over a defamation plaintiffs appeal from a partial judgment that was certified for immediate review under this rule, because the certification order was defective for failing to state facts showing why there was no just reason for delay, and the case had terminated in the court below. Cruse v. 451 Press, LLC, 2010 Ark. App. 115 (2010).

In an action for unlawful detainer, the order granting the guarantors' motions for summary judgment was lacking in finality because neither the cross-claim nor the third-party complaint had been adjudicated or dismissed. Therefore, the Court of Appeals of Arkansas lacked jurisdiction to hear the appeal under subdivision (b)(1) of this rule. Lamco Ltd. P'ship II v. Pasta Concepts, Inc., 2012 Ark. App. 145 (2012).

Supreme Court of Arkansas had no jurisdiction to consider an appeal under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2 because a circuit court's order was not final as the record reflected neither an adjudication of all claims, nor a proper certification pursuant to this rule. Smith v. Wright, 2014 Ark. 222 (2014).

—No Just Reason for Delay.

In order to determine that there is no just reason for delay, the trial court must find that a likelihood of hardship or injustice will occur unless there is an immediate appeal. Wormald

United States, Inc. v. Cedar Chem. Corp., 316 Ark. 434, 873 S.W.2d 152 (1994).

Certification in this case was defective because it failed to state any factual reason to support the conclusion that there was no just cause to delay entry of a final judgment, and the facts recited in the certification did nothing to show that undue hardship would likely result if an interlocutory appeal were not allowed, which was what the rule required, and thus the court had to dismiss the appeal for lack of finality. Larue v. Ground Zero Constr., Inc., 2014 Ark. App. 93 (2014).

—Specific Factual Findings.

That factual underpinnings supporting a certification under subsection (b) of this rule may exist in the record is not enough; they must be set out in the trial court's order. Davis v. Wausau Ins. Cos., 315 Ark. 330, 867 S.W.2d 444 (1993).

In order to determine that there is no just reason for delay, the trial court must find that a likelihood of hardship or injustice will occur unless there is an immediate appeal and must set forth facts to support its conclusion. Davis v. Wausau Ins. Cos., 315 Ark. 330, 867 S.W.2d 444 (1993).

An appeal from an order granting a motion to dismiss to one party to a lawsuit, which involves multiple parties and multiple claims, is permissible under subsection (b) of this rule when the trial court directs the entry of a final judgment as to one or more of the claims or parties and makes express findings that there is no just reason to delay the appeal. Davis v. Wausau Ins. Cos., 315 Ark. 330, 867 S.W.2d 444 (1993).

Merely tracking the language of subsection (b) of this rule will not suffice; the record must show facts to support the conclusion that there is likelihood of hardship or injustice which would be alleviated by an immediate appeal rather than at the conclusion of the case. Coleman's Serv. Ctr., Inc. v. Southern Inns Mgt., Inc., 44 Ark. App. 45, 866 S.W.2d 427 (1993).

Trial judge's ruling that an appeal should be allowed to prevent a "possible danger of hardship or injustice," was not a sufficient reason for an intermediate appeal. Reeves v. Hinkle, 321 Ark. 28, 899 S.W.2d 841 (1995).

Summary judgment set aside where trial court's judgment was based on attorney's innocent but erroneous assertion that opposing party had failed to comply with an earlier order that he file a response to the motion for summary judgment. Cordell v. Nadeau, 321 Ark. 300, 900 S.W.2d 556 (1995).

Under subsection (b) of this rule, the trial court must factually set forth reasons in the final judgment, order, or the record, which can then be abstracted, explaining why a hardship or injustice would result if an appeal is not permitted. Howard v. Dallas Morning News, Inc., 324 Ark. 91, 918 S.W.2d 178 (1996).

Where the trial court order did not merely track the language of this rule but also reflected the factual underpinnings supporting certification, it was sufficient to justify the entry of a final, appealable order. Howard v. Dallas Morning News, Inc., 324 Ark. 91, 918 S.W.2d 178 (1996).

Multiple Orders.

Where in each of the orders entered by the court prior to the decree of divorce, the chancellor specifically held in abeyance certain items which were to be decided later, and therefore, it was obvious the court never intended to terminate the case until the final decree was entered, all of the orders would be reviewed and treated as timely appealed. Wilson v. Wilson, 270 Ark. 485, 606 S.W.2d 56 (1980).

Prevailing Party.

A prevailing party cannot appeal. Walker v. Kazi, 316 Ark. 616, 875 S.W.2d 47 (1994).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in awarding attorney fees and costs to a property owners association in its action against an owner for violation of restrictive covenants; the case did not present a scenario of the trial court abdicating its responsibility and mechanically awarding fees to the prevailing party. Lineberry v. Riley Farms Prop. Owners Ass'n, 95 Ark. App. 286, 236 S.W.3d 534 (2006).

When a corporation sought a retainage from a contractor, but the contractor refused to return the money because of alleged deficiencies in the corporation's work, the circuit court properly awarded attorney's fees to the contractor because the contractor was the prevailing party, as it had received three-fourths of the money at issue. CJ Bldg. Corp. v. TRAC-10, 368 Ark. 654, 249 S.W.3d 793 (2007).

Purpose.

This rule is not intended to create an avenue for two stages of review simply by citing subsection (b) of this rule; it is intended to permit review before the entire case is concluded, but only in those exceptional situations where a compelling, discernible hardship will be alleviated by an appeal at an intermediate stage. Coleman's Serv. Ctr., Inc. v. Southern Inns Mgt., Inc., 44 Ark. App. 45, 866 S.W.2d 427 (1993).

The purpose of subsection (b) of this rule is to prevent piecemeal appeals while portions of the litigation remain unresolved. Maroney v. City of Malvern, 317 Ark. 177, 876 S.W.2d 585 (1994).

The fundamental policy of subsection (b) of this rule is to avoid piecemeal appeals; absent the requisite facts, findings, and certification by the trial court, the supreme court will not engage in a review of appellant's claims against some defendants when additional review of appellant's claims against the remaining defendants could possibly be required in the future. Cortese v. Atlantic Richfield, 317 Ark. 207, 876 S.W.2d 581 (1994).

The fundamental policy behind subsection (b) of this rule is to avoid piecemeal appeals. Cortese v. Atlantic Richfield, 320 Ark. 639, 898 S.W.2d 467 (1995).

Supreme Court Opinion.

The plaintiff's contention that when the Supreme Court reversed and remanded her case the opinion was tantamount to a judgment in her favor was in error. A judgment is the final determination of the rights of the parties in an action. Tolley v. Wilson, 212 Ark. 163, 205 S.W.2d 177 (1947).

Time Limitations.

Trial court did not err in denying terminated county employee's motion for an award of attorney's fees because her motion seeking attorney's fees was not timely filed; the same result held true even if the time was measured from the denial of the county's motion for JNOV because the fee motion was filed 21 days after the order denying the motion was entered. Crawford County v. Jones, 365 Ark. 585, 232 S.W.3d 433 (2006).

On appeal from an award of attorney fees in a partition action, § 18-60-419(a)(1) specifically directed the circuit court to award a reasonable attorney fee, to be taxed as costs, to the attorney who brought the partition suit. The motion for fees was filed prior to the entry of the final judgment, and the award of attorney fees was made contemporaneously with the final, appealable judgment; accordingly, the policy behind the time limit in this rule was preserved. Vaughn v. Bates, 2010 Ark. App. 98, 379 S.W.3d 1 (2010).

In a divorce case, a former wife was not entitled to attorney's fees because her motion was not filed within 14 days of the entry of judgment. Zimmerman v. Pope, 2015 Ark. App. 499, 471 S.W.3d 646 (2015).

Plaintiff's motion for attorney's fees was untimely because appellant failed to either orally or in writing request attorney's fees within the necessary time period. Worsham v. Day, 2019 Ark. 160, 574 S.W.3d 150 (2019).

Plaintiff's motion for attorney's fees was untimely because it was filed well past the 14-day deadline; the final judgment entered on the jury verdicts triggered the 14-day period and not the appellate mandate that declared the new trial order a nullity. Worsham v. Day, 2019 Ark. 160, 574 S.W.3d 150 (2019).

Wife's petition for attorney's fees was timely under this rule as to the attorney's fees associated with the trial court's order of nonsuit because the petition was filed long before the deadline. A petition for attorney's fees filed before the judgment is not untimely. John v. Bolinder, 2019 Ark. App. 96, 572 S.W.3d 418 (2019).

Wife's petition for attorney's fees was untimely under this rule as to the other attorney's fees the wife requested relating to prior proceedings in the case that had been previously disposed of by the trial court because the petition was not filed within 14 days of those prior orders. John v. Bolinder, 2019 Ark. App. 96, 572 S.W.3d 418 (2019).

Rule 55. Default.

(a) When Entitled. When a party against whom a judgment for affirmative relief is sought has failed to plead or otherwise defend as provided by these rules, judgment by default may be entered by the court.

(b) Manner of Entering Judgment. The party entitled to a judgment by default shall apply to the court therefor, but no judgment by default shall be entered against an infant or incompetent person. If the party against whom judgment by default is sought has appeared in the action, he (or if appearing by representative, his representative) shall be served with written notice of the application for judgment at least 3 days prior to the hearing on such application. If, in order to enable the court to enter judgment or to carry it into effect, it is necessary to take an account or to determine the amount of damages or to establish the truth of any averment by evidence or to make an investigation of any other matter, the court may conduct such hearings as it deems necessary and proper and may direct a trial by jury.

(c) Setting Aside Default Judgments. The court may, upon motion, set aside a default judgment previously entered for the following reasons: (1) mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect; (2) the judgment is void; (3) fraud (whether heretofore denominated intrinsic or extrinsic), misrepresentation, or other misconduct of an adverse party; or (4) any other reason justifying relief from the operation of the judgment. The party seeking to have the judgment set aside must demonstrate a meritorious defense to the action; however, if the judgment is void, no other defense to the action need be shown.

(d) Plaintiffs, Counterclaimants, Cross-claimants. The provisions of this rule apply whether the party entitled to the judgment by default is a plaintiff, a third-party plaintiff, or party who has pleaded a cross-claim or counterclaim. In all cases a judgment by default is subject to the limitations of Rule 54(c).

(e) When Presented. A motion for default judgment may be presented to the court in vacation and at any place in the district or circuit.

(f) Remand from Federal Court. No judgment by default shall be entered against a party in an action removed to federal court and subsequently remanded if that party filed an answer or a motion permitted by Rule 12 in the federal court during removal.

HISTORY: Amended December 10, 1990, effective February 1, 1991; amended January 28, 1999; amended October 2, 2003; amended January 22, 2004.

Reporter's Notes (as modified by the Court) to Rule 55:

1. Rule 55 varies substantially from FRCP 55 and generally follows prior Arkansas law. This rule permits only the court to enter default judgment as opposed to the federal practice which permits the clerk to enter judgment in certain instances. Since court clerks in Arkansas normally provide only ministerial services, the judicial function of entering default judgments is left to the trial court itself.

2. Section (b) follows prior Arkansas law regarding the entry of a judgment against an infant or incompetent. No judgment by default may be entered against infants or incompetents under this rule whereas a default judgment may be entered under the Federal Rule where a representative has appeared. Also, where any defendant has appeared in an action, three days notice must be given to him on an application for default judgment.

3. Section (b) also follows superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 29-402 (Repl. 1962) which permits the trial court to take evidence or refer to a jury the question of damages or any other issue which the court, in its discretion, determined should be so submitted.

4. Section (c) retains the provision of superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 29-401 (Repl. 1962), which permits a default judgment to be set aside for excusable neglect, unavoidable casualty, or other just cause.

5. Section (e) permits a party to apply for a default judgment at any time regardless of whether the court is in vacation and also permits an applicant to move for a default judgment within or without the county where the action is pending so long as the place is inside the overall circuit or chancery district wherein the action is pending.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1990 Amendment:

Rule 55 has been substantially amended to liberalize Arkansas practice regarding default judgments. The revised rule, which reflects a clear preference for deciding cases on the merits rather than on technicalities, is intended to avoid the harsh results that often flowed from the previous version. Because the rule represents a significant break from prior practice, many cases decided under the old rule and the statute from which it was derived will no longer be of precedential value.

Under revised Rule 55(a), the entry of a default judgment is discretionary rather than mandatory. In deciding whether to enter a default judgment, the court should take into account the factors utilized by the federal courts, including: whether the default is largely technical and the defendant is now ready to defend; whether the plaintiff has been prejudiced by the defendant's delay in responding; and whether the court would later set aside the default judgment under Rule 55(c).

The standard in amended Rule 55(c) for setting aside a default is taken from Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 60(b), which is made applicable in the default judgment context by Federal Rule 55(c), and should be interpreted in accordance with federal case law. Under former Rule 55(c), a default judgment could be set aside only upon a showing of "excusable neglect, unavoidable casualty, or other just cause." The amended rule, however, adopts a more liberal standard. Under subdivision (c)(1), for example, a default judgment may be set aside on the basis of "mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect." In addition, subdivision (c)(4) permits the court to set aside a default judgment "for any other reason justifying relief from the operation of the judgment." The amended rule also makes plain that a defendant seeking to set aside a default judgment must show a meritorious defense, unless the judgment is void. This requirement is consistent with federal practice, see C. Wright & A. Miller, supra § 2697, and with Arkansas case law. E.g., Wilburn v. Keenan Companies, Inc., 298 Ark. 461, 768 S.W.2d 531 (1989). It should also be noted that Rule 55(c) is the exclusive basis for setting aside a default judgment. As amended in 1990, Rule 60 does not apply to default judgments.

New subdivision (f) provides a "grace period" after a case that has been removed to federal court is remanded to the state court. During this period, a default judgment cannot be entered and the defendants "may move or plead as they might have done had the case not been removed."

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1999 Amendment:

Subdivision (a) has been amended by replacing the word "appear" with the word "plead," the terminology used in the corresponding federal rule. This revision, while minor, is intended to eliminate potential confusion stemming from the fact that appearance is also relevant under subdivision (b), which requires notice of a hearing on a motion for default judgment if the party against whom the judgment is sought "has appeared in the action . . ."

In addition, use of the word "plead" in subdivision (a) indicates that the phrase "otherwise appear" has independent meaning. Arkansas cases suggest that this phrase means the same thing as an appearance, in which case it would be a redundancy. E.g., Tapp v. Fowler, 291 Ark. 309, 724 S.W.2d 176 (1987) (defendant appeared or otherwise defended within meaning of Rule 55(a) by filing motion to dismiss and motion for summary judgment). Under the federal rule, the phrase "otherwise defend" refers to motions, which by definition are not pleadings. E.g., Bass v. Hoagland, 172 F.2d 205 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 338 U.S. 816 (1949). See also Ark. R. Civ. P. 7(a) & (b) (distinguishing pleadings and motions). Amended subdivision (a) reflects the dichotomy recognized by the federal courts.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2003 Amendment:

Subdivision (c)(3) of the rule has been amended by inserting a parenthetical phrase, "whether heretofore denominated intrinsic or extrinsic," after the word "fraud." Although the prior version of the rule was not by its terms limited to extrinsic fraud, the Court of Appeals has construed it in that fashion. Graves v. Steverson, 98 S.W.3d 848 (Ark. App. 2003). The amendment has the effect of overturning Graves and makes subdivision (c)(3) consistent with Rule 60(c)(4).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2004 Amendment:

Subdivision (f) has been rewritten to modify and clarify the practice when a case is removed to federal court and then remanded. A corresponding change has been made in Rule 12(a). These amendments are based on a Texas rule, see Tex. R. Civ. P. 237a, and a similar approach has been taken in other states as well.

Under the original version of subdivision (f), a defendant had a 10-day grace period during which file an answer or Rule 12 motion after a removed case was remanded to state court. Even if the defendant had so responded to the complaint while the case was pending in federal court after its removal, he or she was required to file another answer or motion in circuit court to avoid a default judgment. See NCS Healthcare v. W.P. Malone, Inc., 350 Ark. 520, 88 S.W.3d 852 (2002).

Amended Rule 12(a)(3) expands the grace period to 20 days, during which time a defendant who filed neither an answer nor a Rule 12 motion in the federal court must take such action in the state court. By contrast, if the defendant responded to the complaint in federal court while the case was pending there, Rule 55(f) prohibits entry of judgment by default upon remand. Consequently, the defendant need not respond again in circuit court, within the 20-day period, to avoid such a judgment. See Laguna Village, Inc. v. Laborers International Union, 672 P.2d 882 (Cal. 1983); Banks v. Allstate Indemnity Co., 757 N.E.2d 776 (Ohio App. 2001).

Because Arkansas procedural rules differ in some respects from those in the federal courts, however, Rule 55(f) does not require the circuit court to adopt the documents filed in federal court for all purposes. See Laguna Village, supra. For example, the plaintiff may move for an order from the circuit court directing the defendant to revise his or her answer to conform to the Arkansas pleading rules. In addition, the "bulk filing" of the federal pleadings and motions in the circuit court will not suffice. Rather, a party relying on a pleading or motion filed in federal court is charged with the responsibility of making the circuit court aware of the filings and must, if challenged, be able to show that the document was served on the other party. NCS Healthcare, supra; Banks, supra.

CASE NOTES

Constitutionality.

This rule does not violate due process because defendants suffering default judgments are given notice of the pending suit through service of the original complaint and summons; moreover, they are presumed to know that if they do not respond they will suffer default judgments and may suffer a monetary judgment against them. McGraw v. Jones, 367 Ark. 138, 238 S.W.3d 15 (2006).

In General.

Default judgments are not favored by the law. Allstate Ins. Co. v. Bourland, 296 Ark. 488, 758 S.W.2d 700 (1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1006, 109 S. Ct. 1640, 104 L. Ed. 2d 156 (1989), superseded by statute as stated in Hood v. Arkansas School Bd. Ins. Coop., 35 Ark. App. 1, 811 S.W.2d 1 (1991) (decision under prior law).

Default judgments are not favorites of the law and should be avoided when possible; the purpose for the 1990 amendment to this rule was to liberalize practice regarding default judgments, and the revised rule reflects a preference for deciding cases on the merits rather than on technicalities. B & F Eng'g, Inc. v. Cotroneo, 309 Ark. 175, 830 S.W.2d 835 (1992).

Absence of Counsel.

Illness of a party's counsel, so severe as to prevent him from appearing in behalf of his client, is an appropriate ground for vacating a default judgment provided the party litigant did not know of it in time to retain other counsel or was prevented in some way from doing so; otherwise, such illness of counsel is not grounds for setting aside the judgment. Meisch v. Brady, 270 Ark. 652, 606 S.W.2d 112 (Ct. App. 1980).

Appeal.

The burden is on the party making a motion to obtain a ruling from the court, and failure to do so constitutes a waiver of the motion precluding its consideration on appeal. Hensley v. White River Medical Ctr., 28 Ark. App. 27, 770 S.W.2d 190 (1989).

Debtor's appeal to the circuit court from a magistrate's order denying her motion to set aside a default judgment was timely because it was made well within 30 days of the date of the denial of her motion to set aside as required by Ark. Dist. Ct. R. 9(a), although the default judgment had been entered over a year earlier. There was no time limit for seeking relief from default under subsection (c) of this rule. Gurien v. Access Credit Mgmt., 2011 Ark. App. 711 (2011).

In a case stemming from a default judgment, an appeal from an order denying a motion to dismiss based on lack of subject-matter jurisdiction was not final and appealable; the interlocutory order did not have the practical effect of a final ruling on the merits. Even if there was no intention of challenging the damages awarded, a hearing could have been requested; moreover, even though the circuit court awarded the same amount of money in the default judgment as the judgment from the district court, it was not bound by that amount and potentially could have awarded a different amount. Smith v. Progressive Car Fin., LLC, 2017 Ark. App. 110, 514 S.W.3d 488 (2017).

Although defendant was correct that proof of damages was required despite his default, his failure to preserve the issue for appeal by first raising the issue with the circuit court, and the fact that Arkansas does not have a plain error rule, resulted in the dismissal of his appeal. Bates v. Gilliam, 2020 Ark. App. 300, 603 S.W.3d 583 (2020).

Appearance.

"Appearance" designates some overt act by which a party against whom a suit has been commenced submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court. Divelbliss v. Suchor, 311 Ark. 8, 841 S.W.2d 600 (1992).

Husband's answer, although untimely, recognized his wife's divorce action as being in court and indicated a desire to defend, and therefore constituted an "appearance" for purposes of subsection (b) of this rule. Therefore, the husband should have been allowed to present evidence relating to issues of marital property and debt. Robinson v. Robinson, 103 Ark. App. 169, 287 S.W.3d 652 (2008).

Applicability.

When a judgment is based upon evidence presented to the court at a trial, as opposed to being based on the failure of a party to appear or attend, the judgment is not a default judgment, and this rule does not apply. Diebold v. Myers Gen. Agency, Inc., 292 Ark. 456, 731 S.W.2d 183 (1987).

Judgment was not a default judgment and appellant was not entitled to the notice under this rule. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co. v. Mockbee, 21 Ark. App. 252, 731 S.W.2d 239 (1987).

This rule as amended should be applied by the trial court on remand where: (1) the amendment of this rule is remedial or procedural, and (2) the amendment has no application to the trial court's refusal to grant default judgment on January 18, 1989, but would apply if that issue was again presented to the trial court. Hood v. Arkansas Sch. Bd. Ins. Coop., 35 Ark. App. 1, 811 S.W.2d 1 (1991).

Subsection (a) of this rule is applicable to default judgments entered due to the failure of a defending party to appear or respond to a claim, but, it does not apply to default judgments as to liability entered as a sanction pursuant to Rule 37. Viking Ins. Co. v. Jester, 310 Ark. 317, 836 S.W.2d 371 (1992).

The amended rule is a procedural rule, is remedial in nature and, accordingly, should be given retroactive effect. Divellbliss v. Suchor, 311 Ark. 8, 841 S.W.2d 600 (1992).

Subsection (c) of this rule contemplates a circumstance where a default judgment has been entered properly; however, the rule does not govern when the trial court improperly enters a default judgment by failing to recognize clear authority in an area. Richardson v. Rodgers, 334 Ark. 606, 976 S.W.2d 941 (1998).

Where defendant filed an answer in federal court after its motion to remove, the state trial court erred in subsequently granting a default judgment to plaintiff after the case was remanded because amended subsection (f) of this rule was procedural and remedial and should therefore have been applied retroactively; thus, defendant was not required to refile its answer in the trial court after the remand. JurisDictionUSA, Inc. v. Loislaw.com, Inc., 357 Ark. 403, 183 S.W.3d 560 (2004).

Trial court did not err by denying city a default judgment in its declaratory judgment action against telecommunications company after the case was remanded to the trial court from federal court because the company, which filed an answer in federal court, but not state court, was in compliance with subsection (f) of this rule, an amendment to this rule that was given a retroactive effect. City of Fort Smith v. Didicom Towers, Inc., 362 Ark. 469, 209 S.W.3d 344 (2005).

While there was a mandatory response requirement in § 16-112-204(a) for habeas corpus petitions seeking the scientific testing of crime evidence, there was no provision for a default judgment as in this rule, and the trial court did not err in denying a petitioner's motion for a default judgment. The rules of civil procedure did not apply in the habeas proceeding. Carter v. State, 2010 Ark. 29 (2010).

When a judgment is based on evidence presented to the court at a trial, as opposed to being based on the failure of a party to appear or attend, the judgment is not a default judgment, and this rule, which applies to default judgments, does not apply. Triple T Farms

P'ship v. Union Bank & Trust Co., 2015 Ark. App. 174, 458 S.W.3d 258 (2015).

This rule has no application to summary-judgment proceedings. Therefore, the provisions of Ark. R. Civ. P. 60, and not Rule 55, were applicable when a property transferee sought to set aside a summary judgment order as the summary-judgment order was not rendered on the basis of the transferee's failure to respond to a trustee's complaint, but rather on the basis that the transferee had failed to meet proof with proof and that the trustee was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Citibank, N.A. v. Carruth, 2015 Ark. App. 704 (2015).

Construction.

This rule, which governs the standard for default judgments, is taken from the federal rule and should be interpreted in accordance with federal case law, in which opposition to a motion for entry of a default judgment is regarded as a motion to set aside a default judgment. B & F Eng'g, Inc. v. Cotroneo, 309 Ark. 175, 830 S.W.2d 835 (1992).

To permit a court to convert what would otherwise be a default judgment into one on the merits by taking evidence against someone not present in any sense of the word would be to compound the problem sought to be cured in the 1990 amendment; such a judgment would be taken against one whose failure to appear might well fall within the circumstances enumerated in subsection (c) of this rule, and yet that party would be deprived of the benefit of the rule. Harold M. v. Clark, 316 Ark. 439, 872 S.W.2d 410 (1994).

Ark. R. Civ. P. 60 is no longer applicable to default judgments and, therefore, the time limitations imposed by Rule 60 are no longer applicable to default judgments; thus, since the time limitations are no longer applicable to default judgments, the rationale no longer exists for the rule that an order setting aside a default judgment after 90 days is a final appealable order. Epting v. Precision Paint & Glass, Inc., 353 Ark. 84, 110 S.W.3d 747 (2003).

Court of Appeals of Arkansas declines to adopt a blanket exception to the default judgment rule in child custody cases. Jones v. Jones, 2019 Ark. App. 596, 591 S.W.3d 831 (2019).

Criminal Proceedings.

This rule does not apply to bond forfeiture procedures. M & M Bonding Co. v. State, 59 Ark. App. 228, 955 S.W.2d 521 (1997).

Damages.

Although he is entitled to offer proof in mitigation of damages, a defaulting defendant may not controvert the plaintiff's right to recover as the default fixes the defendant's liability on the plaintiff's cause of action. Gardner v. Robinson, 42 Ark. App. 90, 854 S.W.2d 356 (1993).

The general rule is that, in an inquiry of damages upon default, all of the plaintiff's material allegations are to be taken as true, and the determination of the amount of the damages to be awarded is all that remains to be done. Gardner v. Robinson, 42 Ark. App. 90, 854 S.W.2d 356 (1993).

Subsection (c) of this rule does not permit a setting aside of the damage award when liability against the defendant remains fixed and is not in dispute. Byrd v. Dark, 322 Ark. 640, 911 S.W.2d 572 (1995).

After having received evidence as to the extent of the damages in a default proceeding, the trial court may not transform the judgment from one of default to one based on the merits such that this rule no longer applies. Tharp v. Smith, 326 Ark. 260, 930 S.W.2d 350 (1996).

Hearing on damages award to the resident was necessary where there was no testimony specifically regarding the medical bills or the summary; there was no proof that each expense was necessary or related to the accident with the corporation, and the record was silent as to how the trial court arrived at the damage amounts. Volunteer Transp., Inc. v. House, 357 Ark. 95, 162 S.W.3d 456 (2004).

After holding a trial on the issue of damages, the circuit court erred by reducing appellant's medical damages from $7,135 to $4,500; appellant's uncontradicted testimony showed that nine months of chiropractic treatments were reasonable and necessary after appellant's neck was injured in an assault, and there was no requirement that the chiropractor testify as to the reasonableness and necessity of the treatments. Young v. Barbera, 366 Ark. 120, 233 S.W.3d 651 (2006).

After a default judgment was entered against a physician in a medical malpractice case, the trial court was not required to provide the physician with notice of a hearing on damages; however, the damages awarded for mental anguish and future pain and suffering were reversed as they were based on speculation. McGraw v. Jones, 367 Ark. 138, 238 S.W.3d 15 (2006).

Circuit court's findings on damages in an air-bag explosion case did not provide a basis to set aside the default judgment where the award for the vehicle's value was supported by plaintiff's testimony and the documentary evidence of the car's retail value, plaintiff testified as to her injuries and provided photographs, and the amounts of the sales tax and registration and license fees were from the Department of Finance and Administration. Nissan N. Am., Inc. v. Harlan, 2017 Ark. App. 203, 518 S.W.3d 89 (2017).

Default Not Entered.

In a termination of parental rights case under § 9-27-341, a trial court did not really enter a default judgment against a father due to a failure to appear, despite the use of such language, due to its extensive consideration of the evidence in the case. The trial court's approach satisfied its obligation to determine the best interest of the child and to safeguard the father's equal protection and due process rights to the children. Osborne v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 98 Ark. App. 129, 252 S.W.3d 138 (2007).

Home buyer was not entitled to the entry of default judgment against a home seller under this rule because the seller proved that either its owner or the postal service was mistaken as to delivery; that the filing of an answer was only one day late; that the seller appeared and raised a meritorious defense; and that the buyer was not prejudiced. Benedetto v. Justin Wooten Constr., LLC, 2009 Ark. App. 825, 372 S.W.3d 391 (2009).

Judgment against an owner, set aside by a trial court, was not a default judgment as the owner had filed a timely answer but did not appear at trial, and the trial court entered judgment based on the evidence. Since the judgment was not a default judgment, the trial court was not obligated to fulfill the requirements of subsection (c) of this rule but of Ark. R. Civ. P. 60, which governed the setting aside of judgments other than default judgments. Cent. Ark. Found. Homes, LLC v. Choate, 2011 Ark. App. 260, 383 S.W.3d 418 (2011).

Default Not Set Aside.

Evidence did not warrant setting aside default judgment. Springwind Farms, Inc. v. McLane Co., 21 Ark. App. 257, 731 S.W.2d 784 (1987).

The negligence of an insurance company, in failing to respond to a lawsuit for personal injuries following a car collision involving its insured, was imputed to the insured, and the default judgment entered against him was valid. Truhe v. Grimes, 318 Ark. 117, 884 S.W.2d 255 (1994).

The trial court did not err in striking an untimely answer where no evidence justifying the delay was presented in the trial court, and, even if defendant had made a threshold showing of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect, she failed to show that she had a meritorious defense to the cause of action. Martin v. Jetkins, 320 Ark. 478, 897 S.W.2d 567 (1995).

Where defendant testified that he kept a post office box and did not have a forwarding address in Alaska, and did not check his mail for a couple of months and did not have anyone check it for him, the facts did not demonstrate the surprise or excusable neglect contemplated in the rule to set aside a default judgment against him. Morgan v. Century 21 Perry Real Estate, 78 Ark. App. 180, 79 S.W.3d 878 (2002).

Trial court did not err in failing to set aside a default judgment based on the misconduct of appellees' counsel in failing to send a courtesy copy of the lawsuit to the company's counsel where the cause of the default was not plaintiff's counsel's failure to send a courtesy copy of the complaint to the company's counsel, but rather, the cause was the failure of the company's controller to forward the summons and complaint to the company's counsel. Nucor Corp. v. Kilman, 358 Ark. 107, 186 S.W.3d 720 (2004).

In a civil forfeiture proceeding, an owner was not entitled to have a default judgment entered in favor of the State set aside based on substantial compliance because the judgment was not void since the summons was sufficient; moreover, the owner failed to present a meritorious defense. Due to that failure, a separation of powers argument was not considered. Solis v. State, 371 Ark. 590, 269 S.W.3d 352 (2007).

In a case involving the Arkansas Civil Rights Act, § 16-123-101 et seq., a default judgment was not set aside under this rule because a motion for an extension was not timely where the request was not made to a trial court before the expiration of the period originally prescribed, the failure to respond in a timely manner due to one attorney being distracted by the birth of a child was not excusable neglect, an amendment to Ark. R. Civ. P. 12 was inapplicable, and an argument that the complaint failed to state a claim was rejected. The denial of illegal intent was insufficient in a first affidavit, a second affidavit was filed after the default was granted, and an individual supervisor could have been held personally liable for alleged acts of retaliation under § 16-123-108(a). Eusanio v. Tippin, 2013 Ark. App. 38, 425 S.W.3d 838 (2013).

Trial court did not err by not setting aside the default judgment ordering forfeiture of the currency because the record did not disclose any reason for appellant's failure to respond to the complaint or any reason to justify relief from the default judgment. Green v. State, 2014 Ark. 69 (2014).

Trial court did not err in failing to set aside a default judgment entered against a creditor on a debtor's counterclaim because the debtor stated facts to support a cause of action against the creditor under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act; due to its default, the creditor failed to deny the debtor's allegation that its complaint was filed on an open account and was subject to a three-year statute of limitations. Unifund CCR Partners v. Thornton, 2014 Ark. App. 307 (2014).

Process service company provided an affidavit setting out the numerous steps taken to find and serve defendants at multiple addresses over the course of several months; the affidavit was sufficient to demonstrate that plaintiffs conducted a diligent inquiry into defendants' whereabouts, the service by warning order was effectuated in compliance with the Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(f), and the subsequently entered default judgment was not void for want of service. Young v. Welch, 2016 Ark. App. 614 (2016).

Denial of a car manufacturer's motion to set aside a default judgment was affirmed where its failure to properly attend to business and answer the lawsuit was not a legally acceptable reason or excuse for setting aside a default judgment under subsection (c) of this rule. Nissan N. Am., Inc. v. Harlan, 2017 Ark. App. 203, 518 S.W.3d 89 (2017).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in finding that one borrower had not shown excusable neglect for purposes of subsection (c) of this rule where the circuit court did not find the borrower's testimony or his physician's affidavit that he was incapacitated to be credible. Malloy v. Smith, 2017 Ark. App. 288, 522 S.W.3d 819 (2017).

Mower distributor's motion to set aside a default judgment awarded to the retailer was properly denied as the retailer was not required under § 4-72-304 to allege that it shipped the inventory back to the distributor and the retailer's allegations that it had obtained mowers, had not sold them, and demanded that the distributor take them back were sufficient. R.W. Distribs., Inc. v. Texarkana Tractor Co., 2018 Ark. App. 345, 553 S.W.3d 187 (2018).

Circuit court appropriately exercised its discretion when it denied a biological mother's motion to set aside the adoption decree regarding her biological child because it considered the events leading up to the entry of the default judgment and found there was insufficient proof the mother intended to contest the petition; although the mother received notice of hearing only for the motion to modify visitation and not for the later hearing on the petition for adoption, she was properly served but did not answer either petition and there was no evidence the petition to adopt was mentioned at the hearing on the petition to modify. Qualheim v. Roush, 2019 Ark. App. 83, 572 S.W.3d 9 (2019).

Grant of default judgment on defendant's counterclaim was not an abuse of discretion although the answer to the counterclaim was filed only one day late; the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in denying plaintiffs' motion for extension of time to answer under Ark. R. Civ. P. 6(b)(2) because there was no mistake, inadvertence, surprise, excusable neglect, or other just cause for failure to timely file a motion for extension of time, and as a result, it properly struck plaintiffs' answer, and none of the other reasons for setting aside a default judgment applied. Briney v. Bauer, 2019 Ark. App. 227, 575 S.W.3d 631 (2019).

Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to set aside the default divorce judgment due to fraud or misconduct as the wife was essentially asking to reweigh the evidence in her favor. Glover v. Glover, 2020 Ark. App. 89, 595 S.W.3d 54 (2020).

Wife's arguments that the default divorce judgment entered against her was void, that she was entitled to a damages hearing, that the default judgment exceeded the requested relief, and that the default custody award ignored the statutory preference for joint custody were not preserved for appellate review where the wife failed to raise the specific concerns at the motion hearing below. Glover v. Glover, 2020 Ark. App. 89, 595 S.W.3d 54 (2020).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to set aside a divorce decree entered by default as the husband received both the divorce complaint asking the court to decide property and debt issues and the summons advising that failing to respond within 30 days would result in a default judgment. The husband had been involved in legal proceedings, owned a multistate accounting firm, chose not to respond while knowing the consequences, and made unsupported claims of misrepresentations by the wife as to ownership of property and liability for debts. Riggs v. Riggs, 2020 Ark. App. 381, 606 S.W.3d 588 (2020).

Default Required.

A default judgment is required where there has been a failure to make any sort of timely filing or appearance in a trial court within twenty days. Goston v. Craig, 34 Ark. App. 23, 805 S.W.2d 92 (1991).

Trial court erred by sua sponte granting a default judgment against an owner and in favor of the State in a civil-forfeiture case because the State had not applied for a default judgment; the trial court sua sponte moved the forfeiture case toward a default judgment and did so in the absence of a request by the prosecutor, and there was no service of a written notice at least three days prior to any hearing that would consider a default judgment. Byrd v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 489, 505 S.W.3d 699 (2016).

Default Set Aside.

Where a deputy sheriff served a writ of garnishment on a corporation's office manager, who was neither a corporate officer nor the designated agent for process, despite the fact that the corporation's president was in the city on the service day, there was a clear failure to comply with the statutory service requirements of § 16-58-124; accordingly, a default judgment against the corporation was properly set aside pursuant to subsection (c) of this rule and Rule 60 for lack of personal jurisdiction. Pounders v. Chicken Country, Inc., 3 Ark. App. 220, 624 S.W.2d 445 (1981).

Where no motion was filed by an opposing party pursuant to this rule to set aside two default judgments, the trial court lacked the authority to set aside the default judgment and enter an order forfeiting the property to the county general fund. State v. $258,035.00

United States Currency, 352 Ark. 117, 98 S.W.3d 818 (2003).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in setting aside the default judgment against the car dealership as void where the buyer's summons incorrectly identified the defendants and misstated the deadline for responding to the complaint; this did not strictly comply with the service requirements imposed by the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure. Smith v. Sidney Moncrief Pontiac, Buick, GMC Co., 353 Ark. 701, 120 S.W.3d 525 (2003), superseded by statute as stated in Powell v. Fernandez, 2013 Ark. App. 595 (2013).

In an employment discrimination case, where two attorneys should have been admitted pro hac vice, the decisions to grant a default judgment and to deem certain responses admitted were also erroneous. Tobacco Superstore, Inc. v. Darrough, 362 Ark. 103, 207 S.W.3d 511 (2005).

Trial court erred when entering a default judgment in a foreclosure action because it ordered a buyer to quitclaim a deed to property to two sellers to satisfy a mortgage; there was no authority to do such under § 18-49-103. Born v. Hodges, 101 Ark. App. 139, 271 S.W.3d 526 (2008).

Default judgment was set aside under subdivision (c)(3) of this rule where a former husband deceived his former wife into thinking a compromise had been reached and procured her non-attendance and failure to answer a complaint; the distinction between intrinsic and extrinsic fraud had been abolished. Moreover, her assertion that she received nothing in a property distribution was sufficient to raise a meritorious defense due to the presumptions under § 9-12-315(b) and § 9-12-315(a)(1)(A). West v. West, 103 Ark. App. 269, 288 S.W.3d 680 (2008).

Because proper service was not obtained by appellant upon appellee, a decree quieting title in appellant obtained by default judgment was void and could properly have been set aside under subsection (c) of this rule. Pulaski Choice, L.L.C. v. 2735 Villa Creek, L.P., 2010 Ark. App. 451, 376 S.W.3d 500 (2010).

Default judgment against a goat seller was set aside under subsection (c) of this rule as: (1) the buyer knew of the seller's whereabouts as the buyer had gone to the seller's house, yet the buyer did not make a diligent inquiry into the seller's whereabouts before applying for a warning order under Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(f)(1); (2) all of the buyer's service attempts in 2000 were at different incorrect addresses; (3) the seller's knowledge of the lien against her property did not validate the void default judgment; (4) the trial court lacked jurisdiction; and (5) laches and estoppel did not apply as the default judgment was void ab initio. Scott v. Wolfe, 2011 Ark. App. 438, 384 S.W.3d 609 (2011).

In an action for breach of contract arising out of a foreclosure, a mortgagee's motion to set aside a default judgment under subsection (c) of this rule was properly denied as its failure to attend to business was not excusable neglect. PHH Mortg. Corp. v. Yeager, 2011 Ark. App. 313 (2011).

Trial court erred by ordering a default judgment in favor of the patient because she did not properly make an application for default judgment as required by this rule, as she merely made an oral motion to strike the medical center's answer on the ground that its attorney was not licensed to practice law in Arkansas. The trial court should not have entertained a motion for default until the medical center was given three days notice prior to a hearing on the application. Shelby County Health Care Corp. v. Teague, 2014 Ark. App. 382, 439 S.W.3d 74 (2014).

Default judgment of foreclosure was void where the mortgage holder presented no facts in its affidavits to support a statement that it made diligent inquiry into the whereabouts of the mortgagor's heir before it sought constructive service by a warning order, and thus, service was not proper under Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(f)(1). Billings v. United States Bank N.A., 2016 Ark. App. 134, 484 S.W.3d 715 (2016).

Circuit court's order denying a lessee's motion to set aside a default judgment was reversed where an affidavit for warning order stating that the lessors' attorney made a diligent inquiry to locate the lessee was conclusory and provided no details as to what the inquiry was, and the lessors failed to use available information to locate the lessee, such as a cell phone number. The affidavit did not satisfy the requirements of Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(f). Self v. Husted, 2017 Ark. App. 339, 525 S.W.3d 33 (2017).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in granting appellees' motion to reconsider and vacating the default judgment where appellant's service through the Secretary of State did not effect valid service on appellees, a dissolved LLC and its sole owner, and sufficiency of service had been the issue to be determined at every stage of the proceedings below. Eliasnik v. Y&S Pine Bluff, LLC, 2018 Ark. App. 138, 546 S.W.3d 497 (2018).

Circuit court abused its discretion by denying a mother's request to set aside the default custody award under Ark. R. Civ. P. 55(c)(4) because the need to consider the best interest of the child constituted an "other reason justifying relief". Specifically, the circuit court's primary focus was on the mother's failure to file a timely response to the complaint for divorce, rather than the best interest of the child, and nothing in the record indicated that the circuit court considered the mother's abuse allegations when evaluating her motion to set aside the

It was error to deny contractor's motion to vacate a default judgment because the affidavit for warning order was insufficient as it only made the conclusory statement that diligent inquiry was made to locate the contractor, further inquiry should have been made because the address at which service was attempted clearly had been vacated, and plaintiff had a good email address from which the contractor had recently emailed plaintiff's attorney as well as a good phone number, fax number, and post office box, which were listed on the contract, but did not attempt to use those methods to contact the contractor. Lewis v. Johnson, 2020 Ark. App. 34, 594 S.W.3d 104 (2020).

Plaintiff's complaint alleged that defendant breached a duty of care by providing the decedent alcohol and then leaving him alone in a hot tub, where the decedent died; plaintiff's claim was materially indistinguishable from a claim that a social host was negligent for failing to take reasonable measures to prevent an intoxicated guest from driving a car, which was barred by statute, and the court reversed the denial of defendant's motion to set aside the default judgment on this claim. Bates v. Ho-man, 2021 Ark. App. 266 (2021).

Discretion of Court.

It is within the sound discretion of the trial court to grant or deny a motion to set aside a default judgment, and the question on appeal is whether there has been an abuse of discretion. Default judgments are not favorites of the law and should be avoided when possible. Cammack v. Chalmers, 284 Ark. 161, 680 S.W.2d 689 (1984).

Where the trial court overruled defendants' motion to dismiss and gave defendants 25 days from notice of the order to answer the complaint, but due to circumstances in the clerk's office defendants never received a copy of the order, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to enter a default judgment for plaintiffs, since the defendants' delay in filing an answer was due to a defect in the proceedings which did not prejudice the plaintiffs' rights. Cammack v. Chalmers, 284 Ark. 161, 680 S.W.2d 689 (1984).

The standard of review for the granting or denial of a motion to vacate a default judgment is whether the trial court abused its discretion. B & F Eng'g, Inc. v. Cotroneo, 309 Ark. 175, 830 S.W.2d 835 (1992).

The court applied an "abuse of discretion" standard in reviewing the granting of a default judgment under the rule. Layman v. Bone, 333 Ark. 121, 967 S.W.2d 561 (1998).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion when it granted a default judgment where, although the complaint was served on January 14, the defendant mistakenly informed his attorney that it was served on January 16 and, therefore, the answer was mailed to defendant's counsel and filed one day late. Layman v. Bone, 333 Ark. 121, 967 S.W.2d 561 (1998).

The entry of a default judgment is discretionary rather than mandatory. Collins v. Keller, 333 Ark. 238, 969 S.W.2d 621 (1998).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying appellant's motion for default judgment because the trial court was not required to enter a default judgment against appellees; the trial court had the discretion to recognize that a default had occurred without being bound to enter judgment. Wildlife Farms II LLC v. Robinson, 2011 Ark. App. 140, 378 S.W.3d 824 (2011).

Effect of Default Judgment.

A judgment by default is just as binding and forceful as a judgment entered after a trial on the merits in a case; and it is not to be discredited or regarded lightly because of the manner in which it was acquired. Meisch v. Brady, 270 Ark. 652, 606 S.W.2d 112 (Ct. App. 1980).

Excusable Neglect.

Affidavit by secretary of garnishee to the effect that she had mailed notice of garnishment to home office in Pennsylvania and was only told later that it never arrived did not amount to excusable neglect. Sun Gas Liquids Co. v. Helena Nat'l Bank, 276 Ark. 173, 633 S.W.2d 38 (1982).

In view of the writ of garnishment's simple and direct message, written in plain language, the garnishee's failure to understand and comply with it could not be said to be due to excusable neglect. Metal Processing, Inc. v. Plastic & Reconstructive Assocs., 287 Ark. 100, 697 S.W.2d 87 (1985); May v. Bob Hankins Distrib. Co., 301 Ark. 494, 785 S.W.2d 23 (1990).

Where defendant approached the general contractor to provide a defense but then did nothing to assure that the general contractor was indeed defending it, and four and one-half months passed from the date of filing the complaint to the date of entry of a default judgment, during which time the defendant apparently did not monitor the case, there was no excusable neglect. CMS Jonesboro Rehabilitation, Inc. v. Lamb, 306 Ark. 216, 812 S.W.2d 472 (1991).

Defendant did not show good cause for not showing up at trial, where he claimed his attorney had rescheduled the trial by an agreement with the prosecutor, for attorneys cannot vary a trial date set by the court. Rischar v. State, 307 Ark. 429, 821 S.W.2d 25 (1991).

No excusable neglect shown where defendant was personally served with process and delivered the summons and complaint to his lawyer in adequate time to file an answer. Moore v.

Taylor Sales, Inc., 59 Ark. App. 30, 953 S.W.2d 889 (1997).

Company's failure to answer a summons was not the result of excusable neglect where the controller did not dispute the fact that he received the summons and complaint and, moreover, he stated that part of his job was to "monitor lawsuits and work with the attorneys, insurance companies, and contractors involved in those suits"; clearly, the controller was extremely busy at the time he received the suit papers, but his being "too busy" was not excusable neglect. Nucor Corp. v. Kilman, 358 Ark. 107, 186 S.W.3d 720 (2004).

Where homeowner testified that he was a business man who was familiar with court processes, but failed to respond to the summons and did nothing until after being informed by letter that a trial on damages was pending, the trial court's conclusion that this did not rise to excusable neglect was not clearly erroneous; thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in entering a default judgment against homeowner. Israel v. Oskey, 92 Ark. App. 192, 212 S.W.3d 45 (2005).

Default judgment entered in a medical malpractice case was proper as the fact that a physician's office staff failed to forward documents to an in-house attorney did not constitute excusable neglect where the physician did nothing to ensure a defense was being mounted on her behalf; even if there was a meritorious defense, no grounds under this rule were shown. McGraw v. Jones, 367 Ark. 138, 238 S.W.3d 15 (2006).

Superintendent did not state or allege any grounds constituting mistake or excusable neglect, or any other grounds that would satisfy subsection (c) of this rule as there was no validity to the superintendent's arguments that a default judgment was not properly granted where an answer was filed or that the "excusable neglect" standard was inapplicable; the superintendent did not raise the issue of inadvertence below, nor did he cite any convincing authority to show that the supreme court had ever held that mere "inadvertence" in filing an answer late warranted the reversal of a default judgment. Vent v. Johnson, 2009 Ark. 92, 303 S.W.3d 46 (2009).

In a wrongful death action, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion by rejecting defendant's claim of excusable neglect; defendant still had some form of an attorney-client relationship with counsel, yet counsel waited to seek an eleventh-hour extension despite outlining a vigorous defense in correspondence sent to plaintiff's counsel the day after defendant had been served. Counsel's actions were imputed to defendant, and his diligence alone did not warrant setting aside the default judgment. Bates v. Homan, 2021 Ark. App. 266 (2021).

Failure to Answer Complaint.

Where defendant's attorney failed to answer complaint within 20 days as required by Ark. R.

Civ. P. 12, but alleged that he had mailed copies to the court clerk and both attorneys for plaintiffs, although the three denied receiving them, the court could properly excuse the failure under Ark. R. Civ. P. 6, even though this rule mandates a default judgment and gives the court no discretion. Hensley v. Brown, 2 Ark. App. 175, 617 S.W.2d 867 (1981).

Where the defendant's attorney failed to file an answer within the time allowed and the only proof to justify the attorney's neglect was his affidavit that he had prepared a timely answer, but upon its completion his secretary had misplaced it, the trial court abused its discretion in condoning such negligence and it erred in refusing to enter a default judgment against the defendant because if such carelessness was excusable, then any attorney could shift the responsibility for filing any pleading to his secretary by simply dictating the pleading and dismissing the matter from his mind. DeClerk v. Tribble, 276 Ark. 316, 637 S.W.2d 526 (1982), superseded by statute as stated in Hood v. Arkansas School Bd. Ins. Coop., 35 Ark. App. 1, 811 S.W.2d 1 (1991).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to set aside the default judgment entered against the borrower, in an action brought by a lender against a borrower to collect the balance due under a promissory note, where the borrower failed to prove his allegation that, prior to the filing of the lawsuit, he and the lender had agreed upon a settlement of their differences, and that pursuant to the lender's assurances of his not pursuing the suit, the borrower did not file an answer. Bell v. Lee, 8 Ark. App. 139, 648 S.W.2d 524 (1983).

Response was sufficient to prevent a default. Garrett v. Andrews, 294 Ark. 160, 741 S.W.2d 257 (1987), cert. denied, 487 U.S. 1219, 103 S. Ct. 2873, 101 L. Ed. 2d 908 (1988).

Plaintiffs were not entitled to a default judgment since a defendant who did not submit an answer did appear and defend by virtue of another defendant's answer, which inured to his benefit under the common defense doctrine. Richardson v. Rodgers, 334 Ark. 606, 976 S.W.2d 941 (1998).

Corporation's failure to answer the resident's complaint was not clearly the product of mistake, surprise, and/or excusable neglect as the failure to attend to business was not excusable neglect; the corporation had ample time to respond to the complaint and failed to do so. Volunteer Transp., Inc. v. House, 357 Ark. 95, 162 S.W.3d 456 (2004).

In an action for breach of restrictive covenants, the trial court did not err under subsection (c) of this rule in granting appellee's motion for a default judgment and in refusing to set aside the default judgment because the trial judge did not extend the time in which to file an answer, and therefore, appellants were in default when they did not file a timely answer.

Adams v. Moody, 2009 Ark. App. 474, 324 S.W.3d 348 (2009).

Default judgment under subdivision (1) (now (a)) of this rule was properly entered against debtors in a creditor's suit for unpaid invoices because letters from the debtors' president were not answers, particularly as they were not filed by a licensed attorney, and an answer filed by an attorney was filed late and the late filing was not the result of mistake or inadvertence. Las Colinas Int'l, Inc. v. Crosswood Assocs., 2009 Ark. App. 796 (2009).

Trial court did not err in granting lessees' default judgment motion after a lessor filed an untimely answer because the lessees' complaint sufficiently alleged a cause of action for breach of contract. Boeuf River Farms v. Browder, 2012 Ark. App. 482, 422 S.W.3d 194 (2012).

Failure to Assert Defense.

Defendant's petition to vacate the default judgment was deficient from the standpoint of failure to assert a valid defense, where defendant simply stated that he had an undoubted defense and further had a counterclaim against the plaintiff for a substantial amount of money in excess of that money allegedly claimed due by the plaintiff and further, he did not, in fact, owe the plaintiff. Meisch v. Brady, 270 Ark. 652, 606 S.W.2d 112 (Ct. App. 1980).

Where a party defended the action not only by filing a motion to dismiss, but also by submitting a motion for summary judgment with three extensive affidavits, which tended to deny each of the allegations contained in the complaint, as he was permitted to do under Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b) and 56, it was held that he had not "failed to appear or otherwise defend" under this rule. Tapp v. Fowler, 291 Ark. 309, 724 S.W.2d 176 (1987).

Allegations in a petition for disbarment were deemed admitted where the attorney failed to file anything with the court other than meritless responses, thereby resulting in a default under this rule. Ligon v. Jenkins, 2013 Ark. 239 (2013).

Creditor did not defend against a debtor's counterclaim and avoid default by filing an amended complaint because an amended complaint was not a reply; nothing in the rules designated an amended complaint as the functional equivalent of an answer or reply. Unifund CCR Partners v. Thornton, 2014 Ark. App. 307 (2014).

Failure to Serve Other Documents.

Failure to serve an affidavit containing a verified statement of damages was not grounds to set aside a default judgment, where the same information was contained in the complaint, which was served on defendant, and defendant did not show how he was prejudiced by not receiving the affidavit. Miller v. Transamerica

Commer. Fin. Corp., 74 Ark. App. 237, 47 S.W.3d 288 (2001).

Failure to Timely Answer Amended Complaint.

Appellate court could not say that the circuit court abused its discretion in refusing to set aside a default judgment when defendants had answered the original complaint as well as requests for admission but defendants' counsel failed to timely respond to the amended complaint because he mistakenly believed that he had 30 days rather than 20 days to answer; the amended complaint added numerous factual allegations and the allegations were deemed admitted under Ark. R. Civ. P. 8 when defendants failed to timely answer. Scruggs v. Lewis, 2020 Ark. App. 378, 609 S.W.3d 430 (2020).

Foreign Judgments.

Foreign judgments, regardless of whether entered by default, are protected against collateral attack by the full faith and credit clause of U.S. Const., Art. IV, § 1, unless the defenses of fraud in the procurement or want of jurisdiction in the rendering court, can be established. Butler Fence Co. v. Acme Fence & Iron Co., 42 Ark. App. 30, 852 S.W.2d 826 (1993).

Hearing.

Where on regularly scheduled trial date, defendant and his counsel failed to appear, and court entered judgment in favor of plaintiff based on the complaint, answers and evidence adduced by the parties, no motion for default judgment having been filed, this was not a default judgment based on the failure to answer or appear, and defendant was not entitled to a hearing three days prior to judgment under this rule. Dawson v. Picken, 1 Ark. App. 168, 613 S.W.2d 846 (1981).

There is no authority to the effect that a court must hold a hearing pursuant to this rule on the issue of liability when that issue has already been established by the entry of a default. Polselli v. Aulgur, 328 Ark. 111, 942 S.W.2d 832 (1997).

Joint Defendants.

A default judgment should not be entered, and if entered it should be set aside, when the action is against several defendants jointly, and the defense interposed by an answering defendant is not personal to himself but is common to himself and the nonanswering defendant. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. v. Little, 269 Ark. 636, 599 S.W.2d 756 (1980), rev'd in part on other grounds sub nom. Shelton v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., 281 Ark. 100, 662 S.W.2d 473 (1983).

Where codefendant doctor was served complaint in wrongful death action, filed a timely answer of a general denial and reserved the right to amend his answer at a later date, the default judgment entered against defendant nursing home was properly set aside since the general denial of the doctor put all material allegations into issue and inured to the benefit of the nursing home. Capitol City Manor, Inc. v. Culberson, 1 Ark. App. 137, 613 S.W.2d 835 (1981).

Judgment on the Merits.

Where defendant failed to show at the trial, but had answered and otherwise appeared in the matter by requesting a continuance, and where the court, with defendant's answer and other matters before it, made its findings and reduced plaintiff's claim to judgment, then such judgment was entered upon the merits, and defendant was not entitled to set it aside as a default judgment under subsection (c) of this rule. McCourt Mfg. Co. v. Credit Bureau, 319 Ark. 23, 888 S.W.2d 650 (1994).

Judgment in favor of the plaintiff in circuit court, after defendant appealed a municipal court's ruling, and after defendant failed to appear in circuit court, was not a default judgment, but was one which was decided on the merits. Fazeli v. Barnes, 47 Ark. App. 99, 885 S.W.2d 908 (1994).

Meritorious Defense.

Assuming that the notice requirement of subsection (b) of this rule applied and had not been complied with, the appellant must also make a prima facie showing that he has a valid or meritorious defense to the action before he is entitled to have the judgment set aside; the motion itself must assert this defense. The only time that a valid defense need not be shown is when the judgment is void, not voidable, such as when the appellant has received no notice whatsoever, actual or constructive. Bunker v. Bunker, 17 Ark. App. 7, 701 S.W.2d 709 (1986).

In order to prevail under either this rule, or Ark. R. Civ. P. 60(b) or (c), a party is required to show that it has a meritorious defense, and the motion itself must assert this defense. Hendrix v. Hendrix, 26 Ark. App. 283, 764 S.W.2d 472 (1989).

In order to have a judgment set aside under this rule, Ark. R. Civ. P. 60(b) or (c), a party is required to show in its motion that it has a meritorious defense. A meritorious defense is evidence, not allegations, sufficient to justify the refusal to grant a directed verdict against the party required to show a meritorious defense, and the motion itself must assert the defense. Goston v. Craig, 34 Ark. App. 23, 805 S.W.2d 92 (1991).

When a default judgment is set aside because of excusable neglect, the party having the judgment set aside must demonstrate a meritorious defense; if the judgment is void, it is not necessary for the party seeking to have it set aside to plead a meritorious defense. Hubbard v. Shores

Group, Inc., 313 Ark. 498, 855 S.W.2d 924 (1993).

The court properly refused to open a default judgment where it found that there was no mistake, inadvertence, surprise, excusable neglect, or other just cause for relief from the operation of judgment; the assertion of an allegedly meritorious defense was irrelevant in the absence just cause for relief. Tyrone v. Dennis, 73 Ark. App. 209, 39 S.W.3d 800 (2001).

Because a biological mother did not prove that one of the grounds for setting aside the default judgment was valid and supported reversal, the Court of Appeals did not address her claim of a meritorious defense to the default judgment. Qualheim v. Roush, 2019 Ark. App. 83, 572 S.W.3d 9 (2019).

Meritorious Defense Not Shown.

Because there was no basis at all for setting aside the default judgment, it was immaterial whether appellants presented a meritorious defense. Morgan v. Big Creek Farms of Hickory Flat, Inc., 2016 Ark. App. 121, 488 S.W.3d 535 (2016).

Default judgment did not have to be set aside because a father did not present a meritorious defense. Wilson v. Wilson, 2016 Ark. App. 191, 487 S.W.3d 420 (2016).

Mistake.

Default judgment rendered against the defendant insurance company would not be set aside based upon defendant's claim that its failure to respond to a second suit was based upon excusable mistake; the nature of an alleged mistake is considered on a case by case basis. B & F Eng'g, Inc. v. Cotroneo, 309 Ark. 175, 830 S.W.2d 835 (1992).

The "mistake" or "excusable neglect" contemplated under subsection (c) of this rule refers to mistake or excusable neglect by the defendant in failing to respond to the lawsuit; it does not mean a mistake in the award of damages. Byrd v. Dark, 322 Ark. 640, 911 S.W.2d 572 (1995).

Default judgment was not the result of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect where, when the company's controller received the summons and complaint, he did nothing, and the trial court's finding that the controller's failure to notify outside counsel of the receipt of the summons and complaint did not constitute "mistake" under subdivision (c)(1) of this rule. Nucor Corp. v. Kilman, 358 Ark. 107, 186 S.W.3d 720 (2004).

Default judgment entered against a creditor on a debtor's counterclaim should not have been set aside on the ground that the creditor's attorney mistakenly thought an amended complaint would serve as a response to the counterclaim because the purported mistake was one of law, and an untenable one, based on the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure. Unifund

CCR Partners v. Thornton, 2014 Ark. App. 307 (2014).

Motion for Default Judgment.

Under the circumstances presented in this case, default judgment was required to be preceded by a motion applying for default judgment. In the absence thereof, the circuit court's order denying appellant's motion to set aside the default judgment was subject to reversal. Hunt Mem. Cathedral of Faith v. Union Bank & Trust Co., 2021 Ark. App. 59, 618 S.W.3d 164 (2021).

Necessity of Establishing Damages.

Where a default judgment was entered against a defendant for money owed by defendant and plaintiff to a third party, failure to introduce evidence to establish the amount of the judgment was reversible error, since the amount of damages cannot, under Ark. R. Civ. P. 8, be deemed admitted when not denied in the responsive pleadings, so that it must be established by proof, and this requirement is not changed by subsection (b) of this rule. Rice v. Kroeck, 2 Ark. App. 223, 619 S.W.2d 691 (1981).

Notice.

The trial court had jurisdiction to grant the defendant's motion to set aside the default judgment that had been entered against him even though the 90-day period of Ark. R. Civ. P. 60(b) had expired, because it was granted without giving the defendant, who had answered in the case, a three days' written notice of the hearing on the application for the default as required by subsection (b) of this rule. This constitutes sufficient grounds for setting the judgment aside under Ark. R. Civ. P. 60(c)(7). Magness v. Masonite Corp., 12 Ark. App. 117, 671 S.W.2d 230 (1984).

At least three days notice is required under subsection (b) of this rule; otherwise the application is not timely. Colclasure v. Kansas City Life Ins. Co., 290 Ark. 585, 720 S.W.2d 916 (1986), cert. denied, 481 U.S. 1069, 107 S. Ct. 2462, 95 L. Ed. 2d 871 (1987).

Subsection (b) of this rule does not require that notice be given to a defaulting defendant who has not appeared; perhaps the reason is that it would be superfluous to again serve a defendant who already received one notice but has failed on an ongoing basis to respond. Divelbliss v. Suchor, 311 Ark. 8, 841 S.W.2d 600 (1992).

Although a hearing is required to determine the amount of damages, subsection (b) of this rule does not require that notice of the hearing be given to a defaulting defendant who has not appeared. Tharp v. Smith, 326 Ark. 260, 930 S.W.2d 350 (1996).

Because the healthcare corporation did not receive service of notice that the order remanding the case from a federal court had been filed in state circuit court, the state circuit court's order of default judgment had to be reversed pursuant to subsection (f) of this rule. NCS Healthcare of Ark. v. W.P. Malone, Inc., 350 Ark. 520, 88 S.W.3d 852 (2002).

Trial court was required by subsection (b) of this rule to give a debtor three days notice before hearing a bank's default motion because the debtor personally appeared at the hearing, which was an overt act submitting himself to the trial court's jurisdiction, and the debtor's appearance was made before the bank orally moved for a default judgment. The trial court abused its discretion by granting the bank's motion for a default judgment without first allowing the debtor three days' notice to prepare a defense to the motion. Brooks v. Farmers Bank & Trust Co., 101 Ark. App. 359, 276 S.W.3d 727 (2008).

Purpose.

If, by taking evidence against a party who has neither answered nor appeared, a court could cause a judgment on the merits to be entered against that party, the purpose of subsection (c) of this rule would be subverted; the reason for the amendment of the rule in 1990 was to foster judgments on the merits rather than on technicalities. Harold M. v. Clark, 316 Ark. 439, 872 S.W.2d 410 (1994).

The 1990 amendment to subsection (c) of this rule was intended to liberalize Arkansas practice regarding default judgment. Truhe v. Grimes, 318 Ark. 117, 884 S.W.2d 255 (1994).

Remand from Federal Court.

After remand from the federal court, the "bulk" filing in state court of the federal pleadings, including appellant's answers to appellee's original complaint and amended complaint, were not sufficient to satisfy the requirements of subsection (a) of this rule, thus, appellant's federal answer was not a responsive pleading in the state court proceedings pursuant to subsection (f) of this rule. NCS Healthcare of Ark. v. W.P. Malone, Inc., 350 Ark. 520, 88 S.W.3d 852 (2002).

Given that a city filed an answer in federal court and then filed an amended answer, albeit outside the 30-day time period, to the specific claims raised in state court, a property owner did not demonstrate an abuse of discretion by the circuit court in declining to grant its renewed motion to strike; even assuming the city was still required to file an answer within 30 days of notice of remand from federal court, it was within the circuit court's discretion to grant the motion to strike. Convent Corp. v. City of North Little Rock, 2021 Ark. 7, 615 S.W.3d 706 (2021).

Removal to Federal Court.

While there is no longer a need to comply with state court filing deadlines to avoid default if the case is removed to the federal court, removal is not effected unless the removal documents are filed promptly with the state court. Allstate Ins. Co. v. Bourland, 296 Ark. 488, 758 S.W.2d 700 (1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1006, 109 S. Ct. 1640, 104 L. Ed. 2d 156 (1989), superseded by statute as stated in Hood v. Arkansas School Bd. Ins. Coop., 35 Ark. App. 1, 811 S.W.2d 1 (1991) (decision under prior law).

Sanctions.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in entering summary judgment against a business as a sanction for the business's failure to respond to the state's discovery requests and refusal to appear at a hearing on the state's motion to compel discovery set three days before the scheduled trial date after the business had been granted three continuances of the hearing date; trial court did not have to issue an order compelling discovery before imposing the sanction. Nat'l Front Page v. State, 350 Ark. 286, 86 S.W.3d 848 (2002).

Service of Process.

Plaintiff's attempt at service of process and notice of impending default must be measured against the extremely heavy burden imposed upon him. Meeks v. Stevens, 301 Ark. 464, 785 S.W.2d 18 (1990).

The plaintiff in a motor vehicle accident case was properly granted summary judgment, notwithstanding that the summons was improperly served on the driver of the truck with which the plaintiff collided, rather than the owner of the truck, by which the driver was employed, since the owner waived the defense of insufficiency of process by not raising it as a defense in its answer. Southern Transit Co. v. Collums, 333 Ark. 170, 966 S.W.2d 906 (1998).

Trial court abused its discretion in not granting retailer's motion to set aside a default judgment in builder's third-party breach of contract action because the builder failed to comply with the service of process requirements of Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(d)(8) where it addressed a certified letter to the retailer; a limited liability company was clearly not a "natural person" within the meaning of Rule 4(d)(8), and the letter failed to name a human being as an addressee. Grand Slam Stores, LLC v. L&P Builders, Inc., 92 Ark. App. 210, 212 S.W.3d 6 (2005).

Default judgment in a child support case should have been set aside because service was unquestionably defective where it was effectuated upon a purported father's brother; therefore, a circuit court abused its discretion when it took any action other than a dismissal of the case under Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(i). The father's subsequent participation in enforcement proceedings, including his act of filing for paternity testing, did not validate the void judgment. Iyv

v. Office of Child Support Enforcement, 99 Ark. App. 341, 260 S.W.3d 328 (2007).

Although a debtor alleged an incorrect zip code for a circuit court's address rendered the summons served on her fatally defective, the circuit court properly determined the debtor was not entitled to set aside a default judgment, pursuant to subdivision (c)(2) of this rule, as void because nothing in Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(b) required the court address to appear in the summons and, as such, there was exact compliance with Rule 4. Talley v. Asset Acceptance, LLC, 2011 Ark. App. 757 (2011).

Trial court erred under subsection (c) of this rule in not setting aside a default judgment against appellants in a breach of contract action because the service requirements of Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(b) were not strictly complied with; the summons incorrectly stated that appellants had 20 days to respond when they actually had 30 days to answer because they lived out of state. Gilder v. Cedar Ridge Farms, Ltd, 2013 Ark. App. 686 (2013).

Trial court erred in failing to set aside a default judgment that quieted title in mineral interests to two living trusts where the trusts failed to search the public records of the county seat of the decedents' last known residence, the attempted Internet searches did not amount to a strict compliance with Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(f)(1), and thus, the trusts had failed to conduct a diligent inquiry into the whereabouts of the heirs as required by Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(f). Heirs of Duncan v. Williams Living Trust, 2013 Ark. App. 740 (2013).

Default judgment was to be set aside because the judgment was void for insufficient service of process in that the alternative method of service by e-mail crafted by the circuit court was not reasonably calculated to give actual notice. Steward v. Kuettel, 2014 Ark. 499, 450 S.W.3d 672 (2014).

Trial court erred in denying a mortgagor's motion to set aside the default judgment entered against him in a foreclosure action because the default judgment was void for lack of strict compliance with Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(f); the affidavit and attached exhibits that the assignee of the mortgage submitted in support of the warning order failed to demonstrate a diligent inquiry into the mortgagor's whereabouts. Tenants of 1974 Lakeland Acres Road v. U.S. Bank, 2017 Ark. App. 362, 525 S.W.3d 475 (2017).

Circuit court erred in denying defendant's motion to set aside the default judgment entered against him because plaintiffs' affidavit lacked sufficient detail regarding the efforts made to locate defendant and personally serve him legal process before attempting to constructively serve him using the warning-order method under Ark. R. Civ. P. 4. Thomas v. Robinson, 2018 Ark. App. 550, 562 S.W.3d 905 (2018).

Setting Aside Default Judgments.

Subsection (c) of this rule does not authorize a trial court to vacate a judgment for damages while the judgment on liability stands. Tharp v. Smith, 326 Ark. 260, 930 S.W.2d 350 (1996).

Subsection (c) of this rule requires, in effect, two steps to having a default judgment set aside: first, a defaulting defendant must show one of the four enumerated categories of reasons to have the judgment set aside; and second, if the reason is any other than that the judgment is void, a defaulting defendant must then demonstrate a meritorious defense to the action. Tharp v. Smith, 326 Ark. 260, 930 S.W.2d 350 (1996).

Appellant's argument that the "reason" to set aside a default judgment against him was because he had a meritorious defense and a miscarriage of justice would result if he was not allowed to present it was clearly an attempt to circumvent the dual requirements of subsection (c) of this rule. Tharp v. Smith, 326 Ark. 260, 930 S.W.2d 350 (1996).

Fed. R. Civ. P. 55(c) should be interpreted in accordance with federal case law; thus, under federal law, a district court's grant of a motion to set aside a default judgment was not an appealable final order where the setting-aside paved the way for a trial on the merits and, under similar circumstances, the Arkansas trial court's order setting aside a default judgment, entered more than 90 days after the default judgment was entered, was not a final appealable order. Epting v. Precision Paint & Glass, Inc., 353 Ark. 84, 110 S.W.3d 747 (2003).

Whether default judgments are void is a question of law involving no discretionary rulings by the trial court; accordingly, in cases where an appellant claims that the default judgment is void, the Supreme Court of Arkansas will review a trial court's granting or denial of a motion to set aside default judgment using a de novo standard. Nucor Corp. v. Kilman, 358 Ark. 107, 186 S.W.3d 720 (2004).

Where company contended that a default judgment was void under Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(c)(2) due to insufficiency of service of process and insufficiency of process, the appellate court held that a motion to strike writs of garnishment was not a responsive pleading because it did not address the merits of the case; the purpose of that motion was to prevent appellees from garnishing the company's bank account and, thus, the company had not waived its insufficient service of process argument. Nucor Corp. v. Kilman, 358 Ark. 107, 186 S.W.3d 720 (2004).

Trial court set aside a divorce decree obtained by default where husband failed to strictly comply with the requirements of Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(f) in attempting to perfect service by warning order; further, husband could not appeal from the order setting aside the default judgment while the issue of child custody was still pending as it was not a final order. Littleton v.

Trial court properly dismissed a judgment debtor's lawsuit against a judgment creditor for tortious conduct and other civil causes of action, which sought an injunction against the enforcement of a default judgment that was entered against the debtor in connection with an action by the creditor to recover unpaid legal fees, because the debtor relied incorrectly on Ark. R. Civ. P. 60 as authority for filing a new lawsuit to attack a default judgment, instead of following the procedure set forth in this rule, which provides the exclusive basis for setting aside a default judgment. Meadows v. Nancy E. Pryor, Inc., 90 Ark. App. 258, 205 S.W.3d 199 (2005).

Circuit court properly denied a borrower's motion to set a default judgment in a foreclosure case against her where the warning order included the correct legal description of the property to be affected by the judgment ("Hurricane Lake Estates"), as required by Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(f), even though that description did not match the incorrect legal description provided in the deed of trust and assignment of deed of trust ("Hurricane Lake Estates"). Bloodman v. Bank of America, N.A., 2016 Ark. App. 67, 482 S.W.3d 340 (2016).

Bank's affidavit showed that it had made a diligent inquiry about the borrower's location or address by describing the attempts to serve her, the absence of the word "whereabouts" in the affidavit did not invalidate the warning order, and the borrower offered no evidence of any other address, location, or post office box that the bank should have used. Bloodman v. Bank of America, N.A., 2016 Ark. App. 67, 482 S.W.3d 340 (2016).

Evidence supported the circuit court's decision that one address was appellants' last known address, and thus the service by warning order was effectuated in compliance with Ark. R. Civ. P. 4 and the subsequently entered default judgment was not void for want of service. Morgan v. Big Creek Farms of Hickory Flat, Inc., 2016 Ark. App. 121, 488 S.W.3d 535 (2016).

Circuit court was presented with no evidence that the signature on the order was a forgery or that it had been fraudulently obtained, and thus the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the signature presented no basis for setting aside the default judgment. Morgan v. Big Creek Farms of Hickory Flat, Inc., 2016 Ark. App. 121, 488 S.W.3d 535 (2016).

Rule 56. Summary judgment.

(a) For Claimant. A party seeking to recover upon a claim, counterclaim, or cross-claim or to obtain a declaratory judgment may, after the expiration of 20 days from the commencement of the action or after service of a motion for

When the injured construction worker's complaint in circuit court alleged that the employer failed to provide workers' compensation and the employer failed to appear, the circuit court erred in concluding that it had subject-matter jurisdiction over the worker's complaint; instead, the Workers' Compensation Commission had exclusive, original jurisdiction to determine the facts that established subject-matter jurisdiction. Because the circuit court entered the default judgment order without subject-matter jurisdiction, it was reversed. Stan v. Vences, 2019 Ark. App. 56, 571 S.W.3d 24 (2019).

Standard of Review.

De novo review was the appropriate standard in a case where a buyer sought to have a default judgment set aside based on an argument that a trial court had no authority to order him to quitclaim his property to two sellers in order to satisfy a mortgage in a foreclosure action. Born v. Hodges, 101 Ark. App. 139, 271 S.W.3d 526 (2008).

Unavoidable Casualty.

Where in wrongful death action, defendant's president received copy of the complaint and summons which he alleged he had given to both his attorney and insurance agent, but which they both denied receiving or discussing, there was no unavoidable casualty under subsection (c) of this rule sufficient to set aside default judgment entered against defendant. Capitol City Manor, Inc. v. Culberson, 1 Ark. App. 137, 613 S.W.2d 835 (1981).

Waiver.

There is no provision under Arkansas law for "waiver" of the right to a default judgment. Lewis v. Crowe, 296 Ark. 175, 752 S.W.2d 280 (1988).

Bail bondsman was not entitled to set aside a judgment of bail forfeiture under Ark. R. Civ. P. 60(c) because he failed to seek to set aside the bond-forfeiture judgment until after 90 days had expired and his arguments regarding newly discovered evidence and fraud were not made to the circuit court. This rule, relief from default, had no application in a bail forfeiture proceeding because the bail was deposited in the registry of the court. Buddy York Bail Bonds, Inc. v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 252 (2012).

summary judgment by the adverse party, move with or without supporting affidavits for a summary judgment in his favor upon all or any part thereof. Absent leave of court for good cause shown, the party must file any such motion no later than 45 days before any scheduled trial date.

(b) For Defending Party. A party against whom a claim, counterclaim, or cross-claim is asserted or a declaratory judgment is sought may move with or without supporting affidavits for a summary judgment in his favor as to all or any part thereof. Absent leave of court for good cause shown, the party must file any such motion no later than 45 days before any scheduled trial date.

(c) Motion and Proceedings Thereon. (1) The motion shall specify the issue or issues on which summary judgment is sought and may be supported by pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories and admissions on file, and affidavits. The adverse party shall serve a response and supporting materials, if any, within 21 days after the motion is served. The moving party may serve a reply and supporting materials within 14 days after the response is served. For good cause shown, the court may by order reduce or enlarge the foregoing time periods. No party shall submit supplemental supporting materials after the time for serving a reply, unless the court orders otherwise. The court, on its own motion or at the request of a party, may hold a hearing on the motion not less than 7 days after the time for serving a reply. For good cause shown, the court may by order reduce the foregoing time period.

(2) The judgment sought shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, shows that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law on the issues specifically set forth in the motion. A partial summary judgment, interlocutory in character, may be rendered on any issue in the case, including liability.

(d) Case Not Fully Adjudicated on Motion. If upon motion under this rule judgment is not rendered upon the whole case or for all the relief asked and a trial is necessary, the court, at the hearing of the motion, by examining the pleadings and the evidence before it and by interrogating counsel, shall if practicable ascertain what material facts exist without substantial controversy and what material facts are actually and in good faith controverted. It shall thereupon make an order specifying the facts that appear without substantial controversy, including the extent to which the amount of damages or other relief is not in controversy, and directing such further proceedings in the action as are just. Upon the trial of the action, the facts so specified shall be deemed established, and the trial shall be conducted accordingly.

(e) Form of Affidavits; Further Testimony; Defense Required. Supporting and opposing affidavits shall be made on personal knowledge, shall set forth such facts as would be admissible in evidence, and shall show affirmatively that the affiant is competent to testify to the matters stated therein. Sworn or certified copies of all papers or parts thereof referred to in an affidavit shall be attached thereto or served therewith. The court may permit affidavits to be supplemented or opposed by depositions, answers to interrogatories, or further affidavits. When a motion for summary judgment is made and supported as provided in this rule, an adverse party may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of his pleadings, but his response, by affidavits or as otherwise provided in this rule, must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. If he does not so respond, summary judgment, if appropriate, shall be entered against him.

(f) When Affidavits Are Unavailable. Should it appear from the affidavits of a party opposing the motion that he cannot for reasons stated present by affidavit facts essential to justify his opposition, the court may refuse the application for judgment or may order a continuance to permit affidavits to be obtained or depositions to be taken or discovery to be had or may make such other order as is just.

(g) Affidavits Made in Bad Faith. Should it appear to the satisfaction of the court at any time that any of the affidavits presented pursuant to this rule are presented in bad faith or solely for the purpose of delay, the court shall forthwith order the party employing them to pay to the other party the amount of the reasonable expenses which the filing of the affidavit caused him to incur, including reasonable attorney's fees, and any offending party or attorney may be adjudged guilty of contempt.

HISTORY: Amended February 1, 2001; amended May 25, 2006.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 56:

1. Rule 56 is identical to FRCP 56 and also identical to superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 29-211 (Repl. 1962) which tracked the Federal Rule. This rule makes no changes in Arkansas law.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2001 Amendment:

Subdivision (c) of Rule 56 has been divided into two paragraphs, the first of which is new. Paragraph (1) addresses motion and hearing practice under the rule. Other states have adopted similar provisions. See, e.g., Rule 56(c), Ariz. R. Civ. P.; Rule 56(c), Ind. R. Trial P.; Rule 237(c), Iowa R. Civ. P.; Rule 74.04(c), Mo. R. Civ. P. The original version of the rule led to several problems, including last-minute submissions by the party opposing a motion for summary judgment. The rule provided that the opposing party could submit opposing affidavits at any time "prior to the day of the hearing." By contrast, paragraph (1) establishes a time frame for the parties to follow and makes plain that additional submissions are not permissible without leave of court. As under prior practice, a hearing on the motion is not mandatory in all cases. See Campbell v. Bard, 315 Ark. 366, 868 S.W.2d 62 (1993). However, the new time frame effectively precludes the court from ruling on the motion until after the parties have had an opportunity to present their evidence. Corresponding changes have been made in Rules 12(i) and 78(b) to except summary judgment motions from their requirements.

Paragraph (2) provides for partial summary judgment on any issue in the case, including liability. The term "partial summary judgment" has not heretofore been used in the rule but frequently appears in the cases. See, e.g., City of Russellville v. Banner Real Estate, 326 Ark. 673, 933 S.W.2d 803 (1996). A similar provision, limited to liability, previously appeared in subdivision (c), and summary judgment on some but not all of the issues is plainly contemplated by subdivision (d).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2006 Amendment:

Several parts of Rule 56 governing the timing of motions for summary judgment, the related briefing, and the hearing have been amended. These changes continue the effort to refine the Rule by making summary-judgment practice more fair, predictable, and efficient.

The amendments to subdivisions (a) and (b) eliminate a party's right to seek summary judgment at any time. Instead, absent good cause, a party must move at least 45 days before any scheduled trial date. This deadline allows for full briefing and a hearing on the motion before trial, which should promote more efficient use of judicial resources. In addition, it prevents a party from using a late motion for summary judgment as a stealth motion for continuance.

Subdivision (c)(1) has been amended to allow the circuit court to reduce the time periods for responses and replies. Under the former Rule, the court could only enlarge the time periods. Both reductions and enlargements must now be justified by a showing of good cause. Finally, the presumptive period between the due date for any reply and any hearing has been shortened from 14 to 7 days. This change accommodates the pre-trial deadline for filing the motion, while giving the non-moving party adequate time to prepare for the hearing in light of any reply. Revised subdivision (c)(1) also allows the circuit court to shorten the seven-day period for good cause, for example, scheduling difficulties.

CASE NOTES

Constitutionality.

This rule was not unconstitutional as it did not deny the patient her right to a jury trial where there were no factual disputes; instead, there were differing legal interpretations of undisputed facts. Scamardo v. Sparks Reg'l Med. Ctr., 375 Ark. 300, 289 S.W.3d 903 (2008).

In General.

Summary judgment is an extreme remedy which should only be allowed when it is clear that there is no issue of fact to be litigated. Lee v. Doe, 274 Ark. 467, 626 S.W.2d 353 (1981); Johnson v. Stuckey & Speer, Inc., 11 Ark. App. 33, 665 S.W.2d 904 (1984); Ford v. Cunningham, 291 Ark. 56, 722 S.W.2d 567 (1987); Pinkston v. Lovell, 296 Ark. 543, 759 S.W.2d 20 (1988); McMullan v. Molnaird, 24 Ark. App. 126, 749 S.W.2d 352 (1988); Hatley v. Payne, 25 Ark. App. 8, 751 S.W.2d 20 (1988); Mathews v. Garner, 25 Ark. App. 27, 751 S.W.2d 359 (1988); McCaleb v. National Bank of Commerce, 25 Ark. App. 53, 752 S.W.2d 54 (1988); Muddiman v. Wall, 33 Ark. App. 175, 803 S.W.2d 945 (1991); Dillard v. Resolution Trust Corp., 308 Ark. 357, 824 S.W.2d 387 (1992); Franklin v. Osca, Inc., 308 Ark. 409, 825 S.W.2d 812 (1992); Madden v. Continental Cas. Co., 53 Ark. App. 250, 922 S.W.2d 731 (1996).

A motion for summary judgment cannot be used to submit a disputed question of fact to a trial judge. Walker v. Stephens, 3 Ark. App. 205, 626 S.W.2d 200 (1981).

Under some circumstances a summary judgment motion is an extension of the motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim; while the motion to dismiss alleges the failure to state a claim, the motion for summary judgment, in these circumstances, alleges the failure to have a claim. Joey Brown Interest, Inc. v. Merchants Nat'l Bank, 284 Ark. 418, 683 S.W.2d 601 (1985).

Neither Ark. R. Civ. P. 12 nor this rule authorizes the trial court to summarily dismiss a complaint where there are matters before the court that show there is an issue of fact to be decided. Maas v. Merrell Assocs., 13 Ark. App. 240, 682 S.W.2d 769 (1985); Dickson v. Delhi Seed Co., 26 Ark. App. 83, 760 S.W.2d 382 (1988).

Procedurally, the denial of the motion for summary judgment is not an appealable order even after there has been a trial on the merits.

Cater v. Cater, 311 Ark. 627, 846 S.W.2d 173 (1993).

A summary judgment should only be granted when the state of the evidence as portrayed by the pleadings, affidavits, discovery responses, and admissions on file is such that the nonmoving party is not entitled to a day in court, i.e., when there is not any genuine remaining issued of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Wallace v. Broyles, 332 Ark. 189, 961 S.W.2d 712 (1998).

Trial court properly granted summary judgment to state insurance commissioner on his claim that the insured was not entitled to recover from the state's Guaranty Fund for claims against the insured after the insurance company of the insured was declared to be insolvent; the trial court properly included the net worth of the Nevada corporation that had earlier purchased all of the insured's stock as the Nevada corporation was an "affiliate" whose net worth could be included in determining whether the insured's net worth was less than the $50 million cap required for a claim to be a "covered claim" which the Guaranty Fund would pay, and the fact that the Nevada corporation was an out-of-state resident did not affect that conclusion because Arkansas law only required that the insured be a resident of the state for the purpose of determining the insured's "net worth" and "covered claim" status. Harold Ives Trucking Co. v. Pickens, 355 Ark. 407, 139 S.W.3d 471 (2003).

Affidavits.

Affidavits are not required in support of a response to a properly documented motion for summary judgment. Adams v. Hudspeth Motors, Inc., 266 Ark. 790, 587 S.W.2d 227 (Ct. App. 1979).

The qualification, "as affiant understands it," in an affidavit does not assert the required personal knowledge and cannot withstand a motion for summary judgment. Hughes W. World, Inc. v. Westmoor Mfg. Co., 269 Ark. 300, 601 S.W.2d 826 (1980).

The requirement of personal knowledge in subsection (e) of this rule has no applicability to an expert witness who is, in many instances, testifying to an opinion based entirely on assumed facts. Wolner v. Bogaev, 290 Ark. 299, 718 S.W.2d 942 (1986).

Affidavits supporting motion for summary judgment are to be construed against the movant. McDonald v. Eubanks, 292 Ark. 533, 731 S.W.2d 769 (1987).

Affidavits which are conclusory rather than factual are insufficient. McDonald v. Eubanks, 292 Ark. 533, 731 S.W.2d 769 (1987); Swindle v. Lumbermens Mut. Cas. Co., 315 Ark. 415, 869 S.W.2d 681 (1993).

Subsection (f) of this rule makes evident that the decision to grant a continuance is within the discretion of the trial court. The refusal to grant a continuance will not be reversed absent an abuse of the trial court's discretion. Pinkston v. Lovell, 296 Ark. 543, 759 S.W.2d 20 (1988).

Opposing affidavits filed on the date of hearing are untimely and run afoul of the express provisions of subsection (c) of this rule, as well as the trial court's inherent power to control proceedings before it. Such affidavits and documents need not be considered by the court. McMullan v. Molnaird, 24 Ark. App. 126, 749 S.W.2d 352 (1988).

There is nothing in this rule which prohibits a party from submitting his motion on briefs so long as he has submitted the necessary documents to support the materials contained in the brief. Mathews v. Garner, 25 Ark. App. 27, 751 S.W.2d 359 (1988).

Subsection (e) of this rule does not prohibit or limit the filing of self-serving affidavits, but it does require that affidavits establishing prima facie entitlement to judgment be controverted. Mathews v. Garner, 25 Ark. App. 27, 751 S.W.2d 359 (1988).

Although affidavits for summary judgment are construed against the moving party, once the movant makes a prima facie showing of entitlement, the respondent must meet proof with proof by showing a genuine issue as to a material fact. Guthrie v. Kemp, 303 Ark. 74, 793 S.W.2d 782 (1990).

No affidavit was filed by the plaintiffs substantiating the fact that they were having problems gathering facts to support their opposition to summary judgment, as was their right under subsection (f) of this rule; had they done so, the trial court might well have foregone a decision on summary judgment for an additional period of time pursuant to subsection (f) so that other discovery could be pursued. Jenkins v. International Paper Co., 318 Ark. 663, 887 S.W.2d 300 (1994).

An affidavit which is inherently and blatantly inconsistent with prior deposition testimony may not be used to establish a question of fact to ward off the granting of a summary judgment motion. Caplener v. Bluebonnet Milling Co., 322 Ark. 751, 911 S.W.2d 586 (1995).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in striking affidavits because they were untimely filed; the affidavits referred to discussions the decedent's cousins had with the decedent's business partner before the one-week extension to file affidavits had expired and they were filed more than one week after the summary judgment motion hearing had ended. Graham v. Underwood, 2017 Ark. App. 498, 532 S.W.3d 88 (2017).

In a negligence suit against railroad based on exposure to toxic substances that allegedly resulted in deceased employee's multiple myeloma, where the railroad moved for summary judgment based on a prior release, the circuit court was directed to reconsider the appropriateness of the affidavit of an attorney who represented the employee in the earlier claim against the railroad; the affidavit contained statements of fact, not opinion, the statements were based on the attorney's personal knowledge, and there was no showing that the affidavit was contradicted by prior sworn testimony. Murphy v. Union Pac. R.R., 2019 Ark. App. 169, 574 S.W.3d 676 (2019).

Appellate Review.

On appeal, the appellate court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the one against whom summary judgment was granted. Young v. Paxton, 316 Ark. 655, 873 S.W.2d 546 (1994); Madden v. Continental Cas. Co., 53 Ark. App. 250, 922 S.W.2d 731 (1996).

On appeal, the appellate court determines if summary judgment was proper based on whether the evidence presented by the movant left a material question of fact unanswered. Keller v. Safeco Ins. Co. of Am., 317 Ark. 308, 877 S.W.2d 90 (1994).

Where the motion to dismiss was effectively converted to one for summary judgment under Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b) by the presentation of matters outside the pleadings, its denial was not subject to review on appeal. Amalgamated Clothing & Textile Workers Int'l Union v. Earle Indus., Inc., 318 Ark. 524, 886 S.W.2d 594 (1994).

The denial of a motion for summary judgment is neither reviewable nor appealable. Amalgamated Clothing & Textile Workers Int'l Union v. Earle Indus., Inc., 318 Ark. 524, 886 S.W.2d 594 (1994).

Summary judgment is a remedy that should be granted by the trial court only when it is clear that there is no genuine issue of material fact to be litigated; on appellate review, the appellate court must only decide if the granting of summary judgment was appropriate based on whether the evidentiary items presented by the moving party in support of the motion leaves a material question of fact unanswered. Knowlton v. Ward, 318 Ark. 867, 889 S.W.2d 721 (1994).

The appellate court could not reach the merits of appellant's argument, and therefore affirmed summary judgment, where appellant failed to attach a copy of the contract which formed the basis of the cause of action. Hartford Ins. Co. v. Brewer, 54 Ark. App. 1, 922 S.W.2d 360 (1996).

The court rejected the contention that the trial court erred in granting summary judgment to the defendants because he was not allowed to depose the defendants; although the plaintiff filed a motion requesting that the defendants be made available for depositions, he failed to pursue the matter and failed to bring up the matter in his response to the motion for summary judgment or at the hearing on the motion. Crawford v. Lee County Sch. Dist., 64 Ark. App. 90, 983 S.W.2d 141 (1998).

With regard to the subcontractor's contention that summary judgment was not proper because there were unresolved fact questions regarding representations made by the insurer's agents, the insurer submitted a motion for summary judgment that was supported by a brief and numerous exhibits, and in order to raise a fact question on the point, the subcontractor was required to offer more than mere allegations of factual disputes; however, the case was reversed and remanded on separate grounds. U.S. Fid. & Guar. Co. v. Cont'l Cas. Co., 353 Ark. 834, 120 S.W.3d 556 (2003).

Where clinic and its insurer were completely dismissed from the lawsuit pursuant to the first summary-judgment order and the nonsuit as to the individual doctors excused them in the lawsuit, the order granting summary judgment was final and appealable after the voluntary nonsuit and, as the administrator did not file a notice of appeal within 30 days, the order granting summary judgment could not be reviewed on appeal. Winkler v. Bethell, 362 Ark. 614, 210 S.W.3d 117 (2005).

In parents' medical malpractice action against hospital and doctor, the trial court erred in granting summary judgment for the hospital as the hospital responded to the amended complaint and asserted a limitations defense under Ark. R. Civ. P. 8(c), but as the hospital never raised the issue of insufficient service of process, the hospital waived that defense; however, the doctor never received the amended complaint or responded to it and, thus, did not waive the defense of insufficient service of process, so summary judgment against parents was proper. Posey v. St. Bernard's Healthcare, Inc., 365 Ark. 154, 226 S.W.3d 757 (2006).

Circuit court's denial of summary judgment was appealable where the refusal to grant the nursing home's motion had the effect of determining that it was not entitled to the charitable immunity defense. Progressive Eldercare Services-Saline v. Cauffiel, 2016 Ark. App. 523, 508 S.W.3d 59 (2016).

Applicability to Postconviction Relief Proceedings.

Although proceedings for postconviction relief from a criminal proceeding are civil in nature, the trial court erred in applying the summary judgment provisions of this rule to deny a petition for postconviction relief filed by a defendant in a capital murder case who had been sentenced to death on the grounds that defendant had raised no genuine issue of material fact in support of his petition. Sanders v. State, 352 Ark. 16, 98 S.W.3d 35 (2003).

Argument Not Required.

Nothing in this rule requires that an issue raised in the motion and supporting brief also be orally argued to the trial court in order to obtain a ruling on the merit; therefore, a trial court erred by denying a claim for qualified immunity without deciding the merits of the case based on the position that it was not argued at a hearing; Sullivan v. Coney, 2012 Ark. App. 687 (2012).

Burden of Proof.

The burden in a summary judgment proceeding is on the moving party and cannot be shifted when there is no offer of proof on a controverted issue. Collyard v. American Home Assurance Co., 271 Ark. 228, 607 S.W.2d 666 (1980).

Movant has the burden of showing there is no genuine issue of material fact. Lee v. Doe, 274 Ark. 467, 626 S.W.2d 353 (1981); Walker v. Stephens, 3 Ark. App. 205, 626 S.W.2d 200 (1981); Chick v. Rebsamen Insurance — Springdale, 8 Ark. App. 157, 649 S.W.2d 196 (1983); Johnson v. Stuckey & Speer, Inc., 11 Ark. App. 33, 665 S.W.2d 904 (1984); Township Bldrs., Inc. v. Kraus Constr. Co., 286 Ark. 487, 696 S.W.2d 308 (1985); Ford v. Cunningham, 291 Ark. 56, 722 S.W.2d 567 (1987); McDonald v. Eubanks, 292 Ark. 533, 731 S.W.2d 769 (1987); Gleghorn v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 293 Ark. 289, 737 S.W.2d 451 (1987).

The burden is on the moving party to demonstrate that, even though the facts may be in dispute, reasonable minds could not differ as to the conclusion to be drawn from them. Moeller v. Theis Realty, Inc., 13 Ark. App. 266, 683 S.W.2d 239 (1985).

The burden of proving that there is no genuine issue of material fact is upon the movant, and all proof submitted must be viewed in a light most favorable to the party resisting the motion. Any doubts and inferences must be resolved against the moving party. Pinkston v. Lovell, 296 Ark. 543, 759 S.W.2d 20 (1988); Cross v. Coffman, 304 Ark. 666, 805 S.W.2d 44 (1991).

The burden of sustaining a motion for a summary judgment is always the responsibility of the moving party. Cordes v. Outdoor Living Ctr., Inc., 301 Ark. 26, 781 S.W.2d 31 (1989).

Summary judgment was proper where plaintiff failed to present proof of a material element of his defective product claim under § 4-86-102. Bushong v. Garman Co., 311 Ark. 228, 843 S.W.2d 807 (1992).

The burden of sustaining a motion for summary judgment is always the responsibility of the moving party and all proof submitted must be viewed in a light most favorable to the party resisting the motion, and any doubts and inferences must be resolved against the moving party. Tullock v. Eck, 311 Ark. 564, 845 S.W.2d 517 (1993).

The burden of showing that there is no remaining genuine issue of material fact and entitlement to judgment as a matter of law is upon the summary judgment movant, and all proof submitted must be viewed most favorably to the party resisting the motion; any doubt and all inferences must be resolved against the moving party. Mount Olive Water Ass'n v. City of Fayetteville, 313 Ark. 606, 856 S.W.2d 864 (1993).

The moving party bears the burden of showing that there are no genuine issues of material fact. Young v. Paxton, 316 Ark. 655, 873 S.W.2d 546 (1994).

A party moving for summary judgment must show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Keller v. Safeco Ins. Co. of Am., 317 Ark. 308, 877 S.W.2d 90 (1994).

All proof must be considered in the light most favorable to the non-moving party; and doubts or inferences must be resolved against the moving party. Keller v. Safeco Ins. Co. of Am., 317 Ark. 308, 877 S.W.2d 90 (1994).

All proof submitted must be viewed in a light most favorable to the party resisting the motion, and any doubts and inferences must be resolved against the moving party; only when the movant makes a prima facie showing of entitlement does the burden shift, and then the respondent must meet proof with proof by showing a genuine issue as to a material fact. Knowlton v. Ward, 318 Ark. 867, 889 S.W.2d 721 (1994).

Trial court properly granted home sellers' motion for summary judgment in a suit brought by the home buyers, alleging breach of contract and fraud in the inducement, as there was no genuine issue of material fact when the contract between the parties contained a buyers' disclaimer of reliance that provided that the buyer inspected or had someone else inspect the property and that the buyer was not relying on any other representations; before buying the home, the buyers had hired two inspectors and had relied on the reports of the inspectors. Morris v. Rush, 77 Ark. App. 11, 69 S.W.3d 876 (2002).

In a wrongful death case, summary judgment was properly granted to several landlords in a case where an unknown occupant died from injuries sustained in a gas explosion because there was no duty due to the fact that the occupants were not discovered where a sublease was prohibited, and there was no evidence of willful and wanton conduct. The fact that such proof could have been discovered in later depositions did not matter because the time limitations in subsection (c) of this rule were not met. Miller v. Centerpoint Energy Res. Corp., 98 Ark. App. 102, 250 S.W.3d 574 (2007).

Cause of Action Alleged.

Where no cause of action is alleged upon which relief could be granted, there is no need to consider whether there are issues of material fact relevant to this rule. Brandt v. St. Vincent Infirmary, 287 Ark. 431, 701 S.W.2d 103 (1985).

Where plaintiff did not have a case, summary judgment should have been granted with prejudice. Haase v. Starnes, 323 Ark. 263, 915 S.W.2d 675 (1996).

Construction.

The wording of subsection (c) of this rule gives respondents the right to assume they may submit opposing affidavits up until "the day of the hearing." Campbell ex rel. Chapman v. Bard, 315 Ark. 366, 868 S.W.2d 62 (1993).

While subsection (c) of this rule plainly intimates that the opposing party is entitled to 10 days notice before a ruling on a motion for summary judgment, the Supreme Court has hesitated to formalize that interpretation of the rule. Campbell ex rel. Chapman v. Bard, 315 Ark. 366, 868 S.W.2d 62 (1993).

The standard for granting a directed verdict under Ark. R. Civ. P. 50 is somewhat different from the summary judgment standard under subsection (c) of this rule. Wallace v. Broyles, 332 Ark. 189, 961 S.W.2d 712 (1998).

Subsection (c) of this rule contains no requirement that a statement of undisputed facts accompany a motion for summary judgment. Davis v. Little Rock Sch. Dist., 92 Ark. App. 174, 211 S.W.3d 587 (2005).

Continuance.

The continuance granted by subsection (f) of this rule is a matter within the trial court's discretion, and a refusal to grant such a continuance will not be reversed absent an abuse of that discretion. Harvison v. Charles E. Davis & Assocs., 310 Ark. 104, 835 S.W.2d 284 (1992).

Subsection (f) of this rule makes the decision on whether to grant a continuance a matter of discretion with the trial court. Jenkins v. International Paper Co., 318 Ark. 663, 887 S.W.2d 300 (1994).

In a dispute regarding voting in a bank holding company, the trial court did not err by refusing to grant a continuance and a stay before granting summary judgment because there was no indication that the issues considered in the case necessitated any further inquiry into the surrounding facts and circumstances. Bennett v. Lonohe Bancshares, Inc., 356 Ark. 371, 155 S.W.3d 15 (2004).

Effect of Oral Testimony.

Oral testimony is not provided for in this rule and cannot be considered; accordingly, where no affidavits are filed in support of a motion for summary judgment, the court must rely solely on the original pleadings to determine if summary judgment should be granted. Montgomery Ward & Co. v. Credit, 274 Ark. 66, 621 S.W.2d 855 (1981).

This rule does not permit supplementation of the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, admissions, and affidavits with oral testimony in considering whether summary judgment is appropriate. Dixie Furn. Co. v. Arkansas Power & Light Co., 19 Ark. App. 160, 718 S.W.2d 120 (1986); McMullan v. Molnaird, 24 Ark. App. 126, 749 S.W.2d 352 (1988); Mathews v. Garner, 25 Ark. App. 27, 751 S.W.2d 359 (1988).

Order of circuit court entered following hearing on motion for summary judgment in which circuit court heard testimony would be treated as a judgment following a bench trial. Hannon v. Armored Sch. Dist. # 9, 329 Ark. 267, 946 S.W.2d 950 (1997).

Evidence in Support of Motion.

Evidence in support of motion for summary judgment must be viewed most favorably to the party resisting the motion, and any doubts and inferences must be resolved against the moving party. Cummings, Inc. v. Beardsley, 271 Ark. 596, 609 S.W.2d 66 (1980); Walker v. Stephens, 3 Ark. App. 205, 626 S.W.2d 200 (1981); Storthz v. Commercial Nat'l Bank, 276 Ark. 10, 631 S.W.2d 613 (1982); Leigh Winham, Inc. v. Reynolds Ins. Agency, 279 Ark. 317, 651 S.W.2d 74 (1983); Rowland v. Gastroenterology Assocs., 280 Ark. 278, 657 S.W.2d 536 (1983); Chick v. Rebsamen Insurance — Springdale, 8 Ark. App. 157, 649 S.W.2d 196 (1983); Johnson v. Stuckey & Speer, Inc., 11 Ark. App. 33, 665 S.W.2d 904 (1984); Township Bldrs., Inc. v. Kraus Constr. Co., 286 Ark. 487, 696 S.W.2d 308 (1985); McCaleb v. National Bank of Commerce, 25 Ark. App. 53, 752 S.W.2d 54 (1988).

When a party cannot present proof on an essential element of his claim, there is no remaining genuine issue of material fact, and the party moving for a summary judgment is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Short v. Little Rock Dodge, Inc., 297 Ark. 104, 759 S.W.2d 553 (1988).

On a motion for summary judgment, the evidence must be viewed in the light most favorable to the opposing party. Cordes v. Outdoor Living Ctr., Inc., 301 Ark. 26, 781 S.W.2d 31 (1989).

By going beyond the pleadings, discovery, and affidavits, the trial court erred for purposes of summary judgment, and the procedure followed did not fall within the specific parameters of this rule. Godwin v. Churchman, 305 Ark. 520, 810 S.W.2d 34 (1991).

Answers to interrogatories are admissible for consideration in summary judgment proceedings. Piercy v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 311 Ark. 424, 844 S.W.2d 337 (1993).

The trial court may only consider pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, for summary judgment purposes. Pyle v. Robertson, 313 Ark. 692, 858 S.W.2d 662 (1993).

Under subsections (c) and (e) of this rule, documents incorporated in the pleadings, which went beyond "mere allegations or denials," should have been examined and considered by the trial court as it entertained a motion for summary judgment. Henry v. Gaines-Derden Enters., Inc., 314 Ark. 542, 863 S.W.2d 828 (1993).

Transcript of trial testimony is as reliable as a transcript of deposition testimony or an affidavit, both of which may be considered in summary judgment proceedings under the provisions of this rule. Laird v. Shelnut, 348 Ark. 632, 74 S.W.3d 206 (2002).

This rule does not require a party to attach supporting documents to a motion for summary judgment in order for those documents to become part of the record, and the Arkansas Supreme Court will not extend its previous holdings to sanction such an absurd result. Laird v. Shelnut, 348 Ark. 632, 74 S.W.3d 206 (2002).

Trial court erred in granting summary judgment to a clinic in a wife's medical malpractice action brought after her husband died after surgery where, in deciding whether to grant summary judgment, the trial court weighed the evidence and determined that the wife's experts were not credible and the evidence presented by the wife, which should have been ruled admissible, clearly established the existence of genuine issues of material fact as to whether her husband's surgeon breached his standard of care when operating on the husband and whether the clinic knew or should have known that the surgeon would pose an unreasonable risk of harm to patients. Turner v. Northwest Ark. Neurosurgery Clinic, P.A., 84 Ark. App. 93, 133 S.W.3d 417 (2003).

Where both parties moved for summary judgment in an action wherein a bank sought to recover from a physician under a limited commercial guaranty agreement, and both parties proceeded on the same legal theory and under the same material facts, the trial court correctly determined that the issue was one of law to be decided by the court. Cranfill v. Union Planters Bank, N.A., 86 Ark. App. 1, 158 S.W.3d 703 (2004).

All evidence submitted in the course of summary-judgment proceedings must be under oath. Davis v. Schneider Nat'l, Inc., 2013 Ark. App. 737, 431 S.W.3d 321 (2013).

Trial court erred as a procedural matter in granting summary judgment, because a letter from appellant was not under oath, nor was the document in the form of an affidavit, and therefore it was not admissible for consideration by the trial court in the summary judgment proceeding. As it was clear from the record that the trial court did consider the letter in making its ruling, reversal was required. Am. Gamebird Research Educ. & Dev. Found., Inc. v. Burton, 2017 Ark. App. 297, 521 S.W.3d 176, dismissed without prejudice, Burton v. Am. Gamebird Research Educ. & Dev. Found., 2017 Ark. App. 283 (2017).

Failure to File Formal Response.

Summary judgment is not appropriate where genuine issues of material fact exist or where reasonable minds could differ as to the interpretation of the facts as shown by the pleadings, even if no formal response to the motion has been filed. Inge v. Walker, 70 Ark. App. 114, 15 S.W.3d 348 (2000).

Hearsay Evidence.

In a motion for summary judgment the court may rely upon a hearsay statement in an affidavit, presented by the nonmoving party, which may constitute a declaration against interest, and which may be admissible at trial, to show that there is a disputed question of fact in the case because the burden of proving that there is no genuine issue of material fact rests on the moving party, and the opposing party is entitled to all of the favorable inferences that reasonably may be drawn from the papers before the court. Baxley v. Colonial Ins. Co., 31 Ark. App. 235, 792 S.W.2d 355 (1990).

It was improper for chancellor to exclude evidence in affidavits of opponents to summary judgment motion which he suspected was inadmissible hearsay, without ruling on its admissibility under the present-intent exception to the hearsay rule. Jones v. Abraham, 58 Ark. App. 17, 946 S.W.2d 711 (1997).

In an action involving endorser liability, statements contained in an affidavit in opposition to summary judgment were properly excluded because the company was unable to show that the statements fell under any hearsay exception. Holt Bonding Co. v. First Fed. Bank, 82 Ark. App. 8, 110 S.W.3d 298 (2003).

Issue of Fact.

Summary judgment motion and supporting documents did not show the lack of a remaining genuine issue of material fact as to those allegations. Selby v. Burgess, 289 Ark. 491, 712 S.W.2d 898 (1986).

In considering a motion for summary judgment, a judge may consider pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with affidavits, if any, to determine whether there is a genuine issue as to any material fact and whether the moving party is entitled to summary judgment. Hallmark Cards, Inc. v. Peevy, 293 Ark. 594, 739 S.W.2d 691 (1987); McCaleb v. National Bank of Commerce, 25 Ark. App. 53, 752 S.W.2d 54 (1988).

Summary judgment based upon failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted is different from summary judgment based upon a lack of disputed material facts, which is the failure to have a claim; when summary judgment is granted because of failure to state a claim, the dismissal should be without prejudice in order to afford the plaintiff-appellant a chance to plead further. Bushong v. Garman Co., 311 Ark. 228, 843 S.W.2d 807 (1992).

Where there were no questions of fact to be determined and the parties agreed upon and stipulated to the relevant facts and exhibits, thereby acknowledging the truth of such facts, the chancellor clearly treated the motion as one to dismiss for failure to state facts upon which relief could be granted, rather than as a motion for summary judgment. Daniel v. Jones, 332 Ark. 489, 966 S.W.2d 226 (1998).

Trial court erred in granting a daughter's motion for summary judgment and in finding that the daughter's rights in property that she held as a joint tenant with her deceased father were superior to the father's widow's homestead rights in the property; genuine issues of fact remained, such as whether the widow had lived on the property for all 14 years, or whether she had left the property to reside elsewhere. Rogers v. Lamb, 347 Ark. 102, 60 S.W.3d 456 (2001).

Although the existence of a joint enterprise was ordinarily a question for the jury, summary judgment was proper where it was abundantly clear that the parties testified in agreement on the essential factual question, the facts showing that the first element of a joint enterprise, the common object and purpose to the undertaking, was undisputed and, with respect to the second element of a joint enterprise, both parties affirmed that every employee in the rental car had an equal right to direct and govern the movements and conduct of each other in respect to the common object and purpose of the undertaking, which was to return home from their job of delivering vehicles. Yant v. Woods, 353 Ark. 786, 120 S.W.3d 574 (2003).

Where the non-movant presented evidence in the form of an affidavit that the water areas at issue had some recreational usefulness, which intimated that the water areas could be navigable and raised a question of fact, summary judgment was erroneously entered. Ark. River Rights v. Echubby Lake Hunting Club, 83 Ark. App. 276, 126 S.W.3d 738 (2003).

Motion to Dismiss.

In distinguishing between motions to dismiss and motions for summary judgment, it is incorrect for a trial judge to base his or her decision whether to grant summary judgment on factual allegations made in the briefs and exhibits. Pyle v. Robertson, 313 Ark. 692, 858 S.W.2d 662 (1993).

A motion to dismiss was converted into a motion for summary judgment when the court considered affidavits and other documents outside the pleadings. Stapleton v. M.D. Limbaugh Constr. Co., 333 Ark. 381, 969 S.W.2d 648 (1998).

Writ of prohibition was granted because a circuit court was wholly without jurisdiction to decide whether the Arkansas Workers' Compensation Act applied since there was a conflict over the narrow exception to the exclusivity doctrine; moreover, there was no adequate remedy since a motion for summary judgment was not subject to appeal. A motion to dismiss was treated as such since matters outside of the pleadings were considered. Get Rid of It Ark., Inc. v. Hughes, 368 Ark. 535, 247 S.W.3d 838 (2007).

Former patient argued that trial court's dismissal of her complaint against a hospital should have been treated as based on summary judgment under subsection (c) of this rule; however, because the trial court proceeding was at all times treated as a hearing on a motion to dismiss under Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) and the patient never asked the trial court to consider the hospital's motion as one for summary judgment, that argument was not considered on appeal. Alvarado v. St. Mary-Rogers Mem'l Hosp., Inc., 99 Ark. App. 104, 257 S.W.3d 583 (2007).

Notice.

Because in cases involving redemption of tax delinquent lands, strict compliance with the requirement of notice of the tax sales themselves is required before an owner can be deprived of his property, before allowing summary judgment the appellate court must be sure that proper notice was communicated before a party is entitled to judgment. Pyle v. Robertson, 313 Ark. 692, 858 S.W.2d 662 (1993).

Where counsel had been permitted to withdraw by court order and new counsel had not yet entered the case, it was error for the trial court to act on the pending motion for summary judgment while plaintiff lacked representation without adequate notice that the court was about to do so. Campbell ex rel. Chapman v. Bard, 315 Ark. 366, 868 S.W.2d 62 (1993).

Trial court erred by sua sponte granting summary judgment under this rule because, even though a purported owner filed a motion for summary judgment relating to the navigability of an adjoining river, it was not on notice that it needed to meet proof with proof regarding the amount and significance of the recreational use on its property. Nichols v. Culotches

Bay Navigation Rights Comm., LLC, 2009 Ark. App. 365, 309 S.W.3d 218 (2009).

Trial court's consideration of evidentiary materials beyond the pleadings converted what was essentially an Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(c) request for relief into a summary-judgment situation pursuant to this rule. Because the trial court notified the parties of its intentions, and both parties responded by submitting evidentiary materials along with their legal arguments, it did not err as a matter of procedure in considering whether the issues in question were ripe for summary judgment. York v. York, 2010 Ark. App. 343, 374 S.W.3d 827 (2010).

Partial Adjudication on Motion.

Where the trial court did not grant summary judgment in the whole case, but simply determined what it thought to be the controverted issues and continued the case for a jury trial, such procedure was contemplated by subsection (d) of this rule and was not the equivalent of a final determination of the case so as to constitute an appealable order. Heffner v. Harrod, 278 Ark. 188, 644 S.W.2d 579 (1983).

Purpose.

The object of summary judgment proceedings is not to try the issues, but to determine if there are any issues to be tried, and if there is any doubt whatsoever, the motion should be denied. Walker v. Stephens, 3 Ark. App. 205, 626 S.W.2d 200 (1981); Rowland v. Gastroenterology Assocs., 280 Ark. 278, 657 S.W.2d 536 (1983); Township Bldrs., Inc. v. Kraus Constr. Co., 286 Ark. 487, 696 S.W.2d 308 (1985); Wolner v. Bogaev, 290 Ark. 299, 718 S.W.2d 942 (1986); Muddiman v. Wall, 33 Ark. App. 175, 803 S.W.2d 945 (1991).

The purpose of the summary judgment rule is expeditiously to determine cases without necessity for formal trial where there is no substantial issue of fact, and it is in the nature of an inquiry to determine whether genuine issues of fact exist; if no factual dispute exists and the complaint does not state a cause of action, it should be disposed of by summary judgment rather than exposing the litigants to unnecessary delay, work, and expense in going to trial when the trial judge would be bound to direct a verdict in movant's favor after all the evidence is adduced. Joey Brown Interest, Inc. v. Merchants Nat'l Bank, 284 Ark. 418, 683 S.W.2d 601 (1985).

Response to Motion.

When movant makes a prima facie showing of entitlement to a summary judgment, the respondent must meet proof with proof by showing a genuine issue as to a material fact. Hughes W. World, Inc. v. Westmoor Mfg. Co., 269 Ark. 300, 601 S.W.2d 826 (1980); Cummings, Inc. v. Beardsley, 271 Ark. 596, 609 S.W.2d 66 (1980); Storthz v. Commercial Nat'l

Bank, 276 Ark. 10, 631 S.W.2d 613 (1982); Chick v. Rebsamen Insurance — Springdale, 8 Ark. App. 157, 649 S.W.2d 196 (1983); Johnson v. Stuckey & Speer, Inc., 11 Ark. App. 33, 665 S.W.2d 904 (1984); Pruitt v. Cargill, Inc., 284 Ark. 474, 683 S.W.2d 906 (1985); McMullan v. Molnaird, 24 Ark. App. 126, 749 S.W.2d 352 (1988); Mathews v. Garner, 25 Ark. App. 27, 751 S.W.2d 359 (1988); Dillard v. Resolution Trust Corp., 308 Ark. 357, 824 S.W.2d 387 (1992).

If a dismissal motion or motion for judgment on the pleadings is treated as one for summary judgment, it should not be granted if a fact question remains. Sisson v. Ragland, 294 Ark. 629, 745 S.W.2d 620 (1988).

Once the moving party has demonstrated prima facie that no material issue of fact remains, then the defending party must respond, showing facts which would be admissible in evidence to create a factual issue. Dixie Ins. Co. v. Joe Works Chevrolet, Inc., 298 Ark. 106, 766 S.W.2d 4 (1989).

The failure to respond to the untimely motion for summary judgment did not obligate the trial judge to enter summary judgment. Karnes v. Trumbo, 28 Ark. App. 34, 770 S.W.2d 199 (1989).

Where a non-movant's reponse was filed less than 10 working days after it was due, no previous extension had been granted, and the response was filed almost 60 days before the hearing was held, the trial court did not err in granting the non-movant an extension of time to respond to the motion for summary judgment. Ark. River Rights v. Echubby Lake Hunting Club, 83 Ark. App. 276, 126 S.W.3d 738 (2003).

Standard for Appellate Review.

Appellate court needs only to decide if the granting of summary judgment was appropriate based on whether the evidentiary items presented by the appellee in support of the motion left a material question of fact unanswered. Barracrough v. Arkansas Power & Light Co., 268 Ark. 1026, 597 S.W.2d 861 (Ct. App. 1980).

It would be error for a court on motion for summary judgment to consider any allegations brought out for the first time in the parties' briefs and exhibits attached thereto, but this does not imply that the parties cannot submit briefs in support of a motion for summary judgment or that the court ought not entertain argument by counsel on the motion. Eldridge v. Board of Cor., 298 Ark. 467, 768 S.W.2d 534 (1989).

When an order denying a motion for summary judgment is appealed, the test is whether the trial court abused its discretion in denying the motion. Karnes v. Trumbo, 28 Ark. App. 34, 770 S.W.2d 199 (1989).

Review on appeal of a summary judgment is limited and focuses on the pleadings, affidavits and other documents filed by the parties in support of their respective arguments. Pyle v. Robertson, 313 Ark. 692, 858 S.W.2d 662 (1993).

If a moving party supports its motion for summary judgment by making a prima facie showing of an absence of factual issues and entitlement to judgment as a matter of law, and the adverse party fails to set forth specific facts showing a genuine issue of material fact, then the appellate court will not say the trial judge erred in granting summary judgment. Pyle v. Robertson, 313 Ark. 692, 858 S.W.2d 662 (1993).

Normally, on a summary judgment appeal, the evidence is viewed most favorably for the party resisting the motion and any doubts and inferences are resolved against the moving party, but in a case where the parties agree on the facts that a rule is inapplicable, the appellate court simply determines whether the appellee was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Earp v. Benton Fire Dep't, 52 Ark. App. 66, 914 S.W.2d 781 (1996).

Statute of Limitations.

Arkansas has long adhered to the traditional occurrence rule in legal malpractice; thus where plaintiff did not allege that her attorneys concealed their alleged wrongdoing, and she was not prevented from bringing suit, the trial court's finding that her case was barred by the three-year statute of limitations and the grant of summary judgment was correct. Ragar v. Brown, 332 Ark. 214, 964 S.W.2d 372 (1998).

Summary Judgment Improper.

Summary judgment held not warranted. Camp v. Elmore, 271 Ark. 407, 609 S.W.2d 86 (Ct. App. 1980); Taurus Leasing Corp. v. Howard, 272 Ark. 323, 614 S.W.2d 502 (1981); Lee v. Doe, 274 Ark. 467, 626 S.W.2d 353 (1981); Findley Mach. Co. v. Miller, 3 Ark. App. 264, 625 S.W.2d 542 (1981); Slayton v. Brunner, 276 Ark. 143, 633 S.W.2d 29 (1982); Rowland v. Gastroenterology Assocs., 280 Ark. 278, 657 S.W.2d 536 (1983); Chick v. Rebsamen Insurance — Springdale, 8 Ark. App. 157, 649 S.W.2d 196 (1983); Johnson v. Stuckey & Speer, Inc., 11 Ark. App. 33, 665 S.W.2d 904 (1984); Township Bldrs., Inc. v. Kraus Constr. Co., 286 Ark. 487, 696 S.W.2d 308 (1985); Wolner v. Bogaev, 290 Ark. 299, 718 S.W.2d 942 (1986); Gleghorn v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 293 Ark. 289, 737 S.W.2d 451 (1987); City of Fort Smith v. Driggers, 294 Ark. 311, 742 S.W.2d 921 (1988); Baxley v. Colonial Ins. Co., 31 Ark. App. 235, 792 S.W.2d 355 (1990); Register v. Oaklawn Jockey Club, Inc., 306 Ark. 318, 811 S.W.2d 315, modified, 306 Ark. 321, 821 S.W.2d 475 (1991); Hood v. Arkansas Sch. Bd. Ins. Coop., 35 Ark. App. 1, 811 S.W.2d 1 (1991); Brooks v. City of Benton, 308 Ark. 571, 826 S.W.2d 259 (1992); Hickson v. Saig, 309 Ark. 231, 828 S.W.2d 840

(1992); Lively v. Libbey Mem. Physical Medical Ctr., 311 Ark. 41, 841 S.W.2d 609 (1992).

It is error for the trial court to grant summary judgment to defendants where the plaintiff's interrogatories and requests for production of documents have not been answered. First Nat'l Bank v. Newport Hosp. & Clinic, 281 Ark. 332, 663 S.W.2d 742 (1984); Pults v. City of Springdale, 23 Ark. App. 182, 745 S.W.2d 144 (1988).

Where, even if the evidence was characterized as the plaintiffs would have it, it would not prove a claim of the tort of bad faith, the court properly granted summary judgment. Stevenson v. Union Std. Ins. Co., 294 Ark. 651, 746 S.W.2d 39 (1988).

Grant of summary judgment was erroneous. Muddiman v. Wall, 33 Ark. App. 175, 803 S.W.2d 945 (1991).

When the matter of a legal duty was the subject of a construction contract which was ambiguous as to the parties' intent, a question of fact was presented, precluding summary judgment in a wrongful death action. Elkins v. Arkla, Inc., 312 Ark. 280, 849 S.W.2d 489 (1993).

The evidence presented on the issue of whether the statute of limitations barred the claim did not entitle the defendants to a summary judgment. Green v. National Health Lab., Inc., 316 Ark. 5, 870 S.W.2d 707 (1994).

In attorneys' action for declaratory judgment that malpractice carrier was liable on its policy, summary judgment in favor of carrier was improper where there were questions of fact as to whether the attorneys' actions related to the practice of law, whether, on the underlying claim, an attorney/client relationship was established, and whether attorneys' actions fell within the policy exclusions. Madden v. Continental Cas. Co., 53 Ark. App. 250, 922 S.W.2d 731 (1996).

Requirement that an oral contract to make a will be proven by clear, cogent and convincing evidence did not apply at the summary judgment level, and it was error for chancellor to award summary judgment based upon this heightened standard of proof required for oral contracts. Jones v. Abraham, 58 Ark. App. 17, 946 S.W.2d 711 (1997).

The trial court should not have granted a motion for summary judgment prior to a hearing set on the motion, where the opposing party was seeking to complete discovery before the motion, unless it clearly appeared that the opposing party could produce no proof contrary to that advanced by the movant. Ingram v. Chandler, 63 Ark. App. 1, 971 S.W.2d 801 (1998).

A court may deny a motion for summary judgment based on the lack of credibility of the moving party's supporting evidence. Clark v. Progressive Ins. Co., 64 Ark. App. 313, 984 S.W.2d 54 (1998).

In an action for breach of contract based on insurer's failure to pay on a fire loss claim, the trial court erred in granting summary judgment in favor of the insurer by finding that the insurance policy had been rescinded and void due to a material misrepresentation made by the insured in the insurance application; there were genuine issues of material fact as to whether the insured answered "no" to the questions on the application regarding prior fire loss, or was even aware of the application, and summary judgment was improper. Buie v. Certain Underwriters at Lloyds of London, 79 Ark. App. 344, 87 S.W.3d 832 (2002).

Trial court erred in granting summary judgment to a county in connection with a cooperative's action seeking damages for an easement encroachment because whether the county, the cooperative, or both possessed a right-of-way in the land in question had not been determined by the trial court and, thus, factual issues remained. Craighead Elec. Coop. Corp. v. Craighead County, 352 Ark. 76, 98 S.W.3d 414 (2003).

Trial court erred in granting a potential employer's motion for summary judgment in a negligence action because it did not have jurisdiction to determine if the claim was covered by the provisions of the Arkansas Workers' Compensation Act; the evidence failed to clearly show which employer an employee was working for on the date of an accident. Johnson v. Union Pac. R.R., 352 Ark. 534, 104 S.W.3d 745 (2003).

Where injured person, a volunteer firefighter, responded to an accident scene in his own car and was injured while obtaining information from inside the wrecked vehicle, whether his injuries were caused by an accident "arising out of the operation, maintenance or use of an underinsured motor vehicle," was a question for the jury to resolve. Hisaw v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 353 Ark. 668, 122 S.W.3d 1 (2003).

Administratrix, wife of the decedent, who sought to divorce the decedent but reconciled shortly before his death, convinced the trial court the monies in a transfer-on-death account (TOD account) naming children from the decedent's former marriage as the beneficiaries was a fraudulent transfer; however, the decedent's children presented compelling facts that the account was separate property owned by the decedent, and the trial court erred in granting summary judgment in favor of the administratrix. Ginsburg v. Ginsburg, 353 Ark. 816, 120 S.W.3d 567 (2003).

Subcontractor's insurance policy defined an "occurrence" as "an accident," and the appellate court held that the remaining fact question which had to be resolved before coverage could be determined was whether the subcontractor's workmanship on the major retailer's projects constituted an "accident"; accordingly, summary judgment for the insurer was reversed, and the matter remanded to resolve the issue. U.S. Fid. & Guar. Co. v. Cont'l Cas. Co., 353 Ark. 834, 120 S.W.3d 556 (2003).

In insurer's malpractice action against the insured's attorney for failing to timely appeal a judgment against the insured, the trial court in the underlying jury trial improperly refused to allow the insured to fully develop testimony from a mechanic regarding the physical condition of the truck before the accident, which would have been grounds for reversal, and the trial court erred in excluding proffered testimony of an accident reconstructionist expert, which also would have been reversible error; therefore, the trial court's grant of summary judgment for the attorney on the issue of malpractice was reversed. Southern Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. Co. v. Daggett, 354 Ark. 112, 118 S.W.3d 525 (2003).

In a victim's action against a perpetrator's employer arising from the perpetrator's rape and attempted murder of the victim, partial summary judgment was improperly granted as to the claims alleging negligent supervision and negligent retention because there was evidence that another customer had attempted to report the perpetrator's improper behavior to the employer in the past and that the employer had not followed up on the report. Saine v. Comcast Cablevision of Ark., Inc., 354 Ark. 492, 126 S.W.3d 339 (2003).

In a personal injury case, where a workers' compensation commission determined that the injured visitor was not performing employment services when she fell and that she had not proven that the fall caused her injuries, it was error to grant two hotels summary judgment based on collateral estoppel grounds because a court of appeals affirmed on the issue of work-related duties but specifically declined to address the causation issue on appeal; thus, because the decision was based on two alternative, independent grounds and the decision was affirmed on appeal on only one of the grounds, collateral estoppel precluded only that ground that was affirmed on appeal. Beaver v. John Q. Hammons Hotels, L.P., 355 Ark. 359, 138 S.W.3d 664 (2003).

Trial court erred in granting summary judgment to an insured in a declaratory judgment action concerning insurance coverage where there was a triable issue of fact as to whether an insurance agent ever asked the insured about prior insurance claims. Neill v. Nationwide Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 355 Ark. 474, 139 S.W.3d 484 (2003).

Injured worker testified that he fell because there was no landing area behind the door into the greenhouse and the facts established that, because the door opened away from the person entering the greenhouse, a reasonable person might well have taken a couple of steps forward while pushing the door open; however, even if there were no disputed questions of fact regarding whether the worker had knowledge of the dangerous condition or whether the stairs were an obvious danger, reasonable men could have reached different conclusions from the facts regarding the duty owed by the premises owner, and summary judgment was inappropriate. Van DeVeer v. RTJ, Inc., 81 Ark. App. 379, 101 S.W.3d 881 (2003).

Trial court erred in granting summary judgment in a negligence action brought by a woman who slipped and fell on a wet floor in a hotel while attending a seminar in connection with her employment; prior decision of the Arkansas Workers' Compensation Commission denying the woman's claim for workers' compensation on the dual grounds that the woman was not performing employment services at the time of the injury and that the woman failed to prove that her herniated disc was caused by the fall did not collaterally estop the woman from relitigating the causation issue because the appellate decision affirming the decision in the workers' compensation action was based solely on the employment issue and did not address causation. Beaver v. John Q. Hammons Hotels, Inc., 81 Ark. App. 413, 102 S.W.3d 903, superseded, Beaver v. John Q. Hammons Hotels, L.P., 355 Ark. 359, 138 S.W.3d 664 (2003).

In employee's suit against former employer arising out of employee's termination for possession of store property, summary judgment was improper on the claim of intrusion and invasion of privacy because, where the former employer's loss prevention officer did not leave the former employee's home after the latter thrice refused to consent to a search for store property and a deputy sat in the driveway, a factual issue existed as to whether the employee's consent subsequently was voluntarily given. Addington v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 81 Ark. App. 441, 105 S.W.3d 369 (2003).

Summary judgment was improper in a negligence action arising from a slip and fall where a wedding reception guest fell on a slippery spot on the floor of the owner's property and the guest raised the issue of whether her fall was proximately caused by the owner's method of waxing the floor, namely, whether the wax products instructions were followed. Newberg v. Next Level Events, Inc., 82 Ark. App. 1, 110 S.W.3d 332 (2003).

Summary judgment dismissing a commercial tenant's suit against his landlord for personal injury occurring when the tenant stepped on a loose board on a deck was improper because there were issues of fact as to whether the lease created a duty on the part of the landlord to maintain the deck or whether the landlord assumed the duty by its conduct of having its employees patrol the deck and make minor repairs. Denton v. Pennington, 82 Ark. App. 179, 119 S.W.3d 519 (2003).

Trial court erred when it granted summary judgment to a grocery store in a shopper's suit for malicious prosecution where the evidence was in dispute as to whether there was a knowing concealment upon her person of the unpurchased books and a magazine and the shopper had been found not guilty at her trial. Miller v. Kroger Co., 82 Ark. App. 281, 105 S.W.3d 789 (2003).

Allowing an insurer to assert its right to a lien against the tortfeasor as well as its insured served to further the intent of § 11-9-410 where the insurer was denied its statutory right to either participate in an action against the tortfeasor brought by the insured or to have notice of the settlement and an opportunity to be heard; the trial court was incorrect in finding that a release signed by the insured operated to bar any claims by the insurer against the tortfeasor and it was immaterial that the insurer failed to give notice of its claim to the tortfeasor's insurance company and, thus, the grant of summary judgment to the tortfeasor was improper. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Whitaker, 83 Ark. App. 412, 128 S.W.3d 473 (2003).

Summary judgment was improperly granted in favor of the heir in the estate administrator's third-party complaint where claim preclusion could not apply; the administrator had not yet had a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issues and the filing of the lawsuits by the original plaintiffs was a subsequent event giving rise to a new claim that was not barred by the prior judgment. Cox v. Keahey, 84 Ark. App. 121, 133 S.W.3d 430 (2003).

Uninsured motorist policy that relieved an insured of the burden of proving that another driver was uninsured only in cases where there was actual physical contact does not violate Arkansas public policy because the policy exceeds the requirements of § 23-89-403; therefore, a trial court erred in granting summary judgment in favor of an insured in a case involving an insurer's failure to pay uninsured motorist benefits where the insured sustained injuries after running off the road due to the negligence of an unidentified driver. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Henderson, 356 Ark. 335, 150 S.W.3d 276 (2004).

Summary judgment was improperly granted in favor of the city where, although participation by the city in a police officers' retirement plan was discretionary, the trial court should have determined whether the adoption of another plan was similar in purpose to § 24-10-302 to determine if there was a violation of the statute. Gonzales v. City of DeWitt, 357 Ark. 10, 159 S.W.3d 298 (2004).

Where two insurers were potentially liable for damages in a nursing home negligence suit, but one of the insurers took over the defense in the negligence trial, it assumed the burden of apportionment of those damages; however, the trial court nevertheless erred in granting summary judgment and in apportioning the damages 25 percent to that insurer without having provided its reasoning. MedMarc Cas. Ins. Co. v. Forest Healthcare, Inc., 359 Ark. 495, 199 S.W.3d 58 (2004).

Trial court erred in granting summary judgment to insurer and in holding that insurer was not required to defend the insured based on a pollution exclusion clause because the term "pollutants" in the clause was ambiguous, given that the term did not include or exclude gasoline, which leaked from insured's tanks and subjected the insured to a lawsuit. Anderson Gas & Propane, Inc. v. Westport Ins. Corp., 84 Ark. App. 310, 140 S.W.3d 504 (2004).

Where decedent refused to follow the directives of a medical center and its nurse not to drive after being sedated for a procedure, and he was killed while driving home, the trial court erred in granting summary judgment to the medical center because there was a question created by differing expert opinions as to whether the center's conduct satisfied the required standard of care. Young v. Gastro-Intestinal Ctr., Inc., 86 Ark. App. 167, 167 S.W.3d 180 (2004), rev'd, 361 Ark. 209, 205 S.W.3d 741 (2005).

Trial court erred in granting summary judgment to appellee bank where (1) the bank failed to produce evidence of an assignment of appellant couple's mortgage and note to the bank, (2) the bank failed to produce the original 1986 promissory note, and (3) the parties had proceeded on different legal theories. Corn Ins. Agency, Inc. v. First Fed. Bank of Ark., F.A., 88 Ark. App. 8, 194 S.W.3d 230 (2004).

In insurer's declaratory judgment action, the trial court erred in granting summary judgment to insurer where the policy language, when coupled with the relevant statutory provisions, did not clearly exclude liability coverage for a semitrailer used solely as a residence; the Missouri Administrator of the State Office of Motor Vehicles unequivocally stated that the camper trailer in question was not subject to registration based upon its use as a residence. Smith v. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. of Ark., Inc., 88 Ark. App. 22, 194 S.W.3d 212 (2004).

In a case involving negligent entrustment, summary judgment should not have been granted to the owner of a car based on the testimony of three interested witnesses where they all gave inconsistent testimony regarding whether or not the driver had permission to operate the vehicle; the witnesses all had a similar motive in concealing the facts of the case to avoid liability. Collins v. Morgan, 92 Ark. App. 95, 211 S.W.3d 14 (2005).

Where a decedent, prior to his death, and his wife retained the services of a lawyer to set up a revocable trust for the benefit of the decedent's son, where the decedent became incapacitated before executing deeds to transfer his assets to the trust, where the lawyer consulted with the decedent's son and wife and petitioned to have the son appointed guardian so that he could execute the deeds, where the lawyer did not disclose that, if the son did not sign the deed, he would inherit by intestate succession but that, if he executed the deeds, his stepmother would gain control and could divest him of the assets, and where the stepmother did just that after the decedent succumbed, the trial court erred in granting summary judgment of attorneys hired to pursue a legal malpractice claim against the lawyer and in holding that no valid claim existed because the son lacked privity of contract with his father's lawyer. Summary judgment was improper because the evidence revealed conflicting accounts of the son's contractual relationship with the lawyer and gave rise to the implication that the lawyer had a duty to advise the son of his inheritance rights and the possibility that his stepmother could cut him out of the trust. Howard v. Adams, 2009 Ark. App. 621, 332 S.W.3d 24 (2009).

Summary judgment on two workers' claims under the Arkansas Whistle-Blower Act, § 21-1-601 et seq., was improper where almost immediately after their alleged whistle-blowing communication, they became the subject of internal investigations, and they presented evidence that they were punished in response to their comments and behavior regarding a fellow worker's termination. Bales v. City of Fort Smith, 2016 Ark. App. 491, 505 S.W.3d 705 (2016).

Circuit court erred in granting the lessees summary judgment on their request for specific performance of a purported right of first refusal where there was a factual dispute as to whether the original parties to the lease intended that the children would be required to offer the property to the lessees in the event that they acquired the property from the decedent and desired to sell during the term of the lease. The determination of the intent of contracting parties is largely a factual one. McCord v. Foster, 2016 Ark. App. 500, 505 S.W.3d 742 (2016).

Circuit court properly denied the nursing home summary judgment based on the affirmative defense of charitable immunity where the decedent's son presented evidence that the nursing home was actually making a significant profit, it was funneling that profit to other companies that it either owned or were related, and it was using a related captive insurer that was structured as a for-profit company. Progressive Eldercare Services-Saline v. Cauffiel, 2016 Ark. App. 523, 508 S.W.3d 59 (2016).

Trial court erred in granting the employee summary judgment on a claim that a shelter violated the Minimum Age Act of the State of Arkansas where there were disputed issues of fact as to whether the employee had agreed to exclude sleep time from the computation of her paycheck or if she had agreed to a cap on her wages, and because of the conflicting testimony, it was impossible to discern that either party was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Grant Cnty. Unified Cmty. Res. Council, Inc. v. Pennington, 2017 Ark. App. 116, 514 S.W.3d 509 (2017).

Circuit court erred in granting a spraying service business summary judgment on a cattle business's negligence claim where an expert's deposition testimony indicating that the cows were healthy, they died suddenly and at the same time and in the same vicinity where the urea fertilizer had been sprayed, and urea ingestion could have caused a cow's death raised an issue of fact. TMG Cattle Co. v. Parker Commer. Spraying, 2018 Ark. App. 144, 540 S.W.3d 754 (2018).

In an action to recover a balance due on a credit card account, a genuine issue of material fact remained as to the credit card company's service of requests for admission on the borrower as there was no trial court finding that the borrower was served with the requests and the trial court's order merely stated that the requests were submitted to the borrower; and because the summary judgment order was entered shortly after the borrower's response to the summary judgment motion was filed, it was unclear whether the trial court had the benefit of considering the argument regarding service. Cooper v. Discover Bank, 2019 Ark. App. 144, 573 S.W.3d 573 (2019).

Summary Judgment Proper.

Where the facts are not disputed and the law can be applied, a summary judgment is an appropriate means of avoiding the expense and time of a formal trial. Childs v. Berry, 268 Ark. 970, 597 S.W.2d 134 (Ct. App. 1980).

Summary judgment held appropriate. Thomas v. Poff, 268 Ark. 939, 597 S.W.2d 838 (Ct. App. 1980); Childs v. Berry, 268 Ark. 970, 597 S.W.2d 134 (Ct. App. 1980); Woodell v. Brown & Root, Inc., 2 Ark. App. 106, 616 S.W.2d 781 (1981); Turner v. Baptist Medical Ctr., 275 Ark. 424, 631 S.W.2d 275 (1982); *Rickenbacker v. Partial summary judgment held appropriate. Hallmark Cards, Inc. v. Peevy, 293 Ark. 594, 739 S.W.2d 691 (1987).

Summary judgment is appropriate only where the pleadings, depositions, and answers to interrogatories, together with the affidavits, show there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Dickson v. Delhi Seed Co., 26 Ark. App. 83, 760 S.W.2d 382 (1988); Caplener v. Bluebonnet Milling Co., 322 Ark. 751, 911 S.W.2d 586 (1995).

Summary judgment is only appropriate when no issue of material fact exists and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Young v. Paxton, 316 Ark. 655, 873 S.W.2d 546 (1994).

Although questions of intent are particularly inappropriate for summary judgment, in a contract action where, from the face of a written instrument, there was no ambiguity, there was no genuine issue of material fact about whether parol evidence could be admitted, and summary judgment was proper. Chlanda v. Estate of Fuller, 326 Ark. 551, 932 S.W.2d 760 (1996).

Whether a sale of collateral was conducted in a commercially reasonable manner under § 4-9-504 is essentially a factual question; however, summary judgment granted where plaintiff established a prima facie case that the sale was conducted in a commercially reasonable manner and that defendant failed to “meet proof with proof” in response. Prince v. R & T Motors, Inc., 59 Ark. App. 16, 953 S.W.2d 62 (1997).

Where insured was injured when a car crashed into the wall of her business, the trial court properly granted summary judgment for the insurance company which denied the insured underinsured motorist coverage and personal injury protection coverage based upon the clear and unambiguous terms of the policy’s business premises exclusion. Harasyn v. St. Paul Guardian Ins. Co., 349 Ark. 9, 75 S.W.3d 696 (2002).

Where former client sued lawyer for negligence, breach of contract, and breach of fiduciary duty, over alleged mistaken terms in a property settlement agreement, partial summary judgment for the lawyer on the breach of fiduciary claim was proper where there was no evidence the lawyer engaged in self-dealing. Cole v. Laws, 349 Ark. 177, 76 S.W.3d 878, cert. denied, 537 U.S. 1003, 123 S. Ct. 509, 154 L. Ed. 2d 400 (2002).

Although the parent corporation’s name and logo appeared on the master agreement that was executed between contractor and subsidiary company, the fact remained that the parties to the contract were clearly stated and that the contractor chose to make the assumption, without further investigation on his part, that subsidiary company was financially backed by the parent corporation which sold its stock to a corporation that went bankrupt; the contractor’s beliefs, standing alone, did not create genuine issues of material fact sufficient to avoid a summary judgment. Little Rock Elec. Contrs. v. Entergy Corp., 79 Ark. App. 337, 87 S.W.3d 842 (2002).

Trial court properly granted a railroad’s motion for partial summary judgment on the issue of inadequate warning devices because it would have been unfair to apply the doctrine of offensive collateral estoppel where an employee could have joined in a prior federal action, and the railroad lacked any incentive to pursue an appeal of the federal claim. Johnson v. Union Pac. R.R., 352 Ark. 534, 104 S.W.3d 745 (2003).

Summary judgment was properly entered dismissing a claim brought by the live-in girlfriend of an insured party seeking recovery under the underinsured motorist clause of the insured’s motor vehicle insurance policy; recovery was limited to member’s of the insured’s “family” living in the insured’s household, and the term “family” was properly construed to mean only those persons related to the insured by blood, adoption, or marriage, and did not include a person outside those categories who happened to reside with the insured. Smith v. S. Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. Co., 353 Ark. 188, 114 S.W.3d 205 (2003).

Because the returns of after-tax contributions to a retirement plan were property, pursuant to Ark. Const., Art. XVI, § 5, and not income, the Arkansas Department of Finance and Administration’s attempted tax of the returns under § 26-51-307 was unconstitutional given the prohibition in Ark. Const., Amend. 47 that prohibited an ad valorem tax being levied on property; thus, the trial court properly granted partial summary judgment in favor of the taxpayers. Weiss v. McFadden, 353 Ark. 868, 120 S.W.3d 545 (2003).

In a victim’s action against a perpetrator’s employer arising from the perpetrator’s rape and attempted murder of the victim, partial summary judgment was properly granted as to the claim alleging negligent hiring where the victim claimed that the employer had failed to do a proper background check before hiring the perpetrator but failed to show that a proper background check would have revealed that the perpetrator had a propensity for sexual assault. Saine v. Comcast Cablevision of Ark., Inc., 354 Ark. 492, 126 S.W.3d 339 (2003).

Where no exception to the general rule that an employer owed no duty to employees of its independent contractors existed, and where the plain language of the contract specified that it was the independent contractor’s, and not the employer’s, responsibility to ensure that the former hired qualified workers to perform the job functions of a lineman, the trial court properly granted summary judgment against the lineman in his suit against the general contractor, who employed his company, in his personal injury suit. Stoltze v. Ark. Valley Elec. Coop. Corp., 354 Ark. 601, 127 S.W.3d 466 (2003).

Trial court did not err in granting an insurer summary judgment in connection with an action brought by insureds regarding the lapse of their coverage; the doctrine of estoppel did not apply to extend the scope of coverage under an insurance policy, and a form letter received by the insureds two months before the policy's renewal date did not indicate when any policy was up for cancellation or non-renewal. Johnson v. Encompass Ins. Co., 355 Ark. 1, 130 S.W.3d 553 (2003).

In a father's action to terminate the maternal grandmother's visitation rights, where he had failed to appeal a prior ruling that the Arkansas Grandparent Visitation Act, § 9-13-103, was constitutional, res judicata precluded him from relitigating this issue because the same parties and issue had been involved in the prior action, and the trial court properly granted the grandmother partial summary judgment on this issue. Hunt v. Perry, 355 Ark. 303, 138 S.W.3d 656 (2003), cert. denied, 541 U.S. 1074, 124 S. Ct. 2428, 158 L. Ed. 2d 984 (2004).

Trial court properly granted summary judgment to the owners of a pool in a wrongful death action arising from the drowning of a child; the owners did not engage in any willful or wanton conduct which contributed to the child's drowning because, even though only one adult who could swim was present in the area, a pool owner had repeatedly told the deceased child to wear a life jacket and had told the children to stay in the shallow end of the pool. Moses v. Bridgeman, 355 Ark. 460, 139 S.W.3d 503 (2003).

Where a reasonable person could not construe the deed and easement therein as limiting the rights conveyed to uses relating only to water utilities, the trial judge was correct in granting summary judgment for the city. Bishop v. City of Fayetteville, 81 Ark. App. 1, 97 S.W.3d 913 (2003).

Grant of summary judgment against shopper in his action for malicious prosecution and abuse of process was proper where the entry of a nolle prosequere did not preclude a finding of probable cause to arrest; based on the municipal court's determination of guilt, the court held that there was probable cause to arrest the shopper for obstructing governmental operations and attempting to influence a public official. Sundeen v. Kroger, 81 Ark. App. 371, 101 S.W.3d 891, superseded, 355 Ark. 138, 133 S.W.3d 393 (2003).

In employee's suit against former employer arising out of employee's termination for possession of store property, summary judgment was properly granted to the store on the employee's false-light invasion of privacy and defamation claims where the employee had admitted to the employer's loss prevention officer that he had in his possession store property for which he had not paid and the statements referring to stolen property in the employee's possession were made under a qualified privilege only to appropriate store and law enforcement. Addington v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 81 Ark. App. 441, 105 S.W.3d 369 (2003).

Trial court did not err in granting a bank's motion for summary judgment in an action involving an insufficient check because a company was liable as an endorser where it gave a bondsman actual authority to endorse its name on a check; it was irrelevant that the bondsman later misappropriated the funds. Holt Bonding Co. v. First Fed. Bank, 82 Ark. App. 8, 110 S.W.3d 298 (2003).

Trial court did not err in granting a motion for summary judgment filed by a property owners' association because several owners were unable to show that a change in a declaration to allow a two-tiered property assessment scheme was unreasonable, arbitrary, discriminatory, or capricious; moreover, the declaration was not subject to strict construction because it did not fall within the definition of a restrictive covenant. Hutchens v. Bella Vista Vill. Prop. Owners' Ass'n, 82 Ark. App. 28, 110 S.W.3d 325 (2003).

Trial court did not err when it granted summary judgment to a niece as the owner of contents of her deceased uncle's safety deposit box where, even though his will had not been probated, a copy of his unprobated will named her as sole beneficiary; the situation fit within the parameters of § 28-40-104(b)(2), which allowed evidence of the testator's intention and provided the evidence that supported the trial court's conclusion that niece was the owner of the box contents. Atkinson v. Knowles, 82 Ark. App. 224, 105 S.W.3d 818 (2003).

Trial court did not err when it granted summary judgment to a grocery store in a shopper's suit for false imprisonment where the shopper voluntarily returned to the store in order to resolve the matter of whether she had stolen books from the store and the shopper had not presented any evidence of threats of force or that she had been restrained against her will. Miller v. Kroger Co., 82 Ark. App. 281, 105 S.W.3d 789 (2003).

Summary judgment was properly granted in favor of the insureds in their suit against the insurer where the trial court did not err in finding that the policy language was a condition precedent to coverage and that there was an enforceable insurance contract; the insurance contract provided automatic coverage for a thoroughbred horse the insureds acquired, even though the horse was injured and put to death the same day of the insureds' acquisition.

Clarendon Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Roberts, 82 Ark. App. 515, 120 S.W.3d 141 (2003).

Grant of summary judgment in favor of the employer in its action to recover interest on a promissory note used to purchase stock was proper where the employee admitted that he signed the note and did not contend that the note was invalid; further, he did not demonstrate that the provisions of the stockholders agreement were against public policy. Wingfield v. Contech Constr. Prods., 83 Ark. App. 16, 115 S.W.3d 336 (2003).

Summary judgment was properly granted in favor of the doctor where the former patient's estate's suit against the doctor for negligence was time barred; the statute of limitations began to run from the date that the negligent act occurred and the traditional rule for applying the statute of limitations applied. Harris v. Ozment, 83 Ark. App. 94, 117 S.W.3d 647 (2003).

Grant of summary judgment in favor of the city was proper where the agreement to sell real estate was unenforceable because the document did not adequately furnish a description as to the property and there was no meeting of the minds; further, the document was in the nature of an agreement to engage in future negotiations and such agreements were generally void because they failed to contain all of the essential terms. Dev. & Constr. Mgmt. v. City of N. Little Rock, 83 Ark. App. 165, 119 S.W.3d 77 (2003).

Trial court properly granted summary judgment for defendant doctors on plaintiff patient's informed consent and medical battery claims where patient failed to provide expert testimony on her informed consent claim, and her battery claim, in turn, was based on her informed consent claim. Parkerson v. Arthur, 83 Ark. App. 240, 125 S.W.3d 825 (2003).

Summary judgment was properly granted in favor of defendant bank which failed to reinstate the mortgage of plaintiff couple; it was undisputed that the couple had failed to pay the entire amount of the past-due payments, late fees, and costs and expenses, including attorney's fees, before curing the default pursuant to § 18-50-114(a). Lambert v. Firststar Bank, N.A., 83 Ark. App. 259, 127 S.W.3d 523 (2003).

In a case regarding a third party's liability (co-employee) for the employee's injury at work, because the co-employee was responsible for transporting the employee to and from a work site, he was involved in the employer's duty of providing the employee a safe place to work; thus, workers' compensation was the employee's exclusive remedy pursuant to § 11-9-105 and the trial court did not err when it granted the co-employee's motion for summary judgment. Gafford v. Cox, 84 Ark. App. 57, 129 S.W.3d 296 (2003).

Grant of summary judgment against the bankruptcy trustee was improper where there was no evidence of an intent to manipulate the judicial process; although the bank offered evidence that the petition signed under oath failed to include the cause of action pending against the bank, no evidence of intent was offered by the bank and the application of judicial estoppel in Arkansas required intent. Dupwe v. Wallace, 355 Ark. 521, 140 S.W.3d 464 (2004).

Trial court properly entered summary judgment for defendant railroad in decedent's estate's wrongful death lawsuit where the decedent's guardian had already sued the railroad and the case had been settled and the guardian had signed a release. Estate of Hull v. Union Pac. R.R., 355 Ark. 547, 141 S.W.3d 356 (2004).

Trial court did not err in granting summary judgment to sub-contractor on the basis of collateral estoppel based on an arbitration decision where, although the sub-contractor was not a party to the arbitration between a developer and a contractor, the developer had named the sub-contractor as a party in an amended complaint in a law suit it had brought and all the issues in the suit were the same as those decided in the arbitration. Riverdale Dev. Co., LLC v. Ruffin Bldg. Sys., 356 Ark. 90, 146 S.W.3d 852 (2004).

Where an oil company sold its lease interest in a tract to a production company in 1987, and the production company sold its lease interest in the tract to an energy company in 1996, and where both sales contracts included indemnification clauses, the latter parties either assumed the risk of the environmental conditions on the property or, in the case of the energy company, explicitly agreed to indemnification, and summary judgment against the oil company and in favor of the other two parties as to the indemnification issue was reversed. Chevron U.S.A. Inc. v. Murphy Exploration & Prod. Co., 356 Ark. 324, 151 S.W.3d 306 (2004).

Complaint to the plant board filed within ten days after defectiveness of seeds became apparent was a condition precedent to a legal action against the seed manufacturer and farmer's failure to comply with the mandatory notice requirements precluded his legal action for damages; thus, the trial court did not err when it granted summary judgment to the manufacturer. Slusser v. Farm Serv., Inc., 359 Ark. 392, 198 S.W.3d 106 (2004).

Instrument executed by company accountant constituted a check under § 4-3-104(f)(i), and not a promissory note, because the owner of the company was the one who asked two creditors to delay presentment of the document for payment; therefore, summary judgment was properly granted in favor of the accountant, who was not personally liable for payment. Billingsley v. Smith, 85 Ark. App. 128, 147 S.W.3d 697 (2004).

After employee received unemployment benefits based on a finding of no work-related misconduct, collateral estoppel did not bar the employer from asserting, in a racial discrimination case, that the employee was fired for inappropriate behavior; an administrative finding that the employee was discharged for reasons that did not disqualify him for unemployment benefits under § 11-10-514(a)(1) did not address the issue of whether an improper racial motive was present within the meaning of § 16-123-107(a)(1) and, absent evidence of racial animus, summary judgment for the employer was proper. Crockett v. Counseling Servs. of E. Ark., Inc., 85 Ark. App. 371, 154 S.W.3d 278 (2004).

Where there were no disputed facts, and where the trial court properly concluded that the word “explosion” was not ambiguous and that a partial collapse of the insured’s home from the gradual accumulation of ice or snow on the roof did not fall within the common understanding of “explosion,” or that term as defined in the insurance policy, the insurer was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Curley v. Old Reliable Cas. Co., 85 Ark. App. 395, 155 S.W.3d 711 (2004).

Trial court did not err in granting summary judgment for the landowner pursuant to this rule and dismissing the parks department’s condemnation complaint because the department failed to follow the procedures set forth in Ark. Code Ann. § 22-4-106 for acquiring park lands, such as the Governor’s written approval; and 2001 Ark. Acts 1102 and 2003 Ark. Acts 1605, the acts funding the land acquisition, were not more specific legislation that negated the procedures in Ark. Code Ann. § 22-4-106. Nothing in the Acts specifically provided funding for the department to acquire the land or set forth any criteria to be followed in acquiring lands, other than to state that disbursements were to comply with other applicable state laws; rather the Acts were general appropriation provisions that provided the funding mechanisms for the department to acquire additional lands, while Ark. Code Ann. § 22-4-106 established the procedures to be followed. State ex rel. Ark. Dep’t of Parks & Tourism v. Jeske, 365 Ark. 279, 229 S.W.3d 23 (2006).

In a wrongful death suit brought against a medical center, a husband was not unconstitutionally denied his right to a jury trial, under Ark. Const., Art. 2, § 7, and a summary judgment was proper because no factual issues existed as to whether the medical center was entitled to governmental or charitable immunity. Anglin v. Johnson Reg’l Med. Ctr., 375 Ark. 10, 289 S.W.3d 28 (2008).

There was no reversible error in an action alleging breach of the covenant of good faith, breach of fiduciary duty, fraud, conversion, unjust enrichment, and intentional infliction of emotional distress due to a bank’s misconduct in relation to a loan where counsel failed to appear at a summary judgment hearing; the land purchasers filing the action failed to show how they were prejudiced due to conflicting correspondence, and the trial judge was familiar with the facts and issues of the case, despite not going over every single document submitted. Bibbs v. Cmty. Bank, 101 Ark. App. 462, 278 S.W.3d 564, aff’d, Bibbs v. Cmty. Bank of Benton, 375 Ark. 150, 289 S.W.3d 393 (2008).

Summary judgment was properly granted on a worker’s claim under the Arkansas Whistle-Blower Act, § 21-1-601 et seq., where a superior’s alleged bullying and harassment did not amount to either a waste of public funds or a violation of law. Bales v. City of Fort Smith, 2016 Ark. App. 491, 505 S.W.3d 705 (2016).

Although another worker had established an issue of fact as to whether he was a whistleblower in connection with his report on improper overtime usage, summary judgment was properly granted against him as he failed to offer evidence linking his formal reprimand to his alleged whistle-blowing communication. Bales v. City of Fort Smith, 2016 Ark. App. 491, 505 S.W.3d 705 (2016).

Trial court properly granted summary judgment on an attempt to pierce the corporate veil where the limited liability company (LLC) had incurred annual losses, the members contributed money every year to keep the LLC in business and had not dissolved it or formed another entity to avoid paying a judgment granted to appellants, they had not taken assets from the LLC, the requisite business formalities were followed, and thus, there was no proof that the members of the LLC abused the LLC or engaged in fraud, deception, or conduct sufficient to justify piercing the corporate veil. Fulmer v. Hurt, 2017 Ark. App. 117, 515 S.W.3d 129 (2017).

Summary judgment for $12,500,000 was proper against defendants in a class-action suit after they did not respond to the summary judgment motion, because (1) defendants were properly served with process, (2) the complaint’s issues were within the trial court’s jurisdiction, (3) pleadings, orders, and requests for admission were properly served on the defendants, and (4) the defendants admitted the requests for admission by not timely responding. Gen-Kal Pipe & Steel Corp. v. M.S. Wholesale Plumbing, Inc., 2019 Ark. App. 117, 573 S.W.3d 1 (2019).

Time of Filing Motion.

In an action seeking to determine heirship, a circuit court did not err by considering a motion for summary judgment that was filed less than 45 days before trial; the fact that three surviving sons obtained leave and filed their own motion for summary judgment was sufficient reason for several surviving spouses and children to file their counter motion within the same forty-five day period. Scroggin v. Scroggin, 103 Ark. App. 144, 286 S.W.3d 758 (2008).

Time of Serving Motion.

The purpose of the requirement in this rule that the motion be served at least 10 days before a hearing is held is to allow the nonmoving party time to prepare a response; accordingly, where the summary judgment motion submitted by the plaintiff on the day of the trial was the same motion that it had submitted some six months earlier, and the arguments of counsel appeared from the record to have been the same arguments made when the motion was denied at that time, the defendants could not claim to have been prejudiced by the reconsideration of the motion, and the trial court did not err in reconsidering the motion on the day of trial. Craft v. Arkansas La. Gas Co., 8 Ark. App. 169, 649 S.W.2d 409 (1983).

Defendant was not prejudiced by plaintiff's failure to comply with the notice requirement of subsection (c) of this rule where defendant filed a response to the motion and had the opportunity to argue it. Keenan v. American River Transp. Co., 304 Ark. 42, 799 S.W.2d 801 (1990).

Rule 57. Declaratory judgments.

The procedure for obtaining a declaratory judgment pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. §§ 16-111-101 through 16-111-111 shall be in accordance with these rules, and the right to trial by jury may be demanded under the circumstances and in the manner provided in Rules 38 and 39. The existence of another adequate remedy does not preclude a judgment for declaratory relief in cases where it is appropriate. The court may order a speedy hearing of an action for a declaratory judgment and may advance it on the calendar.

HISTORY: Amended November 11, 1991, effective January 1, 1992.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 57:

1. Ark. Stat. Ann. § 34-2501 [now see § 16-111-103], with minor modifications, adopted the Uniform Declaratory Judgment Act. Rule 57 incorporates this statutory enactment by reference and does not effect any significant changes in Arkansas procedure.

2. Prior Arkansas law did not specifically authorize the advancement of declaratory judgment actions on the trial docket. Rule 57 recognizes, however, that some declaratory judgment actions involve matters of public interest and therefore gives the trial court discretion to advance such a case on the trial docket.

CASE NOTES

Proposed Amendments to State Constitution.

Voter demonstrating that a proposed constitutional amendment was unconstitutional was entitled to both declaratory and mandamus relief, as (1) declaratory relief is available whether or not other relief can be obtained; (2) the Arkansas Supreme Court has routinely ordered the Arkansas Secretary of State to not count or certify any ballots cast for a proposed amendment that does not meet the requirements of the Arkansas Constitution or Arkansas law; and (3) a voter has a right to cast a ballot only on referred constitutional amendments that meet the standards set forth by the Arkansas Constitution. Martin v. Humphrey, 2018 Ark. 295, 558 S.W.3d 370 (2018).

Rule 58. Entry of judgment or decree.

Subject to the provisions of Rule 54(b), upon a general or special verdict, or upon a decision by the court granting or denying the relief sought, the court may direct the prevailing party to promptly prepare and submit, for approval by the court and opposing counsel, a form of judgment or decree which shall then be entered as the judgment or decree of the court. The court may enter its own form of judgment or decree or may enter the form prepared by the prevailing party without the consent of opposing counsel. A judgment or decree shall omit or redact confidential information as provided in Rule 5(c)(2).

Every judgment or decree shall be set forth on a separate document. A judgment or decree is effective only when so set forth and entered as provided in Administrative Order No. 2. Entry of judgment or decree shall not be delayed for the taxing of costs.

HISTORY: Amended December 10, 1990, effective February 1, 1991; amended October 23, 2008, effective January 1, 2009.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 58:

1. Rule 58 varies substantially from FRCP 58 and is designed to incorporate prior Arkansas procedure into a formal rule. Under the Federal Rule, the court clerk, in certain instances, has the responsibility of preparing the formal judgment. In all other instances, the court or the clerk prepares the judgment. This rule recognizes and continues the prior practice in this State of having the prevailing party prepare and submit the form of judgment or decree to the court for its approval.

2. Implicit in this rule is the right of opposing counsel to be afforded an opportunity to approve the form of judgment or decree. Where there is disagreement between the parties as to the form of the judgment or decree, the court should hold a hearing to consider whatever objections there might be. After such a hearing, the court may either enter its own form of judgment or decree; it may enter the form submitted by counsel if the same fairly represents the action of the court or jury or it may require counsel to revise the judgment or decree prepared by counsel. There was no specific statutory authority in Arkansas which governed prior practice in this area and such practice simply developed as an unwritten rule. This rule should have little or no effect on prior practice.

3. The federal practice of having the court prepare the judgment or order is more or less based upon the notion that delays will result if the preparation of judgments and decrees is left to counsel. The Committee did not consider this to be serious enough to warrant changing the longstanding practice in Arkansas of having counsel prepare judgments and decrees. The rule does provide, however, that if counsel is dilatory in the preparation of a judgment or decree, the court can take appropriate action to compel the preparation of the decree or it can prepare it itself.

4. This rule provides that a judgment or decree shall not be effective unless and until it is entered pursuant to Rule 79(a). Thus for appeal purposes, the date of entry or filing of the judgment or decree is the effective date, as opposed to the date of rendition. Cranna v. Long, 225 Ark. 153, 279 S.W.2d 828 (1955); Wilhelm v. McLaughlin, 228 Ark. 582, 309 S.W.2d 203 (1958).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1990 Amendment:

This housekeeping amendment replaced the reference to Rule 79(a) in the second paragraph with a reference to Administrative Order No. 2, which appears in the appendix to the Rules of Civil Procedure. Rule 79 was abolished in 1987 when the administrative order was adopted.

Addition to Reporter's Notes (1999):

The second paragraph of this rule provides that a judgment or decree "is effective only when . . . set forth [on a separate document] and entered as provided in Administrative Order No. 2." As amended in 1999, Administrative Order No. 2(b) provides that a judgment, decree or order is "entered" when stamped or otherwise marked by the clerk with the time and date and the word "filed," irrespective of when it is recorded in the judgment book. When the clerk's office is not open for business, and upon an express finding of extraordinary circumstances, an order is effective immediately when signed by the judge. Such order must be filed with the clerk on the next day on which the clerk's office is open, and this filing date controls all appeal-related deadlines.

The 1999 amendment to Administrative Order No. 2(b) also requires any clerk's office with a facsimile machine to "accept facsimile transmission of a judgment, decree or order filed in such manner at the direction of the court." The faxed judgment, decree or order is effective when entered by the clerk. To ensure the permanency of official court records, the original judgment, decree or order must be substituted for the facsimile copy within 14 days of transmission, but this step does not have any bearing on the effectiveness of the faxed document or the time for taking an appeal.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2008 Amendment:

The rule has been amended to reflect Administrative Order 19's requirement that any necessary and relevant confidential information in a case record — a category which includes judgments and decrees — must be redacted. See Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2008 Amendment to Rule of Civil Procedure 5.

CASE NOTES

In General.

A judgment or decree may not be effective until it has been "entered" as provided in this rule and Arkansas Supreme Court Administrative Order 2. Standridge v. Standridge, 298 Ark. 494, 769 S.W.2d 12, op. withdrawn, 298 Ark. 494, 771 S.W.2d 262 (1989); Morrell v. Morrell, 48 Ark. App. 54, 889 S.W.2d 772 (1994).

This rule, rather than § 16-65-121, controlled the effective date of a divorce decree, and the rule effectively supercedes the statute. Price v. Price, 341 Ark. 311, 16 S.W.3d 248 (2000).

In a wrongful death action filed by the special administrator of decedent's estate, the trial court properly granted the doctors' motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction because the suit was filed before the order appointing the administrator was filed with the court clerk and a judicial order is not effective under this rule and Ark. Sup. Ct. Admin. Order No. 2 until it is filed with the clerk of court. Filyaw v. Bouton, 87 Ark. App. 320, 191 S.W.3d 540 (2004).

Civil order entered the day after a jury verdict which (1) contained a caption with the designation of the court, the names of the parties, and the case number, (2) stated that the cause came on for a jury trial and that the parties appeared with counsel, (3) noted that a jury was selected, evidence received, and a verdict rendered in the amount of $5,000 compensatory and $5,000 punitive, (4) was signed by the trial judge, file-marked by the clerk, and contained in a handwritten notation the date of the jury's verdict, contained the substantive aspects of a judgment and differed from an ordinary, typewritten judgment in form only. White v. Mattingly, 89 Ark. App. 55, 199 S.W.3d 724 (2004).

Wrongful-death and survival action brought by the administratrix of the decedent's estate against the medical center was time-barred under § 16-114-203 as the order appointing the administratrix was not effective until it was filed almost two weeks after the complaint was filed; therefore, at the time the administratrix filed this cause of action against the medical center, she was not the administrator of the estate and did not have standing to pursue the claim against the medical center. As such, the complaint a nullity. Hubbard v. Nat'l Healthcare of Pocahontas, Inc., 371 Ark. 444, 267 S.W.3d 573 (2007).

In a case involving a dispute over credit life insurance, an appeal was timely filed under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(a) because the first judgment in the case did not comply with Ark. Sup. Ct. Admin. Order No. 2 where the original of the facsimile-filed judgment was never filed with the trial court. The appeal was timely filed from a second judgment. Francis v. Protective Life Ins. Co., 98 Ark. App. 1, 249 S.W.3d 828 (2007).

After a bench trial, the circuit court often issues a letter opinion, which decides the case, and directs the prevailing party's lawyer to prepare a judgment. This rule authorizes the circuit court to do this or prepare its own judgment. T&S Mach. Shop, Inc. v. KD Sales, 2009 Ark. App. 836, 372 S.W.3d 410 (2009).

Court of appeals lacked jurisdiction over parents' appeal from the denial of attorney's fees because the letter that they appealed from was not an order; a judge's handwritten notation on the top of a piece of correspondence from an attorney to a judge does not qualify as a separate document under the rule. Peraza v. United Fin. Cas. Co., 2015 Ark. App. 5, 453 S.W.3d 693 (2015).

Applicability.

Circuit court's imposition of monetary sanctions against appellant for failing to appear at a scheduled hearing was upheld, as the rescheduled hearing was set for a specific day, a specific time, on the record in open court, and with appellant and his counsel present, and no subsequent written order memorializing the circuit court's setting was required to compel appellant's attendance. The circuit court's decision to continue and reschedule a hearing in open court did not fall within the ambit of this rule. Almeida v. Metal Studs, Inc., 2017 Ark. App. 162, 516 S.W.3d 279 (2017).

Consent Judgments.

A consent judgment is a different in nature from a judgment rendered on the merits, and although this rule does not apply to consent judgments, where there is disagreement between the parties as to the form of the judgment or decree, the court should hold a hearing to consider whatever objections there might be. McIlroy Bank & Trust v. Acro Corp., 30 Ark. App. 189, 785 S.W.2d 47 (1990), overruled in part, Carden v. McDonald, 69 Ark. App. 257, 12 S.W.3d 643 (2000).

Construction.

"Entry" of a document is distinct from "dated" or "filed": the term "dated" refers to the date the judge signs the order; a document is "filed" on the date the clerk file-stamps it; and a document is "entered" when it is actually recorded on the docket sheet or book by the clerk. In re Bunt, 165 B.R. 894 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 1994).

The policy set forth in this rule, that a judgment or decree is effective only when set forth and entered as provided in Ark. Sup. Ct. Admin. Order No. 2, holds true for orders of the court for extraordinary circumstances. Republican Party of Ark. v. Kilgore, 350 Ark. 537, 98 S.W.3d 796 (2002).

Court did not err in finding that appellees timely revived the 1999 decree where they filed their writ of scire facias on May 13, 2009, within ten years from May 25, 1999, the effective date of the decree, because the Arkansas Supreme Court had previously found this rule effectively superseded § 16-65-121, and there was no reason not to extend this finding, which involved the more generally applicable § 16-65-121, to § 16-65-501. Middleton v. Lockhart, 2012 Ark. 131, 388 S.W.3d 451 (2012).

Criminal Judgments.

Copies of a criminal defendant's prior judgments which were not signed are admissible for enhancement purposes in the penalty phase of trial where they were authenticated by evidence that satisfied the trial court of their validity beyond a reasonable doubt. Sullinger v. State, 310 Ark. 690, 840 S.W.2d 797 (1992).

Circuit court erred in revoking defendant's suspended sentence and probation as the conduct underlying the revocations occurred between when he entered his guilty plea and when a judgment and disposition order was entered. The circuit court's oral order pronouncing defendant's sentences was not in effect until the written order was entered. Garduno-Trejo v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 779, 379 S.W.3d 692 (2010).

Record in this case did not contain an order sentencing defendant to probation, and counsel claimed that it appeared that no such order was ever entered by the circuit court; because an effective judgment of conviction was never entered, the circuit court erred in granting the State's petitions for revocation, and the revocation was reversed and dismissed. Watts v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 16, 480 S.W.3d 212 (2016).

It is well settled that a judgment is effective only upon entry of record. This principle, embodied in this rule and in Supreme Court Administrative Order No. 2, is equally applicable in civil and criminal cases. Watts v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 16, 480 S.W.3d 212 (2016).

Discretion of Court.

Chancellor did not abuse his discretion in awarding alimony retroactively, for, although the alimony award could not be enforced until the entry of the decree, the date on which it began to accrue was a decision within the broad discretion of the chancellor. Franklin v. Franklin, 25 Ark. App. 287, 758 S.W.2d 7 (1988).

Trial court erred in denying plaintiffs' motion for new trial as § 18-11-106(a)(2) required only that the real property owned by plaintiffs be contiguous to the property claimed by adverse possession; thus, the matter was remanded to determine if that was the case. Roberts v. Boyd, 94 Ark. App. 345, 230 S.W.3d 301 (2006).

Divorce Judgment.

A judgment in a divorce action will not be effective until both a docket entry pursuant to former Ark. R. Civ. P. 79(a) and a separate document setting forth a final decree pursuant to this rule have been made. Cook v. Lobianco, 8 Ark. App. 60, 648 S.W.2d 808 (1983) (decision prior to abolition of Ark. R. Civ. P. 79; now see Administrative Order No. 2) .

Where the chancellor in a divorce proceeding entered a notation on the chancery court docket to the effect that the divorce was granted and that the parties had 10 days within which to submit a stipulated property agreement, but the wife died prior to the expiration of the 10-day period and no property agreement had been submitted to the court or filed, the divorce action abated upon the death of the wife and the wife's estate was not entitled to any of the marital property, because at the time of the wife's death the divorce action was still under submission and had not been fully and formally ended. Cook v. Lobianco, 8 Ark. App. 60, 648 S.W.2d 808 (1983).

Where divorce was announced from the bench at the close of trial, but the husband died before the decree was entered, the decree entered after the husband's death was a nullity because this rule plainly states a decree is effective only when entered as provided by former Ark. R. Civ. P. 79(a) [see now Administrative Order No. 2]. Childress v. McManus, 282 Ark. 255, 668 S.W.2d 9 (1984).

Revocation of a holographic will that provided that the decedent's estate would pass to his former wife was appropriate because the parties' divorce occurred after the execution of the decedent's holographic will and his bequest was revoked by operation of law. The wife's argument that the divorce occurred on the day of the hearing when the settlement agreement was announced from the bench was improper pursuant to Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(d) and this rule because, notwithstanding that there was a lack of evidence of the settlement agreement on March 20, 2000, the divorce decree was not entered until May 23, 2000, after the decedent executed his holographic will; the March 20, 2000, date was of no consequence and the divorce was finalized on May 23, 2000, when the divorce decree was filed with the circuit court. Langston v. Langston, 371 Ark. 404, 266 S.W.3d 716 (2007).

Trial court erred in holding that a wife had no marital interest in her former husband's full retirement benefits that had vested during marriage because the decree provided that the parties were to "divide equally the retirement which accrued during the marriage" and the wife was entitled to share in all of the husband's retirement benefits that accrued prior to the date the decree was filed not as of the date of the hearing as the husband claimed. Allen v. Allen, 99 Ark. App. 292, 259 S.W.3d 480 (2007).

Where the trial court entered a second order that corrected an oversight in the divorce decree and clarified the date previously awarded alimony would begin, the alimony award was effective when the divorce decree was entered in accordance with this rule, rather than the date of oral pronouncement. Stuart v. Stuart, 2012 Ark. App. 458, 422 S.W.3d 147 (2012).

Hearing.

In an eminent domain case, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in denying property owner's motion to modify the judgment without affording a hearing. KW-DW Props., LLC v. Ark. State Highway Comm'n, 2019 Ark. 95, 571 S.W.3d 6 (2019).

Notification.

Dismissal of the patient's medical malpractice claim was appropriate because it was untimely under § 16-56-126(a)(1) since Ark. R. Civ. P. 41(a)(1) stated that the one-year period began when the circuit court entered an order granting the non-suit; additionally, this rule did not require courts to notify parties of the entry of an order of judgment. The patient also offered no proof that the hospital's attorney defrauded her or intended to defraud her in any way when he told her that the signing date was the date from which the statute would run. Collins v. St. Vincent Doctors, 98 Ark. App. 190, 253 S.W.3d 26, cert. denied, 552 U.S. 902, 128 S. Ct. 233, 169 L. Ed. 2d 174 (2007).

Oral.

Despite an oral pronouncement, because there was no written judgment regarding a default judgment entered in a foreclosure action, the case was dismissed without prejudice under Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(b); the record was void of any proof that one alleged interest holder was served, so it was impossible to tell if a default judgment was appropriate. Nat'l Home Ctrs., Inc. v. Coleman, 370 Ark. 119, 257 S.W.3d 862 (2007).

Trial court misapplied Ark. R. Civ. P. 15(a) by dismissing a judgment creditor's amended complaint prior to the trial court's entry of judgment under this rule on its prior oral ruling granting summary judgment to the judgment debtor and her transferees. The trial court also erred in denying the creditor's motion under Ark. R. Civ. P. 59. Mullen v. Shockley, 2009 Ark. App. 855 (2009).

Dismissal of the appeal from a finding in favor of a parent and his son in their action after the son was injured in an all-terrain vehicle accident was proper because there were parties who were orally dismissed from the case without entry of subsequent written orders of dismissal; thus, the supreme court lacked jurisdiction. No written orders of dismissal were entered of record, and because the oral dismissals were not effective until reduced to writing, the order currently appealed was not a final order. Carr v. Nance, 2010 Ark. 25 (2010).

Father's appeal was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction because the circuit court's order was not final or appealable; even though the circuit court orally dismissed the grandchildren's counterclaims at the bench trial, it failed to address the ruling in the judgment, the written order controlled, and the appellate court had to assume that the circuit court did not dispose of the counterclaims. Derrick v. Derrick, 2015 Ark. App. 272 (2015).

Husband's appeal of an order modifying a child support and property settlement agreement was dismissed for lack of finality where there was no ruling on the wife's motion for contempt in the final order, and thus the order did not address all of the claims raised. Howell v. Howell, 2021 Ark. App. 97 (2021).

Reissued.

The trial court did not have jurisdiction to vacate an order and issue a new identical order in order to give the appellant a chance to file a timely appeal; instead, the court should have extended the time to file an appeal pursuant to RAP-Civ 4(b)(3). Oak Hill Manor v. Arkansas Health Servs. Agency, 72 Ark. App. 458, 37 S.W.3d 681 (2001).

Requirements.

Because the right to proceed in forma pauperis in civil matters depended on a determination that the underlying action constituted a colorable cause of action, a file-marked copy of petitioner's habeas corpus application was necessary to a determination of the appeal; proper consideration could not be given to petitioner's appeal from the denial of his petition to proceed in forma pauperis without a certified, file-marked copy of the order from which the appeal was taken. Halfacre v. Kelley, 2016 Ark. 71 (2016).

Order that denied the inmate's indigent status did not state if the inmate had a colorable cause of action and was not file-marked. Until an order denying the inmate's indigent status was filed in the circuit court, there was no effective order from which the inmate could appeal the circuit court's decision. There is a duty to file-mark an inmate's petition and to enter an order to create a proper record. Dunahue v. Dennis, 2016 Ark. 285 (2016).

Specific Cases.

Clarification of findings made pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 52(a) was required in a suit for money allegedly owed because—in a letter opinion issued pursuant to this rule that was not made part of the judgment—the circuit court may have simply reversed the parties' names. The circuit court was entitled to the opportunity to clarify its findings in what was essentially a swearing-match. T&S Mach. Shop, Inc. v. KD Sales, 2009 Ark. App. 836, 372 S.W.3d 410 (2009).

Where the trial court entered judgment dismissing one of appellant's claims, as its letter opinion purporting to dismiss the remainder of the claims was not incorporated into the judgment, there was no final order under Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(b); therefore, the appellate court lacked jurisdiction over his appeal pursuant to Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2(a)(1). Wilkinson v. Smith, 2012 Ark. App. 604 (2012).

Appellate court remanded a case to settle and supplement the record because the court could not determine whether it had jurisdiction to hear the appeal; in the absence of an order or judgment entered pursuant to the jury's verdict, the court was unable to determine from the record whether a motion for JNOV was timely filed, which was critical to determining whether the notice of appeal was timely filed. Air Masters Mech., Inc. v. Goodman Distrib., 2015 Ark. App. 315 (2015).

Rule 59. New trials.

(a) Grounds. A new trial may be granted to all or any of the parties and on all or part of the claim on the application of the party aggrieved, for any of the following grounds materially affecting the substantial rights of such party: (1) any irregularity in the proceedings or any order of court or abuse of discretion by which the party was prevented from having a fair trial; (2) misconduct of the jury or prevailing party; (3) accident or surprise which ordinary prudence could not have prevented; (4) excessive damages appearing to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice; (5) error in the assessment of the amount of recovery, whether too large or too small; (6) the verdict or decision is clearly contrary to the preponderance of the evidence or is contrary to the law; (7) newly discovered evidence material for the party applying, which he could not, with reasonable diligence, have discovered and produced at the trial; (8) error of law occurring at the trial and objected to by the party making the application. On a motion for a new trial in an action tried without a jury, the court may open the judgment if one has been entered, take additional testimony, amend findings of fact and conclusions of law or make new findings and conclusions, and direct the entry of a new judgment.

(b) Time for Motion. A motion for a new trial shall be filed not later than 10 days after the entry of judgment. A motion made before entry of judgment shall become effective and be treated as filed on the day after the judgment is entered. If the court neither grants nor denies the motion within 30 days of the date on which it is filed or treated as filed, it shall be deemed denied as of the 30th day.

(c) Form of Motion. The motion must be in writing setting forth in separate paragraphs the grounds or assignments of error relied upon for a new trial. The grounds mentioned in section (a)(2), (3) and (7) of this rule must be supported by affidavits showing their truth and may be controverted in the same manner.

(d) Time for Filing Affidavits. When a motion for a new trial is based upon affidavits, they shall be filed with the motion. The opposing party shall have 10 days after service within which to file opposing affidavits which period may be extended for an additional period not exceeding 20 days either by the court for good cause shown or by the parties by written stipulation. The court may permit reply affidavits.

(e) On Initiative of Court. Not later than 10 days after entry of judgment, the court on its own initiative may order a new trial for any reason for which it might have granted a new trial on motion of a party. After giving the parties notice and an opportunity to be heard on the matter, the court may grant a motion for a new trial, timely filed, for a reason not stated in the motion. In either case, the court shall specify in the order the ground therefor.

(f) Motion for New Trial Not Necessary for Appeal. A party who has preserved for appeal an error that could be the basis for granting a new trial is not required to make a motion for new trial as a prerequisite for appellate review of that issue.

HISTORY: Amended May 17, 1982; amended May 16, 1983; amended July 9, 1984, effective September 1, 1984; subsection (a); amended December 5, 1994, effective January 15, 1995; amended January 28, 1999; amended March 13, 2003.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 59:

1. Rule 59 represents a combination of the provisions found in FRCP 59 and features of prior Arkansas law as codified in superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1901, et seq. (Repl. 1962). This rule will apply to both legal and equitable causes and in equity court replaces the bill of review which is abolished in Rule 60.

2. FRCP 59 does not define the grounds upon which new trials may be granted. Instead, it simply incorporates by reference those grounds traditionally recognized by the federal courts. Rather than refer to a body of law by reference, Section (a) of this rule specifies the grounds upon which a new trial may be granted. These grounds are lifted from superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1901 (Repl. 1962). Thus, no changes are effected in Arkansas law by Section (a). The final sentence of FRCP 59(a) is made a part of this rule so as to permit the granting of similar relief in cases tried without a jury, whether the claims be legal or equitable. This is implicit in superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1901 (Repl. 1962), but it is expressly made a part of Rule 59.

3. Section (b) marks a significant departure from prior Arkansas practice. Under this section, a motion for new trial must be filed within ten days after entry or filing of the judgment. Under prior Arkansas law, as codified in superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1904 (Repl. 1962), such a motion had to be filed within fifteen days following the verdict or decision, regardless of when the formal judgment or decree was actually filed. Henderson v. Skerczak, 247 Ark. 446, 446 S.W.2d 243 (1969), Peek v. Meadors, 255 Ark. 347, 500 S.W.2d 333 (1973).

4. Section (c) is not found in FRCP 59, but is practically identical to superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1905 (Repl. 1962). The purpose of this provision is to insure that a motion based upon the grounds set forth in Section (a)(2) and (a)(3) and (a)(7), is supported by affidavit in order to avoid (prevent) groundless or baseless motions from being filed.

5. Section (d) is taken from Section (c) of FRCP 59. The word “served” has been changed to “filed” in keeping with the overall scheme of these rules.

6. Section (e) is identical to Section (d) of FRCP 59. There was no specific provision under prior Arkansas law which gave the trial court the authority to order a new trial on its own initiative although the court may have had the inherent power to do so.

7. Section (f) is identical to FRCP 59(e). There was no comparable provision under prior Arkansas law and its effect is to place motions under Rule 59(f) on the same footing, timewise, with motions for new trials.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 1982 Amendment:

The word “clearly” was added to Rule 59(a)(6).

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 1983 Amendment:

Rule 59(f) is deleted. The time within which a trial court may modify, set aside or vacate judgment appears in Rule 60(b).

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 1984 Amendment:

Rule 59(f) is added to reinstate the principle of superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-2127.5 (Repl. 1962). The matter of the necessity of a motion for new trial to preserve error for appeal had not been addressed in these rules.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 1994 Amendment:

The first sentence of subdivision (a) is amended by substituting the word “claim” for the word “issues.” The amendment is intended to reflect case law prohibiting a partial new trial on the issue of damages (or the issue of liability), on the theory that a jury’s verdict cannot be divided by the court. E.g., Smith v. Walt Bennett Ford, 314 Ark. 591, 864 S.W.2d 817 (1993). As amended, subdivision (a) does not allow a partial new trial limited to a given issue. However, it expressly authorizes, in cases involving multiple parties or multiple claims, a partial new trial with respect to a single party or single claim.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 1999 Amendment:

Subdivision (b) has to be amended by adding a new second sentence that effectively overturns Benedict v. National Bank of Commerce, 329 Ark. 590, 951 S.W.2d 562 (1997), which held that a motion for new trial filed before entry of judgment is ineffective. As amended, the rule reflects the practice in the federal courts. The new third sentence provides that a motion for new trial not ruled on by the court within 30 days of its filing (or within 30 days of the date it is treated as filed) is “deemed denied as of the 30th day.” This provision also appears in Rule 4(b)(1) of the Rules of Appellate Procedure-Civil but was added here as a reminder to counsel.

In addition, the title of the rule has been modified by striking the words “amendment of judgments.” A provision in the original version of the rule dealing with this issue was deleted in 1983. See Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 1983 Amendment.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 2003 Amendment:

Subdivision (f) has been rewritten to reflect the holding in Stacks v. Jones, 323 Ark. 643, 916 S.W.2d 120 (1996).

CASE NOTES

Additur.

Since Arkansas does not recognize the principle of additur, a motion for additur does not qualify as a motion for judgment nov or a motion for new trial. Routh Wrecker Serv., Inc. v. Washington, 335 Ark. 232, 980 S.W.2d 240 (1998).

Amended Pleadings.

Trial court misapplied Ark. R. Civ. P. 15(a) by dismissing a judgment creditor’s amended complaint prior to the trial court’s entry of judgment under Ark. R. Civ. P. 58 on its prior oral ruling granting summary judgment to the judgment debtor and her transferees. The trial court also erred in denying the creditor’s motion under this rule. Mullen v. Shockley, 2009 Ark. App. 855 (2009).

Appeal.

When an appealable order has been entered and a notice of appeal has been filed within 30 days thereafter, the filing of a motion provided for in ARAP 4(b) will extend the time for filing the notice of appeal, and the notice of appeal filed before the time is extended will be ineffective. Mitchell v. Mitchell, 40 Ark. App. 81, 842 S.W.2d 66 (1992).

Under a motion to amend the court's findings of fact or to make additional findings under Ark. R. Civ. P. 52(b), or a motion for new trial under subsection (b) of this rule, the time to appeal runs from the entry of an order on the motion or from the 30th day after the filing of the motion, whichever comes first. Mitchell v. Mitchell, 40 Ark. App. 81, 842 S.W.2d 66 (1992).

ARAP 4(c) is clear that the failure to act within the 30-day period results in loss of jurisdiction in the circuit court to consider the motion; nor does the reference to certain miscarriages of justice in Ark. R. Civ. P. 60(b) invest the trial court with jurisdiction to act on a motion for a new trial beyond the 30-day period. Reis v. Yates, 313 Ark. 300, 854 S.W.2d 335 (1993).

Where the notice of appeal was filed before the disposition of appellant's posttrial motion for a new trial, under the express language of ARAP 4(c) it had no effect; it follows that the appellate court lacked jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Banning v. State, 43 Ark. App. 106, 861 S.W.2d 119 (1993).

An appeal asking for a new trial under this rule does not require a motion in the trial court testing whether a verdict was clearly against the preponderance of the evidence. Marvel v. Parker, 317 Ark. 232, 878 S.W.2d 364 (1994).

Under subsection (f) of this rule, it is not necessary to move for a new trial to preserve for appeal any error which could be the basis for granting a new trial; subsection (a) of this rule specifically states that a motion for new trial may be granted for eight reasons, one of which is where the verdict is clearly contrary to the preponderance of the evidence. Hall v. Grimmett, 318 Ark. 309, 885 S.W.2d 297 (1994).

Where appellee's reply brief asks the Supreme Court to review the sufficiency of the evidence because the verdict was against the preponderance of the evidence (a matter which is not waived by failure to move for a new trial on that ground), but that argument was not raised in appellee's opening brief, the Supreme Court declined to address it. Yam's, Inc. v. Moore, 319 Ark. 111, 890 S.W.2d 246 (1994).

A post-trial motion permitted by ARAP 4(b) may be timely amended, but the amendment will relate back to the date the original post-trial motion was filed and will not extend the time for filing the notice of appeal as provided in ARAP 4(c). Williams v. Hudson, 320 Ark. 635, 898 S.W.2d 465 (1995).

Under subsection (f) of this rule, if a party has already properly preserved his or her error concerning any of the grounds listed in subsection (a) of this rule, that party is not required to make a motion for new trial in order to argue those grounds on appeal; nonetheless, because the rules do not provide for plain error, any error argued on appeal must have first been directed to the trial court's attention in some appropriate manner, so that court had an opportunity to address the issue. Stacks v. Jones, 323 Ark. 643, 916 S.W.2d 120 (1996).

Appellate Review.

Trial court's finding in favor of the spouse that a pharmacist incorrectly filled the decedent's prescription resulting in his death was proper where the store's point on appeal was a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence, Ark. R. Civ. P. 50(e), and not a motion for a new trial under this rule; because the motion for a new trial was really a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence supporting the proximate-cause element of the spouse's action for medical injury, it had not been properly preserved. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Tucker, 353 Ark. 730, 120 S.W.3d 61 (2003).

In an action alleging that the tobacco company breached the terms of the Master Settlement Agreement, the tobacco company did not amend its notice of appeal to include an appeal from the denial of its motion to amend or alter the judgment. Thus, its motion to amend or alter the judgment, which included its request to join indispensable parties, could not be addressed on appeal. Vibo Corp. v. State ex rel. McDaniel, 2011 Ark. 124, 380 S.W.3d 411, cert. denied, 565 U.S. 1059, 132 S. Ct. 759, 181 L. Ed. 2d 483 (2011).

When, after a driver admitted liability for a car crash, a jury awarded an allegedly injured party zero damages, the party did not waive an objection to the verdict under § 16-64-119 by declining to poll the jury; declining to poll a jury does not bar an appeal under this rule. Wallis v. Keller, 2015 Ark. App. 343, 464 S.W.3d 128 (2015).

Applicability.

Jury misconduct may apparently be used in a criminal proceeding as a basis for granting a new trial, pursuant to subdivision (a)(2) of this rule. Trimble v. State, 316 Ark. 161, 871 S.W.2d 562 (1994).

A motion filed as a "Motion for Reconsideration" that claimed the divorce decree was contrary to the preponderance of the evidence was really a motion for a new trial under subdivision (a)(6) of this rule. Slaton v. Slaton, 330 Ark. 287, 956 S.W.2d 150 (1997).

Class representative's motion pursuant to this rule was not the proper motion to challenge the denial of a motion for class certification as no judgment had been entered. Valley v. Nat'l Zinc Processors, Inc., 364 Ark. 184, 217 S.W.3d 832 (2005).

Attorney's Fees.

Motions for attorney's fees are not required to be filed within the ten-day period set out in Ark. R. Civ. P. 52(b) and subsection (b) of this rule. Sunbelt Exploration Co. v. Stephens Prod. Co., 320 Ark. 298, 896 S.W.2d 867 (1995).

Burden of Proof.

In a hearing on a motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence, the burden is on the movant to establish that he could not with reasonable diligence have discovered and produced the evidence at the time of the trial, that the evidence is not merely impeaching or cumulative, and that the additional testimony would probably have changed the result of the trial. Piercy v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 311 Ark. 424, 844 S.W.2d 337 (1993).

The moving party bore the burden of proving an “appearance of juror misconduct,” which would be sufficient to warrant relief under subdivision (a)(2) of this rule. Rathbun v. Ward, 315 Ark. 264, 866 S.W.2d 403 (1993).

Characterization of Motion.

Owner’s motion, claiming that a miscarriage of justice occurred when judgment was entered against her because she did not receive notice of the trial, legitimately invoked Ark. R. Civ. P. 60 and was, therefore, timely, as the owner did not complain of any errors occurring during trial nor did she challenge the sufficiency of the evidence at trial; thus, the motion was a motion under Ark. R. Civ. P. 60 and not a motion for a new trial. Cent. Ark. Found. Homes, LLC v. Choate, 2011 Ark. App. 260, 383 S.W.3d 418 (2011).

Construction.

A motion for new trial in a criminal case, made pursuant to ARAP 4(c), is analogous to a motion made pursuant to this rule. Banning v. State, 43 Ark. App. 106, 861 S.W.2d 119 (1993).

“Entry” of a document is distinct from “dated” or “filed”: the term “dated” refers to the date the judge signs the order; a document is “filed” on the date the clerk file-stamps it; and a document is “entered” when it is actually recorded on the docket sheet or book by the clerk. In re Bunt, 165 B.R. 894 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 1994).

A reopened hearing is not a new trial. Beck v. State, 317 Ark. 154, 876 S.W.2d 561 (1994).

Neither a motion for new trial, nor an appeal arguing that the jury’s verdict was against the preponderance of the evidence under subsections (a) and (f) of this rule, tests the sufficiency of the evidence to go to the jury and neither is precluded by Ark. R. Civ. P. 50(e). Hall v. Grummett, 318 Ark. 309, 885 S.W.2d 297 (1994).

Ark. R. Civ. P. 60 may not be used to breathe life into an otherwise defunct motion under this rule. United S. Assurance Co. v. Beard, 320 Ark. 115, 894 S.W.2d 948 (1995).

Although this rule specifically states that a motion for a new trial may be granted where the verdict is clearly contrary to a preponderance of the evidence, such a motion does not test the sufficiency of the evidence to go to the jury; a party must test the sufficiency of the evidence by a motion for a directed verdict or judgment notwithstanding the verdict, not a motion for a new trial. Benton v. Barnett, 53 Ark. App. 146, 920 S.W.2d 30 (1996).

Subdivisions (a)(4) and (a)(5) of this rule are separate and distinct grounds for granting a new trial, and appellant was not required to raise one argument in order to preserve the other. Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. Priddy, 328 Ark. 666, 945 S.W.2d 355 (1997).

Denial of New Trial Upheld.

Motion for a new trial was properly denied where ordinary prudence could have easily prevented the lenders’ failure to appear at the scheduled trial, and the lenders’ failure to follow the circuit court’s scheduling orders throughout the case had hindered their ability to present evidence and witnesses at trial. First Gov’t Lease Co. v. Northwest Scott Cty. Volunteer Fire Dep’t, 2018 Ark. App. 419, 560 S.W.3d 471 (2018).

Motion for new trial based on the refusal to give a proposed jury instruction under the Arkansas Fraudulent Transfers Act was properly denied because there was no evidence to support the alleged acts listed in that instruction. Nash v. Nash, 2019 Ark. App. 173, 574 S.W.3d 171, cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 536, 205 L. Ed. 2d 336 (2019).

New trial based on the plaintiff attorney’s claim that the verdict on the breach of contract claim was against the preponderance of the evidence was properly denied where the jury clearly could have credited the testimony of the decedent’s son that the attorney had been paid. Nash v. Nash, 2019 Ark. App. 173, 574 S.W.3d 171, cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 536, 205 L. Ed. 2d 336 (2019).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying the wife’s motion for a new trial because the husband offered several documents verifying an agreement between the parties entered into prior to the divorce trial, including a quitclaim deed and signed, notarized statements wherein they agreed to share joint custody of the children. Elder v. Elder, 2020 Ark. App. 283 (2020).

Discretion of Court.

—Amount of Recovery.

—Contrary to Preponderance of Evidence.

—Newly Discovered Evidence.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion when the motion for new trial was granted where summary of the material evidence before the judge was a fair summary of the evidence as disclosed by the transcript. Toney v. Miller, 268 Ark. 795, 597 S.W.2d 102 (Ct. App. 1980), overruled, Eisner v. Fields, 67 Ark. App. 238, 998 S.W.2d 421 (1999); Schrader v. Bell, 301 Ark. 38, 781 S.W.2d 466 (1989).

This rule gives the trial court the discretionary power to grant a new trial to any party for grounds materially affecting the substantial rights of such party, including error in the assessment of the amount of recovery, whether too large or too small, or where the verdict is contrary to the preponderance of the evidence. Lawson v. Lewis, 276 Ark. 7, 631 S.W.2d 611 (1982).

Trial court held not to have abused its discretion. First State Bank v. Gamble, 14 Ark. App. 53, 685 S.W.2d 173 (1985); Penny v. Phillips, 298 Ark. 481, 769 S.W.2d 4 (1989); St. Louis S.W. Ry. v. White, 302 Ark. 193, 788 S.W.2d 483 (1990); Turrisse v. Crane, 303 Ark. 576, 798 S.W.2d 684 (1990); Gipson v. Garrison, 308 Ark. 344, 824 S.W.2d 829 (1992).

A showing of abuse of discretion is more difficult when a new trial has been granted because there is less basis for a claim of prejudice by the beneficiary of the verdict which was set aside than by one who has unsuccessfully moved for a new trial. Adams v. Parker, 289 Ark. 1, 708 S.W.2d 617 (1986).

Abuse of discretion in granting a new trial means a discretion improvidently exercised, that is, exercised without due consideration, and a showing of abuse is more difficult when a new trial has been granted because the party opposing the motion will have another opportunity to prevail. Arkansas Power & Light Co. v. Bolles, 48 Ark. App. 23, 888 S.W.2d 319 (1994).

Although juror's apparently unintentional failure to disclose disqualifying information was not done knowingly, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial. Arkansas Power & Light Co. v. Bolles, 48 Ark. App. 23, 888 S.W.2d 319 (1994).

The trial court has limited discretion as it may not substitute its view of the evidence for the jury's except when the verdict is clearly against the preponderance of the evidence; however, the trial court may grant a new trial when a miscarriage of justice has occurred. Young v. Honeycutt, 324 Ark. 120, 919 S.W.2d 216 (1996).

While a trial court's discretion is much broader where the question is whether a jury verdict is supported by a preponderance of the evidence, still, its discretion when granting a new trial under other provisions of this rule should not be disturbed absent manifest abuse of discretion, or discretion improvidently exercised. Suen v. Greene, 329 Ark. 455, 947 S.W.2d 791 (1997).

Trial court properly denied a buyer's motion for new trial because the buyer failed to establish that he could not have discovered and produced the evidence at trial with the exercise of reasonable diligence in investigating the condition of the home where the buyer's real-estate agent was aware that the contractor was not a licensed home inspector, the contractor was hired to perform a visual walk-through of the home to see what needed to be repaired, and the buyer was with him the entire time and was aware that he did not look at the roof or the attic. McGee v. Archie VanGorder Custom Homes, Inc., 2015 Ark. App. 170 (2015).

—Amount of Recovery.

Under subdivision (a)(5) of this rule, the inadequacy of the recovery is a ground for a new trial even where there is no other error; where the argument is the inadequacy of the verdict, the appellate court will sustain the trial court's denial of a new trial unless there is a clear and manifest abuse of discretion. Warner v. Liebhaver, 281 Ark. 118, 661 S.W.2d 399 (1983); Gilbert v. Diversified Graphics, 286 Ark. 261, 691 S.W.2d 162 (1985); Fields v. Stovall, 297 Ark. 402, 762 S.W.2d 783 (1989); Hamilton v. Russell, 307 Ark. 478, 821 S.W.2d 35 (1991); National Bank of Commerce v. McNeill Trucking Co., 309 Ark. 80, 828 S.W.2d 584 (1992).

Trial judge does not abuse discretion when a new trial is granted if it could fairly be found that the jury failed to take into account all the elements of the total injury proven, even if it might be possible to explain the verdict on the basis of something like awarding the plaintiff only the proven pecuniary loss or where the jury has been instructed on comparative negligence. Carr v. Woods, 294 Ark. 13, 740 S.W.2d 145 (1987).

Although the judgment was in excess of the amount of damages pleaded, there was substantial evidence to support the court's entering judgment as it did; therefore, the trial court did not err in not allowing a motion for new trial under subsection (a) of this rule. RLI Ins. Co. v. Coe, 306 Ark. 337, 813 S.W.2d 783 (1991), cert. dismissed, 502 U.S. 1067, 112 S. Ct. 959, 117 L. Ed. 2d 126 (1992).

Trial court erred in disallowing as damages the medical expense attributable to victim's heart examination. National Bank of Commerce v. McNeill Trucking Co., 309 Ark. 80, 828 S.W.2d 584 (1992).

—Contrary to Preponderance of Evidence.

The trial court has some discretion in setting aside a jury verdict, but not the broad discretion that has been heretofore recognized. The trial court is not to substitute its view of the evidence for that of the jury's unless the jury verdict is found to be clearly against the preponderance of the evidence. Clayton v. Wagon, 276 Ark. 124, 633 S.W.2d 19 (1982); Ray v. Green, 310 Ark. 571, 839 S.W.2d 515 (1992).

Trial court did not abuse discretion in finding that verdict was clearly against preponderance of evidence. Dyer v. Woods, 289 Ark. 127, 710 S.W.2d 1 (1986); Stephens v. Saunders, 293 Ark. 279, 737 S.W.2d 626 (1987); Richardson v. Flanery, 316 Ark. 310, 871 S.W.2d 589 (1994).

Under subdivision (a)(6) of this rule, the trial court has some discretion in the matter, but that discretion is limited, and it may not substitute its view of the evidence for the jury's except when the verdict is clearly against the preponderance of the evidence. Peoples Bank & Trust Co. v. Wallace, 290 Ark. 589, 721 S.W.2d 659 (1986); Shelton v. Shelton, 296 Ark. 212, 752 S.W.2d 758 (1988).

Trial judge abused his discretion where jury's verdict was not clearly against the preponderance of the evidence. Schrader v. Bell, 301 Ark. 38, 781 S.W.2d 466 (1989).

Awarding punitive damages while denying compensatory damages, where plaintiff's testimony that she sustained pecuniary injury was not challenged, was contrary to the preponderance of evidence. Hale v. Ladd, 308 Ark. 567, 826 S.W.2d 244 (1992).

The test to apply in reviewing the trial court's granting of the motion is whether the judge abused his or her discretion; this standard is not to be confused with that or the review of a trial court's granting of a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, which provides that a court may set aside the jury verdict if: (1) there is no substantial evidence to support the jury's verdict, and (2) the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Richardson v. Flanery, 316 Ark. 310, 871 S.W.2d 589 (1994).

Although the trial court is granted some discretion in deciding a motion pursuant to subdivision (a)(6) of this rule that discretion is limited, and the trial court may not substitute its view of the evidence for the jury's except when the verdict is clearly against the preponderance of the evidence. Diamond State Towing Co. v. Cash, 324 Ark. 226, 919 S.W.2d 510 (1996).

In a case involving a fire insurance policy, where the jury could find without clear error that insured had a motive and an opportunity to burn the house, and the jury could likewise infer that insured, or someone at her direction, intentionally set the fire, the trial judge abused his discretion in setting aside the verdict for insurer and setting the case for a new trial. Nationwide Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Bryson, 60 Ark. App. 293, 962 S.W.2d 824 (1998).

Trial court erred in denying a passenger's new trial motion under subdivision (a)(6) of this rule because the jury's verdict in an amount lower than the passenger's medical bills was against the preponderance of the evidence, given that the motorist admitted liability for such bills and the jury was properly instructed on that fact; in addition, although the motorist's counsel's opening and closing statements were not evidence, the court was not convinced that the trial court was prohibited from considering counsel's concessions concerning the liability for medical bills by the motorist. Machost v. Simkins, 86 Ark. App. 47, 158 S.W.3d 726 (2004).

In home buyers' action for breach of contract and fraud, the trial court did not err in denying home buyers' motion for a new trial in light of evidence that sellers assumed there was a septic system on the property because the jury could have found that the sellers did not make a false statement about the septic tank; further, the jury could have found a lack of justifiable reliance based on the fact that the buyers had obtained a professional inspection of the property, the "as-is" clause and other disclaimers, and other parts of the sale documents. Barringer v. Hall, 89 Ark. App. 293, 202 S.W.3d 568 (2005).

—Newly Discovered Evidence.

Whether to grant a motion for new trial based upon newly discovered evidence under subdivision (a)(7) of this rule is within the sound discretion of the trial court, which will not be reversed absent an abuse of that discretion. Liggett v. Church of Nazarene, 291 Ark. 298, 724 S.W.2d 170 (1987); Piercy v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 311 Ark. 424, 844 S.W.2d 337 (1993).

Disposition of Motion.

ARAP 4(c), by its terms, is applicable to specific civil motions including a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict under Ark. R. Civ. P. 50(b), a motion to amend findings of fact or to make additional findings of fact under Ark. R. Civ. P. 52(b), and a motion for a new trial under subsection (b) of this rule; however, ARAP 4(c) has been applied to criminal matters where the motion made following the judgment of conviction was analogous to a civil motion made under Ark. R. Civ. P. 50(b), Ark. R. Civ. P. 52(b), or this rule. Fuller v. State, 316 Ark. 341, 872 S.W.2d 54 (1994).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in granting appellees' motion to reconsider and vacating the default judgment where appellant's service through the Secretary of State did not effect valid service on appellees, a dissolved LLC and its sole owner, and sufficiency of service had been the issue to be determined at every stage of the proceedings below. Eliasnik v. Y&S Pine Bluff, LLC, 2018 Ark. App. 138, 546 S.W.3d 497 (2018).

Error in Assessment of Recovery.

Trial court properly granted motion for new trial after jury returned erroneous verdict of damages. Roberts v. Simpson, 275 Ark. 181, 628 S.W.2d 308 (1982); Johnson v. Truck Ins. Exch., 285 Ark. 470, 688 S.W.2d 728 (1985); Adams v. Parker, 289 Ark. 1, 708 S.W.2d 617 (1986).

Appellate court will not affirm a judgment on the issue of liability and order a partial new trial on the issue of damages. Hinkle v. Perry, 296 Ark. 114, 752 S.W.2d 267 (1988).

In at least two cases, the Arkansas Supreme Court reversed and remanded for a partial new trial on damages, but these cases are deviations from the long standing rule that a judgment will not be affirmed on the issue of liability and remanded for a partial new trial on the issue of damages. Smith v. Walt Bennett Ford, Inc., 314 Ark. 591, 864 S.W.2d 817 (1993).

Under subdivision (a)(5) of this rule, error in the assessment of the amount of recovery, whether too large or too small, is a ground for new trial even in the absence of other trial error. Kempner v. Schulte, 318 Ark. 433, 885 S.W.2d 892 (1994).

In an eminent domain case, a property owner was entitled to a new trial on the issue of just compensation because the jury's verdict showed that the jury relied on the testimony of an appraiser for the Arkansas State Highway Commission and such testimony was contrary to the physical facts and presented a valuation based on a faulty assumption. The appraiser assumed that the entire tract could be fully accessed from the south, which it could not, and based on such faulty assumption, he reached the conclusion that the tract had not diminished in value by the loss of access to the north. Ark. State Highway Comm'n v. Wood, 102 Ark. App. 348, 285 S.W.3d 256 (2008).

Error of Law.

Under subdivision (a)(8) of this rule, a new trial may be granted where an error of law occurred at trial and was objected to by the party making the application and that error materially affected the substantial rights of the moving party. Nazarenko v. CTI Trucking Co., 313 Ark. 570, 856 S.W.2d 869 (1993); Ford Motor Co. v. Nuckolls, 320 Ark. 15, 894 S.W.2d 897 (1995).

Just as it is within the trial court's discretion to decide pursuant to Evid. Rule 403 that evidence, though relevant, is to be excluded because it is unfairly prejudicial, under subdivision (a)(8) of this rule it is within the trial court's discretion to grant a new trial on the basis of an error of law occurring at the trial and objected to by the party making the application. Burnett v. Fowler, 315 Ark. 646, 869 S.W.2d 694 (1994).

Where the plaintiffs did not ask the trial court to conduct an Evid. Rule 403 weighing of probative value against unfair prejudice, the trial court erred in granting a new trial based on Evid. Rule 403 because that objection was not raised either before or during the trial, and subdivision (a)(8) of this rule provides that a new trial may be granted for an "error of law occurring at the trial and objected to by the party making the application" for the new trial; when the argument is focused solely on relevance, with no consideration of prejudice because of the lack of a weighing objection, there is no support for the ruling that the evidence was not relevant. Ford Motor Co. v. Nuckolls, 320 Ark. 15, 894 S.W.2d 897 (1995).

Evidence Not Before Court.

Where evidence was not before trial court originally and was, therefore, not considered in its findings of fact, such evidence cannot be used as a basis for a motion for a new trial, since a motion for a new trial cannot be used to bring into the record that which does not otherwise appear of record. Sharp County v. Northeast Ark. Planning & Consulting Co., 269 Ark. 336, 602 S.W.2d 627 (1980).

Trial court did not err in concluding that a taxpayer's raising of a constitutional issue was untimely; at the time the taxpayer filed a motion for a new trial, the trial court had only issued its letter opinion informing the parties on how it was going to rule and, thus, the motion became effective, pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule, the day after the actual judgment was filed, and the motion raised the constitutional issue for the first time, which was not permitted. Jones v. Double D' Props., 352 Ark. 39, 98 S.W.3d 405 (2003).

Excessive Damages.

Implicit in this rule is the trial court's power to order a new trial where the damages are excessive, unless the party in whose favor the damages were awarded agrees and consents to a remittitur. Williams v. Charles Sloan, Inc., 17 Ark. App. 247, 706 S.W.2d 405 (1986); Shepherd v. Looper, 293 Ark. 29, 732 S.W.2d 150 (1987).

Compensatory and punitive damages are intertwined, and an error with respect to one requires a retrial of the whole case. Shepherd v. Looper, 293 Ark. 29, 732 S.W.2d 150 (1987).

In a wrongful death action brought by the administrator of the deceased patient's estate against a nursing center and its parent company, the compensatory and punitive damages award, while not the result of passion or prejudice considering the reprehensibility of the nursing center's conduct in neglecting the patient, required either a new trial based on excessive damages or a remittitur of damages. Advocat, Inc. v. Sauer, 353 Ark. 29, 111 S.W.3d 346, cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1012, 124 S. Ct. 532, 157 L. Ed. 2d 424 (2003), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1004, 124 S. Ct. 535, 157 L. Ed. 2d 409 (2003).

Where nursing facility failed to establish either that the damage awards were excessive and the result of passion or prejudice or that they shocked the conscience of the appellate court, remittitur was denied. Northport Health Servs. v. Owens, 356 Ark. 630, 158 S.W.3d 164 (2004).

Court finds it is impossible to say that an award of punitive damages, which the jury could have concluded was at least $5,000 less than the profit gained by the tortfeasers in committing the wrong, exceeds what is necessary to sufficiently deter others from comparable conduct in the future. Bronakowski v. Lindhurst, 2009 Ark. App. 513, 324 S.W.3d 719 (2009).

Verdict granting appellees punitive damages of $25,000 did not shock the court's conscience, given that (1) the jury could have concluded that appellants knowingly cleared four-tenths of an acre of appellees' lot, (2) testimony supported the conclusion that appellants knew the location of the property boundaries and corners, (3) the removal of trees from appellees' lot improved appellants' view of the lake, and (4) the jury could have found that the $30,000 profit realized by appellants on the sale of their home was a direct result of their intentional wrongful clearing of appellees' property. Bronakowski v. Lindhurst, 2009 Ark. App. 513, 324 S.W.3d 719 (2009).

In considering appellants' claim of error regarding the denial of their motions for a new trial and remittitur, while appellants did not stipulate to the specific amount of damages they caused during earlier incidents, this was irrelevant to the court's review; the due process notice requirement for punitive damage purposes is satisfied when, prior to engaging in the conduct, the potential sanctions are known. Bronakowski v. Lindhurst, 2009 Ark. App. 513, 324 S.W.3d 719 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying appellants a new trial or remittitur regarding a punitive damage award in favor of appellees, as the award was not in excess of federal due process standards, given that (1) appellees suffered economic harm, but the harm was much more than purely economic injury, as appellants cut down approximately 40 percent of appellees' future retirement homesite and the privacy afforded by the trees was very important to appellees, (2) appellants' action forced appellees to give up their plans to retire to the property and ultimately sell it, (3) the tree cutting was intentional and not an isolated incident, (4) the profit appellants received from the sale of their property was a direct result of the tree clearing on appellees' property, (5) the award was not so grossly excessive as to have violated federal due process, (6) each of appellants were on notice of and could have been charged with a Class C felony of criminal mischief under § 5-38-203(b)(1) with, under § 5-4-201(a)(2), a potential fine of $10,000, plus a violation of § 15-32-101(a)(1), (2) was a misdemeanor, with a potential fine and jail time, and (8) under § 18-60-102(a)(1), appellants had ample notice that their actions could result in a penalty of $25,000 punitive damages. Bronakowski v. Lindhurst, 2009 Ark. App. 513, 324 S.W.3d 719 (2009).

Failure to Seek Directed Verdict.

Since a motion for a new trial may be granted under this rule where the verdict is clearly contrary to the preponderance of the evidence, and such a motion does not test the sufficiency of the evidence, the plaintiffs were not precluded by Ark. R. Civ. P. 50(e) from moving for a new trial because they had failed to move for directed verdict. Yeager v. Roberts, 288 Ark. 156, 702 S.W.2d 793 (1986).

In a personal injury case, plaintiff's motion for a new trial did not preserve a sufficiency of the evidence argument for appeal because he did not raise the argument in a motion for directed verdict at the close of all the evidence. Switzer v. Shelter Mut. Ins. Co., 362 Ark. 419, 208 S.W.3d 792 (2005).

Finality.

The finality principles of this rule and Rule 60 of the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure do not apply to class rulings under Rule 23 before there is a decision on the merits. Fraley v. Williams Ford Tractor & Equip. Co., 339 Ark. 322, 5 S.W.3d 423 (1999).

Form of Motion.

Although the motion cited Ark. R. Civ. P. 50 and was entitled motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, it clearly stated grounds for a new trial set forth in this rule. Cornett v. Prather, 293 Ark. 108, 732 S.W.2d 469 (1987).

Where motion to vacate was in the nature of a motion for a new trial under this rule, it was required to be filed within ten days of judgment; since this was not done, and motion to vacate did not extend the time for filing a notice of appeal under ARAP 4(b), appeal was dismissed as untimely. Jackson v. Arkansas Power & Light Co., 309 Ark. 572, 832 S.W.2d 224 (1992).

Where motion to vacate was couched in terms of a motion under this rule for a new trial on the basis that the verdict was contrary to the preponderance of the evidence, motion to vacate was not in reality a Rule 60 motion to prevent a miscarriage of justice. Jackson v. Arkansas Power & Light Co., 309 Ark. 572, 832 S.W.2d 224 (1992).

Trial court had jurisdiction to modify the amount of a child support arrearage owed by a father because the modification was entered 86 days after the entry of the original order, which was within the time frame under Ark. R. Civ. P. 60; the father's motion was not one seeking a new trial under this rule. In his motion, the father did not ask for a new trial, but rather requested that a trial court enter an order reducing his balance; this request did not require the taking of additional evidence, but rather an application of the social security benefits received by the child against the father's total child-support arrearage. Office of Child Support Enforcement v. Dickens, 2009 Ark. App. 195, 300 S.W.3d 122 (2009).

Inadequacy of Damages.

No new trial held called for due to inadequacy of damages. Waterfield v. Quimby, 277 Ark. 472, 644 S.W.2d 241 (1982); Freeman v. Anderson, 279 Ark. 282, 651 S.W.2d 450 (1983).

Where the jury was instructed as to both compensatory and punitive damages, but was not told that compensatory damages must be awarded before punitive damages could be allowed and the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff and awarded punitive damages, but did not award plaintiff any compensatory damages, a new trial should have been ordered under subdivision (a)(5) of this rule. Takeya v. Didion, 294 Ark. 611, 745 S.W.2d 614 (1988).

Where the primary issue is the alleged inadequacy of the jury's award, the appellate court will sustain the trial court's denial of the motion for new trial unless there is a clear abuse of discretion. Garrett v. Brown, 319 Ark. 662, 893 S.W.2d 784 (1995).

In an action arising from a motor vehicle accident, the trial judge did not commit a manifest abuse of discretion in granting a new trial to the plaintiffs where there was evidence of over $300,000 in damages, but the jury awarded only $10,000. Garnett v. Crow, 70 Ark. App. 97, 14 S.W.3d 531 (2000).

In a medical malpractice action arising from damage caused to the plaintiff's femoral nerve during a hernia operation, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial with regard to the claim by the plaintiff's wife for loss of consortium where the court also granted a new trial to the plaintiff based on a finding that there was a fundamental error in the assessment of his damages. Tirado v. O'Hara, 70 Ark. App. 152, 15 S.W.3d 715 (2000).

The trial court's granting of a new trial to the plaintiff was not such a manifest abuse of discretion, exercised thoughtlessly and without due consideration, so as to warrant reversal where (1) the jury found the defendant negligent in an automobile accident, but awarded no damages, (2) the plaintiff sought medical treatment several weeks after the accident because of persistent headaches, neck and back pain and soreness, commencing the night of the accident, (3) her physician noted swelling and persistent muscle spasms in the plaintiff neck and lower back, and diagnosed a whiplash-type muscular and ligamentous injury, and (4) the physician testified that that a muscle spasm is an objective finding, that a person cannot fake a muscle spasm, and that the plaintiff's degenerative disc disease did not play a significant role in her injury. Hogan v. Holliday, 72 Ark. App. 67, 31 S.W.3d 875 (2000).

When, after a driver admitted liability for a car crash, a jury awarded an allegedly injured party zero damages, the party was not entitled to a new trial because (1) the party only sought pain and suffering damages, (2) opposing counsel's statements that the case was worth "some money" did not require the jury to award damages, and (3) the jury could reasonably decide that testimony from only family members was not reliable or persuasive as to the damages requested. Wallis v. Keller, 2015 Ark. App. 343, 464 S.W.3d 128 (2015).

Irregularity.

The length of time of jury deliberation is not, of itself, a ground for a new trial. Wingfield v. Page, 278 Ark. 276, 644 S.W.2d 940 (1983).

Issues.

The possibility of a compromise in the jury room links the two issues of damages and liability inseparably together; this is so in spite of the language of this rule suggesting that a trial court may grant a new trial on "all or part of the issues." Smith v. Walt Bennett Ford, Inc., 314 Ark. 591, 864 S.W.2d 817 (1993).

Jurisdiction.

Pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 60(b), the trial court loses jurisdiction to rule on the motion for a new trial 90 days after the judgment is filed with the clerk. Mullen v. Couch, 288 Ark. 231, 703 S.W.2d 866 (1986).

When a motion under this rule is timely made, the trial court must decide the motion within 30 days of its filing and enter that decision of record; otherwise, the trial court loses jurisdiction to grant the relief requested in the motion. Upton v. Estate of Upton, 308 Ark. 677, 828 S.W.2d 827 (1992).

Where appellee's August 9 motion for j.n.o.v. or a new trial was timely filed within 10 days of the August 5 judgment, but the trial court neither granted nor denied the motion within 30 days of its filing, so that the motion was deemed denied as of the 30th day, September 8, the trial court's failure to act on appellee's motion within 30 days of its filing resulted, by operation of law, in that court's loss of jurisdiction to decide the motion; therefore, the September 23 order purporting to grant appellee's j.n.o.v. motion was void and of no effect. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Sudrick, 49 Ark. App. 84, 896 S.W.2d 452 (1995).

Trial court's order granting a new trial should not be given effect because it lost jurisdiction to act on a repair company's motion where it entered the order granting the motion for new trial five days after it was due, and the company did not present anything that justified a deviation or that supported a remand to develop facts concerning a winter storm. Whitey's Truck Ctr., Inc. v. Robinson, 2015 Ark. App. 146 (2015).

Juror Affidavit.

Ark. R. Evid. 606(b) and case law prohibited the trial court from considering a juror's affidavit submitted by a party in support of a new trial motion under this rule; because the party had not alleged that some outside influence affected the jury's deliberations, the court could not consider the juror's affidavit or its allegations that the jury was confused when it awarded the party only a certain amount in damages. Machost v. Simkins, 86 Ark. App. 47, 158 S.W.3d 726 (2004).

In a condemnation case, the trial court properly struck juror affidavits as being barred by Ark. R. Evid. 606(b) and denied appellants' motion for new trial based on jury misconduct; the trial court properly refused to consider the affidavits because they referred to events occurring during the internal deliberations of the jury and, without the juror affidavits, appellants could not prove jury misconduct. D.B.&J. Holden Farms, Ltd. P'ship v. Ark. State Highway Comm'n, 93 Ark. App. 202, 218 S.W.3d 355 (2005).

Although juror misconduct was grounds for a new trial under subdivision (a) of this rule on the issue of whether a driver's conduct fell within the intentional acts exclusion of a policy, and a juror committed misconduct in conducting a Google search for "intentional act" and sharing the information with the jury, the insured failed to show that the information was prejudicial, and therefore the juror's affidavit was inadmissible under Ark. R. Evid. 606(b). Safeco Ins. Co. v. Southern Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. Co., 2013 Ark. App. 696, 430 S.W.3d 815 (2013).

Jury Misconduct.

Motion for new trial properly granted for jury misconduct. Zimmerman v. Ashcraft, 268 Ark. 835, 597 S.W.2d 99 (Ct. App. 1980) (involved in litigation); Moody Equip. & Supply Co. v. Union Nat'l Bank, 273 Ark. 319, 619 S.W.2d 637 (1981). (flirting with witness).

Subdivision (a)(2) and subsection (c) of this rule are the proper provisions under which motion for new trial should be presented to the trial court where motion alleges that trial court erred in denying motion for mistrial or for continuance because of alleged bias of juror. Franklin v. Estate of Griffith, 11 Ark. App. 124, 666 S.W.2d 723 (1984).

When a jury returns a general verdict, and special interrogatories concerning liability or damages are not requested, such a verdict could be based on a finding of no liability, no damages, or both, and the court will not speculate on the basis for the jury's verdict. Esry v. Carden, 328 Ark. 153, 942 S.W.2d 846 (1997).

In an action to recover damages for injuries sustained by the plaintiff at the hands of security guards at a nightclub, the nightclub was not entitled to a new trial on the basis of evidence that, on the evening the trial concluded, the son of a juror, who had been twice thrown out of the nightclub, was in the nightclub and boasted that his mom had voted against the nightclub as there is no evidence of the son's age, whether or not he lived with his mother, that the mother knew that her son had been ejected from the nightclub, or even that she knew he went there. Kristie's Katering v. Ameri, 72 Ark. App. 102, 35 S.W.3d 807 (2000).

Although a trial court improperly considered parts of affidavits that referred to the internal deliberations of the jury on matters not relating to extraneous information thereby violating

Ark. R. Evid. 606, the trial court's order awarding appellee a new trial pursuant to subdivision (a)(2) of this rule in appellant's personal injury action against appellee was affirmed because it was not manifest abuse of discretion for the trial court to conclude that the jury failed to follow its instructions and considered evidence not introduced into evidence. Campbell v. Hankins, 2009 Ark. App. 479, 324 S.W.3d 358 (2009).

Misconduct of Prevailing Party.

Misconduct of the "prevailing party" includes misconduct of the prevailing party's attorney. Hacker v. Hall, 296 Ark. 571, 759 S.W.2d 32 (1988).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial under subdivision (a)(2) of this rule based on the defense attorney's statements during closing arguments; the conduct did not constitute misconduct within the meaning of the rule, as the trial court maintained firm control over the proceedings as evidenced by the admonishment to counsel, the finding of contempt, and the re-giving of AMI Civil 101A, and plaintiff did not meet his burden of demonstrating a reasonable possibility that prejudice resulted from the conduct. Warren v. Frizell, 2017 Ark. App. 129, 516 S.W.3d 756 (2017).

Motion for new trial by plaintiff, a licensed attorney appearing pro se, under subdivisions (a)(1) and (a)(2) of this rule, based on the behavior of the decedent's son during his testimony was properly denied as plaintiff failed to specifically object to the son's theatrics and raised the issue for the first time in the motion for new trial. Nash v. Nash, 2019 Ark. App. 173, 574 S.W.3d 171, cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 536, 205 L. Ed. 2d 336 (2019).

New Trial Improper.

Motion for new trial held properly denied. Taylor v. Boswell, 272 Ark. 354, 614 S.W.2d 505 (1981); Johnson v. Cross, 281 Ark. 146, 661 S.W.2d 386 (1983); Arkansas Kraft Corp. v. Coble, 15 Ark. App. 25, 688 S.W.2d 319 (1985); Cox v. Farrell, 292 Ark. 177, 728 S.W.2d 954 (1987); Dedman v. Porch, 293 Ark. 571, 739 S.W.2d 685 (1987); Knoles v. Salazar, 298 Ark. 281, 766 S.W.2d 613 (1989); Reddish v. Goseland, 301 Ark. 527, 785 S.W.2d 205 (1990); Weber v. Bailey, 302 Ark. 175, 787 S.W.2d 690 (1990); Olmstead v. Moody, 311 Ark. 163, 842 S.W.2d 26 (1992); Arkansas Dep't of Human Servs. v. Couch, 38 Ark. App. 165, 832 S.W.2d 265 (1992); Bell v. Darwin, 327 Ark. 298, 937 S.W.2d 665 (1997).

One who is surprised by his adversary's testimony is not entitled to a new trial on that ground if, rather than asking for a postponement to secure necessary evidence, he reserves his plea of surprise as a "masked battery in the effort for a new trial.” Thorne v. Magness, 34 Ark. App. 39, 805 S.W.2d 95 (1991).

The fact that new information has been discovered which might merely impeach or otherwise test the credibility of a witness is not sufficient reason to warrant a new trial. Piercy v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 311 Ark. 424, 844 S.W.2d 337 (1993).

The fact that appellant failed to call a witness at trial is not an adequate ground under subsection (a) of this rule for granting a new trial. O’Flarity v. O’Flarity, 42 Ark. App. 5, 852 S.W.2d 150 (1993).

The verdict was not clearly contrary to the preponderance of the evidence for each of the possible findings. Marvel v. Parker, 317 Ark. 232, 878 S.W.2d 364 (1994).

Where substantial evidence supported the jury’s verdicts, the verdicts were not contrary to the law, and there was no abuse of discretion in the denial of a motion for new trial based on juror misconduct, the trial court did not err in denying the motion for new trial. Griffin v. Woodall, 319 Ark. 383, 892 S.W.2d 451 (1995).

Where party’s nonappearance at trial was the result of his own failure to keep himself informed of the progress of the action, he did not demonstrate entitlement to a new trial under any of the reasons listed in this rule. White v. White, 50 Ark. App. 240, 905 S.W.2d 485 (1995).

The party bearing the burden of proof in a negligence case held not entitled to a judgment notwithstanding the verdict or a new trial where the other party presented substantial evidence to support the jury’s verdict. Russell v. Colson, 326 Ark. 112, 928 S.W.2d 794 (1996).

Where both parties’ counsels were vigorously and professionally advocating the interests of their clients and the trial court maintained a firm control over the proceeding in accordance with the civil procedure rules, there was no showing of prejudice against plaintiff’s rights to a fair trial resulting from the actions of defendant’s attorney; absent any showing that defense counsel’s conduct prevented plaintiff from having a fair trial, the trial court’s action in ordering a new trial for that reason was a manifest abuse of discretion. Suen v. Greene, 329 Ark. 455, 947 S.W.2d 791 (1997).

Court erred in granting a new trial to plaintiffs on the basis of surprise where they did not show that they were prejudiced by the testimony of the witness called, and where they did not object to the testimony or request a curative instruction. Jones Rigging & Heavy Hauling, Inc. v. Parker, 347 Ark. 628, 66 S.W.3d 599 (2002).

New trial based on the moving parties’ surprise, under subdivision (a)(3) of this rule, was erroneously granted because the moving parties did not object to the surprising testimony when it was given and did not move for a continuance; the moving parties were responsible for introducing the surprising evidence, they did not establish that their right to a fair trial was materially affected, and they did not show the surprise could have been prevented through the exercise of ordinary prudence. Jones Rigging & Heavy Hauling, Inc. v. Parker, 347 Ark. 628, 66 S.W.3d 599 (2002).

In a medical malpractice action, the trial court properly denied the patient’s motion for new trial as the evidence was substantial to support the verdict in favor of the surgeon; there was extensive testimony on both sides and substantial evidence for the jury to find in the surgeon’s favor. Webb v. Bouton, 350 Ark. 254, 85 S.W.3d 885 (2002).

Trial court did not err when it denied individual’s motion for a new trial because it was well settled that the weight and value of testimony was a matter that was in the exclusive province of the jury; hence, while it was clear from the evidence that there was an accident, that the driver’s vehicle struck the individual’s vehicle, and that the individual suffered injuries, where the jury declined to find the company and the driver negligent under the facts and law given to them, there was substantial evidence to support the jury’s finding. Dovers v. Stephenson Oil Co., 354 Ark. 695, 128 S.W.3d 805 (2003).

Where the separate answers to interrogatories rendered by the jury were not conflicting, it was an abuse of discretion for the trial court to set aside the jury verdict. Randles v. Cole, 80 Ark. App. 334, 96 S.W.3d 768 (2003).

Trial court did not err by denying bank’s motion for a new trial because, pursuant to the doctrine of election of remedies, the jury should only have been instructed on one of bank’s theories of recovery as the damages and injury claimed on both were the same. Regions Bank v. Griffin, 364 Ark. 193, 217 S.W.3d 829 (2005).

Circuit court did not err in denying buyer’s motion for a new trial where there was substantial evidence to support the jury’s verdict; the jury was presented with five theories of liability, however, it determined that buyer failed to meet her burden of proof on all of them. Thomas v. Olson, 364 Ark. 444, 220 S.W.3d 627 (2005).

Administratrix was not entitled to a new trial under subdivision (a)(5) of this rule where, although the health care corporation was found negligent for allowing a sexual assault of the victim by another resident to occur, the jury did not award damages for the assault; the administratrix did not allege an assault action but, rather, pled and tried the case as a negligence action against the corporation, and there was testimony from which the jury could have reasonably concluded that the victim did not suffer any injury as a result of the incident with the other resident. Fritz v. Baptist Mem. Health Care Corp., 92 Ark. App. 181, 211 S.W.3d 593 (2005).

Daughter's motion for a new trial was properly denied where the daughter did not argue that she was forced to accept a new juror who should have been excused for cause; as for her argument that the trial court should have conducted an inquiry into the venireman's answers on voir dire, she did not ask the court to do so, nor did she ask the court to allow her to probe further into the venireman's responses or lack thereof. Scott v. Cent. Ark. Nursing Ctrs., Inc., 101 Ark. App. 424, 278 S.W.3d 587 (2008).

Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to reopen the record or in denying the motion for new trial, because while § 9-12-315(a)(1) required that property be valued at the time of the divorce, it did not require the trial court to reopen the record or set aside a decree and hold an additional hearing for the purpose of receiving the most up-to-date evidence. Dew v. Dew, 2012 Ark. App. 122, 390 S.W.3d 764 (2012).

Trial court abused its discretion in finding that a new trial or remittitur was warranted due to a jury instruction on punitive damages not including a definition of clear and convincing evidence; the partnership had not raised any objections to the jury instructions, and the jury was properly instructed that the outed partner bore the burden to establish certain facts by clear and convincing evidence in order to be awarded punitive damages. Tran v. Vo, 2017 Ark. App. 618, 535 S.W.3d 295 (2017).

New Trial Proper.

Order granting new trial affirmed. Carr v. Woods, 294 Ark. 13, 740 S.W.2d 145 (1987); Worthington v. Roberts, 304 Ark. 551, 803 S.W.2d 906 (1991).

Trial court's denial of motion for new trial reversed. Fisher Trucking, Inc. v. Fleet Lease, Inc., 304 Ark. 451, 803 S.W.2d 888 (1991).

The trial court properly ruled that the jury's finding in favor of the defendant in a car accident personal injury case was clearly against the preponderance of the evidence and properly granted plaintiff's motion for a new trial. Bristow v. Flurry, 320 Ark. 51, 894 S.W.2d 894 (1995).

Appellant, against whom a default judgment was entered, held entitled to a new trial on the ground that its attorney was allowed to withdraw from the case in violation of Ark. R. Civ. P. 64. Jones-Blair Co. v. Hammett, 326 Ark. 74, 930 S.W.2d 335 (1996).

In a tort suit arising from an automobile accident, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting a motion for a new trial when the evidence did not support the jury's apportionment of liability among the drivers; the trial court may grant a new trial when a miscarriage of justice has occurred. Carlew v. Wright, 356 Ark. 208, 148 S.W.3d 237 (2004).

Trial court did not err in granting the bank's motion for a new trial where the trial court previously excluded evidence based on its mistaken determination that neither the date of filing nor the first day of trial should be included in the 14-day notice period pursuant to § 16-46-108. Phelan v. Discover Bank, 361 Ark. 138, 205 S.W.3d 145 (2005).

In the absence of a request under Ark. R. Civ. P. 52(b)(1), there was no requirement that the trial court provide specific findings of fact or conclusions of law concerning its granting of plaintiff's motion for a new trial. James Tree & Crane Serv. v. Fought, 2017 Ark. 173, 518 S.W.3d 678 (2017).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in granting an injured driver's motion for a new trial where the uncontroverted evidence at trial that she suffered, at minimum, strains and sprains in her neck and back that caused her to seek chiropractic treatment shortly after the collision, combined with defense counsel's virtual concession on the issue during closing argument, supported the finding that the jury's verdict of zero damages was clearly against the preponderance of the evidence under subdivision (a)(6) of this rule. James Tree & Crane Serv. v. Fought, 2017 Ark. 173, 518 S.W.3d 678 (2017).

Newly Discovered Evidence.

Appellant's discovery, that a hearing was held, that appellant's former attorney failed to inform the appellant of the hearing date, and that the hearing took place in their absence, did not constitute "newly discovered evidence." Winans v. Winans, 55 Ark. App. 272, 934 S.W.2d 546 (1996).

Summary judgment was improperly vacated more than 7 months after it was entered because none of the conditions under Ark. R. Civ. P. 60(c) were met; an individual was not constructively served, there was no misprision of the clerk based on the fact that there was no mistake apparent on the record, there was no fraud or misrepresentation, and there was no grounds for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence. New Holland Credit Co. v. Hill, 362 Ark. 329, 208 S.W.3d 191 (2005), overruled in part, Muccio v. Hunt, 2012 Ark. 416 (2012).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial under subdivision (a)(7) of this rule to an owner who was injured in an accident arising out of a well-drilling based on the well driller's employee's post-trial recollection that some of his trial testimony had been inaccurate, because the evidence was not merely impeaching. W.E. Pender & Sons, Inc. v. Lee, 2010 Ark. 52, 370 S.W.3d 163 (2010).

Prejudice.

When a new trial is requested because of juror misconduct under the rubric of subsection (a) of this rule, the moving party must show that the party's rights have been materially affected by demonstrating that a reasonable possibility of prejudice has resulted from the misconduct; prejudice, in such instances, is not presumed. Diemer v. Dischler, 313 Ark. 154, 852 S.W.2d 793 (1993), limited, Druckemiller v. Cluff, 316 Ark. 517, 873 S.W.2d 526 (1994).

In a medical malpractice case, where the jury returned a verdict absolving defendant of medical malpractice, the trial court improperly granted a new trial; the court's decision was based on side-bar comments by defendant's counsel, and its determination that it had erred in not striking the testimony of one expert witness and that it had erred in refusing to declare a mistrial after another witness for defendant gave unresponsive answers in testimony, but these irregularities did not meet the standard set forth in this rule in that they did not materially affect, or show a reasonable possibility of prejudice to, plaintiff's right to a fair trial. Suen v. Greene, 329 Ark. 455, 947 S.W.2d 791 (1997).

Proper Motion to Extend Appeal Time.

Company's motion to reconsider requesting relief was a proper motion under to extend the time for filing a notice of appeal, and thus the individual's motion to dismiss the appeal was denied. Ark. Fed. Credit Union v. Pigg, 2014 Ark. App. 279 (2014).

Response to Motion.

This rule does not require a response to a motion for a new trial, and there is no civil provision or precedent which would allow a new trial by default. Transit Homes, Inc. v. Bellamy, 282 Ark. 453, 671 S.W.2d 153 (1984), overruled, Peters v. Pierce, 314 Ark. 8, 858 S.W.2d 680 (1993).

Where trial court did not rule on a motion for a new trial within 30 days, it was deemed denied pursuant to operation of law. Olmstead v. Moody, 311 Ark. 163, 842 S.W.2d 26 (1992).

It is within the trial court's discretion whether to allow a reply to a response to a motion for a new trial. Adams v. HLC Hotels, Inc., 328 Ark. 108, 941 S.W.2d 424 (1997).

Standard of Review.

When the trial court grants a motion for a new trial, finding the verdict to be contrary to the preponderance of the evidence, the test on review is whether the trial court abused its discretion; but when the trial court denies the motion for a new trial, the test is whether the verdict is supported by substantial evidence, giving the verdict the benefit of all reasonable inferences permissible under the proof. Ferrell v. Whittington, 271 Ark. 750, 610 S.W.2d 572 (1981); Landis v. Hastings, 276 Ark. 135, 633 S.W.2d 26 (1982); Schaeffer v. McGhee, 286 Ark. 113, 689 S.W.2d 537 (1985); Lamons v. Croft, 290 Ark. 341, 719 S.W.2d 426 (1986); Schuster's, Inc. v. Whitehead, 291 Ark. 180, 722 S.W.2d 862 (1987); Scott v. McClain, 296 Ark. 527, 758 S.W.2d 409 (1988).

Appellate court will not reverse a trial court's denial of a motion for a new trial if the decision is supported by substantial evidence. Service Communications, Inc. v. Wells, 279 Ark. 378, 651 S.W.2d 100 (1983).

On appeal, when the motion for a new trial has been denied, the appellate court will affirm if there is substantial evidence to support the verdict; in determining whether substantial evidence exists, the evidence is viewed in the light most favorable to the appellee. Johnson v. Cross, 281 Ark. 146, 661 S.W.2d 386 (1983); Schaeffer v. McGhee, 286 Ark. 113, 689 S.W.2d 537 (1985); Schuster's, Inc. v. Whitehead, 291 Ark. 180, 722 S.W.2d 862 (1987); Ray v. Green, 310 Ark. 571, 839 S.W.2d 515 (1992).

The granting of a new trial addresses itself to the sound discretion of the trial court, and appellate court will not reverse unless it appears that the trial court abused its discretion. Franklin v. Estate of Griffith, 11 Ark. App. 124, 666 S.W.2d 723 (1984); Adams v. Parker, 289 Ark. 1, 708 S.W.2d 617 (1986); Bryant v. Sorrells, 293 Ark. 276, 737 S.W.2d 450 (1987).

The test on review, where the motion is denied, is whether the verdict is supported by substantial evidence. It is only where there is no reasonable probability that the incident occurred according to the version of the prevailing party or where fair-minded men can only draw a contrary conclusion that a jury verdict should be disturbed. Pineview Farms, Inc. v. A.O. Smith Harvestore, Inc., 298 Ark. 78, 765 S.W.2d 924 (1989).

When the primary issue is the alleged inadequacy of the award, rather than a question of liability, the supreme court will sustain the trial judge's denial of a new trial unless there is a clear and manifest abuse of discretion. Smith v. Pettit, 300 Ark. 245, 778 S.W.2d 616 (1989).

In a review of the trial court's discretion in denying a new trial because of alleged inadequacy, an important consideration is whether a fair-minded jury might reasonably have fixed the award at the challenged amount. Smith v. Pettit, 300 Ark. 245, 778 S.W.2d 616 (1989).

On appellate review of a trial court's denial of a motion to set aside a jury verdict, where the verdict concerns the issue of liability, the standard of review is whether the verdict is supported by substantial evidence. Harper v. Clark Equip. Co., 300 Ark. 413, 779 S.W.2d 175 (1989).

If the trial judge denies the motion for a new trial, appellate court will affirm if there is any substantial evidence to support the verdict. If the trial judge grants the motion for a new trial, appellate court will affirm if he did not abuse his discretion in finding that the verdict was clearly against the preponderance of the evidence. Schrader v. Bell, 301 Ark. 38, 781 S.W.2d 466 (1989).

When the primary issue on a motion for new trial is the alleged miscalculation of the damages and not a question of liability, we sustain the trial judge's denial of a new trial unless there is a clear and manifest abuse of discretion. Fisher Trucking, Inc. v. Fleet Lease, Inc., 304 Ark. 451, 803 S.W.2d 888 (1991).

When reviewing a trial court's refusal to set aside a jury verdict on liability, the evidence is viewed in the light most favorable to the appellee, and will be affirmed if there is substantial evidence to support the verdict. Substantial evidence is evidence of sufficient force and character to compel a conclusion one way or the other with reasonable and material certainty; it must force the mind to pass beyond suspicion or conjecture. Minerva Enters., Inc. v. Howlett, 308 Ark. 291, 824 S.W.2d 377 (1992).

The test on review of a motion for a new trial, where the motion is denied, is whether the verdict is supported by substantial evidence, giving the verdict the benefit of all reasonable inferences permissible under the proof. Piercy v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 311 Ark. 424, 844 S.W.2d 337 (1993); Gilbert v. Shine, 314 Ark. 486, 863 S.W.2d 314 (1993).

When a motion for a new trial is made to the trial court, the test applied is whether the judgment is against the preponderance of the evidence; the test on review is whether the judgment is supported by substantial evidence, giving the judgment the benefit of all reasonable inferences permissible under the proof. Harper v. Shackelford, 41 Ark. App. 116, 850 S.W.2d 15 (1993).

The decision to grant a new trial based on newly discovered evidence is a decision within the sound discretion of the trial court and will not be reversed absent an abuse of that discretion. Roetzel v. Brown, 321 Ark. 187, 900 S.W.2d 185 (1995).

Where state had been ordered to refund child support payments, and trial court refused to grant state's motion for a new trial, supreme court would review the proceedings to determine if the decision of the trial court was clearly contrary to the preponderance of the evidence or was contrary to law, under subdivision (a)(6) of this rule. State v. Phillippe, 323 Ark. 434, 914 S.W.2d 752 (1996).

In reviewing the trial court's granting of a motion for new trial, the test is whether the judge abused his or her discretion; this standard requires a showing of "clear" abuse or "manifest" abuse by acting improvidently or thoughtlessly without due consideration. Young v. Honeycutt, 324 Ark. 120, 919 S.W.2d 216 (1996).

The test that the supreme court applies in reviewing the trial court's granting of the motion is whether the trial court abused its discretion; a showing of abuse of discretion is more difficult when a new trial has been granted because the party opposing the motion will have another opportunity to prevail. Diamond

State Towing Co. v. Cash, 324 Ark. 226, 919 S.W.2d 510 (1996).

Generally, where the primary issue on appeal is the alleged inadequacy of the jury's award, the appellate court will affirm the denial of a motion for new trial absent a clear and manifest abuse of discretion, and will affirm if a fair-minded jury could have reasonably fixed the award at the challenged amount. Depew v. Jackson, 330 Ark. 733, 957 S.W.2d 177 (1997).

When a motion for new trial is made on the ground that the verdict was clearly against the preponderance of the evidence and is denied by the trial court (see subdivision (a)(6) of this rule), the appellate court will affirm if there is substantial evidence; in examining whether evidence of sufficient force and character to compel a conclusion one way or the other with reasonable certainty to support the verdict exists, the verdict is given the benefit of all reasonable inferences permissible in accordance with the proof. Depew v. Jackson, 330 Ark. 733, 957 S.W.2d 177 (1997).

Timeliness.

Where trial was held on October 3, 1995, and the appellant filed a motion for a new trial on October 12, 1995, but the decree was filed on November 2, 1995, the notice of appeal was due on December 4; although the chancellor denied the motion for new trial on November 14, 1995, the motion filed before the decree was untimely and ineffective, and thus the notice of appeal from the November 2 decree and the November 14 denial, filed on December 11, was untimely. Breckenridge v. Ashley, 55 Ark. App. 242, 934 S.W.2d 536 (1996).

Where appellant failed to file her motion for rehearing within the ten-day period provided in this section, the motion failed to extend her time to file a notice of appeal under RAP-Civ 4(c). Benedict v. National Bank of Commerce, 329 Ark. 590, 951 S.W.2d 562 (1997).

The timeliness provisions of the rule did not apply to an appeal by the Department of Human Services from an order in an action in which it was not a party. Arkansas Dep't of Human Servs. v. R.P., 333 Ark. 516, 970 S.W.2d 225 (1998).

Reversal was not required where (1) the appellant's abstract reflected only that a motion for a new trial was timely filed with the clerk and that the appellee filed a response after the 30 days in which the trial court had to act on the motion had passed, (2) there was no indication in the abstract or in the appellant's argument that he did more than simply file the motion, at a time when he knew the trial judge had recused, and (3) there was no indication that the appellant ever called the motion to the attention of any judge or requested that any action be taken on it. Whisnant v. Whisnant, 68 Ark. App. 298, 6 S.W.3d 808 (1999).

Ark. R. Civ. P. 6 provides that a party may not obtain an extension of time from the trial court to file a posttrial motion under subsection (b) of this rule; consequently the time in which a notice of appeal must be filed is also not extended. Moon v. City, 344 Ark. 500, 42 S.W.3d 459 (2001).

Circuit court was without jurisdiction to hold a hearing and to enter an order on January 5, 2006, on accident victim's motion for new trial because the order was entered thirty-one days after the motion was filed; therefore, the appellate court lacked jurisdiction to consider the issues, and the appeal was dismissed. Cincinnati Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 367 Ark. 468, 241 S.W.3d 264 (2006).

Because seller failed to file a timely motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and a new trial in purchaser's fraud action against it, the time to file its notice of appeal was not extended under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(b), and the failure to file a notice of appeal within 30 days of the August 3, 2005, judgment required the appellate court to dismiss the appeal because it lacked jurisdiction to consider it. River Valley Motors, Inc. v. Ramey, 96 Ark. App. 180, 239 S.W.3d 555 (2006).

Although a property owner's motion for a new trial was filed more than 10 days after the entry of judgment, the motion was timely because weekends are excluded from the computation under Ark. R. Civ. P. 6. KW-DW Props., LLC v. Ark. State Highway Comm'n, 2019 Ark. 95, 571 S.W.3d 6 (2019).

Untimely Request.

A request for findings of fact and conclusions of law filed after an order has become final cannot be used as a means of resurrecting a claim already barred by finality. Majors v. Pulaski County Election Comm'n, 287 Ark. 208, 697 S.W.2d 535 (1985).

Where appellant's attorney assumed responsibility for not verifying that the judgment and commitment order had been filed prior to the untimely filing of the motion for new trial, the appellate court treated the motion for rule on the clerk as a motion for belated appeal, which it granted. Webster v. State, 320 Ark. 393, 896 S.W.2d 890 (1995).

Circuit court was without jurisdiction to enter an order granting an adoption petition because the circuit court erred in granting a motion filed by a mother and stepfather under Ark. R. Civ. P. 60(a) to vacate a prior order denying the petition and to grant the adoption based on an erroneous finding of fact in its original order when a motion for a new trial under this rule, not a motion under Rule 60, was the relief the mother and stepfather were seeking; because the motion for reconsideration was in fact a motion for a new trial under this rule the motion was not timely since it was not filed within ten days of the entry of the order denying the adoption petition, and the failure of the mother and stepfather to file their motion within ten days meant that the circuit court was without jurisdiction to enter the subsequent order. Stickels v. Heckel, 2009 Ark. App. 829, 370 S.W.3d 857 (2009).

Written Record.

If parties plan to base their arguments on the timeliness of the notice of appeal from the denial of a new trial motion upon a "written record" that a hearing has been set or held, the "written record" must be filed and made an official record of the court within 30 days from the making of the motion for a new trial. Brittenum & Assocs. v. Mayall, 286 Ark. 427, 692 S.W.2d 248 (1985).

Rule 60. Relief from judgment, decree or order.

(a) Ninety-Day Limitation. To correct errors or mistakes or to prevent the miscarriage of justice, the court may modify or vacate a judgment, order or decree on motion of the court or any party, with prior notice to all parties, within ninety days of its having been filed with the clerk.

(b) Exception; Clerical Errors. Notwithstanding subdivision (a) of this rule, the court may at any time, with prior notice to all parties, correct clerical mistakes in judgments, decrees, orders, or other parts of the record and errors therein arising from oversight or omission. During the pendency of an appeal, such mistakes may be so corrected before the appeal is docketed in the appellate court and thereafter while the appeal is pending may be so corrected with leave of the appellate court.

(c) Grounds for Setting Aside Judgment, Other Than Default Judgment, After Ninety Days. The court in which a judgment, other than a default judgment [which may be set aside in accordance with Rule 55(c)] has been rendered or order made shall have the power, after the expiration of ninety (90) days of the filing of said judgment with the clerk of the court, to vacate or modify such judgment or order:

(1) By granting a new trial where the grounds therefor were discovered after the expiration of ninety (90) days after the filing of the judgment, or, where the ground is newly discovered evidence which the moving party could not have discovered in time to file a motion under Rule 59(b), upon a motion for new trial filed with the clerk of the court not later than one year after discovery of the grounds or one year after the judgment was filed with the clerk of the court, whichever is the earlier; provided, notice of said motion has been served within the time limitations for filing the motion.

(2) By a new trial granted in proceedings against defendants constructively summoned, and who did not appear, upon a motion filed within two years after the filing of the judgment with the clerk of the court, or within one year after a certified copy of the judgment has been served upon the defendant, whichever shall be the earlier, upon security for costs being given; provided notice of the filing of said motion has been served upon the adverse party within the time limitations for filing the motion.

(3) For misprisions of the clerk.

(4) For misrepresentation or fraud (whether heretofore denominated intrinsic or extrinsic) by an adverse party.

(5) For erroneous proceedings against an infant or person of unsound mind where the condition of such defendant does not appear in the record, nor the error in the proceedings.

(6) For the death of one of the parties before the judgment in the action.

(7) For errors in a judgment shown by an infant within twelve (12) months after reaching the age of eighteen (18) years, upon a showing of cause.

(d) Valid Defense to Be Shown. No judgment against a defendant, unless it was rendered before the action stood for trial, shall be set aside under this rule unless the defendant in his motion asserts a valid defense to the action and, upon hearing, makes a prima facie showing of such defense.

(e) Valid Cause of Action to Be Shown. No judgment, unless it was rendered before the action stood for trial, shall be set aside on the motion of a plaintiff unless the plaintiff makes a prima facie showing of a valid cause of action.

(f) Defendant Constructively Summoned — Restoration of Property. When a judgment is set aside on the motion of a defendant constructively summoned, the court may order the plaintiff in the action to restore to the defendant any money of the defendant paid under the judgment or any property of the defendant obtained by the plaintiff under it and yet remaining in his possession and pay to the defendant the value of any property which may have been taken under an attachment in the action or under the judgment and not restored. The title of purchasers in good faith to any property sold under an attachment or judgment shall not be affected by a new trial under subsection (c)(2) of this rule, except the title of property obtained by the plaintiff and not bought of him in good faith by others.

(g) Exception for Divorce Decrees. No judgment granting a divorce, except as it relates to alimony, shall be set aside under subsection (c)(2) of this rule.

(h) Premature Judgment. Rendering judgment prior to the time fixed for filing an answer shall be deemed a clerical misprision. No misprision of the clerk shall be ground for appeal until relief has been sought in the circuit court and action taken there.

(i) Motion to Vacate or Modify May Be Heard First. The circuit court may first try and decide upon the grounds for vacating or modifying a judgment before trying or deciding the validity of the defense or cause of action.

(j) Injunction Pendente Lite. The party seeking to vacate or modify a judgment may obtain an injunction suspending proceedings, on the whole or in part, upon showing by affidavit or exhibition of the record that it is probable that he is entitled to have such judgment, decree or order vacated or modified; however, such a showing shall not be required if the judgment, decree or order was rendered before the action stood for trial.

(k) Independent Action to Set Aside Judgment — Writs Abolished. A motion under this rule does not affect the finality of a judgment or decree or suspend its operation, except as provided herein. This rule does not limit the power of a court to entertain an independent action to relieve a party from a judgment who was not actually personally served with process or to set aside a judgment or decree for fraud upon the court. Writs of coram nobis in civil cases, coram vobis, audita querela, and bills of review and bills in the nature of a bill of review, are abolished, and the procedure for obtaining any relief from a judgment or decree shall be by motion as prescribed in these rules or by an independent action.

HISTORY: Amended July 9, 1984, effective September 1, 1984; amended December 10, 1990, effective February 1, 1991; amended January 27, 2000; amended May 24, 2001, effective July 1, 2001.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 60:

1. This rule is substantially different from FRCP 60. Its purpose is to substantially retain existing Arkansas law on the subject. The Court feels that the adoption of FRCP 60 would detract from the stability of final judgments and that the changes which would be made in Arkansas law are highly undesirable. The distinction between intrinsic and extrinsic fraud as a basis for relief from a judgment is considered an important and desirable one.

2. This rule would make the same provision for relatively unlimited control of judgments by circuit courts as that made for chancery courts by Ark. Stat. Ann. § 22-406.1 et seq. (Repl. 1962). This makes for uniformity not only as between the two courts but also as among judgments in a particular court, regardless of the time elapsed between entry of the judgment and expiration of a term of court.

3. Under prior Arkansas law, the trial court lost jurisdiction to set aside or modify a judgment after term time except on those grounds specified in superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 29-506 (Repl. 1962). Davis v. McBride, 247 Ark. 895, 448 S.W. 2d 37 (1969); Hardin v. Hardin, 237 Ark. 237, 372 S.W. 2d 260 (1973). Under prior Arkansas law, the trial court had the power to correct, in certain instances, its judgment even after an appeal had been docketed in the Arkansas Supreme Court. Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-2129.1 (Repl. 1962). Under this rule, however, once the appeal is docketed, a change can be made only with leave of the Supreme Court.

4. In subsection (c)(1) the one year limitation follows the recommendation of the Committee in its proposed Rule 60.

5. Subsection (k) follows Section (b) of FRCP 60 by permitting a court to entertain an independent action to relieve a party from a judgment. Bankers Mortgage Co. v. United States, 423 F.2d 73 (C.C.A. 5th, 1970), cert. den., 90 S.Ct. 2242. Arkansas has previously recognized the power of an equity court to review a judgment from a court of law, although such power is severely limited. Cotton v. Hamblin, 233 Ark. 65, 342 S.W.2d 478 (1961).

6. Section (k) provides for the abolition of writs of error and bills of review. While these have not been common under prior Arkansas law, they have been permitted under Article 7, Section 4, of the Arkansas Constitution. However, any relief which could be granted by a court of equity under a bill of review can also be afforded under this rule; hence, it should have little effect on Arkansas practice and procedure.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1984 Amendment:

Rule 60(b) is modified to remove the references to the law prior to January 1, 1970, and to replace it with language from cases describing the broad power of a court to modify or set aside its judgment during the term of court in which it was entered. See, Karoley v. A.R. & T. Electronics, 235 Ark. 609, 363 S.W.2d 120 (1962), and the cases cited in that opinion.

Rule 60(c)(5) is amended to remove "married women" from the classes of persons to which the Rule applies.

The caption of the Rule is amended to include "Modification."

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1990 Amendment:

Rule 60 has been amended to eliminate any overlap with Rule 55. Under former subdivision (c)(7) of Rule 60, a trial court could set aside a judgment "[f]or unavoidable casualty or misfortune preventing the party from appearing or defending." The 1990 amendment deletes this provision, which has been cited in default judgment cases. E.g., McGee v. Wilson, 275 Ark. 466, 631 S.W.2d 292 (1982). Moreover, the new opening language of paragraph (c) specifically states that Rule 60 does not apply to default judgments, "which may be set aside in accordance with Rule 55(c)."

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2000 Amendment:

Subdivisions (a) and (b) of the rule have been revised in response to case law. In addition, subdivision (c) has been amended by changing the cross-reference in paragraph (1) from Rule 59(c) to Rule 59(b), and by revising paragraph (4).

As originally adopted, subdivision (a) provided that the trial court could "at any time" correct clerical mistakes and errors "arising from oversight or omission." Under subdivision (b), the trial court could "correct any error or mistake or to prevent the miscarriage of justice" by modifying or setting aside a judgment, decree or order within 90 days of its having been filed with the clerk. Despite this apparent dichotomy, the Supreme Court held that the 90-day limitation in subdivision (b) also applied to subdivision (a). See, e.g., Ross v. Southern Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. Co., 333 Ark. 227, 968 S.W.2d 622 (1998); Phillips v. Jacobs, 305 Ark. 365, 807 S.W.2d 923 (1991). The Supreme Court subsequently held in Lord v. Mazzanti, 335 Ark. 25, 2 S.W.3d 76 (1999), that "clerical mistakes" under subdivision (a) can be corrected at any time, and overruled any language to the contrary in Phillips and Ross.

This amendment is consistent with Lord v. Mazzanti, supra. As amended, subdivision (a) is a slightly modified version of former subdivision (b). It states the general rule that the court may, with prior notice to all parties, modify a judgment, decree or order within 90 days of its filing with the clerk to "correct errors or mistakes or to prevent the miscarriage of justice." Revised subdivision (b) expressly states an exception for "clerical mistakes" and errors "arising from oversight or omission," which may be corrected at any time with prior notice to all parties.

Amended paragraph (4) of subdivision (c) allows a judgment, decree or order to be modified or set aside "[f]or misrepresentation or fraud (whether heretofore denominated intrinsic or extrinsic) by an adverse party." This language, taken in part from Rule 60(b)(3) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, eliminates the distinction between intrinsic and extrinsic fraud, a distinction that has been described as "shadowy, uncertain, and somewhat arbitrary." Howard v. Scott, 125 S.W. 1158, 1166 (Mo. 1909); see also C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice & Procedure 2861 (1995) (distinction is "very troublesome and unsound").

Under the prior rule, only extrinsic fraud was a ground for setting aside or modifying a judgment. This has resulted in unfairness. See, e.g., Ward v. McCord, 61 Ark. App. 271, 966 S.W.2d 925 (1998) (husband's concealment of bank account from wife during negotiations leading to property settlement in divorce action was not extrinsic fraud); Office of Child Support Enforcement v. Mitchell, 61 Ark. App. 54, 964 S.W.2d 218 (1998) (mother's failure to mention in affidavit filed in paternity case that a man other than defendant could have been the father of her child was not extrinsic fraud); Office of Child Support Enforcement v. Offutt, 61 Ark. App. 207, 966 S.W.2d 275 (1998) (conduct of attorney in preparing precedent containing findings not made by the court and mailing it to the judge with a letter requesting that he sign the order if no objection was received from opposing counsel did not constitute extrinsic fraud).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2001 Amendment:

The references to "trial court" in subdivisions (h) and (i) have been replaced with "circuit court." Constitutional Amendment 80 established the circuit courts as the "trial courts of original jurisdiction" in the state and abolished the separate chancery and probate courts.

CASE NOTES

In General.

If a change is to be made in a judgment, decree, or order under subsection (b) of this rule, it is the responsibility of counsel or the court itself to see to it that any modification, whether agreed to by counsel or simply directed by the court, is entered within 90 days. Cigna Ins. Co. v. Brisson, 294 Ark. 504, 744 S.W.2d 716 (1988).

Although motion was filed on the 89th day and thus was timely, any power by the court to act on the motion lapsed with the expiration of 90 days. City of Little Rock v. Ragan, 297 Ark. 525, 763 S.W.2d 87 (1989).

Subsection (k) of this rule did not apply where plaintiff's counsel sought newspaper photographs of accident scene because there was not a judgment entered in this case and, should the newspaper have waited for a judgment, they would not be affected by the judgment of the underlying lawsuit; the function of this rule is to protect non-parties who have been adversely affected by a judgment, and the newspaper's injury stems solely from the potential copyright infringement should the newspaper be required to create and produce photographic prints for use in a lawsuit to which it was not a party without reasonable compensation. Ark. Democrat-Gazette, Inc. v. Brantley, 359 Ark. 75, 194 S.W.3d 748 (2004).

Where the only newly discovered evidence relied upon by the Arkansas Department of Human Services was the fact that the father was convicted in October 2001, but that conviction was based upon the same conduct originally presented to the Office of Appeals and Hearings during the July 2000 hearing, this was not considered to be newly discovered evidence. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs. v. Campbell, 87 Ark. App. 206, 189 S.W.3d 495 (2004).

Absence of Counsel.

Illness of a party's counsel, so severe as to prevent him from appearing on behalf of his client, is an appropriate ground for vacating a default judgment provided the party litigant did not know of it in time to retain other counsel or was prevented in some way from doing so; otherwise, such illness of counsel is not grounds for setting aside the judgment. Meisch v. Brady, 270 Ark. 652, 606 S.W.2d 112 (Ct. App. 1980).

Appellant, against whom a default judgment was entered, held entitled to a new trial on the ground that its attorney was allowed to withdraw from the case in violation of Ark. R. Civ. P. 64. Jones-Blair Co. v. Hammett, 326 Ark. 74, 930 S.W.2d 335 (1996).

Acquittal.

The state could not challenge a judgment of acquittal under subsection (b) of this rule where the state was not requesting an appeal to correct an error or mistake in the judgment itself, but instead to change the circuit court's actual order to make it speak what it did not speak but ought to have spoken. State v. Dawson, 343 Ark. 683, 38 S.W.3d 319 (2001).

Bail bondsman was not entitled to set aside a judgment of bail forfeiture under subsection (c) of this rule because he failed to seek to set aside the bond-forfeiture judgment until after 90 days had expired and his arguments regarding newly discovered evidence and fraud were not made to the circuit court. Ark. R. Civ. P. 55, relief from default, had no application in a bail forfeiture proceeding because the bail was deposited in the registry of the court. Buddy York Bail Bonds, Inc. v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 252 (2012).

Appeals.

The filing of a motion under this rule does not extend the time for filing a notice of appeal. Shivey v. Shivey, 337 Ark. 262, 987 S.W.2d 719 (1999).

The trial court did not have jurisdiction to vacate an order and issue a new identical order in order to give the appellant a chance to file a timely appeal; instead, the court should have extended the time to file an appeal pursuant to RAP-Civ 4(b)(3). Oak Hill Manor v. Arkansas Health Servs. Agency, 72 Ark. App. 458, 37 S.W.3d 681 (2001).

Appellate court ordered that appellant's appeal be held in suspension while the trial court entertained her motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence pursuant to subdivision (c)(1) of this rule where the new trial motion would be filed within one year after the judgment, the period in which the trial court had discretion to grant a new trial and no appellate briefs had been submitted. Belcher v. Belcher, 80 Ark. App. 86, 91 S.W.3d 108 (2002).

Where the appellant did not raise an issue challenging the propriety of the changes made by a nunc pro tunc order, but argued the merits of the court's decision to set aside the deed, an issue that arose from the circuit court's original order, he could not challenge the original order by filing a notice of appeal from the order nunc pro tunc. Kelly v. Morrison, 83 Ark. App. 125, 118 S.W.3d 155 (2003).

Where railroad would complaining passenger's counsel eavesdropping on jury deliberations after the liability phase of personal injury trial but did not report the incident until after a verdict was returned unfavorable to the railroad, the railroad's motion for a mistrial was properly denied because the railroad failed to preserve the argument for appeal. Union Pac. R.R. Co. v. Barber, 356 Ark. 268, 149 S.W.3d 325, cert. denied, 543 U.S. 940, 125 S. Ct. 320, 160 L. Ed. 2d 249 (2004).

Although circuit court erred in finding that the law of the case doctrine kept it from considering an appeal from the denial of a motion under this rule in a road dispute, the error was harmless; there was no basis for relief under subdivision (c)(4) of this rule because the alleged fraud was not caused by an adverse party. Barnett v. Howard, 363 Ark. 140, 211 S.W.3d 494 (2005).

Trial court's order setting aside a divorce decree obtained by default was not a final, appealable order where the issue of child custody was still pending. Littleton v. Albert-Littleton, 89 Ark. App. 325, 202 S.W.3d 563 (2005).

An award of attorney's fees to the landowners as the prevailing party under § 16-22-308 in a lease dispute, was affirmed although the judgment was reversed on appeal because a farm did not preserve its prevailing party argument made on appeal of a denial of a motion to vacate the award under subsection (a) of this rule. Seidenstricker Farms v. Doss, 374 Ark. 123, 286 S.W.3d 142 (2008).

Because appellant did not raise the issue that misrepresentation or fraud occurred by opposing counsel's actions in filing the motion to compel to the trial court, such as in a motion to vacate the dismissal, and there was no ruling to review. Maguire v. Jines, 2011 Ark. App. 359, 384 S.W.3d 71 (2011).

In an action alleging that the tobacco company breached the terms of the Master Settlement Agreement, the tobacco company did not amend its notice of appeal to include an appeal from the denial of its motion to amend or alter the judgment. Thus, its motion to amend or alter the judgment, which included its request to join indispensable parties, could not be addressed on appeal. Vibo Corp. v. State ex rel.

McDaniel, 2011 Ark. 124, 380 S.W.3d 411, cert. denied, 565 U.S. 1059, 132 S. Ct. 759, 181 L. Ed. 2d 483 (2011).

Question on appeal was whether the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to set aside the judgment. Woodson v. Woodson, 2012 Ark. App. 663 (2012).

Appellant did not allege misrepresentation or fraud as a defense to his motion to set aside the order, and thus this issue was not preserved for review. Woodson v. Woodson, 2012 Ark. App. 663 (2012).

Only way to extend the 30-day time limit for filing a notice of appeal from the denial of the motion for relief under Ark. R. Civ. Proc. 60 would be to file one of the motions listed under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(b)(1) within 10 days after the Rule 60 motion had been denied. Appellant's reconsideration motion fell within the category of "any other motion to vacate, alter, or amend the judgment" under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(b)(1) but it was not filed within 10 days from the date the Rule 60 motion was denied. Reichert v. Smith, 2016 Ark. App. 298 (2016).

School district's notices of appeal were untimely and did not preserve any issue for appeal as the school district did not file a notice of appeal within 30 days from the entry of the order of dismissal or within 30 days of the deemed-denied date of its Ark. R. Civ. P. 60(a) motion, and the school district did not avoid Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(b)'s deadlines by filing an amended Rule 60(a) motion more than 30 days after the deemed denial of the parent motion. Brinkley Sch. Dist. v. Terminix Int'l Co., 2019 Ark. App. 445, 586 S.W.3d 694 (2019).

Given the history of Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(b) and the cases that have addressed it, Ark. R. Civ. P. 60 and its 90-day time period does not avoid or suspend Rule 4(b)'s provisions, once the latter rule has been triggered by the filing of any motion to alter, amend, or vacate an order or judgment within 10 days of the order or judgment's entry, as calculated by Ark. R. Civ. P. 6. Moreover, amending a motion to alter, amend, or vacate an order or judgment already on file does not avoid or suspend Rule 4(b)'s timing/deadline provisions. This is especially so when the filing of an amended postjudgment motion is an attempt to breathe life into a parent motion that has already been deemed denied by operation of law. Brinkley Sch. Dist. v. Terminix Int'l Co., 2019 Ark. App. 445, 586 S.W.3d 694 (2019).

Applicability.

This rule applies when the moving party attacks the service of process, presents evidence of a meritorious defense, and seeks to have a trial. Green v. Yarbrough, 299 Ark. 175, 771 S.W.2d 760 (1989).

This rule is not applicable where the court simply attempts to correct the record to more accurately reflect its original ruling. Ford v. Ford, 30 Ark. App. 147, 783 S.W.2d 879 (1990).

The Rules of Appellate Procedure are clear that the failure to act within the 30-day period results in loss of jurisdiction in the circuit court to consider a post-trial motion; nor does the reference to certain miscarriages of justice in subsection (b) of this rule invest the trial court with jurisdiction to act on an Ark. R. Civ. P. 59 motion beyond the 30-day period. Reis v. Yates, 313 Ark. 300, 854 S.W.2d 335 (1993).

Arkansas Rule of Civil Procedure 6(b) is not applicable to actions under subsection (b) of this rule. Edwards v. Szabo Food Serv., Inc., 317 Ark. 369, 877 S.W.2d 932 (1994), superseded by statute as stated in Powell v. Fernandez, 2013 Ark. App. 595 (2013).

Subsection (b) of this rule applies to child custody cases. Blackwood v. Floyd, 342 Ark. 498, 29 S.W.3d 694 (2000).

Because the Arkansas District Court Rules do not specifically address matters of procedure involving motions to vacate or modify, this rule applies to and governs the filing of such motions in a county court. Barnett v. Howard, 363 Ark. 140, 211 S.W.3d 494 (2005).

Subsection (a) of this rule could not be used to apply a different statute of limitations period to a child support enforcement proceeding brought by the Office of Child Support Enforcement (OCSE) in an action against the father for back child support when the OCSE had not raised the issue concerning the application of the Texas limitations period with the trial court and had stipulated that a shorter limitations period applied. Office of Child Support Enforcement v. Pyron, 89 Ark. App. 161, 201 S.W.3d 28, aff'd, 363 Ark. 521, 215 S.W.3d 637 (2005).

Trial court erred in granting mother's motion to transfer a custody action because there was evidence that the father never established a residence outside of the first county, as contemplated by § 9-10-102(f)(1)(B)(i); thus, on father's motion to vacate, the trial court should have vacated the transfer under § 9-10-115(a) rather than grant the father a directed verdict under subsection (a) of this rule. Stephens v. Miller, 91 Ark. App. 253, 209 S.W.3d 452 (2005).

In a murder case, defendant's appeal from the denial of his petition for postconviction relief pursuant to this rule was dismissed as defendant could not prevail on appeal from the denial order, and this rule did not apply in criminal matters. McArty v. State, 364 Ark. 517, 221 S.W.3d 332 (2006).

Subsection (a) of this rule does not apply to criminal proceedings. State v. Rowe, 374 Ark. 19, 285 S.W.3d 614 (2008).

Trial court had the authority to set aside a nolle prosequi entered in a case seeking the revocation of a suspended sentence because there was a mistake on the part of a prosecutor in seeking the order, and the trial court had the inherent power to correct an erroneous judgment, particularly since defendant was fully aware of the nature of the proceedings. The theory behind this rule had been applied in criminal cases because the Arkansas Supreme Court recognized a trial court's power to correct a judgment to make it speak the truth. Gholson v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 373, 308 S.W.3d 189 (2009).

"Final" order in a partition action was the order directing the commissioner to execute a deed; accordingly, this rule was not applicable and did not limit the circuit court from reconsidering a preliminary order of partition any time prior to the entry of the final judgment. Because the final order had not been entered at the time that the initial order of partition was reconsidered, the circuit court was within its authority to amend the initial order and enter an amended order. Vaughn v. Bates, 2010 Ark. App. 98, 379 S.W.3d 1 (2010).

Although an insurer's motion was so titled, it was not a motion for reconsideration subject to subdivision (a) of this rule; where the circuit court had granted the insurer additional time to plead further after orally denying its motion for summary judgment, the insurer's motion was simply an exercise of that right, and no order had been entered. Martin v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., 2015 Ark. App. 201 (2015).

Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(b) governs over Ark. R. Civ. P. 60 once Rule 4(b) has been invoked by the filing of a postjudgment motion within 10 days of the challenged judgment's entry. Amending a Rule 60(a) motion that was initially filed within the 10-day period and filing the amended motion outside the 10-day period does not permit an appeal past the date that would otherwise be untimely under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(b)(1). Brinkley Sch. Dist. v. Terminix Int'l Co., 2019 Ark. App. 445, 586 S.W.3d 694 (2019).

Authority of Court.

Courts have an inherent power to enter orders correcting their judgments where necessary to make them speak the truth and reflect actions accurately; this power, however, is confined to correction of the record to the extent of making it conform to the action which was in reality taken at the time and does not permit the change of a record to provide something that in retrospect should have been done but was not done. Harrison v. Bradford, 9 Ark. App. 156, 655 S.W.2d 466 (1983).

During the term, a judgment remains subject to the plenary control of the court and may be vacated, set aside, modified or annulled upon application or upon the court's own initiative; the power of the courts to modify or set aside a judgment during the term it was entered exists as an inherent power and outside of any rule or statute. Blissard Mgt. & Realty, Inc. v. Kremer, 284 Ark. 136, 680 S.W.2d 694 (1984).

A court retains control over its judgments during the term at which they are made; when a judgment is set aside during the term, the parties are put back in the position they were in before the judgment was entered. Blissard Mgt. & Realty, Inc. v. Kremer, 284 Ark. 136, 680 S.W.2d 694 (1984).

The trial court retains control over its judgments during the 90-day period provided for in subsection (b) of this rule, and when an order is set aside, the parties are put back in the position they occupied before the judgment was entered. Loyd v. City of Russellville, 287 Ark. 95, 696 S.W.2d 741 (1985).

Where, after the record was lodged and appellants' brief was filed with the Supreme Court, the trial court granted the appellees' motion to strike an order, the issue was not properly before the trial court and the order had to stand since neither the appellees nor the trial court sought the permission of the Supreme Court before the order was stricken. Gipson v. Brown, 288 Ark. 422, 706 S.W.2d 369 (1986).

While the chancellor made no findings as to the tax liability of the parties in the original decree, by retaining jurisdiction in this matter he expressly reserved the right to make any further orders regarding the decree, which includes the determination of tax liability; therefore, this rule was inapplicable. Cox v. Cox, 17 Ark. App. 93, 704 S.W.2d 171 (1986).

Trial court had jurisdiction to set aside or modify the judgment after the mandate of the appellate court had been returned. The action of the appellate court in affirming the judgment did nothing to alter the action of the trial court; it left the judgment undisturbed. Davis v. Davis, 291 Ark. 473, 725 S.W.2d 845 (1987).

While there may be possible difficulties a judge might encounter in trying a case anew, such provide no legal grounds to empower the judge to modify or vacate an order for a new trial after it had been filed more than 90 days. Hayden v. Hayden, 291 Ark. 582, 726 S.W.2d 287 (1987).

When court fails to modify or vacate its order within 90 days, it loses all power to act under subsection (b) of this rule; there is no authority after the term of court has expired for a trial court to revise a judgment. Cigna Ins. Co. v. Brisson, 294 Ark. 504, 744 S.W.2d 716 (1988); City of Little Rock v. Ragan, 297 Ark. 525, 763 S.W.2d 87 (1989).

A general reservation of jurisdiction will permit modification of a decree after 90 days only with respect to issues which were before the trial court in the original action. Jones v. Jones, 26 Ark. App. 1, 759 S.W.2d 42 (1988).

Trial court may modify or set aside its judgment, or vacate its judgment to allow a new trial, even though the judgment has been affirmed on appeal. Garrett v. Allstate Ins. Co., 26 Ark. App. 199, 762 S.W.2d 3 (1988).

Under subsection (k) of this rule, the chancery court had the power and the right to correct a circuit court judgment's incorrect property description. Pryor v. Raper, 46 Ark. App. 150, 877 S.W.2d 952 (1994).

A wife was barred from seeking visitation rights with her stepson or any other modification of a divorce decree where (1) the decree made no mention of the stepson and stated that there were no children born of the marriage, apparently because the parties had entered into a private visitation agreement, and (2) the wife sought to modify the decree to provide for visitation more than 90 days after the entry of the decree without establishing any of the grounds enumerated in subsection (c) of this rule. Blackwood v. Floyd, 342 Ark. 498, 29 S.W.3d 694 (2000).

In entering an amended foreclosure decree to correct a scrivener's error, the circuit court did not modify the foreclosure decree but merely interpreted and corrected an ambiguity in the decree, which it had inherent power to do. This rule was not applicable. Kennedy Funding, Inc. v. Shelton, 100 Ark. App. 84, 264 S.W.3d 555 (2007).

As parties' property-settlement agreement expressly stated their intention to divide the husband's pension benefits, from which the survivor annuity originated, and the trial court, less than 90 days after entering the original decree, entered an order which set forth the wife's right to elect a survivor annuity and expressly reserved jurisdiction to modify or "deal with any effects" of the order, the court retained jurisdiction to address the wife's survivor annuity pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule. French v. French, 2011 Ark. App. 612 (2011).

Circuit court lost jurisdiction over a case when it dismissed the case for want of prosecution under Ark. R. Civ. P. 41(b). It did not have jurisdiction to enter a consent judgment presented by the parties several weeks later. The parties could not create jurisdiction by consent, and no motion to vacate was timely filed under subdivision (a) of this rule. Crews v. Deere & Co., 2013 Ark. 67 (2013).

Only authority the circuit judge has to set aside a judgment after the expiration of 90 days is found in subdivision (c) of this rule. Woodson v. Woodson, 2012 Ark. App. 663 (2012).

Characterization of Motion.

Owner's motion, claiming that a miscarriage of justice occurred when judgment was entered against her because she did not receive notice of the trial, legitimately invoked this rule and was, therefore, timely, as the owner did not complain of any errors occurring during trial nor did she challenge the sufficiency of the evidence at trial; thus, the motion was a motion under this rule and not a motion for a new trial.

Cent. Ark. Found. Homes, LLC v. Choate, 2011 Ark. App. 260, 383 S.W.3d 418 (2011).

Clerical Error.

The omission of a provision dividing the husband's retirement plan from a divorce decree was not a "clerical error" within the meaning of subsection (a) of this rule. Tyer v. Tyer, 56 Ark. App. 1, 937 S.W.2d 667 (1997).

Subsection (a) of this rule does not govern a nunc pro tunc judgment entered to make the original written judgment in a criminal case conform to sentence announced in court. McCuen v. State, 338 Ark. 631, 999 S.W.2d 682 (1999).

This rule permits the correction of clerical mistakes, and the power may be exercised at any time, either on motion or on the court's own initiative, so the judgment or record will be made to speak the truth but not made to say something other than what originally was pronounced. Lord v. Mazzanti, 339 Ark. 25, 2 S.W.3d 76 (1999).

Bank's motion to vacate foreclosure documents that were allegedly filed with the wrong purchase price listed in the documents was properly denied because the bank had bid on the property, the bank's attorney had prepared the documents, and the bank's agent had failed to catch the error before approving and signing the documents; the error was more than clerical error and the court would not correct an error that essentially amounted to negligence on the part of the bank. First Nat'l Bank of Lewisville v. Mayberry, 89 Ark. App. 5, 199 S.W.3d 716 (2004).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying appellant's motion for a nunc pro tunc order to reflect that a notice of appeal was received and filed as of the date that it was faxed to the trial clerk because it was the attorney's responsibility to follow up on the filing of the notice of appeal to determine the date on which the notice was received and file-stamped; such an error was not a "clerical error" or "misprision of the clerk" that could be cured with a motion under this rule. Wandrey v. Etchison, 363 Ark. 36, 210 S.W.3d 892 (2005).

Court could enter an amended judgment and commitment order nunc pro tunc in order to correct the original judgment and commitment order that had the wrong date on it. Carter v. Norris, 367 Ark. 360, 240 S.W.3d 124 (2006).

Mortgagee was not entitled to nunc pro tunc relief to correct mistakes in documents of a foreclosure sale because the mistake was made by counsel as to the mortgagee's bid amount and, thus, was more substantive than a mere clerical error of the type that this rule was intended to allow correction. First Nat'l Bank of Lewisville v. Mayberry, 368 Ark. 243, 244 S.W.3d 676 (2006).

Trial court abused its discretion when it modified a divorce decree under subsection (b) of this rule because there were no clerical errors or mistakes made relating to a division of property or prorating of a mortgage; the trial court went beyond clarifying the decree and decided issues that were not before it when it ordered a former husband to sell the wife a parcel of property, ordered him to pay his share of a mortgage, and awarded costs and attorney fees to a former wife. In addition, a reservation of jurisdiction could not have been used to avoid the jurisdictional mandates of this rule. Linn v. Miller, 99 Ark. App. 407, 261 S.W.3d 471 (2007).

Trial court abused its discretion when it set aside its dismissal order pursuant to this rule, as it was outside of the 90-day limitation period and further, the error in setting the dismissal aside was not clerical in nature. Pinto v. Sims, 2011 Ark. App. 609, 386 S.W.3d 531 (2011).

Under this rule and case law, the circuit court had the authority to enter a nunc pro tunc order correcting a clerical error in its order granting an offset against judgment for $50,000 in insurance proceeds previously paid to plaintiffs that incorrectly stated that defendant's insurer tendered the $50,000 to plaintiffs when, in fact, it was plaintiffs' own insurer that tendered the $50,000. Brown v. Lee, 2012 Ark. 417, 424 S.W.3d 817 (2012).

Subsection (b) of this rule did not apply where the use of a settlement amount to calculate a dower interest was not a clerical mistake. Howard v. Adams, 2016 Ark. App. 597, 508 S.W.3d 890 (2016).

Subsection (b) of this rule did not authorize the circuit court's deletion of the phrase "pro rata" from the Court Order Acceptable for Processing under the Civil Service Retirement System (COAP) because the COAP was prepared by the ex-wife's counsel and therefore the phrase was not a "clerical error" as contemplated by the rule; however, the circuit court retained jurisdiction to modify the COAP because the circuit court specifically considered the ex-wife's entitlement to the ex-husband's post-office retirement benefits in the COAP and the court's order specifically empowered the court to retain jurisdiction over the COAP. Treloggen v. Treloggen, 2018 Ark. App. 596, 567 S.W.3d 515 (2018).

Construction.

The "miscarriage of justice" referred to in subsection (b) of this rule is a reference to those clerical errors or mistakes described in subsection (a) of this rule. Ingram v. Wirt, 314 Ark. 553, 864 S.W.2d 237 (1993).

This rule may not be used to breathe life into an otherwise defunct Ark. R. Civ. P. 59 motion. United S. Assurance Co. v. Beard, 320 Ark. 115, 894 S.W.2d 948 (1995).

A trial court may modify or set aside its order beyond the ninety-day limitation contained in subsection (b) of this rule only if the specifically enumerated conditions listed in subsection (c) of this rule exist. Slaton v. Slaton, 330 Ark. 287, 956 S.W.2d 150 (1997).

The 30-day deadline of RAP-Civ 4(a) for filing a notice of appeal is not extended under RAP-Civ 4(b) by the filing of a motion under this rule. Criswell v. Holliday, 330 Ark. 762, 957 S.W.2d 181 (1997).

Section 9-9-216 provides a maximum one-year time limit after which any action to set aside an adoption order is barred, but does not affect the 90-day limit set forth in this rule and only serves to limit the time in which a probate court could act to set aside an order pursuant to this rule. Blackwood v. Floyd, 342 Ark. 498, 29 S.W.3d 694 (2000); Mayberry v. Flowers, 69 Ark. App. 307, 12 S.W.3d 652 (2000).

Because the Arkansas Supreme Court amended subdivision (c)(4) of this rule to supply a new or more appropriate remedy to enforce an existing right and obligation in order to avoid unjust results, the amendment was remedial in nature and was appropriately applied retroactively by the trial court; thus, the trial court did not err in setting aside or modifying the parties' divorce decree where the ex-wife only showed intrinsic fraud. Dickson v. Fletcher, 361 Ark. 244, 206 S.W.3d 229 (2005), limited, Martin v. Pierce, 370 Ark. 53, 257 S.W.3d 82 (2007).

Correction of Record.

Courts have the inherent power to correct the record to the extent of making it conform to the action which was in reality taken at the time; thus, the chancellor had the authority to modify his earlier order regarding child support payments where he simply made his earlier order say clearly what he intended it to say when he made it, even though more than 90 days had elapsed since the filing of the original order. McGibbony v. McGibbony, 12 Ark. App. 141, 671 S.W.2d 212 (1984).

Circuit court's order could be corrected to delete error. Chastain v. Davis, 294 Ark. 134, 741 S.W.2d 632 (1987).

Although subsection (a) of this rule permits trial courts to correct their judgments, this power is confined to correction of the record to make it conform to action which was actually taken at the time, and does not permit a decree or order to be modified to provide for action that court, in retrospect, should have taken, but which in fact it did not take. Reves v. Reves, 21 Ark. App. 177, 730 S.W.2d 904 (1987), overruled, Crow v. Crow, 26 Ark. App. 37, 759 S.W.2d 570 (1988).

Unquestionably either party aggrieved by correction by the court of clerical mistakes, arising from oversight or omission, may bring a timely appeal, but the appeal is not from the original order, or judgment, but from the order purporting to correct it. Kindiger v. Huffman, 307 Ark. 465, 821 S.W.2d 33 (1991).

Rule 4(c) of the Rules of Appellate Procedure requiring action on a Ark. R. Civ. P. 59 motion within 30 days of filing does not apply to a request under subsection (a) of this rule to correct an order. Upton v. Estate of Upton, 308 Ark. 677, 828 S.W.2d 827 (1992).

Court granted physician's petition for a writ of certiorari in administratrix's third medical negligence and wrongful death action where trial judge's order rescinding his dismissal with prejudice of the second complaint occurred outside the 90 days allowed by this rule to correct an order and, thus, was ineffective. Jordan v. Circuit Court, 366 Ark. 326, 235 S.W.3d 487 (2006).

Employee's FELA suit was properly dismissed for failure to serve the employer within 120 days as required by Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(i). An alleged oral extension granted by the trial judge was ineffective because it was not entered as required by Rule 4(i), and subsection (b) of this rule did not operate to create an order that was never entered. Verbitski v. Union Pac. R.R. Co., 2011 Ark. App. 6, 380 S.W.3d 459 (2011).

Deemed Denied.

There is no deemed-denied provision in this rule. Office of Child Support Enforcement v. Dickens, 2009 Ark. App. 195, 300 S.W.3d 122 (2009).

Default Judgment.

A judgment by default is just as binding and forceful as a judgment entered after a trial on the merits in a case; it is not to be discredited or regarded lightly because of the manner in which it was acquired. Meisch v. Brady, 270 Ark. 652, 606 S.W.2d 112 (Ct. App. 1980).

Where a deputy sheriff served a writ of garnishment on a corporation's office manager, who was neither a corporate officer nor the designated agent for process, despite the fact that the corporation's president was in the city on the service day, there was a clear failure to comply with the statutory service requirements of § 16-58-124; accordingly, a default judgment against the corporation was properly set aside pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 55(c) and this rule for lack of personal jurisdiction. Pounders v. Chicken Country, Inc., 3 Ark. App. 220, 624 S.W.2d 445 (1981).

Entry of a default judgment did not constitute an unavoidable casualty or misfortune sufficient to permit setting aside the judgment when the party against whom the judgment was rendered was notified as suit but ignored the lawsuit altogether. Diebold v. Myers Gen. Agency, Inc., 292 Ark. 456, 731 S.W.2d 183 (1987).

Because a default judgment without valid service of process is void, a defendant does not have to meet the requirements of this rule to set it aside. Lawson v. Edmondson, 302 Ark. 46, 786 S.W.2d 823 (1990).

Trial court properly dismissed a judgment debtor's lawsuit against a judgment creditor for tortious conduct and other civil causes of action, which sought an injunction against the enforcement of a default judgment that was entered against the debtor in connection with an action by the creditor to recover unpaid legal fees, as the debtor relied incorrectly on this rule as authority for filing a new lawsuit to attack a default judgment, instead of following the procedure set forth in Ark. R. Civ. P. 55 to set aside the default judgment; Rule 55 provides the exclusive basis for setting aside a default judgment. Meadows v. Nancy E. Pryor, Inc., 90 Ark. App. 258, 205 S.W.3d 199 (2005).

Although styled as a motion to vacate pursuant to this rule, a husband's motion expressly stated that he did not wish to set aside the judgment of divorce, but sought only to vacate the judgment as to issues except jurisdiction and grounds. The husband's answer, although untimely, recognized the case as being in court and indicated a desire to defend, and therefore constituted an "appearance" for purposes of Ark. R. Civ. P. 55(b). Robinson v. Robinson, 103 Ark. App. 169, 287 S.W.3d 652 (2008).

Plaintiff's contention failed that the circuit court did not have jurisdiction to reduce the default judgment amount more than 90 days after entry of the judgment; pursuant to the 1990 amendment to this rule, the rule was no longer applicable to default judgments. Bedrock Ventures, Inc. v. Truman Press, Inc., 2020 Ark. App. 5, 594 S.W.3d 96 (2020).

Discretion of Court.

It is within the sound discretion of the trial court to grant or deny a motion to set aside a default judgment, and the question on appeal is whether there has been an abuse of that discretion. Cossey v. Transamerica Ins. Co., 25 Ark. App. 258, 757 S.W.2d 176 (1988); Hendrix v. Hendrix, 26 Ark. App. 283, 764 S.W.2d 472 (1989).

Dismissal.

Under a former version of subsection (a) of this rule, where the order dismissing a plaintiff's case for failure to prosecute was entered in error, it was not a clerical error and the trial court was without jurisdiction to hear the plaintiff's motion for reinstatement when it was filed more than 90 days after the order. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Taylor, 346 Ark. 259, 57 S.W.3d 158 (2001).

Divorce Decree.

Where a former wife, who did not appear at the original divorce proceeding although she had been properly served, did not apply for a new trial within the statutory time limit, did not take a timely appeal, and there was no evidence of fraud in the original divorce action, she was barred by res judicata from attacking the original divorce decree, which awarded custody of their children to her former husband and also awarded the proceeds of their joint savings account to her former husband. Gideon v. Gideon, 268 Ark. 873, 596 S.W.2d 367 (Ct. App. 1980).

A chancery court lacked jurisdiction under this rule to modify a divorce decree 10 years after it was entered with regard to the exclusion of post-decree salary increases in the calculation of the wife's share of the husband's retirement benefits since (1) the divorce decree did not specify whether post-decree salary increases would be included in the calculation of the wife's share of the retirement benefits, (2) there were no changed circumstances since the decree was initially entered, and (3) there was no ambiguity regarding the legal effect of the language employed in the divorce decree at issue. Holt v. Holt, 70 Ark. App. 43, 14 S.W.3d 887 (2000).

Because evidence of fraudulent inducement by husband against wife to enter into a property settlement agreement was lacking, the trial court abused its discretion in setting aside the original divorce decree more than ninety days after its entry; a divorce decree containing an integrated property-settlement agreement may not be judicially modified in the absence of fraudulent inducement in executing the agreement. Joplin v. Joplin, 88 Ark. App. 190, 196 S.W.3d 496 (2004).

Trial court abused its discretion in setting aside the original divorce decree because, even if it was assumed that the husband committed the acts in question (financed certain items in the wife's name without her knowledge and failed to pay the debt thereon when he was awarded those items), the wife failed to show that said acts induced her to enter into the property-settlement agreement; the latter issue would have been better addressed by a contempt motion, and wife's allegations regarding husband's misrepresentation as to the parties' rightful interest in two properties at issue was contradicted by her own testimony at trial. Joplin v. Joplin, 88 Ark. App. 190, 196 S.W.3d 496 (2004).

Subsections (a) and (c) of this rule barred the present modification of the original divorce decree where no exceptions were raised and fraud was not pled, four years had passed from the order granting the divorce to the execution of the deed, and six more years passed before the deed was filed of record. O'Marra v. MacKool, 361 Ark. 32, 204 S.W.3d 49 (2005).

Where ex-husband never denied that his responses to his ex-wife's discovery requests omitted some of his stock and that he failed to supplement his discovery responses and that he presented false testimony by stating his statement of worth was complete, the trial court did not err in ruling that the husband had committed fraud, and proof of constructive fraud was sufficient to reopen a divorce under subdivision (c)(4) of this rule. Dickson v. Fletcher, 361 Ark. 244, 206 S.W.3d 229 (2005), limited. Martin v. Pierce, 370 Ark. 53, 257 S.W.3d 82 (2007).

Husband could not use subdivision (c)(4) of this rule to modify a divorce decree in which he acknowledged paternity of a child and was ordered to pay child support because the financial and emotional welfare of the child and the preservation of an established parent-child relationship was paramount to the husband's interest in ascertaining the child's true genetic makeup. Martin v. Pierce, 370 Ark. 53, 257 S.W.3d 82 (2007).

Because a divorce decree provided that the wife owed the husband $40,000 for his interest in her business, but that sum was to be reduced by set-offs in unstated amounts, the decree was not self-executing, as it did not state with specificity the amount of money appellant was required to pay. The decree was, therefore, not a final order, and obviously so, since its omissions and lack of certainty gave rise to further litigation. Allen v. Allen, 99 Ark. App. 292, 259 S.W.3d 480 (2007).

Pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule, the trial court did not err in dividing the husband's monthly premium for the survivor's benefit as an interpretation of the divorce decree; in reaching an equitable division of the husband's pension, the trial court properly utilized one of the methods set forth by the fund administrator. Dove v. Dove, 2009 Ark. App. 682 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying a wife's motion to vacate a divorce decree and to set aside a mediation agreement pursuant to subdivision (c)(5) of this rule because while her judgment might have been limited on occasion, she had the presence of mind to discuss the possibility of divorce and its impact on her; the witnesses who were present at the mediation testified that she never appeared unable to comprehend the nature of the mediation. Toombs v. Toombs, 2010 Ark. App. 858 (2010).

Although it was more than 90 days after the divorce decree's entry, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in exercising jurisdiction to modify the decree to reflect a mutual mistake regarding an income tax debt because the decree contained a general reservation and the court had considered the distribution of the debt in its original decree (decree had by mistake made wife responsible for 2014 personal property tax debt rather than the 2014 income tax debt). Toney v. Burgess, 2018 Ark. App. 54, 541 S.W.3d 469 (2018).

Final Order.

Since the order setting aside the judgment was entered more than 90 days after the judgment was entered, it was a final and appealable order. Schueck Steel, Inc. v. McCarthy Bros. Co., 289 Ark. 436A, 717 S.W.2d 816 (1986); Cigna Ins. Co. v. Brisson, 294 Ark. 504, 744 S.W.2d 716 (1988).

The finality principles of Rule 59 and this rule of the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure do not apply to class rulings under Rule 23 before there is a decision on the merits. Fraley v. Williams Ford Tractor & Equip. Co., 339 Ark. 322, 5 S.W.3d 423 (1999).

Where the trial court failed to rule on a bank's motion to vacate documents related to the foreclosure sale of property because of a clerical error, the Supreme Court of Arkansas lacked jurisdiction to hear the bank's appeal until there was a final, appealable order, and the bank's motion did not fall within the "deemed denied" provision of Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(b)(1) because the appeal was not filed within 10 days of the filing of the motion. First Nat'l Bank v. Mayberry, 366 Ark. 39, 233 S.W.3d 152 (2006).

Form of Motion.

Where motion to vacate was couched in terms of a Ark. R. Civ. P. 59 motion for a new trial on the basis that the verdict was contrary to the preponderance of the evidence, motion to vacate was not in reality a motion under this rule to prevent a miscarriage of justice. Jackson v. Arkansas Power & Light Co., 309 Ark. 572, 832 S.W.2d 224 (1992).

Where intervening party failed to assert in its motion under subsection (b) of this rule a clerical mistake, error or omission referred to in subsection (a) of this rule, the motion should have been denied by the trial court for that reason alone. United S. Assurance Co. v. Beard, 320 Ark. 115, 894 S.W.2d 948 (1995).

Fraud.

This rule does not define what constitutes fraud, and trial courts have always been reluctant to define "fraud" (either actual or constructive) lest man's fertile mind invent a new scheme outside the definition but just as nefarious as previously denounced schemes. Constructive fraud or fraud at law does not necessarily consist of guilt or moral wrong but consists of legal or equitable duties owed to another party; neither actual dishonesty or intent to deceive is an element of constructive fraud. Davis v. Davis, 291 Ark. 473, 725 S.W.2d 845 (1987).

The law of the case doctrine does not prohibit the trial court from taking any action pursuant to subdivision (c)(4) of this rule. This rule is an exception to the law of the case doctrine. Davis v. Davis, 291 Ark. 473, 725 S.W.2d 845 (1987).

The fact that the trial court may have reached an erroneous conclusion is not a sufficient basis for setting aside a judgment after 90 days pursuant to subdivision (c)(4) of this rule in the absence of evidence to support a finding that the judgment was obtained through fraud, practiced on the court, by the successful party. Smart v. Biggs, 26 Ark. App. 141, 760 S.W.2d 882 (1988).

There is an adequate legal remedy for a judgment fraudulently obtained in probate court contained in subsection (b) and subdivision (c)(4) of this rule, which provide that a probate court may vacate an order which has been obtained by fraud. Brown v. Kennedy Well Works, Inc., 302 Ark. 213, 788 S.W.2d 948 (1990); Wilson v. Wilson, 327 Ark. 386, 939 S.W.2d 287 (1997).

After ninety days, a court may vacate a judgment for fraud practiced by the party who obtained the judgment. Lamb v. JFM, Inc., 311 Ark. 89, 842 S.W.2d 10 (1992).

Mother's failure to state in her paternity action affidavit that defendant was not the only possible father of the child did not constitute fraud practiced on the court. State Office of Child Support Enforcement v. Mitchell, 61 Ark. App. 54, 964 S.W.2d 218 (1998).

The wife was not entitled to a new trial in a divorce proceeding on the ground that the husband committed fraud during the trial by concealing marital funds from her since any fraud that may have been committed was intrinsic, rather than extrinsic, in that it was a fraud against the wife, rather than the court. Ward v. McCord, 61 Ark. App. 271, 966 S.W.2d 925 (1998).

The claim of a wife that she should have obtained a better deal in the property settlement in her divorce proceeding was not grounds for relief under subdivision (c)(4) of this rule where there was little more than the wife's claim that the husband promised to be fair, but failed to give her an equal share of the marital assets. Mow v. Mow, 66 Ark. App. 374, 990 S.W.2d 578 (1999).

The court abused its discretion in setting aside a judgment on the basis of fraud; although the appellee proceeded pro se and perhaps should have employed counsel to represent him, no fraud, either extrinsic or otherwise, was practiced upon the court or the appellee. Grubbs v. Hall, 67 Ark. App. 329, 999 S.W.2d 693 (1999).

Where a father moved to annul a 1966 adoption on grounds he was fraudulently convinced the child was his biological son, the father's contradictory testimony to his 1966 sworn statements was insufficient to show extrinsic fraud, and the motion was denied. McAdams v. McAdams, 353 Ark. 494, 109 S.W.3d 649 (2003).

Biological father's petition to set aside the adoption decree, which was filed more than one year after the decree was entered, was time-barred under § 9-9-216; furthermore, the biological father failed to preserve the argument, under subsection (b) of this rule, that the trial court erred in refusing to allow the biological father to go forward with proof of fraud. Carr v. Millar, 86 Ark. App. 292, 184 S.W.3d 470 (2004).

Circuit court improperly granted niece's petition to reopen probate of her aunt's estate under § 28-53-119(a)(1) where she failed to file the petition within the 90-day limitation period set forth in this rule or provide "other cause," such as fraud or lack of notice. Bullock v. Barnes, 366 Ark. 444, 236 S.W.3d 498 (2006).

Decision to vacate the judgment of dismissal was correct because a misrepresentation was made to the circuit court on the status of the case, when the law firm's counsel was served with the claimant's response to the motion to dismiss and failed to let the circuit court know. The fact that the misrepresentations were inadvertent did not alter their effect on the circuit court, as they resulted in a miscarriage of justice that this rule was designed to remedy. Hyden v. Circuit Court, 371 Ark. 152, 264 S.W.3d 493 (2007).

In an action involving the judicial dissolution of a law firm, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying partner one's motion to vacate a judgment, which determined that partner two was entitled to a sum for office expenses incurred pursuant to an oral agreement between the two partners, because the asserted link between partner two's allegedly perjured testimony and the trial court's entry of the judgment was too tenuous to support a conclusion that partner one established a prima facie showing of an affirmative defense of fraud or misrepresentation to the breach of contract claim. Jewell v. Fletcher, 2010 Ark. 195, 377 S.W.3d 176 (2010).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to modify a divorce decree under subdivision (c)(4) of this rule on the basis of fraud as the father admitted during the divorce hearing that he questioned the mother about the paternity of the child before they were married and she admitted there was a possibility the child was not the father's child. Hardy v. Hardy, 2011 Ark. 82, 380 S.W.3d 354 (2011).

Where a mother of minor children alleged that she consented to adoption of her children by her former husband's second wife due to fraud, duress, and intimidation, the trial court had jurisdiction to hear her petition to set aside the interlocutory adoption decree pursuant to § 9-9-216; the 90-day limitation in this rule was inapplicable based on the finding of fraud. Smith v. Smith, 2012 Ark. App. 6 (2012).

Construction loan borrower was not entitled to set aside a foreclosure judgment for fraud under subdivision (c)(4) of this rule because the record did not support its expert's opinion that the lender had misrepresented its financial condition; moreover, any such misrepresentation was irrelevant because the note was a demand note that could be called at any time. Grand Valley Ridge, LLC v. Metro. Nat'l Bank, 2012 Ark. 121, 388 S.W.3d 24 (2012).

Garnishment Proceedings.

The authority of a chancellor to set aside a judgment within 90 days after it is entered is found in subsection (b) of this rule; this rule applies in garnishment proceedings because, in the terms of Ark. R. Civ. P. 81(a), the garnishment statutes do not provide a specific procedure for setting such a judgment aside. Travelodge Int'l, Inc. v. Handleman Nat'l Book Co., 288 Ark. 368, 705 S.W.2d 440 (1986).

Grounds to Set Aside Judgment.

Where a default judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff landowners who had brought an action against a corporation, a contractor, and a subcontractor alleging willful trespass upon the plaintiffs' land and seeking treble damages for the loss of timber wrongfully cut down by the defendants, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the subcontractor's motion to vacate the judgment where there simply was nothing to show that there was unavoidable casualty or anything which prevented the subcontractor from appearing or defending. McGee v. Wilson, 275 Ark. 466, 631 S.W.2d 292 (1982).

Where there was evidence that neither the defendant movant nor his counsel made any inquiry as to the status of the defendant's motion for a new trial in the 16 months between the hearing on the motion and the entry of the order denying the motion, or in the four months between the time the order was entered and the defendant received actual notice of the order, the defendant failed to demonstrate any unavoidable casualty, because he failed to show that he was not negligent. Puterbaugh v. Trussell, 276 Ark. 525, 637 S.W.2d 559 (1982).

Where an attorney's failure to resist an application for a default judgment is attributable not to any fault on his part but to a misunderstanding between counsel, there is such an unavoidable casualty that the judgment should be vacated, even after the expiration of the term. Foote v. Jitney Jungle, Inc., 283 Ark. 103, 671 S.W.2d 186 (1984).

The trial court had jurisdiction to grant the defendant's motion to set aside the default judgment that had been entered against him even though the 90-day period of subsection (b) of this rule had expired, because it was granted without giving the defendant, who had answered in the case, a three days' written notice of the hearing on the application for the default as required by Ark. R. Civ. P. 55(b). This constitutes sufficient grounds for setting the judgment aside under subdivision (c)(7) of this rule. Magness v. Masonite Corp., 12 Ark. App. 117, 671 S.W.2d 230 (1984).

Whether or not this rule applies to an adoption proceeding, the court has inherent authority to set aside a judgment it perceives to have been entered as a result of fraud on the court.

Summers v. Mylan, 287 Ark. 150, 697 S.W.2d 91 (1985).

Where insurance company had notice of the lawsuit and that the amount of damages sought exceeded the amount of primary coverage, the plaintiff's actions in expediting the lawsuit did not deceive the insurance company and there was no fraud on which to set aside the judgment. RLI Ins. Co. v. Coe, 306 Ark. 337, 813 S.W.2d 783 (1991), cert. dismissed, 502 U.S. 1067, 112 S. Ct. 959, 117 L. Ed. 2d 126 (1992).

In order to have a judgment set aside under Ark. R. Civ. P. 55 or subsections (b) or (c) of this rule, a party is required to show in its motion that it has a meritorious defense. A meritorious defense is evidence, not allegations, sufficient to justify the refusal to grant a directed verdict against the party required to show a meritorious defense, and the motion itself must assert the defense. Goston v. Craig, 34 Ark. App. 23, 805 S.W.2d 92 (1991).

In cases where a judgment is void for lack of jurisdiction, no proof of a meritorious defense is required under that rule. Black v. Merritt, 37 Ark. App. 5, 822 S.W.2d 853 (1992).

Counsel's mistaken stipulation to a statute of limitations that barred child support collection did not warrant relief under subsection (a) of this rule. Office of Child Support Enforcement v. Pyron, 363 Ark. 521, 215 S.W.3d 637 (2005).

Illustrative Cases.

Where the mother of a child divorced her father after he was incarcerated for sexual assault and possession of child pornography, the trial court did not err by denying the paternal grandparents' petition for visitation pursuant to § 9-13-103 and their motion to vacate the judgment pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule. The Court of Appeals of Arkansas upheld the trial court's finding that grandparents lacked the capacity to provide guidance to the child, because of their willingness to allow her to visit her biological father in prison; the grandparents also failed to rebut the presumption that the mother's denial or limitation of visitation was in the best interest of the child. Painter v. Kerr, 2009 Ark. App. 580, 336 S.W.3d 425 (2009).

Court of appeals lacked jurisdiction to hear an appeal because plaintiff did not file a timely appeal from the trial court's final order under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(b), and the order from which plaintiff attempted to appeal, which was entered after the trial court lost jurisdiction, did not change any of the trial court's previous rulings from the final order; the trial court had lost jurisdiction under subsection (a) of this rule long before either of the subsequent orders was entered, and plaintiff never alleged, and the trial court never found, that any of the subsection (c) exceptions applied. Global Econ. Res., Inc. v. Swaminathan, 2011 Ark. App. 349, 389 S.W.3d 631 (2011).

Judgment against an owner, set aside by a trial court, was not a default judgment as the owner had filed a timely answer but did not appear at trial, and the trial court entered judgment based on the evidence. Since the judgment was not a default judgment, the trial court was not obligated to fulfill the requirements of Ark. R. Civ. P. 55(c) but of this rule, which governed the setting aside of judgments other than default judgments. Cent. Ark. Found. Homes, LLC v. Choate, 2011 Ark. App. 260, 383 S.W.3d 418 (2011).

On appeal of an order terminating the father's parental rights, the first possible time he could have known that the trial court erroneously checked provisions citing to a repealed provision in the termination order and granted a motion to incorporate into the record all the pleadings and testimony in the case was when he received the order. The father was not required to file a motion to modify the judgment to preserve the issue for review, because a party need not file post-trial motions in termination proceedings. Kelso v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2013 Ark. App. 509 (2013).

Reopening a parental rights termination case in response to the motion of the Department of Human Services under this rule was error where the court had already ruled in favor of termination and found that the Indian Child Welfare Act did not apply, and reopening the case to admit a letter did nothing but bolster the position that the act did not apply. Reversal due to that error was not warranted as the ultimate ruling had not changed, and thus, the mother had not shown prejudice. Lessley v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2017 Ark. App. 528, 532 S.W.3d 102 (2017).

Independent Action.

Writ of certiorari was proper, because neither exception under subsection (k) of this rule applied and the husband had no other remedy, when the court erred in denying the husband's motion to quash several subpoenas concerning his medical records; the husband was not a party to the underlying custody dispute, the husband did nothing to bring his medical condition into issue, and the husband's mental health was examined through other admissible evidence. McKenzie v. Pierce, 2012 Ark. 190, 403 S.W.3d 565 (2012).

Injunctive Relief.

Absent a prayer, under subsection (j) of this rule, for modification or vacation of judgment in favor of creditor, a law court had no power to grant a judgment debtor's request to enjoin a judgment creditor from enforcing its circuit court judgment against the debtor. Taggart v. Moore, 8 Ark. App. 160, 650 S.W.2d 590 (1983), aff'd, 292 Ark. 168, 729 S.W.2d 7 (1987).

Where a judgment debtor filed a complaint in the circuit court seeking to enjoin a judgment creditor from enforcing the chancery court judgment rendered against the debtor, but the complaint did not allege any facts on which the debtor intended to base his defense of extrinsic fraud or aver that the debtor had a meritorious defense as required by subsection (d) of this rule, the circuit court properly dismissed the complaint. Taggart v. Moore, 8 Ark. App. 160, 650 S.W.2d 590 (1983), aff'd, 292 Ark. 168, 729 S.W.2d 7 (1987).

Jurisdiction.

Where the record did not show: (a) that the motion for a new trial was presented to and taken under advisement by the trial court within the 30-day period; or (b) that the trial court set a date certain thereafter for a hearing on this motion, the court lost its jurisdiction to grant the relief sought after the expiration of 90 days from the entry of the original judgment. State Farm Fire & Cas. Ins. Co. v. Mobley, 5 Ark. App. 293, 636 S.W.2d 299 (1982).

Pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule, the trial court loses jurisdiction to rule on a motion for a new trial 90 days after the judgment is filed with the clerk, unless the exceptions in subsection (c) of this rule are applicable. Mullen v. Couch, 288 Ark. 231, 703 S.W.2d 866 (1986); Diebold v. Myers Gen. Agency, Inc., 292 Ark. 456, 731 S.W.2d 183 (1987); Scott v. Kidd, 293 Ark. 451, 738 S.W.2d 421 (1987).

A decree may not be modified after the expiration of the 90 days under this rule, absent statutory grounds. Cox v. Cox, 17 Ark. App. 93, 704 S.W.2d 171 (1986).

Circuit court which did not set aside order of dismissal within 90 days after judgment was without jurisdiction regarding subsequent order. Scott v. Kidd, 293 Ark. 451, 738 S.W.2d 421 (1987).

Under subsection (b) of this rule the trial court lost jurisdiction to reinstate an action after 90 days, following an order of dismissal for failure to prosecute. Ware v. Gardner, 309 Ark. 148, 827 S.W.2d 657 (1992).

Not only must a modifying order be entered within 90 days of the original order, but the trial court loses the authority to modify an original order under subsection (b) of this rule after the expiration of 90 days from the entry of that first order. Griggs v. Cook, 315 Ark. 74, 864 S.W.2d 832 (1993).

Where circuit judge granted appellees' motion for relief from judgment more than five months after the judgment was entered, he was without jurisdiction to do so under subsection (b) of this rule; since the appellees presented no reference to a defense in their motion or other reason that they were entitled to relief under subsection (c) of this rule, the judgment was reinstated. Parks Leasing, Inc. v. Bray Corp., 43 Ark. App. 74, 861 S.W.2d 116 (1993).

In an action for an accounting where fraud was alleged, the chancery court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to review the probate court's actions. Wilson v. Wilson, 327 Ark. 386, 939 S.W.2d 287 (1997).

The chancery court lacked jurisdiction to act to set aside its order of confirmation of the commissioner's report of the judicial sale because it did not set aside the order within ninety days of the date of its entry as required by subsection (b) of this rule. Strong v. Morgan, 58 Ark. App. 272, 950 S.W.2d 466 (1997).

The court lost jurisdiction to correct its original order 90 days after it was entered, notwithstanding the contention that the appellant's attorney committed fraud when he prepared a precedent containing findings not made by the court and mailed it to the judge requesting that the judge sign the order if no objection was received from the appellee's attorney within 7 days, since the request alerted the judge to the fact that there might be an objection and was not an attempt to deceive either the judge or the appellee's attorney. State Office of Child Support Enforcement v. Offutt, 61 Ark. App. 207, 966 S.W.2d 275 (1998).

Heirs could not appeal circuit court's order denying their motion under this rule to vacate because the circuit court did not have subject matter jurisdiction relative to a county court's order of dismissal where the heirs' notice of appeal was not timely filed. Barnett v. Howard, 363 Ark. 150, 211 S.W.3d 490 (2005).

Circuit court lacked jurisdiction to enter an order on April 8, 2005, setting aside a summary judgment because, under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(b)(1), the insured's motion to set aside the summary judgment was deemed denied on January 19, 2005, and the insured's notice of appeal should have been filed 30 days from that date but because it was not filed until May 5, 2005, the notice of appeal was untimely. Murchison v. Safeco Ins. Co., 367 Ark. 166, 238 S.W.3d 11 (2006).

Appeal was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction because the notice of appeal was not timely filed under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4; the final appealable order was dated November 3, when faxed according to Administrative Order of the Supreme Court No. 2, and not November 10, when hard copies were submitted. The November 10 order was clearly nunc pro tunc to correct an interest rate (a clerical order), pursuant to this rule, and only that issue was appealable and not issues in the original order from which a timely appeal could have been taken. Francis v. Protective Life Ins. Co., 371 Ark. 285, 265 S.W.3d 117 (2007).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the prisoner's motion to amend his dismissed replevin complaint where the motion was filed more than 90 days after entry of the dismissal order and thus the trial court lacked jurisdiction to act further in the replevin action. Muhammad v. Burl, 2019 Ark. App. 52, 571 S.W.3d 39 (2019).

Law of the Case Doctrine.

In appellants' action to establish a road that would allow a reasonable means of access to their land, the trial court erred in refusing to entertain an appeal from a county court's denial of appellants' motion under subdivision (c)(4) of this rule because the trial court's decision was solely based upon the law-of-the-case doctrine. Barnett v. Howard, 363 Ark. 140, 211 S.W.3d 494 (2005).

Law-of-the-case doctrine does not prohibit a trial court from taking any action pursuant to subdivision (c)(4) of this rule. Instead, subdivision (c)(4) is an exception to the law-of-the-case doctrine. Barnett v. Howard, 363 Ark. 140, 211 S.W.3d 494 (2005).

County court denied children's and heirs' request to build a private road; a circuit court had no jurisdiction to rule on parties' motion under this rule to vacate or set aside the county court's order because the parties' appeal to the circuit court was untimely. Barnett v. Howard, 363 Ark. 150, 211 S.W.3d 490 (2005).

Meritorious Defense.

Because appellant did not establish a meritorious defense, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying appellant relief under this rule; although appellant placed great emphasis on the fact that he and his attorney were not aware of a hearing, the burden of diligence was on all parties to keep informed of case status. Woodson v. Woodson, 2012 Ark. App. 663 (2012).

Miscarriage of Justice.

The judge's finding that a fraud had been practiced on the court allowed him to set aside the decree to prevent a miscarriage of justice under subsection (b) of this rule. Summers v. Mylan, 287 Ark. 150, 697 S.W.2d 91 (1985).

The "miscarriages of justice" referred to in subsection (b) of this rule are a reference to those clerical errors or mistakes described in subsection (b). Pugh v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 317 Ark. 304, 877 S.W.2d 577 (1994).

Trial court did not err in granting a city's motion under subsection (a) of this rule to reduce a jury's award of $92,500 for bodily injury to a motorcyclist against a city in a negligence action involving a city-owned garbage truck to $25,000, the maximum amount of its liability under the state's tort immunity law; subsection (a) allowed the trial court to prevent the miscarriage of justice that would have occurred if the trial court had allowed the jury verdict against the city to stand. Fritzinger v. Beene, 80 Ark. App. 416, 97 S.W.3d 440 (2003).

This rule did not authorize the trial court to vacate its order to dismiss a suit against appellee father for back child support as a miscarriage of justice when the office of child support enforcement's counsel stipulated to the application of a statute of limitations that effectively barred collection of child support. Office of Child Support Enforcement v. Pyron, 89 Ark. App. 161, 201 S.W.3d 28, aff'd, 363 Ark. 521, 215 S.W.3d 637 (2005).

Because parents were permitted to contract regarding the religious upbringing of their children, a trial court did not err in refusing to find that an order enjoining a former husband from promoting a different faith to his children, in violation of this type of agreement, constituted a miscarriage of justice under subsection (a) of this rule. Moreover, it did not violate his First Amendment rights, the Establishment Clause, or any correlating provision of the Arkansas Constitution. Rownak v. Rownak, 103 Ark. App. 258, 288 S.W.3d 672 (2008).

Where a former husband sought clarification of a trial court's decision to order him to cease his contemptuous conduct relating to violating a contractual provision in a divorce decree or a modification under subsection (a) of this rule as a miscarriage of justice, he was not seeking to circumvent the time constraints of Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4. Rownak v. Rownak, 103 Ark. App. 258, 288 S.W.3d 672 (2008).

In an action by a solicitor against a contractor and others, the trial court abused its discretion in denying the contractor's motion to vacate the judgment under subsection (a) of this rule because the contractor's attorney was disbarred and failed to provide the contractor with notice, and the attorney's utter abandonment of the contractor and failure to protect his interests were sufficient to establish a miscarriage of justice. Further, the contractor established a prima facie showing of a meritorious defense. Nobles v. Tumey, 2010 Ark. App. 731, 379 S.W.3d 639 (2010).

Mistrial.

Where the jury verdict found for both the plaintiff and the defendant on their respective complaints, and handwritten notations of damage amounts were written in the margin, the trial court properly exercised its discretion in declaring a mistrial and placing the matter back on the trial docket, pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule. Blissard Mgt. & Realty, Inc. v. Kremer, 284 Ark. 136, 680 S.W.2d 694 (1984).

Modification Not Authorized.

Where chancellor took no action in the original 1965 divorce case with regard to disposition of property, chancery court had no jurisdiction, in 1982, to modify the 1965 decree to make a disposition which should have been, but was not, made at the time. Harrison v. Bradford, 9 Ark. App. 156, 655 S.W.2d 466 (1983).

Motion properly denied. Potter ex rel. Redden v. First Nat'l Bank, 292 Ark. 74, 728 S.W.2d 167 (1987); Big Rock, Inc. v. Missouri Pac. R.R., 295 Ark. 495, 749 S.W.2d 675 (1988).

Grounds for modifying decree after expiration of 90-day period were absent. Reves v.

Reves, 21 Ark. App. 177, 730 S.W.2d 904 (1987), overruled, Crow v. Crow, 26 Ark. App. 37, 759 S.W.2d 570 (1988).

After the expiration of the 90-day period provided for in subsection (b) of this rule, a chancellor lacks jurisdiction to distribute property not mentioned in the original decree if grounds for modifying a judgment after 90 days are absent. Jones v. Jones, 26 Ark. App. 1, 759 S.W.2d 42 (1988).

The fact that an amended order states that it is modifying a specific previous order and is entered “now for then” does not render the amended order valid or the appeal timely; nunc pro tunc orders may be entered to correct a misprision of the clerk, but the trial court cannot change an earlier record to correct something that should have been done but was not. Griggs v. Cook, 315 Ark. 74, 864 S.W.2d 832 (1993).

Where neither the mother’s complaint nor the paternity and child support order in any way addressed the question of support for the period before the order, the trial court erred in modifying the order to include retroactive child support after the expiration of the 90-day period provided for in subsection (b) of this rule. Beavers v. Vaughn, 41 Ark. App. 96, 849 S.W.2d 6 (1993).

The trial court did not have authority under this rule to amend a divorce decree where the motion seeking such amendment was not filed until 14 months after the divorce decree was entered and the issue of children born of the marriage was not raised at the time of the divorce. Slusher v. Slusher, 73 Ark. App. 303, 43 S.W.3d 189 (2001).

Trial court was not permitted to change an order to provide something that in retrospect should have been done but was not done, thus, as the trial court’s February 10 order provided that the father was to pay $35 per week in child support, any changes to his support obligation had to be preceded by a motion to modify his child-support obligation. Shipp v. Shipp, 94 Ark. App. 351, 230 S.W.3d 305 (2006).

Court did not abuse its discretion in denying a motion under subsection (a) of this rule to correct the legal description in a consent decree, order, and commissioner’s deed, because modification of the legal description would not have made the record conform to the action that was actually taken. Scales v. Vaden, 2010 Ark. App. 418, 376 S.W.3d 471 (2010).

Mootness.

Where the circuit court withdrew its previous order requiring the Arkansas Department of Human Services (DHS) to perform a home study in Kansas, the DHS’s request for a writ of prohibition to prevent enforcement of the order was moot. Ark. Dep’t of Human Servs. v. Isbell, 360 Ark. 256, 200 S.W.3d 873 (2005).

Ninety-Day Limitation.

Where appellant failed to appeal from the original order of summary judgment within 30 days as required by ARAP 4(a), her motion to modify the original order pursuant to this rule, with the resulting amended order, did not salvage the appeal, since the modification was not entered within 90 days from the time that the original order was filed with the clerk. Griggs v. Cook, 315 Ark. 74, 864 S.W.2d 832 (1993).

A trial court cannot vacate an order dismissing an action for failure to prosecute more than ninety days after the order of dismissal. Story v. Spencer, 41 Ark. App. 27, 847 S.W.2d 48 (1993).

Trial judge’s decision awarding judgment to the wife in the amount of one-half of all the husband’s retirement plans was not an impermissible modification of the divorce decree more than 90 days after its entry in violation of this rule, but rather an interpretation, clarification and enforcement of the decree; there was a latent ambiguity in the decree’s reference to “retirement” because the husband actually had a pension plan, a 401(k) plan, and a stock ownership plan through his employer. Abbott v. Abbott, 79 Ark. App. 413, 90 S.W.3d 10 (2002).

Where a mother sought to set aside an order terminating her parental rights four years after it was entered, based on her assertions that the termination violated public policy and that the trial court had lacked jurisdiction over the action, such reasons did not come within the exceptions to the 90-day time limit of subsections (a) and (c) of this rule, and accordingly, the motion was time-barred. Parker v. Seabourn, 351 Ark. 453, 95 S.W.3d 762 (2003).

This rule is no longer applicable to default judgments and, therefore, the time limitations imposed by this rule are no longer applicable to default judgments; since the time limitations are no longer applicable to default judgments, the rationale no longer exists for the rule that an order setting aside a default judgment after 90 days is a final appealable order. Epting v. Precision Paint & Glass, Inc., 353 Ark. 84, 110 S.W.3d 747 (2003).

Summary judgment was improperly vacated more than 7 months after it was entered under subsection (a) of this rule where the 90-day time period had passed and none of the conditions in subsection (c) of this rule were met. New Holland Credit Co. v. Hill, 362 Ark. 329, 208 S.W.3d 191 (2005), overruled in part, Mucio v. Hunt, 2012 Ark. 416 (2012).

Where bondsman filed a motion to set aside a bond-forfeiture order more than 98 days after the forfeiture, the trial court lacked jurisdiction at the subsequent hearing to act on the motion to set aside the judgment because the 90 day period provided for under subsection (a) of this rule had elapsed. Arvis Harper Bail Bonds, Inc. v. State, 91 Ark. App. 95, 208 S.W.3d 809 (2005).

Where the parties intended a property agreement to settle their rights, but husband’s retirement account was unintentionally left out of the property agreement, it was proper for the trial court to determine whether the parties intended for the retirement account to be included in the agreement even though the 90-day period had passed; further, because the issue of the property agreement was clearly before the trial court, its general reservation of jurisdiction was sufficient to have allowed it to retain jurisdiction over the matters related to the property agreement, even though the specific issue of the retirement account was not mentioned in the decree. Carver v. Carver, 93 Ark. App. 129, 217 S.W.3d 185 (2005).

After dismissing a contractor's action to gain access to a highway for want of prosecution, a trial court erred in vacating the dismissal because under subsection (a) of this rule, the trial court only had a 90-day window to vacate the dismissal; the order vacating the dismissal was entered five months after the suit was dismissed for want of prosecution. City of Little Rock v. McGeorge Contr. Co., 2010 Ark. App. 765, 377 S.W.3d 523 (2010).

Trial court was permitted to modify a divorce decree beyond the expiration of ninety days because this rule was not applicable as the second order merely corrected an oversight in the divorce decree and clarified: (1) the date previously awarded alimony would begin; (2) that the Social Security Administration would withhold the payments from the husband's social security disability payments; and (3) that alimony payments would continue until remarriage or an appellate ruling. Stuart v. Stuart, 2012 Ark. App. 458, 422 S.W.3d 147 (2012).

Time limits in this rule did not apply to the circuit court's modification of a divorce decree where the decree specified that the court retained jurisdiction, and the husband had sought not only contempt, but the return of sums the wife had withdrawn from the parties' various accounts that the circuit court had found to be marital property. Sherman v. Boeckmann, 2016 Ark. App. 568, 507 S.W.3d 535 (2016).

Circuit court lacked jurisdiction to enter an order assessing appellate costs against the class representatives in an action against a private-membership golf club. While the circuit court was without authority to deviate from the Supreme Court of Arkansas's mandate, which had ordered costs, the assessment of costs was included by the court clerk as a routine matter, the club was not a prevailing party in the interlocutory appeal, and the circuit court ruled outside of the 90-day limitation of this rule, and no clerical error or other ground for setting aside a judgment was alleged. Dye v. Diamante, 2017 Ark. 37, 509 S.W.3d 643 (2017).

Notice.

Alleged lack of notice to mortgagors in amending decree of foreclosure was not an irregularity in foreclosure suit, where chancellor had the authority under this rule to correct the judgment previously entered with or without notice, and the only remaining defendants, were in default and the entry of the decree required no notice. Bohra v. Montgomery, 31 Ark. App. 253, 792 S.W.2d 360 (1990).

The owner of mineral interests, who was never appropriately notified by personal service or warning order of a lawsuit to quiet title, should not be bound by the quiet-title decree. Gilbreath v. Union Bank, 309 Ark. 360, 830 S.W.2d 854 (1992).

The 180-day deadline in RAP-Civ 4(b)(3) for requesting an extension in which to file a notice of appeal cannot be extended by use of this rule to cure problems of lack of notice. Barnett v. Monumental Gen. Ins. Co., 81 Ark. App. 23, 97 S.W.3d 901 (2003), superseded by statute as stated in In re Ark. Rules of Civ. Procedure, In re Ark. Rules of Civ. Procedure, 2004 Ark. LEXIS 39 (Ark. Jan. 22, 2004).

Although subsection (b) of this rule required that notice be given to the parties before a court corrected a clerical error, appellant could not show that she was prejudiced by a nunc pro tunc judgment — even though it was from that order that she took her appeal to later learn that her appeal was untimely — because it accurately reflected a correct interest rate. Francis v. Protective Life Ins. Co., 371 Ark. 285, 265 S.W.3d 117 (2007).

When a trial court dismissed a matter brought by a driver and arising out of a car accident, although the trial court failed to provide notice of the dismissal, the driver and his attorney had a duty to remain diligent as to how the case was progressing. As a result, the trial court properly denied the driver's motion pursuant to this rule. Watson v. Connors, 372 Ark. 56, 270 S.W.3d 826 (2008).

Party at Fault.

A party cannot invoke the aid of this court under subsection (c) of this rule when that party ignored the action and failed to stay informed. CMS Jonesboro Rehabilitation, Inc. v. Lamb, 306 Ark. 216, 812 S.W.2d 472 (1991).

Trial court did not err by denying wife's motion for a nunc pro tunc order because transmission of documents by fax intended to perfect her appeal did not relieve her attorney of his duty to ensure that documents which had to be timely filed were, in fact, timely received. Wandrey v. Etchison, 363 Ark. 36, 210 S.W.3d 892 (2005).

Postconviction Proceedings.

Where appellant was convicted on a plea of guilty to aggravated robbery and sentenced to 240 months' imprisonment, this rule did not provide an avenue for postconviction relief. Pierce v. State, 2009 Ark. 606 (2009).

Probate Proceedings.

Notwithstanding the provisions of this rule, § 28-1-115(a) allows a probate court to vacate or modify its orders at any time before the time for appeal has elapsed after the final termination of the estate. White v. Toney, 37 Ark. App. 36, 823 S.W.2d 921 (1992).

This rule does not limit the probate court's authority to reopen the estate under § 28-53-119 because § 28-53-119 authorizes the reopening of an estate on the grounds allowed in the statute, separate and apart from the grounds for reopening a case provided under this rule. Moore v. First Presbyterian Church of Searcy, Ark., Inc., 2010 Ark. App. 269 (2010).

Circuit court did not err in granting a medical center, doctors, and an insurer summary judgment in an executrix's wrongful death/omalpractice action because the executrix had no standing to file a lawsuit on behalf of the estate since the probate court had closed the estate and discharged her; the probate court lost jurisdiction to re-open the estate no later than ninety days after the estate closed, and because it had lost jurisdiction, the doctrine of concurrent jurisdiction had no application. Prickett v. Hot Spring County Med. Ctr., 2010 Ark. App. 282, 373 S.W.3d 914 (2010).

Purpose.

This rule was intended to retain Arkansas law in effect at the time the rules were adopted. Burgess v. Burgess, 286 Ark. 497, 696 S.W.2d 312 (1985); Davis v. Davis, 291 Ark. 473, 725 S.W.2d 845 (1987).

Remand.

Case was remanded with instructions to amend the decree by adding a more specific description of the boundary line between the parties' land, because the order lacked a specific description of the boundary between the properties, but the order clearly referenced a survey identifying the established boundary line as the fence on the south side of the road. Boyster v. Shoemaker, 101 Ark. App. 148, 272 S.W.3d 139 (2008).

Res Judicata.

Res judicata barred a motion to modify a divorce decree under subdivision (c)(4) of this rule because an issue concerning restraining order language had been raised on three different occasions. A former husband had the opportunity to litigate all aspects of the restraining order issue in a 2002 hearing. Clowers v. Stickel, 414 S.W.3d 396 (Ark. Ct. App.), overruled in part, Tiner v. Tiner, 2012 Ark. App. 483, 422 S.W.3d 178 (2012).

Time of Motion.

Where original order and permanent injunction, requiring defendant to reduce height of spillway by one foot to prevent backed-up water from going on plaintiffs' land, was entered in September, 1979 and, during action to determine if defendants were in contempt, the chancery court modified the original order in March, 1980, such modification did not violate the 90-day limit set forth in subsection (b) of this rule, since an injunction can be modified without regard to the lapse of the term of court. Haberman v. Van Zandvoord, 1 Ark. App. 203, 614 S.W.2d 242 (1981).

Petitioner had no standing to set aside an adoption decree and was procedurally barred to proceed where he waited more than four years to file his motion to set aside the decree. Summers v. Griffith, 317 Ark. 404, 878 S.W.2d 401 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1065, 115 S. Ct. 1696, 131 L. Ed. 2d 559 (1995).

Motion to vacate bond forfeiture order, filed 111 days after entry of the order, held untimely. M & M Bonding Co. v. State, 59 Ark. App. 228, 955 S.W.2d 521 (1997).

The timeliness provisions of the rule did not apply to an appeal by the Department of Human Services from an order in an action in which it was not a party. Arkansas Dep't of Human Servs. v. R.P., 333 Ark. 516, 970 S.W.2d 225 (1998).

The power to correct clerical mistakes may be exercised at any time, either on motion or on the court's own initiative. Lord v. Mazzanti, 339 Ark. 25, 2 S.W.3d 76 (1999).

A probate court's dismissal of an adoption petition more than 90 days after the entry of a "temporary order of adoption" was void because, pursuant to this rule, the trial court lost jurisdiction to do so. Mayberry v. Flowers, 69 Ark. App. 307, 12 S.W.3d 652 (2000).

A probate order may be vacated or modified at any time before a final order is entered, notwithstanding the dictates of this rule. Snowden v. Riggins, 70 Ark. App. 1, 13 S.W.3d 598 (2000).

The state's challenge to a judgment of acquittal was untimely where (1) the judgment of acquittal was entered on January 13, (2) almost 60 days later, the state filed its motion to vacate that order, and (3) the court did not issue its decision on the motion until almost five months and well over 90 days after the judgment was entered. State v. Dawson, 343 Ark. 683, 38 S.W.3d 319 (2001).

Where the trial court's judgment against the sellers was issued on December 21, 2001, the sellers filed a motion to vacate and for a new trial on November 15, 2002, and the sellers filed a notice of appeal from the July 3, 2003, denial of the motion to vacate on July 31, 2003, the appeal from the July 3 order was timely; the motion to vacate was timely filed within one year of the judgment in accordance with subdivision (c)(1) of this rule, and notice of appeal from the order denying the motion was properly filed within 30 days of the order as required under RAP-Civ 4(a). Hunter v. Video Real Es- tate Agency, Inc., 355 Ark. 387, 137 S.W.3d 389 (2003).

Circuit court improperly granted niece's petition to reopen probate of her aunt's estate under § 28-53-119(a)(1) where she failed to file the petition within the 90-day limitation period set forth in this rule or provide "other cause," such as fraud or lack of notice. Bullock v. Barnes, 366 Ark. 444, 236 S.W.3d 498 (2006).

If this rule applied to a prisoner's motion for reconsideration of the circuit court's alleged denial of his petition for writ of habeas corpus, the prisoner's petition for writ of mandamus seeking to compel a circuit judge to issue a ruling on the motion for reconsideration was moot; under this rule, the circuit court lost jurisdiction to provide relief 90 days after its original order. More than 90 days had expired since the circuit's court's original ruling, and the prisoner pled no basis for any of the exceptions to the 90-day limitation in the rule. Henson v. Wyatt, 373 Ark. 315, 283 S.W.3d 593 (2008).

Trial court had jurisdiction to modify the amount of a child support arrearage owed by a father because the modification was entered 86 days after the entry of the original order, which was within the time frame under this rule; the father's motion was not one seeking a new trial under Ark. R. Civ. P. 59. In his motion, the father did not ask for a new trial, but rather requested that a trial court enter an order reducing his balance; this request did not require the taking of additional evidence, but rather an application of the social security benefits received by the child against the father's total child-support arrearage. Office of Child Support Enforcement v. Dickens, 2009 Ark. App. 195, 300 S.W.3d 122 (2009).

Trial court erred in setting aside a summary judgment order outside of the 90-day limitation period prescribed by this rule because there were no changed circumstances after entry of the order of summary judgment, and none of the grounds listed for setting aside an order were either asserted or demonstrated. Citibank, N.A. v. Carruth, 2015 Ark. App. 704 (2015).

Circuit court lacked jurisdiction to modify a paternity order where its order vacating its previous denial of retroactive child support was entered 170 days after the paternity order, which far exceeded the 90-day time limitation of this rule. Walden v. Jackson, 2016 Ark. App. 578 (2016).

Valid Defense.

Movant failed to allege and prove a valid defense. Meisch v. Brady, 270 Ark. 652, 606 S.W.2d 112 (Ct. App. 1980); Wilkins v. Ford, 275 Ark. 469, 631 S.W.2d 293 (1982); Bunker v. Bunker, 17 Ark. App. 7, 701 S.W.2d 709 (1986); Hargis v. Hargis, 292 Ark. 487, 731 S.W.2d 198 (1987); Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co. v. Mock- bee, 21 Ark. App. 252, 731 S.W.2d 239 (1987); Hendrix v. Hendrix, 26 Ark. App. 283, 764 S.W.2d 472 (1989).

In a mortgage foreclosure action, the trial court did not abuse its discretion when, after it had entered a decree for the mortgagor bank, it allowed the mortgagee, in its motion for a new trial or modification of the decree, to raise the defense of tender, which had not been pled prior to the entry of the decree. First State Bank v. Gamble, 14 Ark. App. 53, 685 S.W.2d 173 (1985).

Appellant must make a prima facie showing that he has a valid or meritorious defense to the action before he is entitled to have the judgment set aside; the motion itself must assert this defense. The only time that a valid defense need not be shown is when the judgment is void, not voidable, such as when the appellant has received no notice whatsoever, actual or constructive. Bunker v. Bunker, 17 Ark. App. 7, 701 S.W.2d 709 (1986).

On collateral attack, judgments will not be vacated unless a meritorious defense is alleged and proved. Hargis v. Hargis, 292 Ark. 487, 731 S.W.2d 198 (1987).

In order to prevail under this rule, a party is required to show that it has a meritorious defense, and the motion itself must assert this defense. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co. v. Mockbee, 21 Ark. App. 252, 731 S.W.2d 239 (1987).

A meritorious defense has been defined as evidence (not allegations) sufficient to justify the refusal to grant a directed verdict against the party required to show the meritorious defense. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co. v. Mockbee, 21 Ark. App. 252, 731 S.W.2d 239 (1987).

In order to prevail under either Ark. R. Civ. P. 55 or subsections (b) or (c) of this rule, a party is required to show that it has a meritorious defense, the motion itself must assert this defense. Hendrix v. Hendrix, 26 Ark. App. 283, 764 S.W.2d 472 (1989).

Void Judgment.

In cases where judgments are void, no proof of a meritorious defense is necessary to set aside judgment. Cole v. First Nat'l Bank, 304 Ark. 26, 800 S.W.2d 412 (1990).

Waiver.

Where bank entered appearance on day after the jury returned its verdict made no request for a new trial or to present evidence in the matter and did nothing in the time period after it entered its appearance and before the judgment was entered, bank waived its right to seek a new trial for the purpose of presenting evidence in the case, and trial court abused its discretion by granting a new trial in these circumstances. Arkansas State Hwy. Comm'n v. Johns, 302 Ark. 291, 789 S.W.2d 450 (1990).

Written Record.

If parties plan to base their arguments on the timeliness of the notice of appeal from the denial of a motion for a judgment n.o.v. or a new trial motion upon a “written record” that a hearing has been set or held, the “written record,” a transcript of the hearing or other record of its having been held must be filed and made an official record of the court within 30 days from the making of the motion for judgment n.o.v. or for a new trial. Brittenum & Assocs. v. Mayall, 286 Ark. 427, 692 S.W.2d 248 (1985).

Rule 61. Harmless error.

No error in either the admission or the exclusion of evidence and no error or defect in any ruling or order or in anything done or omitted by the court or by any of the parties is ground for granting a new trial or for setting aside a verdict or for vacating, modifying or otherwise disturbing a judgment or order, unless refusal to take such action appears to the court inconsistent with substantial justice. The court at every stage of the proceeding must disregard any error or defect in the proceeding which does not affect the substantial rights of the parties.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 61:

1. Rule 61 is identical to FRCP 61. The philosophy behind this rule is that proceedings should not be disturbed because of a technical error which resulted in no prejudice. Gutshall v. Wood, 123 F.2d 174 (C.A., 1942). While there is no corollary under prior Arkansas law, this rule does appear to express the Arkansas attitude towards harmless error.

2. The first paragraph of superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1901 (Repl. 1962) relative to new trials provided that a verdict or decision could be vacated and a new trial granted for the grounds stated therein which materially affected the substantial rights of the party. Implicit in that statute was the requirement that the error be prejudicial in order to justify the granting of a new trial. Also, Rule 103(a) of the Federal Rules of Evidence and of the Uniform Rules of Evidence recognizes that error may not be predicated upon a ruling which admits or excludes evidence unless a substantial right of the party is affected. This is simply another way of saying that the error must be other than harmless to afford any basis for complaint.

3. While this rule governs practice in trial courts, the appellate courts also should follow the same test. Box v. Swindle, 306 F.2d 882 (C.C.A. 5th, 1962); Keaton v. Atchison T. & S.F. Ry., 321 F. 2d 317 (C.C.A. 7th, 1963). Ultimately, the determination of whether an error is prejudicial rests with the appellate court. The Arkansas Supreme Court has consistently held that harmless error affords no basis for complaint and this rule simply confirms the settled rule of law in this State.

CASE NOTES

Admission of Illegal Evidence.

Even though the list of allegedly obscene magazines offered for sale should not have been admitted against the bookstore owner because they were illegally seized, the evidence, in the form of the two obscene magazines that he sold to a police officer, was so overwhelming that the error, even if it was of constitutional proportions, was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. Baird v. State, 12 Ark. App. 71, 671 S.W.2d 191 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1004, 105 S. Ct. 1865, 85 L. Ed. 2d 159 (1985).

Appeal of Both Sides.

There is no case or rule which requires the trial court to grant a new trial simply because both sides give notice of appeal; the fact that appellees designated their appeal as a "protective appeal" was of no significance. Transit Homes, Inc. v. Bellamy, 282 Ark. 453, 671 S.W.2d 153 (1984), overruled, Peters v. Pierce, 314 Ark. 8, 858 S.W.2d 680 (1993).

Error Not Harmless.

Circuit court's error in resubmitting a negligence case on special-interrogatory verdict forms without allowing the individual the opportunity to argue to the jury the effects of the answers to the interrogatories pursuant to § 16-64-122(d) was not harmless error where the jury apportioned each party 50 percent fault, even the slightest tipping of those percentages in favor of the individual would have resulted in a judgment against the owner of the electrical wire, the jury had been deadlocked at one point, six to six, only the minimum number of jurors needed for a verdict were in agreement, and the error was particularly injurious because the individual could not have known at closing arguments that special-interrogatory forms would be used. Campbell v. Entergy Ark., Inc., 363 Ark. 132, 211 S.W.3d 500 (2005).

Where parties in a medical malpractice case failed to comply with Ark. R. Civ. P. 4 by naming the incorrect party on the summons and complaint, there was no basis for finding that the error did not effect the substantial rights of the parties. Shotzman v. Berumen, 363 Ark. 215, 213 S.W.3d 13 (2005).

Trial court's exclusion of the causation testimony of plaintiffs' medical providers prejudiced her, as she was precluded from presenting a crucial element of her claim—that her injuries were caused by the accident for which defendant admitted liability, and reversal was required. Dundee v. Horton, 2015 Ark. App. 690, 477 S.W.3d 558 (2015).

Harmless Error.

In a termination of parental rights case, the circuit court's erroneous admission of hearsay-based reports was harmless under this rule, because the same evidence was admitted elsewhere without objection and independent evidence supported the finding that termination was in the children's best interest. Olivares v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2013 Ark. App. 94 (2013).

Although plaintiff had established error in the circuit court's admission of evidence of her prescription medication in a case involving an automobile collision, she was not entitled to relief where the jury found neither party at fault for the accident; without a finding of fault on plaintiffs' part, she could not demonstrate prejudice. Baker v. Trevathan, 2018 Ark. App. 135, 542 S.W.3d 231 (2018).

Prejudice.

Court would not reverse for error which did not result in prejudice. Robinson v. Abbott, 292 Ark. 630, 731 S.W.2d 782 (1987).

No longer is it presumed that simply because an error is committed it is prejudicial error. Smith v. State, 307 Ark. 223, 818 S.W.2d 945 (1991).

Submission of comparative fault special-interrogatory verdict forms to the jury by the circuit court during deliberations without allowing victim the opportunity to argue to the jury the effects of answers to those interrogatories violated § 16-64-122(d); further, the error was not harmless, pursuant to this rule, as victim's inability to argue the effects of the jury's answers to the interrogatories was prejudicial. Campbell v. Entergy Ark., Inc., 363 Ark. 132, 211 S.W.3d 500 (2005).

Reduction of Award.

Where trial court reduced excessive property and medical awards to the maximum amount at proof in the trial and sustained the award for pain and suffering which, under the circumstances, was not excessive, the procedure used by the trial court was proper and, as required by this rule, did not prejudice the rights of the counter-defendant. Mustang Elec. Servs., Inc. v. Nipper, 272 Ark. 263, 613 S.W.2d 397 (1981).

Reversal of Tort Judgment.

Where a tort judgment in favor of the plaintiffs was reversed, but where, during pendency of the appeal, the judgment was not superseded and the plaintiffs collected $7,681.41 by garnishments, on remand the trial judge was right in treating defendant's motion for restitution as a motion for judgment and granting relief, and there was no reason for the trial judge to delay the award until a retrial merely to permit a possible setoff against any judgment that might be recovered by the plaintiffs. Lowe v. Morrison, 270 Ark. 668, 606 S.W.2d 569 (1980).

Rule 62. Stay of proceedings to enforce a judgment.

(a) Automatic Stay; Exceptions. Except as otherwise ordered by the court, no execution or enforcement proceedings shall issue on any judgment or decree until after the expiration of ten (10) days from the entry thereof. Unless otherwise ordered by the court, an interlocutory or final judgment in an action for an injunction or in a receivership action shall not be stayed during the period after its entry and until an appeal is taken or during the pendency of an appeal. The provisions of subdivision (c) of this rule govern the suspending, modifying, restoring or granting of an injunction during the pendency of an appeal.

(b) Stay on Motion for New Trial or for Judgment. In its discretion and on such conditions for the security of the adverse party as are proper, the court may stay the execution or any proceedings to enforce a judgment pending the disposition of a motion for a new trial or to alter or amend a judgment made pursuant to Rule 59, or of a motion for relief from a judgment or order made pursuant to Rule 60, or of a motion for judgment in accordance with a motion for a directed verdict made pursuant to Rule 50, or of a motion for amendment to the findings or for additional findings made pursuant to Rule 52(b).

(c) Injunction Pending Appeal. When an appeal is taken from an interlocutory or final judgment granting, dissolving or denying an injunction, the court from which the appeal is taken, in its discretion, may suspend, modify, restore or grant an injunction during the pendency of the appeal upon such terms as to bond or otherwise as it considers proper for the security of the rights of the adverse party.

(d) Stay Upon Appeal. When an appeal is taken, the appellant by giving a supersedeas bond may obtain a stay subject to the exceptions contained in subdivision (a) of this rule, and except as to child custody orders and similar orders. The bond may be given at or after the time of filing the notice of appeal. After an appeal has been docketed in the appellate court, application for leave to file a bond may be made only in such court.

(e) Stay in Favor of State or an Agency Thereof. When an appeal is taken by the State of Arkansas or an officer or agency thereof and the operation or enforcement of the judgment is stayed, no bond, obligation or other security shall be required from the appellant.

(f) Power of Appellate Court Not Limited. The provisions of this rule do not limit any power of the appellate court to stay proceedings during the pendency of an appeal, or to suspend, modify, restore or grant an injunction during the pendency of any appeal or to make any order appropriate to preserve the status quo or the effectiveness of the judgment subsequently to be entered.

(g) Stay of Judgment as to Multiple Claims or Parties. When a court has ordered a final judgment under the conditions stated in Rule 54(b), the court may stay enforcement of that judgment until the entering of a subsequent judgment or judgments and may prescribe such conditions as are necessary to secure the benefit thereof to the party in whose favor the judgment is entered.

HISTORY: Amended November 11, 1991, effective January 1, 1992.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 62:

1. With the exception of minor wording changes and the omission of certain provisions which are inapplicable to state practice, Rule 62 is substantially the same as FRCP 62.

2. Section (a) omits the reference in FRCP 62 to patent disputes and combines the language of superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 30-102 (Repl. 1962) and that of the Federal Rule. This rule does not change prior Arkansas practice concerning the enforcement of judgments. Under both Arkansas and federal law, execution or other enforcement of a judgment or decree is automatically stayed for a ten day period unless specifically directed by the trial court. Wheatstone v. Atlas Drilling & Production Co., 241 Ark. 387, 409 S.W. 2d 322 (1966) and FDIC v. Steinman, 53 F. Supp. 644 (D.C. Pa., 1943). Under the Federal Rule, the ten day stay is more or less mandatory and the trial court is given little discretion to waive such period. The Committee recognized that there are situations, however, where execution or other enforcement should not be delayed; therefore, Rule 62 was drafted so as to retain the trial court's discretion to waive this ten day period.

3. Section (a) does work one minor change in prior Arkansas practice. Under superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 30-102 (Repl. 1962), no action could be taken within ten days after rendition of the judgment unless otherwise ordered by the court. Such language permitted the execution on a judgment even before it was actually filed. Under Rule 62, no action can be taken until ten days after the entry or filing of the judgment or decree unless ordered by the court.

4. The portion of Section (a) dealing with stays and appeals in cases involving interlocutory orders and injunctions is substantially the same as superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-2102 (Repl. 1962). Under that statute and the Federal Rule, such proceedings are not stayed unless otherwise ordered by the court.

5. Section (b) is identical to its counterpart in FRCP 62. There was no specific provision under prior Arkansas law to stay an execution or other enforcement proceedings during the pendency of post-judgment motions and it was doubtful that a trial court had the power to stay execution beyond the ten-day period normally allowed. Taylor v. O'Kane, 185 Ark. 782, 49 S.W.2d 400 (1932). Thus, this rule confers upon the trial court power which it did not apparently have under prior law.

6. With the exception of the omission of the last sentence in FRCP 62(c), Rule 62 is otherwise identical to the former. The omitted provision simply has no applicability to state practice. There was no specific authority under prior Arkansas law which permitted an injunction during an appeal and this rule does add such authority. This authority is discretionary, however, and generally requires a finding that the applicant is likely to succeed on appeal; that irreparable harm will result unless it is granted and that no substantial harm is likely to result to the other party. Belcher v. Birmingham Trust Nat. Bank, 395 F.2d 685 (C.C.A. 5th, 1968), Bauer v. McLaren, 332 F. Supp. 723 (D.C. Iowa, 1971).

7. Section (d) is a modified version of FRCP 62(d) and basically follows prior Arkansas law as codified in superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-2119, et seq. (Repl. 1962) and should not work any changes in Arkansas practice and procedure.

8. Section (e) is revised from the Federal Rule so as to make it compatible with state practice. This section follows prior Arkansas law which did not require the posting of a bond or other security in order to stay proceedings pending an appeal prosecuted by the State of Arkansas. Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 34-215 (Repl. 1962). It is, however, incumbent upon the State, or its officers or agents, to cause the trial court to specifically stay the proceedings even though security is not required.

CASE NOTES

Supersedeas Bond.

Where no supersedeas or stay was issued under ARAP 8 or this rule, city had authority and responsibility to furnish services to annexed area and collect franchise taxes during pendency of appeal of annexation order. Jackson v. City of Little Rock, 274 Ark. 51, 621 S.W.2d 852 (1981).

A supersedeas order relates back to the filing of a valid supersedeas bond and retroactively effects a stay during the period of time between the filing of the supersedeas bond and the filing of the supersedeas order. Ryder Truck Rental, Inc. v. Sutton, 305 Ark. 374, 807 S.W.2d 909 (1991).

Writs of garnishment issued between the date the supersedeas bond was filed and the date the supersedeas order was filed were not valid as a retroactive stay was in effect from the date of the filing of the bond. Ryder Truck Rental, Inc. v. Sutton, 305 Ark. 374, 807 S.W.2d 909 (1991).

Where property is pledged for a supersedeas bond, the fair market method of valuation is appropriate for determining value of the property. Ryder Truck Rental, Inc. v. Sutton, 305 Ark. 374, 807 S.W.2d 909 (1991).

Rule 8 of the Rules of Appellate Procedure provided sufficient latitude for court to accept an unsecured pledge of property as a valid supersedeas bond. Ryder Truck Rental, Inc. v. Sutton, 305 Ark. 374, 807 S.W.2d 909 (1991).

Other than the 10-day automatic stay provided by subsection (a) of this rule, a party has no other protection from the enforcement of an order unless such party files a supersedeas bond and requests a stay pending appeal under subsection (d) of this rule, or a court otherwise stays the execution of an order pending a motion for a new trial or to alter or amend a judgment under subsection (b) of this rule. In re Sugarloaf Props., 286 B.R. 705 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 2002).

Where father filed a petition in the Arkansas Supreme Court for a writ of prohibition or mandamus or a stay, arguing that the trial court was acting in excess of its jurisdiction in seeking to hold him in contempt, given that he had posted a supersedeas bond, the resulting stay did not invalidate the trial court's contempt orders for the father's failure to pay child support. Rogers v. Rogers, 80 Ark. App. 430, 97 S.W.3d 429 (2003).

Where the remainder beneficiaries appealed a judgment in a trust suit allowing the lifetime beneficiary to invade the trust for her expenses, the court did not err when it required appellants to post a bond in the amount of $181,792.28; the court properly took into account the costs and damages to which the lifetime beneficiary would be entitled if she prevailed on appeal and the trust assets did not replace the need for a supersedeas bond. Bailey v. Delta Trust & Bank, 359 Ark. 424, 198 S.W.3d 506 (2004).

Rule 63. Disability of a judge.

If for any reason, including resignation or removal from office, a judge before whom an action has been tried is unable to perform the duties to be performed by the court under these rules after a verdict is returned or findings of fact and conclusions of law are announced or filed, then any other judge regularly sitting in or assigned to the court in which the action was tried may perform those duties; but, if such judge is satisfied that he cannot perform those duties because he did not preside at the trial or for any other reason, he may, in his discretion, grant a new trial.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 63:

1. Rule 63 is substantially identical to FRCP 63. The applicability of this rule is limited to those situations where a trial judge, for any reason, becomes unable to perform his duties under these rules during the period after a decision or verdict has been given and before the appellate court obtains jurisdiction. Although this rule gives the succeeding judge the authority to grant a new trial if he cannot satisfactorily perform the duties required of him, the decisions previously made by the former judge and the jury are presumed to be correct and the burden is on the moving party to show to the contrary. Miller v. Penn R. Co., 161 F. Supp. 633 (D.C., 1958).

2. Because of its limited applicability, FRCP 63 has caused little or no controversy since its adoption and it has never been amended. Accordingly, it is not believed that Rule 63 will have any significant impact upon Arkansas practice and procedure.

(a) When additional counsel is employed to represent any party in a case, said counsel shall immediately cause the clerk to enter his or her name as an attorney of record in the case and shall also immediately notify the court and opposing counsel that he or she has been employed in the case.

(b) Except as provided in Rule 87 of these rules, a lawyer may not withdraw from any proceeding or from representation of any party to a proceeding without permission of the court in which the proceeding is pending. Permission to withdraw may be granted for good cause shown if counsel seeking permission presents a motion therefor to the court showing counsel (1) has taken reasonable steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice to the rights of the client, including giving due notice to the client, allowing time for employment of other counsel; (2) has delivered or stands ready to tender to the client all papers and property to which the client is entitled; and (3) has refunded any unearned fee or part of a fee paid in advance, or stands ready to tender such a refund upon being permitted to withdraw.

HISTORY: Adopted July 9, 1984, effective September 1, 1984; amended July 6, 1987, effective September 21, 1987; amended December 14, 2017.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 64:

Prior to 1984, there was no Rule 64. The Rule was adopted in 1984 to state the procedural requirements for withdrawal of counsel which had been addressed in Rule 9 of the Uniform Rules for Circuit and Chancery Courts. The new Rule is based upon DR2-2110 of the Code of Professional Conduct [superseded].

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1987 Amendment:

As adopted in 1984, Rule 64 dealt only with withdrawal of counsel, a topic also covered by Rule 9 of the Uniform Rules for Circuit and Chancery Court. The 1987 amendment addresses the employment of additional counsel, an issue heretofore covered by Rule 8 of the Uniform Rules. The amendment makes no change in existing law.

Reporter's Notes (2017):

Subdivision (b) was amended to add, "Except as provided in Rule 87 of these rules," upon the adoption of Rule 87.

CASE NOTES

In General.

Subsection (b) of this rule is aimed at protecting the client's interests; the trial court must look at a motion to withdraw from the point of view of the client, not the attorney. Jones-Blair Co. v. Hammett, 326 Ark. 74, 930 S.W.2d 335 (1996).

Subsection (b) of this rule is aimed at protecting the client's interests when deciding if an attorney violated the rule, thereby prejudicing his clients' rights to a fair trial. Dean v. Williams, 339 Ark. 439, 6 S.W.3d 89 (1999).

Appellate court would not consider a claim that a trial court erred in denying claimant's motion to proceed in a civil action on a pro se basis after discharging his attorney because the claimant was not happy with the way the attorney was handling the case, and in allowing the attorney to later sign and submit a motion to dismiss the case based on a settlement;

claimant had not presented a record of any proceeding in the trial court that would allow a proper review of the claim, nor had the claimant presented any authority in support of his argument that this rule and Ark. Model R. Prof. Conduct 1.16 gave the claimant an absolute right to discharge his attorney without the permission of the trial court. Holcombe v. Marts, 352 Ark. 201, 99 S.W.3d 401 (2003).

Compliance Required.

A bare assertion by an attorney that a client is uncooperative does not justify granting a motion to withdraw; even if a client is uncooperative or hard to communicate with, neither the attorney nor the court is relieved from insuring that this rule is followed. Jones-Blair Co. v. Hammett, 326 Ark. 74, 930 S.W.2d 335 (1996).

Appellant, against whom a default judgment was entered, held entitled to a new trial on the ground that its attorney was allowed to withdraw from the case in violation of this rule. Jones-Blair Co. v. Hammett, 326 Ark. 74, 930 S.W.2d 335 (1996).

Good Cause Shown.

Requirements of subsection (b) of this rule met where evidence at the hearing, and in client's response to attorney's motion to withdraw, showed that the client had become hostile toward attorney and his representation of the client. Rush v. Fieldcrest Cannon, Inc., 326 Ark. 849, 934 S.W.2d 512 (1996).

Notice of Withdrawal.

Appellants did not receive adequate notice of their counsel's withdrawal from representation where the withdrawal was accomplished only seven calendar days before a hearing, counsel stated that he mailed certified letters to the appellants notifying them of his withdrawal, but never received any green cards back acknowledging the receipt of the letters, and the appellants testified that they never received notice. Snowden v. Riggins, 70 Ark. App. 1, 13 S.W.3d 598 (2000).

Where an attorney moved to withdraw but failed to advise his client, where the attorney failed to refund any unearned fee and return any client papers, and where the client's answer was subsequently struck in pending litigation because of the failure of his legal representative to appear at a pretrial conference, the order authorizing the withdrawal could not serve to shield the attorney from his client's subsequent legal malpractice claim, and the trial court erred in granting summary judgment in favor of the attorney. Lee v. Mansour, 104 Ark. App. 91, 289 S.W.3d 170 (2008).

In a divorce and custody case, the trial court erred in granting the wife's attorney's motion to withdraw as counsel because reasonable notice was not given to the wife where the motion was granted only 13 days prior to a trial date unknown to the wife and, while the wife did not provide an accurate mailing address, the motion and notices were merely mailed via regular mail to the wife's last known address and were returned as undeliverable. Duncan v. Duncan, 2010 Ark. App. 62 (2010).

Permission to Withdraw.

Permission to withdraw should not be granted summarily. Diebold v. Myers Gen. Agency, Inc., 292 Ark. 456, 731 S.W.2d 183 (1987).

Rule 65. Injunctions and temporary restraining orders.

(a) Preliminary Injunction.

(1) Notice. The court may issue a preliminary injunction only on notice to the adverse party.

(2) Consolidating the Hearing with the Trial on the Merits. Before or after beginning the hearing on a motion for a preliminary injunction, the court may advance the trial on the merits and consolidate it with the hearing. Even when consolidation is not ordered, evidence that is received on the motion and that would be admissible at trial becomes part of the trial record and need not be repeated at trial. But the court must preserve any party's right to a jury trial.

(b) Temporary Restraining Order.

(1) Issuing Without Notice. The court may issue a temporary restraining order without written or oral notice to the adverse party or its attorney only if:

(A) specific facts in an affidavit or a verified complaint clearly show that immediate and irreparable injury, loss, or damage will result to the movant before the adverse party can be heard in opposition; and

(B) the movant's attorney certifies in writing any efforts made to give notice and the reasons why it should not be required.

(2) Contents; Expiration. Every temporary restraining order issued without notice must state the date and hour it was issued; describe the injury and state why it is irreparable; state why the order was issued without notice; and be promptly filed in the clerk's office and entered in the record. The order expires at the time after entry — not to exceed 14 days — that the court sets, unless before that time the court, for good cause, extends it for a like period or the adverse party consents to a longer extension. The reasons for an extension must be entered in the record.

(3) Expediting the Preliminary-Injunction Hearing. If the order is issued without notice, the motion for a preliminary injunction must be set for hearing at the earliest possible time, taking precedence over all other matters except hearings on older matters of the same character. At the hearing, the party who obtained the order must proceed with the motion; if the party does not, the court must dissolve the order.

(4) Motion to Dissolve. On 2 days' notice to the party who obtained the order without notice — or on shorter notice set by the court — the adverse party may appear and move to dissolve or modify the order. The court must then hear and decide the motion as promptly as justice requires.

(c) Security. The court may issue a preliminary injunction or a temporary restraining order only if the movant gives security in an amount that the court considers proper to pay the costs and damages sustained by any party found to have been wrongfully enjoined or restrained. Neither the State of Arkansas, its officers, nor its agencies are required to give security.

(d) Contents and Scope of Every Injunction and Restraining Order.

(1) Contents. Every order granting an injunction and every restraining order must:

- (A) state the reasons why it issued;
- (B) state its terms specifically; and
- (C) describe in reasonable detail — and not by referring to the complaint or other document — the act or acts restrained or required.

(2) Persons Bound. The order binds only the following who receive actual notice of it by personal service or otherwise:

- (A) the parties;
- (B) the parties' officers, agents, servants, employees, and attorneys; and
- (C) other persons who are in active concert or participation with the parties and the parties' officers, agents, servants, employees, and attorneys.

HISTORY: Amended June 2, 2011, effective July 1, 2011.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 65:

1. Rule 65 marks a significant departure from FRCP 65. Whereas the latter makes a distinction between preliminary injunctions and temporary restraining orders, this rule treats them equally insofar as the procedures are concerned for obtaining either remedy. Thus, where it appears from affidavit or verified complaint that irreparable harm will or might result, the court has the authority to issue a preliminary injunction or temporary restraining order without notice to the opposing party. Under FRCP 65, notice is always a requirement for the issuance of a preliminary injunction.

2. This rule (a)(1) is generally in accord with prior Arkansas law. Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 32-201 (Repl. 1962) provided that the court could direct that reasonable notice be given to the party against whom an injunction was sought. Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 32-202 (Repl. 1962) required mandatory notice when a defendant had already answered and superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 32-103 (Repl. 1962) provided for the issuance of a temporary injunction without notice in certain instances as where irreparable harm was threatened. However, superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 32-203 (Repl. 1962) provided that in a number of specific instances, notice was required on an application for a preliminary injunction. This rule (a)(1) is designed to simplify prior Arkansas law by providing for the issuance of a preliminary injunction or temporary restraining order without notice only where it appears that irreparable harm or injury will or might result. In all other instances, notice of such application is required. Rule (a)(2) requires prior notice and a bond before a preliminary restraining order or injunction may be effective as against designated businesses.

3. Section (b) is designed to afford a hearing to the person against whom an injunction or temporary restraining order has been issued without notice. Substantial rights are often affected and for this reason, such hearings should be heard as expeditiously as possible. Where the hearing is held on the right of the applicant to have an injunction or restraining order issued, the court may delay the hearing until the entire case can be heard on the merits. Where harm may result, however, from such delay, the better practice is to proceed with the hearing on such application.

4. Section (d) deviates substantially from the security provisions of the Federal Rule and also changes prior Arkansas law. Under this rule, the trial court is vested with discretion to determine when security is required and the amount of such security when required. Both FRCP 65 and superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 32-206 (Repl. 1962) require the posting of adequate security as a condition precedent to the issuance of a preliminary injunction; therefore, this section does modify prior Arkansas law. Under this rule, preliminary injunctions and temporary restraining orders are placed on equal footing and since the trial court is in the best position to know whether security should be required, it is given the discretion to make such a determination.

5. Section (e) is identical to FRCP 65(d) and is designed to insure specificity in the drafting of injunctions and restraining orders. The intent is to insure that there is no doubt or confusion as to the conduct enjoined or restrained. Likewise, this section makes clear the identity of all persons who are bound by the injunction or order. This provision should have little effect on Arkansas practice and procedure.

6. Section (e) of FRCP 65 is omitted and Section (f) is added to this rule. The latter section simply provides that disobedience of any injunction or order may be treated as a contempt by the court. Prior Arkansas law in this area was codified as superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 32-401 (Repl. 1962) although it is doubtful that specific statutory authority was necessary to enable the court to punish one for violating the terms of an injunction or restraining order.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2011 Amendment:

Rule 65 has been completely rewritten and is now substantially identical to Federal Rule 65 as amended in 2009. Rule 65 as adopted in 1979 departed significantly from the corresponding federal rule. Contrary to the approach of the federal rule and that of most states, the original Arkansas Rule 65 treated preliminary injunctions and temporary restraining orders as equivalent, allowing issuance of either without notice to the adverse party. Subsections (a) and (b) of the amended rule provide for issuance of a temporary restraining order without notice to the adverse party but require notice to the adverse party prior to issuance of a preliminary injunction.

The amendment eliminates former subsection (a)(2) that limited the availability of ex parte injunctive relief in some circumstances. The revised rule provides a number of enhanced procedural protections for persons or entities against whom ex parte injunctive relief is sought, including: that an affidavit or verified complaint state specific facts showing the harm that will result to the movant before the adverse party can be heard; that the movant's attorney certify in writing any efforts made to give notice and why notice should not be required; that a temporary restraining order issued without notice describe the circumstances underlying its issuance; that the temporary restraining order must expire not later than 14 days after entry unless for good cause or with the adversary's consent it is extended; and that the hearing on the temporary restraining order be set for the earliest possible time and take precedence over other matters. In addition, the party against whom the order is issued may appear and move to dissolve or modify the order upon 2 days' notice to the party who obtained the temporary restraining order without notice.

In subsection (c) the amended rule conditions issuance of a preliminary injunction or temporary restraining order on the movant's giving security determined by the court and section (d)(1) prescribes the contents of the injunction or restraining order. Subsection (d) specifies the persons bound by the order.

CASE NOTES

Allegation of Irreparable Harm.

When a hearing is held on the question whether a preliminary injunction should issue, with notice to the defendant, the party requesting the injunction must have made allegations of irreparable harm which stand unrebutted by the defendant or must show that absent the injunction he or she will suffer irreparable harm. Paccar Fin. Corp. v. Hummell, 270 Ark. 876, 606 S.W.2d 384 (Ct. App. 1980).

Physician's loss of $100,000 yearly salary, possibility that he might be forced to move to another community to find suitable employment and harm to his professional reputation did not constitute irreparable harm warranting issuance of temporary restraining order to prevent termination of physician's employment. Kreutzer v. Clark, 271 Ark. 243, 607 S.W.2d 670 (1980).

Preliminary injunction denied where appellants made no attempt to prove irreparable harm. Wilson v. Pulaski Ass'n of Classroom Teachers, 330 Ark. 298, 954 S.W.2d 221 (1997).

Finding against the oil companies was improper where the circuit court abused its discretion in concluding that there was irreparable harm to the landowners and in refusing to modify the temporary restraining order. AJ&K Operating Co. v. Smith, 355 Ark. 510, 140 S.W.3d 475 (2003).

Where defendant brought into Arkansas elk that had come through a state with documented cases of chronic wasting disease in the elk population, there was real and imminent danger to Arkansas wildlife warranting a permanent injunction for the removal or destruction of the elk. Delancy v. State, 356 Ark. 259, 151 S.W.3d 301 (2004).

Attorney general was not required to prove the elements in this rule where the state was seeking to protect the public interest; the trial court's findings that the company's trade practices could harm the public was sufficient for purposes of imposing a preliminary injunction. Mercury Mktg. Techs. of Del., Inc. v. State ex rel. Beebe, 358 Ark. 319, 189 S.W.3d 414 (2004).

Trial court did not err in granting doctors' request for a preliminary injunction based on its finding that the doctors had a likelihood of success on their tortious interference claim and that the doctors would be irreparably harmed without injunctive relief from the company's policy that denied privileges to any doctor that owned an interest in a competing hospital; by adopting such a policy, the company intended to disrupt the business expectancies arising out of the doctors' relationships with their patients and with referring physicians with whom they have established patterns of referral. Baptist Health v. Murphy, 365 Ark. 115, 226 S.W.3d 800 (2006).

In enjoining landowners from making improvements on their property, a trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding a risk of irreparable harm to a city claiming jurisdiction over the property because without an injunction, the landowners would continue to develop the property and gain a vested right in a nonconforming use, preventing the city from enforcing its regulations against the property. Potter v. City of Tontitown, 371 Ark. 200, 264 S.W.3d 473 (2007).

In dispute among a hotel management corporation, a hotel, and various other corporations, notice should have been given before an injunction and order to inspect were granted because no affidavit was filed showing that irreparable harm would result. IBAC Corp. v. Becker, 371 Ark. 330, 265 S.W.3d 755 (2007).

When a trial court entered a temporary restraining order setting aside a writ of execution previously entered by the court, it was error for the court to rely on an unverified petition because subdivision (a)(1) of this rule required an affidavit or verified complaint. Tiner v. Tiner, 2011 Ark. App. 478, 385 S.W.3d 326 (2011).

Taxpayer showed irreparable harm as to a claim that a police chief was barred by a prior criminal conviction from serving because (1) it was inappropriate for the chief to carry out the office's duties while illegally holding the office, and (2) the taxpayer and other taxpayers would have to replenish funds paid the chief if the chief continued to serve. City of Jacksonville v. Smith, 2018 Ark. 87, 540 S.W.3d 661 (2018).

Appellate Review.

Because this was a case in equity involving the issuance of an injunction, the court's review was de novo. Bilo v. El Dorado Broad. Co., 101 Ark. App. 267, 275 S.W.3d 660 (2008).

Trial court properly granted a corporation a preliminary injunction to prevent an employee from using or disclosing trade secrets because it did not clearly err in finding that, as a director and an officer, the employee had a fiduciary duty to the corporation, and it did not abuse its discretion in finding the requisite irreparable harm and likelihood of success on the merits; the confidential information constituted trade secrets for the closely held corporation with few employees. LaPointe v. New Tech., Inc., 2014 Ark. App. 346, 437 S.W.3d 126 (2014).

Bond.

A bond as a prerequisite to the issuance of the injunction was not required where no party enjoined alleged damages occasioned by the issuance of the injunction. Weathersbee v. Wallace, 14 Ark. App. 174, 686 S.W.2d 447 (1985).

Even though subdivision (a)(2) of this rule requires filing a "bond with the clerk, together with good and sufficient securities to be approved by the clerk," subsection (d) of this rule specifically exempts the state from posting security. Southeast Ark. Landfill, Inc. v. State, 313 Ark. 669, 858 S.W.2d 665 (1993).

Trial court did not err by granting a preliminary injunction and then continuing it for 110 days without requiring the state to post bond.

Southeast Ark. Landfill, Inc. v. State, 313 Ark. 669, 858 S.W.2d 665 (1993).

Custody Case.

It was clear from the record that the trial court received evidence only on the emergency motion, and the mother was limited to presenting evidence as to those facts constituting an emergency, and she was denied the opportunity to present evidence on her alternative request for a permanent change in custody, which was error. Simmering v. Simmering, 2014 Ark. App. 722, 452 S.W.3d 592 (2014).

In order for the mother to prevail in her request for emergency relief, the standard is high: immediate or irreparable harm, and this is a wholly different type of proof than what is necessary for purposes of determining whether a permanent modification of custody is justified; thus, there could conceivably be evidence that might not rise to a level sufficient to prove an emergency, but might still be sufficient to support a finding of a material change of circumstances. Simmering v. Simmering, 2014 Ark. App. 722, 452 S.W.3d 592 (2014).

Hearing.

The trial judge was in error in issuing a temporary restraining order without setting an expeditious hearing to determine whether the temporary restraining order should be dissolved, as required by subsection (b) of this rule; moreover, various hearings to be conducted by the Arkansas Transportation Commission do not satisfy the requirements of this rule. Midwest Buslines v. Munson, 274 Ark. 108, 274 Ark. 108A, 622 S.W.2d 187 (1981).

Where an injunction was not issued until the trial court had heard from four witnesses and considered a number of documents, the two-day notice of the hearing given the party being enjoined, while somewhat short, was not so inadequate as to void the proceedings; a temporary injunction may issue without any hearing where there are affidavits or a verified complaint alleging irreparable harm without relief. Fort Smith Symphony Orchestra, Inc. v. Fort Smith Symphony Ass'n, 285 Ark. 284, 686 S.W.2d 418 (1985).

Irreparable Harm Not Shown.

Circuit court failed to comply with subsection (e) of this rule by granting a preliminary injunction in favor of appellee doctors without making findings on the issue of the likelihood of success on the merits; thus, the appellate court was unable to determine whether the circuit court abused its discretion in granting the preliminary injunction and remanded the case for further findings. Baptist Health v. Murphy, 362 Ark. 506, 209 S.W.3d 360 (2005).

It was error to grant a business partner a preliminary injunction in a business dispute with an associate because the partner did not show irreparable harm, as (1) the partner's claims of the diversion of cash from two companies to pay personal expenses and an unauthorized salary increase could be addressed by a money judgment, and (2) the partner's claim of reputational harm did not support granting a preliminary injunction. Wait v. Elmen, 2017 Ark. App. 648 (2017).

Irreparable Harm Shown.

Circuit court did not err in granting beneficiaries of a state Medicaid program a temporary restraining order enjoining the Department of Human Services from conducting annual reassessments and reducing attendant-care hours because it properly found irreparable harm; the beneficiaries sustained injuries for which money damages were not available because they suffered lack of food, remained in soiled clothes, went without bathing, missed treatments, faced risk of falling, became more isolated, and suffered worsened medical conditions. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs. v. Ledgerwood, 2017 Ark. 308, 530 S.W.3d 336 (2017).

In bank's suit claiming a prescriptive easement in a private roadway, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in finding that irreparable harm would result in the absence of a preliminary injunction against the defendant property owner; ample evidence supported the circuit court's findings that the property owner could have engaged in uses that realistically diminished or destroyed the public's use of the roadway, and such diminution or elimination of access could not be rectified by monetary damages. Anita G, LLC v. Centennial Bank, 2019 Ark. App. 217, 575 S.W.3d 561 (2019).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in determining that a ballot question committee demonstrated that irreparable harm would result in the absence of an injunction because the committee could not begin the initiative process for the election cycle; the impossible requirements found in Ark. Code Ann. § 7-9-601(b)(1) and (b)(3) prevented the committee from registering any paid canvassers. Thurston v. Safe Surgery Ark., 2021 Ark. 55, 619 S.W.3d 1 (2021).

Jurisdiction.

Chancellor had jurisdiction to decide request for injunctive relief. Springdale Bd. of Educ. v. Bowman, 294 Ark. 66, 740 S.W.2d 909 (1987).

Judge possessed authority to vacate chancery court's temporary restraining order even though it had been entered for more than ninety days. West v. Belin, 314 Ark. 40, 858 S.W.2d 97 (1993).

Where all the necessary parties were before the court in Louisiana where appellants first sought a declaratory judgment, it was immaterial that the subject oil wells of a disputed lease were located in Arkansas; accordingly, company failed to demonstrate that it would suffer irreparable harm if the Arkansas court did not grant an order restraining and enjoining appellants from proceeding further in their suit in Louisiana. Three Sisters Petroleum v. Langley, 348 Ark. 167, 72 S.W.3d 95 (2002).

Circuit court exceeded its jurisdiction in granting parents' request for a temporary restraining order preventing school district from expelling two students. The parents were not entitled to injunctive relief, because there had been no final action by the school board on the superintendent's expulsion recommendation and the parents failed to exhaust their administrative remedies before the school board. Helena-West Helena Sch. Dist. #2 v. Circuit Court, 247 S.W.3d 823 (Ark. 2007).

Justiciable Controversy.

Beneficiaries of a state Medicaid program presented a justiciable controversy; in granting their motion for a temporary restraining order, the circuit court found that the beneficiaries suffered irreparable harm and demonstrated a likelihood of success on the merits of their claims, in part, because the Department of Human Services had reduced their attendant-care hours. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs. v. Ledgerwood, 2017 Ark. 308, 530 S.W.3d 336 (2017).

Legal Description.

Although the landowner argued that the trial court should have provided a legal description of that part of his land that he was enjoined from filling, case law held that a trial court's order had to provide a legal description when locating boundary lines or easements, and the landowner cited no persuasive authority that these holdings were to be applied in a case that did not involve a dispute over property lines or ownership. Bilo v. El Dorado Broad. Co., 101 Ark. App. 267, 275 S.W.3d 660 (2008).

Likelihood of Success.

Former employee testified that company did not provide him with any training, proprietary formulas, trade secrets, or a secret customer list, and he claimed he did not learn anything that would have given him an unfair advantage in the bidding process; the company did not have a legitimate interest to be protected by the noncompete agreement, which only shielded it from ordinary competition, and thus the circuit court erred in granting a preliminary injunction because the company failed to demonstrate a likelihood of success on the merits. Burleigh v. Center Point Contractors, Inc., 2015 Ark. App. 615, 474 S.W.3d 887 (2015).

Circuit court did not err in granting beneficiaries of a state Medicaid program a temporary restraining order enjoining the Department of Human Services from conducting annual reassessments and reducing attendant-care hours because the beneficiaries demonstrated a likelihood of success on the merits; the beneficiaries showed that the Department of Human Services did not substantially comply with Ark. Code Ann. § 25-15-204 in promulgating the new Resource Utilization Groups system methodology by failing to provide proper notice. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs. v. Ledgerwood, 2017 Ark. 308, 530 S.W.3d 336 (2017).

Motion for an injunction and temporary restraining order, enjoining the former employee from disclosing confidential information and trade secrets and from employment with the new employer for a period of one year, was improperly granted as the former employer failed to demonstrate a likelihood of success on the merits. The former employer did not produce any specific confidential information that the employee had obtained during his employment; there was no evidence that any confidential information would be inevitably disclosed by the employee or would give the new employer an unfair advantage; and the evidence did not support a finding that he had disclosed confidential information to the new employer. Box v. J.B. Hunt Transp., Inc., 2017 Ark. App. 605, 533 S.W.3d 603 (2017).

Taxpayer showed a likelihood of success on the merits of the taxpayer's claim that a police chief was disqualified because (1) Ark. Const. Art. 5, § 9 applied to appointed officials and to the office of chief of police, as the office was an "office of trust", and (2) the chief's conviction for giving a false report to a police officer was an "infamous crime" of dishonesty committed with intent to deceive. City of Jacksonville v. Smith, 2018 Ark. 87, 540 S.W.3d 661 (2018).

In bank's suit claiming a prescriptive easement in a private roadway, the bank demonstrated a likelihood of success on the merits of its claim to support the circuit court's granting of a preliminary injunction; the testimony showed that many drivers who used the road did not seek or receive permission to do so, thereby rebutting the presumption of permissive use of the road and demonstrating that use was open, notorious, and adverse. Anita G, LLC v. Centennial Bank, 2019 Ark. App. 217, 575 S.W.3d 561 (2019).

In bank's suit claiming a prescriptive easement in a private roadway, the bank demonstrated a likelihood of success on the merits of its claim to support the circuit court's granting of a preliminary injunction; the circuit court did not err in finding that use had been continuous, and the former owner's closure of the road for a few hours a day for six days a year during the annual fair did not reflect an intent to permanently defeat the public's use. Anita G, LLC v. Centennial Bank, 2019 Ark. App. 217, 575 S.W.3d 561 (2019).

Because Ark. Code Ann. § 7-9-601(b)(1) and (b)(3) were impossible to comply with, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in determining a ballot question committee demonstrated a likelihood of success on the merits in its action alleging the statute was unconstitutional. Thurston v. Safe Surgery Ark., 2021 Ark. 55, 619 S.W.3d 1 (2021).

Mandatory Injunction.

The chancellor may require a person to do a specific act by the issuance of a mandatory injunction; if he had so desired, the chancellor in a divorce action could have required the wife to sign the joint income tax return or pay one-half of the increased tax. Cox v. Cox, 17 Ark. App. 93, 704 S.W.2d 171 (1986).

Notice.

Although this rule provides for relief without written or oral notice to the adverse party or his attorney where the requisite proof of emergency is shown, the better practice is to give oral notice to the adverse party's attorney, if known and available to receive such notice, prior to submission of the ex parte request. Jones v. Jones, 51 Ark. App. 24, 907 S.W.2d 745 (1995), rev'd, 326 Ark. 481, 931 S.W.2d 767 (1996).

Because a father's argument hinged on failure of service of notice, which was properly made, his argument that the circuit court erred by issuing a temporary restraining order failed. Wilson v. Wilson, 2016 Ark. App. 191, 487 S.W.3d 420 (2016).

Scope.

Circuit court's injunction prohibiting all non-shopping activity and conduct by the union and its members on a retailer's property was overbroad given the requirement of proving irreparable harm coupled with this rule's specificity requirement, and thus, the circuit court's order was modified to limit it to activities that were proven by the retailer to cause irreparable harm. United Food & Commer. Workers Int'l Union v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 2016 Ark. 397, 504 S.W.3d 573 (2016).

Preliminary injunction finding that the entirety of Ark. Code Ann. § 7-9-601(b) was unconstitutional was not overbroad; because all of the subdivisions in § 7-9-601(b) are related to the criminal background check, they are interrelated and dependent on each other. Thurston

v. Safe Surgery Ark., 2021 Ark. 55, 619 S.W.3d 1 (2021).

Security.

Subsection (d) of this rule clearly provides a court with discretion to require the giving of an adequate security as a condition precedent to the issuance of a preliminary injunction; that discretion is given the trial court in such matters because that court is in the best position to know whether security should be required. Galloway v. Arkansas State Hwy. & Transp. Dep't, 318 Ark. 303, 885 S.W.2d 17 (1994).

Sovereign Immunity Exception.

Action challenging Acts 2017, No. 633, which amended Ark. Const. Amend. 51, §§ 6, 13, was not subject to an asserted sovereign-immunity defense because the action asserted that Act 633 violated qualified voters' constitutional right to vote and sought declaratory and injunctive relief, not money damages. An exception to sovereign immunity exists to seek injunctive relief against unconstitutional acts or acts that are ultra vires, arbitrary, capricious, or in bad faith. Martin v. Haas, 2018 Ark. 283, 556 S.W.3d 509 (2018).

Stating Reasons for Issuance.

Former subdivision (e) of this rule [see now subdivision (d)] did not prohibit a trial court from incorporating by reference its rulings from the bench in an order for preliminary injunction; where rulings from the bench were incorporated in the abstract, subsection (e) was satisfied because it was possible to determine the trial court's basis for concluding that a party would ultimately prevail at trial, and whether the trial court had abused its discretion. Potter v. City of Tontitown, 371 Ark. 200, 264 S.W.3d 473 (2007).

Rule 65.1. Security; Proceedings against sureties.

Whenever these rules require or permit the giving of security by a party and security is given in the form of a bond or stipulation or other undertaking with one or more sureties, each surety submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court and irrevocably appoints the clerk of the court as his agent upon whom any papers affecting his liability on the bond may be served. His liability may be enforced on motion without the necessity of an independent action. The motion and such notice of the motion as the court prescribes may be served on the clerk of the court who shall forthwith mail copies to the sureties if their addresses are known.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 65.1:

1. With the exception of the deletion of the references to admiralty and maritime claims, Rule 65.1 is otherwise identical to FRCP 65.1. This rule does not work any changes in Arkansas law as the substance of the rule has heretofore been in effect. Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-2107.3 (Repl. 1962), which governed supersedeas bonds was almost verbatim with this and FRCP 65.1.

2. With reference to bonds which were posted in order to obtain injunctive relief, superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 32-310 (Repl. 1962) provided essentially the same procedure for reducing a claim against a surety to judgment.

Rule 66. Receivers.

(a) Appointment. Circuit courts may appoint receivers for any lawful purpose when such appointment shall be deemed necessary and proper. The receiver shall give bond, with sufficient security, in an amount to be approved by the court, for the benefit of all persons in interest. The receiver shall likewise take an oath to faithfully perform the duties reposed in him by the court.

(b) Reports. The receiver shall make a report of his proceedings and actions every six (6) months or at such other times as directed by the court. All moneys or property collected by the receiver shall be accounted for and deposited into court or otherwise be subject to the orders of the court.

(c) Employment of Others. Subject to the approval of the court, the receiver shall have power to employ an attorney, an accountant or such other persons as may be necessary to conduct the business or affairs entrusted to the receiver. The wages or fees paid by the receiver shall be paid as an expense from the assets collected by him.

(d) Removal. Receivers may be removed at any time by the court for good cause. Substitute receivers shall be subject to the same requirements as the previous receiver.

(e) Dismissal of Action. No action wherein a receiver has been appointed shall be dismissed except by order of the court.

HISTORY: Amended March 13, 2003.

Publisher's Notes.

A proposed amendment to Rule 66 has been published by the Supreme Court of Arkansas for comment from the bench and bar. The proposed amendment to Rule 66 would change the reference to "courts of equity" in subsection (a) to "circuit courts" in light of Constitutional Amendment 80.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 66:

1. Rule 66 varies substantially in form from FRCP 66. Whereas the latter attempts to incorporate by reference existing federal statutes dealing with receiverships, this rule attempts to define the procedures used in receiverships.

2. Receiverships were formerly governed by superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 36-101, et seq. (Repl. 1962). The procedure remains essentially the same under Rule 66 as it did under prior Arkansas law. No attempt has been made to define and identify those situations in which the appointment of a receiver is proper; accordingly, resort must still be made to traditional equitable grounds for the appointment of a receiver. This rule is not intended to cover receivers appointed pursuant to Ark. Stat. Ann. § 66-4805 (Repl. 1966) for insolvent insurance companies. The latter involves the insurance commissioner as the statutory receiver and the insurance code contains specific provisions for such receiverships.

3. Following the example of superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 36-104 (Repl. 1962), no attempt has been made to define the powers of a receiver. The extent of such powers must be determined by reference to traditional equitable principles. This power is largely determined by the court which should exercise close supervision and control over the receiver's actions.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2003 Amendment:

In light of Constitutional Amendment 80, the reference to “courts of equity” in subdivision (a) has been replaced with “circuit courts.”

CASE NOTES

Appeal.

The appointment of a receiver is a significant step and can affect the substantial rights of the parties. Review of the propriety of such an appointment is provided by permitting interlocutory appeals of such orders. Boeckmann v. Mitchell, 322 Ark. 198, 909 S.W.2d 308 (1995).

Discretion of Court.

Chancellors have inherent discretion to appoint receivers when they find it necessary to accomplish a proper end. Chapin v. Stuckey, 286 Ark. 359, 692 S.W.2d 609 (1985).

A chancellor did not abuse his discretion in determining that the appointment of a receiver was appropriate to oversee the dissolution and liquidation of a bank's not-for-profit corporation on the grounds of insolvency even though there was no base or ancillary proceeding since the only concern was whether the appointment constituted an abuse of discretion. Union Planters Nat'l Bank v. East Cent. State Economic Dev. Corp., 340 Ark. 706, 13 S.W.3d 578 (2000).

Where the evidence showed that the facilities of a public water authority were in a state of disrepair, there were no funds to make improvements, and there was contamination of the water, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by appointing a receiver; moreover, a claim of self-interest of a particular receiver was rejected. Williams v. Brushy Island Pub. Water Auth., 368 Ark. 219, 243 S.W.3d 903 (2006).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in not appointing a receiver in appellants' action against a county fair and livestock show association challenging the association's purchase of property and the relocation of its fairground as the association's board did not violate § 4-28-412(2); there was no showing that the estimates obtained by the association were not reasonable or accurate. Dunaway v. Garland County Fair & Livestock Show Ass'n, 97 Ark. App. 181, 245 S.W.3d 678 (2006).

Fiduciary.

A receiver is a fiduciary representing the court and all parties in interest. First Nat'l Bank v. Quality Chem. Corp., 36 Ark. App. 215, 821 S.W.2d 53 (1991).

Where a duly appointed receiver also had rights as a secured creditor, it was not allowed to personally benefit from its position as receiver, to the detriment of other creditors, by using that which had been delivered to the debtor, without payment. First Nat'l Bank v. Quality Chem. Corp., 36 Ark. App. 215, 821 S.W.2d 53 (1991).

Rule 67. Deposit in court.

In an action in which any part of the relief sought is a judgment for a sum of money or the disposition of a sum of money or the disposition of any other thing capable of delivery, a party, upon notice to every other party, and by leave of court, may deposit with the court all or any part of such sum or thing. Money or property paid into court under this rule shall not be withdrawn except upon the express, written order of the court and shall be delivered only to the person determined by the court to be entitled thereto.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 67:

1. Rule 67 is a slightly modified version of FRCP 67. The only variation is found in the last sentence and this change is designed to safeguard the money or object on deposit by insuring that it shall not be released without the express, written order of the court and only then to the person whom the court has determined to be entitled to possession.

2. Prior Arkansas law was codified as superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1601 (Repl. 1962). Under this rule, however, a party must initiate the deposit as opposed to having the court take the initiative. The deposit must be with leave of the court and upon notice to the opposing party.

Rule 68. Offer of judgment.

At any time more than 10 days before the trial begins, a party defending against a claim may serve upon the adverse party an offer to allow judgment to be taken against him for the money or property or to the effect specified in his offer, with costs then accrued. If within 10 days after the service of the offer the adverse party serves written notice that the offer is accepted, either party may then file the offer and notice of acceptance together with proof of service thereof and judgment shall be entered. An offer not accepted shall be deemed withdrawn and evidence thereof is not admissible except in a proceeding to determine costs. If the judgment exclusive of interest from the date of offer finally obtained by the offeree is not more favorable than the offer, the offeree must pay the costs incurred after the making of the offer. The fact that an offer is made but not accepted does not preclude a subsequent offer. When the liability of one party to another has been determined by verdict or order or judgment, but the amount or extent of liability remains to be determined by further proceedings, the party adjudged liable may make an offer of judgment, which shall have the same effect as an offer made before trial if it is served within a reasonable time not less than 10 days prior to the commencement of hearings to determine the amount or extent of liability. For purposes of this rule, the term "costs" is defined as reasonable litigation expenses, excluding attorney's fees.

HISTORY: Amended November 21, 1988, effective January 1, 1989.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 68:

1. With the exception of one minor change, Rule 68 is otherwise identical to FRCP 68. This change simply provides for the entry of judgment where an offer of judgment has been accepted as opposed to the provision found in FRCP 68 which authorizes the clerk to enter judgment. This rule is not concerned with the mechanics of preparing and entering the judgment and resort to Rule 58 is necessary to find the procedure for preparing and entering judgment.

2. This rule is substantially the same as superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1501, et seq. (Repl. 1962). It does, however, follow the provision of FRCP 68 concerning the time for accepting an offer of settlement. Thus, a party is given ten days to accept such an offer as opposed to the five day period allowed under prior Arkansas law. The purpose behind this rule and FRCP 68 is to encourage the early settlement of claims and to protect the party who is willing to settle from the expense and burden of costs which subsequently accrue. Staffend v. Lake Cent. Airlines, Inc., 47 F.R.D. 218 (D.C., Ohio, 1969).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1988 Amendment:

The amendment broadens the definition of the term "costs" for purposes of this rule. In Darragh Poultry & Livestock Equip. Co. v. Piney Creek Sales, Inc., 294 Ark. 427, 743 S.W.2d 804 (1988), the Supreme Court held that, as used in this rule, the term "costs" is limited to costs authorized by statute, a result consistent with prior cases adopting a narrow definition of the term in other contexts. However, a broader approach is warranted with respect to this rule, which is designed to encourage early settlement. The amended rule thus permits assessment of not only those costs authorized by statute, but also reasonable expenses typically incurred in the course of litigation. As a result, expenses disallowed under Darragh — e.g., meals and lodging — are now available under the amended rule. Attorney's fees, however, are expressly excluded from the new definition.

CASE NOTES

Constitutionality.

Parents and their son were not denied equal protection under the United States and Arkansas Constitutions by this rule after costs greater than the jury verdicts for the parents and their son were awarded to the defendant, whose offers of settlement in amounts higher than the verdicts were rejected before trial. While this rule allowed a defendant to make an enforceable offer of judgment but did not extend the same privilege to a plaintiff, the policy of this rule in encouraging settlements was neutral, favoring neither plaintiffs nor defendants, and plaintiffs and defendants were not similarly situated since plaintiffs were parties by choice while defendants were not. Lafont v. Mixon, 2010 Ark. 450, 374 S.W.3d 668 (2010).

In General.

This rule is not applicable where a defendant makes an offer of settlement that is less than the minimum amount that the plaintiff can recover. Jones v. Abraham, 67 Ark. App. 304, 999 S.W.2d 698 (1999), aff'd, 341 Ark. 66, 15 S.W.3d 310 (2000), overruled in part, Lamontagne v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2010 Ark. 190, 366 S.W.3d 351 (2010).

This rule is not applicable where a defendant makes an offer of settlement that is no greater than the minimum amount that the plaintiff can recover. Jones v. Abraham, 341 Ark. 66, 15 S.W.3d 310 (2000).

Attorney's Fees.

Defendants who tendered a judgment larger than the plaintiffs ultimately received, were not entitled to be paid the cost of the lawsuit as attorney's fees are not included in the term "costs" as stated in this rule. Clawson v. Rye, 281 Ark. 8, 661 S.W.2d 354 (1983).

The trial court is not required to award costs to a prevailing party when no offer of judgment is made. Hankins v. Department of Fin. & Admin., 330 Ark. 492, 954 S.W.2d 259 (1997).

Construction.

Where injured person rejected driver's offer and a jury later found the driver zero percent at fault, the appellate court held the driver's offer of one dollar was not a bona fide or good faith offer as required to trigger an award of costs under this rule and the trial court erred in granting driver's post-trial motion for costs; however, because the law regarding what kind of offer was required to trigger costs was not settled at the time driver made the offer of judgment, injured person's motion for sanctions under Ark. R. Civ. P. 11 was properly denied. Warr v. Williamson, 359 Ark. 234, 195 S.W.3d 903 (2004).

Costs Incurred After Offer.

Trial court had authority to award the costs incurred after making of offer, but only such costs as were authorized by statute. Darragh Poultry & Livestock Equip. Co. v. Piney Creek Sales, Inc., 294 Ark. 427, 743 S.W.2d 804 (1988).

The provisions of Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(d) relating to the recovery of costs by the prevailing party in a lawsuit are not mutually exclusive with the provisions of this rule, which allow a defendant to recover his post-offer costs if the defendant makes a settlement offer that is rejected and the plaintiff receives an award at trial that is less than the amount of the offer; therefore, while the trial court did not err in granting a request for post-offer costs by a defendant in a personal injury action whose pretrial offer was rejected, the plaintiff was also entitled to an award of pre-offer costs because the jury found for the plaintiff. Bell v. Bershears, 351 Ark. 260, 92 S.W.3d 32 (2002).

Granting of a driver's motion for a new trial in an action stemming from an automobile accident was improper because the evidence was conflicting and the jury resolved the evidence in the other driver's favor; the verdict was not clearly against the preponderance of the evidence. Because the judgment was not more favorable to the appellee driver than the appellant driver's offer, this rule mandated that appellee was to be liable for the costs incurred after appellant's offer was made. Bailey v. McRoy, 99 Ark. App. 185, 258 S.W.3d 388 (2007).

In a divorce action, the trial court did not err in refusing to credit the husband's offer of his entire business to the wife because even if she had accepted the offer, the trial court would have been required to determine the value of the asset so as to effect an equal and equitable division of property; thus, no litigation expenses would have been saved. Cummings v. Cummings, 104 Ark. App. 315, 292 S.W.3d 819 (2009).

Discretion of Court.

Trial judge has no discretion but must order offeree to pay authorized costs incurred after making of a bona fide offer, if judgment, exclusive of interest, is not more favorable than offer. Darragh Poultry & Livestock Equip. Co. v. Piney Creek Sales, Inc., 294 Ark. 427, 743 S.W.2d 804 (1988).

Unallocated Offer of Judgment.

Trial court erred in awarding costs to a neighbor as this rule did not apply to an unallocated offer of judgment such as the joint offer of judgment made by the neighbor and a utility company. Pope v. Overton, 2011 Ark. 11, 376 S.W.3d 400 (2011).

This rule does not apply to an unallocated offer of judgment. Pope v. Overton, 2011 Ark. 11, 376 S.W.3d 400 (2011).

Rule 69. Execution discovery.

In aid of a judgment or execution, a judgment creditor or his successor in interest, when that interest appears of record, may obtain discovery from any person, including the judgment debtor, in the manner provided in these rules.

HISTORY: Adopted July 9, 1984, effective September 1, 1984.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 69:

Prior to 1984, there was no Rule 69. The Rule was adopted in 1984 to make the discovery procedures available to parties pursuing execution. The Rule is not intended to supersede the independent action for discovery found in Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 30-901 through 30-908 (Repl. 1979), however, it supersedes Ark. Stat. Ann. § 30-906 (Repl. 1979), as it is to an extent duplicative of that section.

Rule 70. Judgment for specific acts: vesting title.

If a judgment directs a party to execute a conveyance of land or to deliver deeds or other documents or to perform any other specific act and the party fails to comply within the time specified, the court may direct the act to be done at the cost of the disobedient party by some other person appointed by the court and the act when so done has like effect as if done by the party. On application of the party entitled to performance, the clerk shall issue a writ of attachment or sequestration against the property of the disobedient party to compel obedience to the judgment. The court may also in proper cases adjudge the party in contempt. If real or personal property is within the jurisdiction of the court, in lieu of directing a conveyance thereof, it may enter a judgment divesting the title of any party and vesting it in others and such judgment has the effect of a conveyance executed in due form of law. When any order or judgment is for the delivery of possession, the party in whose favor it is entered is entitled to a writ of execution or assistance upon application to the clerk.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 70:

1. With the exception of minor wording changes to adapt FRCP 70 to state practice, Rule 70 is substantially the same as the Federal Rule. This rule applies only after judgment has been entered, DeBeers Consol. Mines, Ltd. v. United States, 325 U.S. 212, 65 S. Ct. 1130 (1945), and gives the trial court power to deal with parties who refuse to obey and comply with orders to do specific acts. The acts contemplated by this rule have traditionally been ordered by equity courts and it is likely that such courts will have more occasion to exercise the authority conferred by this rule. The rule is not limited, however, to equity cases and under proper circumstances, law courts may well exercise the authority conferred therein.

2. This rule does not purport to grant additional authority to a trial court to affect title to property outside the jurisdiction of the court. It simply recognizes the traditional jurisdictional limits of courts and in no way attempts to enlarge such limits.

3. This rule does not affect Ark. Stat. Ann. § 29-128 (Repl. 1962) which requires that any decree which orders a conveyance or passing of title to real property be recorded in the county wherein the real property is located within one year from the entry of the decree.

4. This rule recognizes the inherent power of the court to adjudge a party in contempt for disobedience to its order and judgment. This power has also been recognized in Ark. Stat. Ann. § 34-901(3) (Repl. 1962).

Rule 71. Process in behalf of and against persons not parties.

When an order is made in favor of a person who is not a party to the action, he may enforce obedience to the order by the same process as if he were a party; and, when obedience to an order may be lawfully enforced against a person who is not a party, he is liable to the same process for enforcing obedience to the order as if he were a party.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 71:

1. Rule 71 is identical to FRCP 71. The Federal Rule has remained unchanged since its adoption and has provoked little controversy. It does not attempt to say when an order can be made in favor of or against a person not a party. Rather it merely provides that when this can be done, non-parties have recourse to, and are subject to, process in the same manner as parties. Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure. against a person not a party to the action. Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 29-107 (Repl. 1962). There are situations, however, where even without specific statutory authority, the Arkansas courts have permitted a non-party to enforce an order or to enforce an order against a non-party, i.e., where an assignee of a purchaser at a judicial sale obtains a writ of assistance or where an injunction is enforced against a non-party who has knowledge of the provisions of the order. Hudkins v. Ark. State Bd. of Optometry, 208 Ark. 577, 187 S.W.2d 538 (1945); Hickinbotham v. Williams, 228 Ark. 46, 305 S.W.2d 841 (1957).

2. Prior Arkansas law contained no comparable provision. Normally, under prior law, a judgment, order or decree was ineffective

Partial Supersession of Statute.

The reporter's notes to this rule suggest that A.S.A. § 29-107 (now A.C.A. §§ 16-65-108, 16-90-103) is superseded, but if so, it is only to the extent necessary "for enforcing obedience" to orders of the court, and is expressly not superseded with respect to judgments by default.

Rule 72. Suits in forma pauperis.

(a) Every indigent person who shall have a cause of action may petition the court in which the action is pending, or in which it is intended to be brought, for leave to prosecute the suit in forma pauperis.

(b) All such petitions shall be accompanied by an assertion of indigency, verified by a supporting affidavit. The affidavit form is set out below. Any petition not in compliance with this provision will be returned to the petitioner. There shall be attached to the petition a copy of the complaint or proposed complaint.

(c) The court shall make a finding regarding indigency based on the affidavit. In making its determination, the court may consider the current federal poverty guidelines which may be obtained from the Administrative Office of the Courts. If satisfied from the facts alleged that the petitioner has a colorable cause of action, the court may by order allow the petitioner to prosecute the suit in forma pauperis. Every person permitted to proceed in forma pauperis may prosecute the suit without paying filing fees and other fees charged by the clerk and shall not be prevented from prosecuting the suit by reason of being liable for the costs of a former suit brought against the same defendant.

(d) No person shall be permitted to prosecute any action of slander, libel or malicious prosecution in forma pauperis.

HISTORY: Amended December 21, 1987, effective March 14, 1988; amended February 23, 2012; amended October 18, 2018, effective January 1, 2019.

Reporter's Notes.

New Rule 72 tracks, with some changes, the former statutory provisions governing suits by indigents. A similar rule was proposed in 1986 but was withdrawn by the Supreme Court prior to its effective date. The former statutes, Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 27-401, 27-403 — 27-406 (Repl. 1979), were repealed by Act 208, 75th General Assembly, in 1985. Section 27-402 [Ark. Code Ann. § 16-58-133 (1987)], adopted in 1981 to replace an earlier provision, was not repealed; however, it is superseded by this rule, which contains in paragraph (b) the requirements of § 27-402. The new rule departs from the former statutes and the rule previously proposed by the Court in two ways. First, the rule does not require that the trial court assign counsel, without fee, for the petitioner. Second, the rule does not include the statutory provision allowing the trial court, in its discretion, to annul the in forma pauperis order in the event of “improper conduct” or “wilful or unnecessary delay” on the part of the petitioner. The Rules of Civil Procedure contain adequate sanctions that the court may employ in the event of such misconduct.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2019 Amendment:

Subdivision (a) was amended to delete “against another” in the first sentence, which had been a source of confusion to some as to its effect on the scope of the rule.

Publisher's Notes.

A former rule concerning suits in forma pauperis was adopted by per curiam of July 7, 1986, to be effective on Sept. 15, 1986, but was rescinded by per curiam of Sept. 15, 1986.

This rule supersedes § 16-58-133.

CASE NOTES

Habeas Corpus.

Because the right to proceed in forma pauperis in civil matters depended on a determination that the underlying action constituted a colorable cause of action, a file-marked copy of petitioner's habeas corpus application was necessary to a determination of the appeal; proper consideration could not be given to petitioner's appeal from the denial of his petition to proceed in forma pauperis without a certified, file-marked copy of the order from which the appeal was taken. Halfacre v. Kelley, 2016 Ark. 71 (2016).

Circuit court did not err in denying petitioner's request to proceed as a pauper with a petition for writ of habeas corpus because the habeas petition did not state a colorable cause of action. Muldrow v. Kelley, 2018 Ark. 126, 542 S.W.3d 856 (2018).

Circuit court properly denied inmate leave to proceed in forma pauperis on the habeas corpus petition because he failed to present a colorable cause of action under subsection (c) of this rule; the inmate's pleading did not satisfy the additional requirement under § 16-112-103 that he make a showing of probable cause. Morgan v. Kelley, 2019 Ark. 189, 575 S.W.3d 108 (2019).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion when it denied petitioner's request to proceed in forma pauperis and held that petitioner had failed to state a colorable claim for habeas relief as the same claims concerning his motion in limine for joinder of offenses had been previously addressed and found to be outside the purview of habeas proceedings; petitioner's latest iteration of his claims represented an abuse of the writ. Watts v. Kelley, 2019 Ark. 207, 575 S.W.3d 558 (2019).

Denial of an inmate's motion to proceed as a pauper with a petition for writ of habeas corpus was not erroneous because the inmate did not present a cognizable claim; the inmate did not show factual support for his claims, the alleged clerical errors in the sentencing order were not cognizable, and the inmate's double jeopardy claim was insufficient. Rea v. Kelley, 2019 Ark. 339, 588 S.W.3d 715 (2019).

Inmate.

Supreme Court appointed a special master to ascertain the practice of handling these types of inmate matters in Lincoln County, what specifically occurred in this case, the current status of the inmate's petition in Lincoln County, whether subsequent orders and prior pleadings were marked filed on dates different than when presented by the inmate and entered by the court, and whether the inmate's pleading, while moot, could be capable of repetition in the future under the practices in Lincoln County. Dunahue v. Dennis, 2016 Ark. 285 (2016).

Order that denied the inmate's indigent status did not state if the inmate had a colorable cause of action and was not file-marked. Thus, until an order denying the inmate's indigent status was filed in the circuit court, there was no effective order from which the inmate could appeal the circuit court's decision. Dunahue v. Dennis, 2016 Ark. 285 (2016).

Because Arkansas statutes have not created a liberty interest in parole eligibility, an inmate failed to state a colorable claim for purposes of this rule based on the allegation that the denial of his parole eligibility constituted a violation of his right to due process. Ruiz v. Felts, 2017 Ark. 85, 512 S.W.3d 626 (2017).

Circuit court erred in denying an inmate's in forma pauperis petition because he stated sufficient non-conclusory facts to assert a colorable claim for judicial review of an alleged violation of the ex post-facto prohibition; the inmate specifically alleged that his term of incarceration was extended by two years through the retroactive application of the current parole-eligibility statute, § 16-93-615, rather than by the application of the former statute that was in effect when he committed his crime. Ruiz v. Felts, 2017 Ark. 85, 512 S.W.3d 626 (2017).

Because the circuit court summarily denied an inmate's petition to proceed in forma pauperis, a record of the entire proceedings was not lodged in the circuit court pursuant to § 25-15-212(d); the inmate stated a colorable claim that had to be evaluated in light of the entire record, and he was therefore entitled to proceed in forma pauperis. Ruiz v. Felts, 2017 Ark. 85, 512 S.W.3d 626 (2017).

Circuit court did not err in denying an inmate's petition to proceed in forma pauperis on his claims that prison officials initiated and conducted a disciplinary proceeding against him in violation of his constitutional rights because the Department of Correction officials did not violate his right to due process as there was no liberty interest protecting against a 20-day assignment to punitive isolation; and the inmate's claim that disciplinary charges were brought against him in retaliation for his exercising his right to seek redress of grievances failed to support his petition because the disciplinary charges were supported by "some evidence" that the inmate had threatened and acted insolently toward prison officials. Muntaqim v. Kelley, 2019 Ark. 240, 581 S.W.3d 496 (2019).

Sex Offender.

Circuit court properly denied defendant's motion to proceed in forma pauperis because the issue of his indigency was rendered moot by the court's affirmation of the Sex Offender Assessment Committee's reassessment of defendant's community-notification status. Sarna v. Ark. Dep't of Corr. Sex Offender Comm., 2017 Ark. App. 684, 537 S.W.3d 312 (2017).

Rule 73 -- 76. [Reserved.]

Publisher's Notes.

Since the corresponding Federal Rules have been repealed, no Arkansas rules were adopted.

ARTICLE IX. CIRCUIT COURTS AND CLERKS

Rule

Rule 77. Courts and clerks.

Rule 78. Motion day and hearings on motions.

Rule 79. [Abolished.].

Rule 80. Admissibility of testimony at prior trial.

Rule 77. Courts and clerks.

(a) Court Hours. Courts shall be deemed open as specified in subsection (c) hereof for the purpose of filing any pleading or other paper; of issuing and returning process; and of making and directing all interlocutory motions, orders and rules. Pleadings and other papers may be filed with the judge as provided in Rule 5(d).

(b) Trials and Hearings. All trials and hearings shall be public except as otherwise provided by law, such as, for example, Ark. Code Ann. § 16-13-222.

(c) Clerk's Office and Orders of Clerk. The clerk's office with the clerk or deputy in attendance shall be open during business hours on all days except Saturdays, Sundays and legal holidays. All motions and applications in the clerk's office for issuing mesne or final process and for any other proceedings which do not require allowance or order of the court are grantable of course by the clerk, but his action may be suspended, altered or rescinded by the court upon good cause shown.

HISTORY: Amended November 11, 1991, effective January 1, 1992; amended March 13, 2014, effective July 1, 2014.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 77:

1. Rule 77 varies substantially from FRCP 77 and attempts to track prior Arkansas procedure. Overall, this rule does not make any significant changes in prior Arkansas law.

2. Under FRCP 77(a), the court is always considered open for the purpose of filing papers. This is consistent with FRCP 5(e), which permits the filing of papers with the judge personally, regardless of whether it is during the usual office hours of the court.

3. Although Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 22-312 and 22-407 (Repl. 1962) seem to suggest that circuit and chancery courts are always open as provided in FRCP 77, the meaning is not the same. Under Arkansas law, the term "court always open" is intended to signify that a court remains in session continuously from the beginning of its term until the end thereof. Under the Federal Rule, a court is always open in the sense that papers can always be filed with the judge or clerk, regardless of whether the clerk's office is open. Casaldue v. Diaz, 117 F.2d 915, cert. denied, 314 U.S. 639, 62 S. Ct. 74 (1941).

4. Section (b) differs from FRCP 77(b) and simply provides that unless otherwise provided by law, all hearings and trials shall be held in public.

5. Section (c) does not attempt to define the holidays when the clerk's office may be open or closed. Reference to Rule 6(a) is necessary to find the definition of a legal holiday.

6. FRCP 77(d) is deemed unnecessary under Arkansas practice. Since the clerk does not prepare the judgment, there does not appear to be any necessity for the clerk to serve notice that a judgment has been entered. This is particularly true since counsel normally prepares the judgment and opposing counsel is afforded an opportunity to approve same.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2014 Amendment:

Rule 77(b) prescribes that all trials and hearings are to be public except as otherwise provided by law. The rule cited Ark. Code Ann. § 16-13-318 as an example of an exception to the public-trials-and-hearings requirement of the rule. Section 16-13-318 was repealed by Act 1185 of 2003 and replaced by superseding statute, Ark. Code Ann. § 16-13-222. Subsection (b) of the rule is amended to cite the correct statute.

Rule 78. Motion day and hearings on motions.

(a) Motion Day. Unless local conditions make it impracticable, each court shall establish regular times, at intervals sufficiently frequent for the prompt dispatch of business, at which motions requiring notice and hearing may be heard and disposed of; but the court at any time and on such notice as is reasonable, may make orders for the advancement, conduct and hearing of such motions.

(b) Motions, Responses, and Replies. The form and content of motions, responses, and replies are governed by Rule 7(b). The timing of motions, responses, and replies is governed by Rule 6(c).

(c) Hearing; Waiver. The court, upon notice to all parties, may hold a hearing on a motion only after the time for reply has expired; however, the court may hear a proper ex parte motion at any time. Unless a hearing is requested by counsel or is ordered by the court, a hearing will be deemed waived and the court may act upon the matter without further notice after the time for reply has expired.

(d) Mandamus and Prohibition. Upon the filing of petitions for writs of mandamus or prohibition in election matters, it shall be the mandatory duty of the circuit court having jurisdiction to fix and announce a day of court to be held no sooner than 2 and no longer than 7 days thereafter to hear and determine the cause.

HISTORY: Amended July 9, 1984, effective September 1, 1984; amended November 13, 1995; amended February 1, 2001; amended May 24, 2001, effective July 1, 2001; amended January 24, 2002.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 78:

1. Rule 78 differs considerably from FRCP 78. Under the latter, the federal courts are given broad discretion to formulate their own local rules concerning the disposition of motions. Thus, there is no requirement of uniformity of rules. This rule, however, tracks prior Arkansas law in an attempt to insure uniformity in the method of hearing and deciding motions.

2. Under this rule, courts are not required to conduct motion days if local conditions make them impractical. This is a change from prior law as superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1724 (Repl. 1962) required a motion day to be held on the first day of each term. Motion days are thus permissive under this rule whereas they were mandatory under prior Arkansas law.

3. Sections (b) and (c) of this rule are slightly modified versions of sections (b), (c), (d) and (e) of Rule 2 of the Uniform Rules for Circuit and Chancery Courts in this State. The idea is to have uniformity in the area of motions and Rule 2 of the Uniform Rules largely achieved this goal. Hence, its provisions are carried forwarded [forward] in Rule 78.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1984 Amendment:

Rule 78(b) is amended by adding the last sentence of the subsection to assure that no court will consider it necessary to grant a frivolous motion even though there has been no response to the motion.

Court's Notes, 1995 Amendment:

Subsection (d) is added to modify the effect of Act 582, § 1, of 1991 which amended Ark. Code

Ann. § 16-115-104 (Supp. 1993). Act 582 increased the time to hear writs of prohibition and mandamus to 45 days. The Court has concluded that the abbreviated procedure formerly prescribed in Ark. Code Ann. § 16-115-104 is necessary in election matters because of their urgency.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, [February] 2001 Amendment:

The title of subdivision (b) has been changed — from “Briefs” to “Motions, responses and briefs” — to more accurately reflect its contents. Also, a new sentence has been added at the end of the subdivision excepting summary judgment motions and responses from its time frames. As amended in 2001, Rule 56(c) governs the timing of motions and responses under that rule.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, [May] 2001 Amendment:

Subdivision (d) has been deleting the words “judge or chancellor” and replacing them with “circuit court.” Constitutional Amendment 80 established the circuit courts as the “trial courts of original jurisdiction” in the state and abolished the separate chancery and probate courts.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2002 Amendment:

The provisions of subdivision (b) have been deleted and replaced with cross-references to Rule 6(c), which now governs the timing of motions, responses, and replies, and to Rule 7(b), which now governs their content. Under the new first sentence of subdivision (c), the court may not hold a hearing on a motion, except one that may properly be heard ex parte, until the time for reply has expired. A similar provision was added to Rule 56(c), which applies to motions for summary judgment, in 2001. The title of subdivision (c) has been revised to make plain that it does not refer simply to waiver of hearings, and stylistic changes have been made in subdivision (d).

CASE NOTES

Election Contests.

A violation of the two-to-seven day provision does not deprive the court of jurisdiction in an election contest. Jacobs v. Yates, 342 Ark. 243, 27 S.W.3d 734 (2000).

Issue presented in the claimant's petition asserting that the candidate was ineligible was moot, because the claimant failed to pursue his petition expeditiously in order to obtain the remedy of removing the candidate's name from the ballot before the election and the claimant had offered no compelling reason for his delay in filing the petition, and waiting until the day before the election to file the petition rendered it impossible for the trial court to fulfill the requirement under subsection (d) of this rule that the trial court hold a hearing no sooner than two and no longer than seven days thereafter. Oliver v. Phillips, 375 Ark. 287, 290 S.W.3d 11 (2008).

Because a candidate did not comply with subsection (d) of this rule and Ark. Sup. Ct. & Ct. App. R. 6-1(b) in contesting a declaration that the candidate was ineligible to hold office under § 7-5-207(b), the lapse of time and the fact that the election had already been held rendered moot the issues presented on appeal. Fite v. Grulkey, 2011 Ark. 188 (2011).

Hearing on Motion.

Trial court did not err by not holding a hearing on all the motions filed by the mother and the biological father, as the hearings were permissive, not mandatory, and they failed to explain how they were prejudiced by the lack of a hearing on any particular motion. Lowder v. Gregory, 2014 Ark. App. 704, 451 S.W.3d 220 (2014).

In a deceptive trade practices action, defendants waived the right to request a hearing on attorney's fees where the phrase in their response to the State's petition for attorney's fees—"that after due proceedings are had herein that their motion be granted"—did not constitute a request for a hearing, the style of the filing stated only that it was a "response" to the State's petition, and nothing in the pleading indicated that the respondent requested a hearing. Pleasant v. State ex rel. McDaniel, 2019 Ark. App. 248, 576 S.W.3d 90 (2019).

No hearing was mandated on a horse owner's motion to dismiss a company's application for registration of a foreign default judgment against him, as the law of Delaware allowed a Delaware court to award damages based on affidavits, the record on appeal contained no request for a hearing and thus the horse owner waived any right he might have had for a hearing, there was no indication that the Arkansas court failed to consider the horse owner's written response, and the Delaware court had before it sufficient evidence to determine the amount of damages. Hessee v. Simoff Horse Transp., LLC, 2020 Ark. App. 229, 599 S.W.3d 694 (2020).

Jurisdiction.

The violation of the two- to seven-day provision contained in subsection (d) of this rule does not deprive the court of jurisdiction. Jenkins v. Bogard, 335 Ark. 334, 980 S.W.2d 270 (1998).

Relationship to Other Rules.

Dismissal of a Republican candidate's complaint in intervention should have been without prejudice when the dismissal of the complaint for failure to properly serve the defending Democratic candidate was a first dismissal and nothing in Ark. R. Civ. P. 78 purported to supersede the provisions of Ark. R. Civ. P. 41; thus, the plain language in Rule 41 applied. Tollett v. Wilson, 2020 Ark. 326, 608 S.W.3d 602 (2020).

Response to Motion.

There is no specific requirement of a written response to a written motion; subsection (b) of this rule merely requires that if a written response is to be filed, it must be done so within ten days of service of the motion. However, a trial court should either allow a written response to the motion or hold a hearing at which a response is heard. Smith v. Walt Bennett Ford, Inc., 314 Ark. 591, 864 S.W.2d 817 (1993).

Circuit court erred in granting the Department of Correction's motion to dismiss an inmate's complaint under § 12-28-604 for failure to state a claim under Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), because the circuit court granted the motion without holding a hearing or considering the inmate's written response, which was timely filed under Ark. R. Civ. P. 6 and subsection (b) of this rule. Loveless v. Agee, 2010 Ark. 53 (2010).

Circuit court did not err in granting a mortgagee's motion to dismiss a borrower's complaint, before the borrower filed a written response as to the borrower's newly added claims, because the court held a hearing in which the borrower had the opportunity to respond to the mortgagee's argument as to the newly added claims. Moreover, the borrower filed a written response to the mortgagee's motion to dismiss. Jackson v. Nationstar Mortg. LLC, 2016 Ark. App. 473, 505 S.W.3d 713 (2016).

Response to Motion for New Trial.

Ark. R. Civ. P. 59 does not require a response to a motion for a new trial, and there is no civil provision or precedent which would allow a new trial by default. Transit Homes, Inc. v. Bellamy, 282 Ark. 453, 671 S.W.2d 153 (1984), overruled, Peters v. Pierce, 314 Ark. 8, 858 S.W.2d 680 (1993).

Unless a hearing on a motion for a new trial was requested by counsel or ordered by the court, a hearing would be deemed waived and the court may act upon the matter without further notice after the time for reply has expired. Cincinnati Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 367 Ark. 468, 241 S.W.3d 264 (2006).

Waiver of the Motion.

Where, after plaintiff served defendant with a request for admissions, defendant filed a timely motion for an extension of time in which to answer, which plaintiff failed to either object or respond to, and then filed a belated response to the request, the court properly found defendant's response untimely and insufficient, resulting in the matters set forth in the request for admissions being deemed admitted, since the defendant could not argue that plaintiff's failure to respond to the request constituted the granting of his motion under this rule in that the failure of the defendant to secure the ruling constituted a waiver of the motion. Collier v. Hot Springs Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 272 Ark. 162, 612 S.W.2d 730 (1981).

Rule 79. [Abolished].

Publisher's Notes.

The Supreme Court of Arkansas, in its per curiam of Dec. 21, 1987, abolished this rule and replaced it with Supreme Court Administrative Order No. 2. This rule number is reserved for future use.

Rule 80. Admissibility of testimony at prior trial.

When admissible, the testimony of any witness given in any court at any former trial between the same parties or their privies and involving the same issue or claim for relief may be proved by the duly certified transcript thereof.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 80:

1. Rule 80 is a slightly revised version of FRCP 80. Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 28-713 (Repl. 1962) contained the grounds for admitting former testimony although Rule 804 of the Uniform Rules of Evidence now contains such grounds. The question, therefore, as to when former testimony is admissible is determined by Rule 804. When it is admissible, it is proved under this rule.

CASE NOTES

Different Parties.

Where the defendant, in a civil action for assault and battery, requested that testimony, given by three witnesses at his previous criminal trials on the same assault and battery incident, be admitted into evidence in the civil action, the trial judge properly ruled that the former testimony was inadmissible in the civil action because the plaintiff in the civil action was not a party to the criminal trial, nor was the state a predecessor in interest to the civil plaintiff. Bolden v. Carter, 269 Ark. 391, 602 S.W.2d 640 (1980).

Objections.

This rule does not change the general rule that testimony given by a witness at the first trial, if used at a subsequent trial, is open to all proper objections which would exclude the testimony on the basis of relevancy or competency. Morrison v. Lowe, 274 Ark. 358, 625 S.W.2d 452 (1981).

Rule 84. Uniform paper size.

Rule 81. Applicability of rules.

(a) Applicability in General. These rules shall apply to all civil proceedings cognizable in the circuit courts of this state except in those instances where a statute which creates a right, remedy or proceeding specifically provides a different procedure in which event the procedure so specified shall apply.

(b) Actions Appealed From Lower Court. These rules shall apply to civil actions which are appealed to a court of record and which are triable de novo.

(c) Procedure Not Specifically Prescribed. When no procedure is specifically prescribed by these rules, the court shall proceed in any lawful manner not inconsistent with the Constitution of this State, these rules or any applicable statute.

HISTORY: Amended May 24, 2001, effective July 1, 2001; amended October 9, 2008, effective January 1, 2009.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 81:

1. Rule 81 marks a significant departure from the form and substance of FRCP 81. The latter contains much which is simply inapplicable to state practice and this rule is designed to define, as concisely as possible, the breadth of coverage of these rules. Generally speaking, these rules apply to all proceedings in the circuit, chancery, and probate courts of this State. The exception would be those proceedings established by statute and the statute prescribes a different procedure. Except to the extent that these rules are specifically modified by statute, however, they shall apply in all cases.

2. Section (b) is designed to insure that those cases which are appealed from inferior courts and which are triable de novo shall be governed by these rules. Examples would be civil cases appealed from municipal courts and bastardy cases from county courts. There is no need, however, to replead on appeal unless ordered to do so by the court on appeal.

3. Section (c) covers those situations where a procedure is not specifically provided by these rules. In such cases, the court is free to act in any lawful manner not inconsistent with the Arkansas Constitution, these rules or any applicable Arkansas statute.

4. FRCP 81(b) abolishes writs of mandamus. These rules do not abolish this writ as it is believed it serves a valuable function in limited cases in state practice.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2001 Amendment:

The reference to chancery and probate courts in subdivision (a) has been deleted in light of Constitutional Amendment 80, which abolished these courts and established circuit courts as the "trial courts of original jurisdiction" in the state.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2008 Amendment:

Subdivision (b) of this rule has been amended to eliminate the circuit court's discretion about pleading again. The 2008 amendment to District Court Rule 9 requires pleading again in every civil case appealed to circuit court from district court. The change here conforms the two rules.

CASE NOTES

Actions and Proceedings.

An "action" is an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice by one party against another for the enforcement or protection of a private right or the redress of prevention of a private wrong; all proceedings which are not ordinary proceedings are “special proceedings” created exclusively by statute. In re Martindale, 327 Ark. 685, 940 S.W.2d 491 (1997).

In an election contest, the circuit court erred in dismissing a complaint by a candidate for failure to join the Secretary of State as a party; the complaint was properly filed in the correct county and was timely filed, timely served, and timely answered by the electoral winner; although the specific procedure was provided by § 7-5-801, that statute did not supplant the rules of civil procedure. Baker v. Rogers, 368 Ark. 134, 243 S.W.3d 911 (2006).

Because a protective order hearing was a special proceeding under this rule, the notice procedures in § 9-15-204(b)(1)(A), and not Ark. R. Civ. P. 6(c), applied; therefore, because a respondent was timely served six days before the protective order hearing, the respondent’s motion to set aside an order of protection was properly dismissed. Wills v. Lacefield, 2011 Ark. 262 (2011).

Administrative Procedures.

The Administrative Procedure Act procedure for judicial review is an exception to the rules of civil procedure as provided in subsection (a) of this rule. Whitlock v. G.P.W. Nursing Home, Inc., 283 Ark. 158, 672 S.W.2d 48 (1984); Wright v. Arkansas State Plant Bd., 311 Ark. 125, 842 S.W.2d 42 (1992).

Criminal Proceedings.

The service provisions of Ark. R. Civ. P. 4 apply to the de novo review proceedings in § 5-65-104 because the statutory proceeding is silent on notice or service of process at the circuit court level. Weiss v. Johnson, 331 Ark. 409, 961 S.W.2d 28 (1998), overruled in part, Wright v. City of Little Rock, 366 Ark. 96, 233 S.W.3d 644 (2006).

Debt Collection Action.

A suit to collect a debt is not a special proceeding as contemplated by subsection (a) of this rule. Borg-Warner Acceptance Corp. v. Kesterson, 288 Ark. 611, 708 S.W.2d 606 (1986).

Discovery Rules.

The discovery procedures permitted in Ark. R. Civ. P. 30 and 34, are applicable only to civil actions; they are not applicable in criminal proceedings unless there is a specific statute so providing. Kelley v. State, 7 Ark. App. 130, 644 S.W.2d 638 (1983), superseded by statute as stated in Conner v. State, 75 Ark. App. 418, 58 S.W.3d 865 (2001).

Enforcement of Lien.

Subsection (a) of this rule does not exclude the use of Ark. R. Civ. P. 6(a) in computing the time within which a suit in a civil proceeding has to be filed in order to perfect and enforce a lien, because § 18-44-117 does not provide that a certain method or procedure be used in computing the 120 days. Transportation Properties, Inc. v. Central Glass & Mirror of N.W. Ark., Inc., 38 Ark. App. 60, 827 S.W.2d 667 (1992).

Garnishment Statutes Controlling.

To the extent the garnishment procedures prescribed in § 16-110-401 et seq. differ from those prescribed in the Rules of Civil Procedure, the statutes control. Travelodge Int’l, Inc. v. Handleman Nat’l Book Co., 288 Ark. 368, 705 S.W.2d 440 (1986).

Guardianship Proceedings.

Circuit court properly appointed a permanent guardian of a child and deemed the statute providing for such appointment constitutional because guardianship proceedings were “special proceedings” and excepted from the traditional Rules of Civil Procedure. Swenson v. Kane, 2014 Ark. 444, 447 S.W.3d 118 (2014).

Liquidation.

The Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure do not apply to the nonjudicial procedure to provide an efficient and fair procedure for the liquidation of defaulted mortgage loans codified in this chapter. Union Nat’l Bank v. Nichols, 305 Ark. 274, 807 S.W.2d 36 (1991).

Medical Malpractice Action.

When the legislature enacted a procedural scheme for medical malpractice actions, including a 60-day notice requirement as a prerequisite to bringing a civil action, it did not create a statutory right, remedy, or proceeding as contemplated by the exception under subsection (a) of this rule. Weidrick v. Arnold, 310 Ark. 138, 835 S.W.2d 843 (1992), limited, Thomas v. Cornell, 316 Ark. 366, 872 S.W.2d 370 (1994).

Probate Proceedings.

In accordance with this rule, it is precisely because the probate code and the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure set forth different time limits on the court’s authority to modify or vacate prior orders that § 28-1-115 applies in probate proceedings; therefore, an appeal under § 28-1-116 was timely since Ark. R. Civ. P. 52 was not implicated in an appeal from a denial of reconsideration arising from a denial of intervention in a probate case. Helena Reg’l Med. Ctr. v. Wilson, 362 Ark. 117, 207 S.W.3d 541 (2005).

Procedure Not Specifically Prescribed.

Substitution of a new class representative when the initial representative died was not covered by Ark. R. Civ. P. 25; no procedure was specified under the court rules and the Arkansas Supreme Court and the circuit court acted in a manner authorized by subsection (c) of this rule. Seeco, Inc. v. Stewmon, 2016 Ark. 435, 506 S.W.3d 828 (2016).

Service of Process.

Since the service of process provisions of § 16-58-124 do not fit into the exception described in subsection (a) of this rule, Rule 4(d)(5) supersedes § 16-58-124. May v. Bob Hankins Distrib. Co., 301 Ark. 494, 785 S.W.2d 23 (1990).

Statutory Exemptions.

The exception in subsection (a) of this rule is limited to special proceedings created exclusively by statute where a special procedure is appropriate and warranted. Weidrick v. Arnold, 310 Ark. 138, 835 S.W.2d 843 (1992), limited, Thomas v. Cornell, 316 Ark. 366, 872 S.W.2d 370 (1994).

Election contests are governed entirely by statute and, as such, they are statutory or special proceedings under this rule. Womack v. Foster, 340 Ark. 124, 8 S.W.3d 854 (2000).

Teachers.

These rules apply to a proceeding under the Teacher Fair Dismissal Act, § 6-17-1501 et seq. Sosebee v. County Line Sch. Dist., 320 Ark. 412, 897 S.W.2d 556 (1995).

Trust Administration.

Summons in a trust administration case qualified as a special circumstance and the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in denying a qualified trust beneficiary's motion to declare the service and process void and invalid; although the beneficiary argued that the summons was defective because the caption section said "Hamilton Living Trust" and did not name the trustee or the parties, the trustee had the summons issued in the name of the trust, as § 28-73-201 gave it the right to do, and the summons was directed to the beneficiary, who received it and filed a timely answer (decided under former version of Ark. R. Civ. P. 4). Hamilton v. Bank of the Ozarks, 2019 Ark. App. 76, 571 S.W.3d 53 (2019).

Wrongful Death.

The exceptions stated in this rule did not apply in a wrongful death claim. McGuire v. Smith, 58 Ark. App. 68, 946 S.W.2d 717 (1997).

Rule 82. Jurisdiction and venue unaffected.

These rules shall not be construed to extend or limit the jurisdiction of circuit courts in this state or the venue of actions therein.

HISTORY: Amended May 24, 2001, effective July 1, 2001.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 82:

1. Rule 82 tracks FRCP 82. It makes it clear that these rules are intended to be procedural only and do not affect any substantive issues such as venue and jurisdiction. These rules assume that venue and jurisdiction are proper.

Whether this is true depends upon substantive law and due process requirements.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2001 Amendment:

The reference to chancery and probate courts has been deleted in light of Constitutional Amendment 80, which abolished these courts and established circuit courts as the "trial courts of original jurisdiction" in the state.

Rule 83. [Abolished.]Publisher's Notes.

The Supreme Court of Arkansas abolished this rule in its per curiam of Dec. 21, 1987. The per curiam provided, in pertinent part: "... While the changes we adopt today at the suggestion of the committee are generally explained in the accompanying reporter's notes, we wish to comment upon the abolition of Arkansas Rule of Civil Procedure 83. In 1984 the committee suggested that we abolish all local court rules. We declined to do so at that time, but asked the committee to document its complaint that local rules were unnecessary and were serving as little more than traps for the unwary lawyer or litigant participating in a case while away from home. The committee came back to us with documented instances of conflict between local rules and the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure. We noted that at that juncture some trial judges announced that they could well do without local rules and declared that they would no longer have them.

We then embarked upon a compromise. We asked the trial courts to review their local rules and to tender revised versions of their local rules. We then received proposed local rules from a number of the trial judges. We submitted those proposals to our committee for review, and we ultimately approved most of them, excepting from approval those which were in direct conflict with the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure. The many trial judges who did not respond to our order that they review and submit proposed rules to us for review no longer have local rules, as our per curiam order of December 22, 1986, stated: "As of July 1, 1987, the only local rules in effect in the circuit, chancery and probate courts will be those filed subsequent to June 24, 1985, and approved by this court after review by the appropriate committee or committees."

In our initial screening, and as we have continued to review local rules tendered to us, we and the committee have observed that many of the rules are no more than "housekeeping" orders having nothing to do with the conduct of lawyers or litigants. Others are duplicative of the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure and thus serve no purpose except to say the same thing a different way and provide unnecessary fodder for disagreement. Sometimes, hidden within these innocuous and repetitious provisions, there are procedural requirements which do not conflict with the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure and which may seriously affect the rights of litigants. To become aware of these rules, a litigant or counsel may have to wade through many pages of confusing materials.

A member of the bar of this state, or a litigant representing himself or herself, should be able to go into any of our courts and know what to expect without having to read, in some instances, 50 pages of local rules trying to discern their effect. We recognize that some of the local rules may have great merit, and if they do, we should consider adopting them for all our courts. The Uniform Rules for Circuit and Chancery Courts apparently resulted from an attempt to create uniform "local rules." We are also abolishing those rules as of March 14, 1988, as we find them to be unnecessary in view of the since-adopted Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure and Arkansas Rules of Criminal Procedure. The useful portions of those rules have been transferred to the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure and to the Administrative Orders we also publish today.

We recognize that not all our judges operate under the same conditions, however, when the inconvenience caused by not having local rules is balanced against the inconvenience caused by them and, more importantly, against the often unanticipated and unnecessary effect they may have upon the rights of litigants, we conclude the scales tip in favor of not having them. We note that the Supreme Court of Kentucky, the state which gave us so much of our original statutory procedure, abolished its comparable Rule 83 in 1982.

It is not our intention to subvert the power of the trial courts to preside as they see fit within the universal procedural rules we have established. We presume there will be a need for trial judges to publish administrative orders which will attend to necessary "housekeeping" matters, such as the time and place court shall commence, the duties of the bailiff and the reporter and so on. It is, however, our intention that we will no longer sanction the promulgation by the trial courts of orders which may be characterized as procedural rules which will detract from the ability of any litigant or member of the bar of this state to know the fundamental rules of litigation which may affect their rights adversely no matter what court of this state they may be before. By doing away with Rule 83, we relieve the trial courts of filing local rules with this court, and we no longer sanction or recognize those which have been filed to date.

As always, we invite the members of the bench and bar, and indeed any person, to make suggestions of rules changes to us through the appropriate committee. The reporters of our civil and criminal procedure rules committees, respectively, are:

We invite comment upon the changes to the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure and the Arkansas Rules of Appellate Procedure and the Administrative Orders which will become effective as follows on March 14, 1988, unless previously withdrawn or altered by per curiam order prior to that date:"

Rule 84. Uniform paper size.

All pleadings, motions, interrogatories, requests for admissions, responses to discovery requests, depositions, briefs, findings, judgments, orders, and other papers required or authorized by these rules shall be on 8½" x 11" paper.

HISTORY: Adopted May 15, 1989; adopted May 19, 2022, effective June 1, 2022.

Publisher's Notes.

The May 15, 1989 Per Curiam read: "In our per curiam order of December 19, 1988, we suspended our earlier order on the subject of doing away with the practice of abstracting the record for appeal and substituting a practice by which the parties would submit an appendix or appendices. We took that action because we wished to examine the possibility of changing from the use of legal size paper to letter size paper in all the courts, and we became aware that unless the changes occurred at the same time, appendices would likely be composed of paper of a different size from that of any brief we might permit to be filed, and that appendices might be composed of documents of varying paper sizes. The accompanying possible handling and storage problems made it seem a good idea to put off the changes until we had sought the recommendation of our Committee on Rules of Pleading, Practice, and Procedure (Civil).

"We have now received a recommendation from the committee along with suggestions as to the rules which should be revised to accomplish the change in paper size.

"In addition to the committee's recommendations, we have studied those submitted by lawyers, judges, law firms, and lawyers' associations submitted in response to our earlier request for comments on the basic rules we proposed for the purpose of moving to the system of appendices rather than abstracts. Many of those suggestions have been implemented in the amendments we publish today.

"As we noted in our per curiam order of October 17, 1988, on this subject, we wish to have a trial period. These amendments will become effective this date; however, any case in which the appellant's brief is submitted or becomes due between now and December 31, 1989, may be presented in accordance with the rules in effect up until today. That will give this court sufficient time to observe the new practice. If we choose to retain the new system, we will be able to make that decision prior to the publication of the 1989 revision of the Rules Book which accompanies the Arkansas Code Annotated. The rules requiring appendices rather than abstracts may then be made permanent.

"During the trial period an appellant will be in the position of choosing the manner in which the briefs will be presented. If the appellant chooses to present a brief with an appendix rather than an abstract, then the appellee will be required to proceed in accordance with the new rules. If the appellant chooses to work under the abstract system, the appellee will do so also.

"While we may well decide, depending on the results of the trial period, to retain the abstracting practice, we will make permanent the changes with respect to paper size and doing away with printed briefs. Judges, clerks, lawyers, court reporters and others thus will have until January 1, 1990, to prepare to present all legal documents on 8 ½" by 11" paper.

"The purposes of these changes are to decrease the cost of appellate litigation, increase the ease and accuracy of the evaluation of cases at the appellate level, and provide uniformity as well as compatibility with the age of the word processor in the case of the paper size. We acknowledge and appreciate the comments we received from members of the bench and bar, and we count on continued cooperation as we evaluate the appendix system."

The October 2, 1989 Per Curiam read: "By per curiam order of May 15, 1989, we published changes of court rules necessary to implement a system of appeals using appendices rather than abstracts of record. The order also provided for a change to a uniform 8 ½" by 11" paper size to be used in all courts. The order provided that the changes with respect to paper size would come into effect January 1, 1990. The other changes having to do with using appendices rather than abstracts of record on appeal went into effect on May 15, 1989, but permitted an appellant to choose to follow the rules in effect until that date for cases in which the appellant's brief was submitted or became due between May 15, 1989, and December 31, 1989.

"We have reviewed the appeals now ready for submission and those which will be ready prior to December 31, 1989. Most appellants have chosen to follow the old rules. We have concluded we will not be able to decide the relative merits of the two methods by the end of this year because we will have had too little experience with appendices. The trial period is, therefore, extended until July 15, 1990. Any case in which the appellant's brief is submitted or becomes due prior to July 15, 1990, may be presented in accordance with the rules in effect up until May 15, 1989.

"The paper size changes are not affected by this order. All courts will begin using 8 1/2" by 11" paper no later than January 1, 1990."

The June 10, 1991 Per Curiam read: "On and after August 1, 1991, all briefs submitted to the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals will be accompanied by abstracts of record, as provided in Arkansas Supreme Court and Court of Appeals Rule 9. We will no longer accept briefs including appendices.

"The Per Curiam Order by which we created a trial period for experimental changes in our Rules was issued May 15, 1989, entitled, 'In re: Amendments to the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure, the Arkansas Rules of Appellate Procedure, the Arkansas Supreme Court Administrative Orders, the Rules of the Arkansas Supreme Court and Court of Appeals, and the Inferior Court Rules.' In that Order we made it clear that the rules changes having to do with the appendix experiment were adopted on a trial basis but that the changes no longer allowing printed briefs and establishing uniform paper size were to be permanent. We hereby revoke the changes, other than those having to do with printed briefs and paper size, which provided for submitting appendices rather than abstracts. We retain the changes with respect to paper size.

Rule 85. Title.

These rules may be known and cited as the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure (ARCP).

Rule 86. Effective date.

These rules will take effect on July 1, 1979.

Rule 87. Limited Scope Representation.

(a) Permitted. In accordance with Rule 1.2(c) of the Arkansas Rules of Professional Conduct, an attorney may provide limited scope representation to a person involved in a court proceeding.

(b) Notice. An attorney's role may be limited as set forth in a notice of limited scope representation filed and served prior to or simultaneously with the initiation of a proceeding or initiation of representation, as applicable. Such notice shall not be required in matters where an attorney's representation consists solely of the drafting of pleadings, motions, or other papers for an otherwise self-represented person as provided in subdivision (c) of this rule.

(c) Drafting of Pleadings, Motions, and Other Papers.

"The reason for ending the appendix experiment at this time is that we have found that it adds to the difficulty of, and time consumed in, reading briefs. If our case load and that of the Court of Appeals were not so great, we would be less willing to revert entirely to the abstracting system. Given the numbers of cases we must decide to remain current with our docket, however, we cannot tolerate the additional work we find the appendix system to have caused.

"The experiment with the appendix system began with our Per Curiam Order of October 17, 1988, creating a trial period for testing the new system which, with one intermission and two extensions, was to end March 1, 1991. As was expected, there were difficulties in adapting to the change. The main one from our perspective was the problem of expansion of the statement of the case, with appropriate appendix references, to an extent which would save members of the Court from having to scour the appendix for factual details.

"If we find a way to bring our case load and that of the Court of Appeals within reason, we may return to the appendix system, with some revisions, because we continue to wish to implement the goals stated in our original order. We would like our system to be as inexpensive and simple as possible. Under other circumstances we will be able to exercise the patience required to permit lawyers and litigants to become accustomed to the change and to fine tune it with revisions."

(1) An attorney may draft or help to draft a pleading, motion, or other paper filed by an otherwise self-represented person. The attorney shall include a notation at the end of the prepared document stating: “This document was prepared with the assistance of [insert name of attorney], a licensed Arkansas lawyer, pursuant to Arkansas Rule of Professional Conduct 1.2(c).” The attorney need not sign that pleading, motion, or other paper.

(2) An attorney who provides drafting assistance to an otherwise self-represented person may rely on the self-represented person’s representation of facts, unless the attorney has reason to believe that such a representation is false or materially insufficient.

(d) Termination. The attorney’s role terminates without the necessity of leave of court upon the attorney’s filing a notice of completion of limited scope representation with a certification of service on the client.

(e) Service. Service on an attorney providing limited scope representation is required only for matters within the scope of the representation as set forth in the notice.

Reporter’s Notes (2017):

This rule was added following 2016 amendments to Rules 1.2, 4.2, and 4.3 of the Ark. R. Prof’l Conduct that clarified the ethical responsibilities of attorneys who provide limited-scope representation.

Rule 88. Virtual and Blended Court Proceedings

(a) The court has discretion to conduct hearings or trials as “virtual” or “blended” proceedings as set forth in this Rule.

(1) “Virtual proceedings” are proceedings in which all parties, counsel, the court reporter, witnesses, and the judge are simultaneously participating in the proceeding via electronic means.

(2) “Blended proceedings” are proceedings in which at least two of the above individuals are participating in the proceeding from the physical courtroom and at least one of the above is participating simultaneously via electronic means.

(b) Hearings or non-jury trials may be conducted as “virtual” or “blended” proceedings upon a determination by the court of the following:

(1) Procedures are in place to protect the constitutional, statutory, and procedural rights of parties;

(2) Means exist for taking and preserving a concurrent record;

(3) Clear and practical procedures are in place for the consideration of evidence;

(4) The technical ability exists for all necessary individuals to participate meaningfully; and

(5) The public has access to any proceedings that would otherwise be open.

(i) Public access may be satisfied by the virtual proceedings being simulcast in the physical courtroom upon request of any member of the public present at the courtroom.

(ii) No advance notice to the public that a blended hearing or trial will proceed under this Rule is required. A virtual hearing shall require that public notice be posted on the door of the courtroom or other regular place for posting scheduling notifications at least one hour prior to the beginning of the virtual hearing or trial. The public notification for the virtual hearing shall include instructions and contact information for requesting access to view the virtual hearing either in the courtroom or by other means that may be available, as determined by the circuit court.

(iii) No additional measures are necessary for blended proceedings so long as the audio/visual display in the courtroom is sufficient for members of the gallery to witness the proceedings reasonably.

(c) Jury trials may be blended only as to specific witnesses or the court reporter at the discretion of the judge, given the safeguards described under section (b) above are met, but parties, counsel, the judge, and the jury must all be present in the physical courtroom.

(d) Requests for “virtual” or “blended” proceedings may be raised as follows:

(1) The parties by joint motion may manifest their agreement to “virtual” or “blended” proceedings as set forth in this Rule.

(2) Any party may move the court to conduct “virtual” or “blended” proceedings as set forth in this Rule.

(i) The motion must set forth how the safeguards in section (b) of this Rule are to be met.

(ii) The motion may not be granted absent an opportunity for all parties to respond under these Rules and be heard.

(3) The court on its own motion may notify the parties of its intent to conduct a hearing or trial as “virtual” or “blended” proceedings.

(i) The notice must set forth how the safeguards in section (b) of this Rule are to be met.

(ii) The court may not proceed with “virtual” or “blended” proceedings absent an opportunity for all parties to be heard.

(e) Virtual or blended circuit court proceedings may not be broadcast, recorded, photographed, or otherwise published by anyone except the court in order to comply with section (b)(5) or as otherwise allowed under the conditions described in Arkansas Supreme Court Administrative Order No. 6

Order Granting Petition for Promulgation of Rules of Criminal Procedure

IN THE MATTER OF RULES OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE. Per Curiam. The movement for reformation of the Arkansas criminal justice system began in 1971 with three workshops to study the American Bar Association's "Minimum Standards for the Administration of Criminal Justice" and criminal procedure in Arkansas. The workshops were sponsored by the Arkansas Supreme Court, the Arkansas Judicial Council, the Arkansas Prosecuting Attorneys' Association, the American Bar Association, the Arkansas Bar Association, and the Arkansas Commission on Crime and Law Enforcement. Later in 1971 the General Assembly enacted Act 470 of 1971, expressly authorizing the Arkansas Supreme Court to prescribe rules of pleading, practice, and procedure in criminal cases and proceedings.

Pursuant to Act 470 the Supreme Court, acting by its Chief Justice, and the Attorney General joined in creating the Arkansas Criminal Code Revision Commission. That eighteen-member Commission was selected to provide representation for all concerned groups, professions, institutions, and geographical areas in the state. The Commission was divided into two committees. One was charged with the responsibility of revising the substantive criminal law. That task was completed in 1974 and culminated in the adoption by the General Assembly of Act 280 of 1975, the Arkansas Criminal Code, effective January 1, 1976.

The procedural committee also completed its proposed draft in 1974. In December the Commission petitioned the Supreme Court to adopt the Rules of Criminal Procedure. The Court entered an order fixing a briefing schedule and providing any interested person or group 38th an opportunity to file objections or suggest modifications. The Bobbs-Merrill Company had co-operated by publishing, without cost to the State, the proposed Rules. Copies had been sent to all attorneys in the state, with an invitation for suggestions. The Rules were also submitted to many groups, including the General Assembly's Legislative Council Judiciary Committee and its Standing Joint Interim Committee on the Judiciary.

Pursuant to the Court's briefing schedule suggestions and briefs were filed by the Arkansas Prosecuting Attorneys' Association, bail bondsmen, and others, including responses by the Criminal Code Revision Commission. All suggestions were considered by the Court, resulting in several amendments to the proposed Rules. All those amendments are on file with the Clerk of the Court.

Pursuant to Act 470 of 1971, and in harmony with the Court's constitutional superintending control over all trial courts, the Court hereby adopts and approves the proposed Rules of Criminal Procedure, as amended, effective January 1, 1976.

Commentary to Article I

Article I, General Provisions, addresses concerns of pervasive importance in the construction and application of the rules.

The article is composed of a single rule divided into seven [now eight] provisions, each dealing with a different subject.

Rule 1.1 is the "Title" provision common to most codes.

Rule 1.2 delineates the scope of the rules and maximizes uniformity of application. Criminal cases before the Supreme Court and circuit courts are explicitly governed by the rules. Courts of inferior jurisdiction are affected by the rules (1) to the extent that application of the rules is necessitated by constitutional considerations, and (2) where their application is practicable. For example, it is obvious that holding an omnibus hearing in a criminal proceeding before a justice of the peace, while theoretically possible, would in most cases be infeasible and unwise. Application of the whole of the rules to all state courts would also be anomalous. For example, rules respecting trial by jury should not be framed so as to speak to courts in which jury trials are not permitted.

Rule 1.3 is a broad statement of principle intended to guide construction of the rules.

Computation of time is governed by Rule 1.4, patterned after Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-130 (Repl. 1962) and Arizona Rules of Criminal Procedure § 1.3.

Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-130 (Repl. 1962) has no counterpart in the Arkansas statutes governing criminal procedure, although it has been held applicable to criminal proceedings by two cases of rather ancient vintage. See, Jones v. State, 42 Ark. 93 (1883), Moore v. State, 52 Ark. 265, 12 S.W. 562 (1889). See, also, State v. Hunter, 134 Ark. 443, 204 S.W. 308 (1918).

On its face the language of § 27-130 (Repl. 1962) seems to be addressed only to situations where notice must precede an act by a certain number of days:

Where a certain number of days are required to intervene between two [2] acts, the day of one only of the acts may be counted. Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-130 (Repl. 1962) [emphasis supplied].¹

On the other hand, the language of the Arizona rule seems to contemplate only limitation computations:

In computing any period of time . . . the day of the act or event from which the designated period of time begins to run is not to be included. Arizona Rule § 1.3 [emphasis supplied].

The proposed formulation combines language from both provisions to speak neutrally of prescribed periods of time which may or must intervene between events or acts.

The rule explicitly provides that time periods shall not be computed so as to begin or end on Saturdays, Sundays, or state or federal legal holidays.

The last sentence of the rule provides for automatic extension of all time periods where service of notice or other paper is by mail.

Rule 1.5, providing for prosecution in the name of the state, needs no elucidation.

Rule 1.6 defines terms in the rules.

"Law enforcement officer" is given a functional definition by Rule 1.6(a). Cf. Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-406 (Supp. 1964), merely defining "peace officers" as "sheriffs, constables, coroners, jailers, marshals, and policemen."

"Prosecuting attorney" receives comprehensive definition. "Prosecutor" means one elected, appointed, or otherwise designated specially or generally to prosecute persons. The term encompasses deputy prosecutors and city attorneys.

A "judicial officer" is restrictively defined as one in whom authority to hear criminal cases is vested. Thus, under the rules, chancery judges are not normally “judicial officers” for the purpose of issuing search warrants, although by virtue of Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 22-340 — 22-342 (Repl. 1962), 22-341.1 (Supp. 1973), chancellors may temporarily acquire this status and circuit judges temporarily lose it.

“Information” is defined broadly to include indictments and other charging instruments.

Rule 1.7 describes the rules’ application in terms of their effective date.

[Rule 1.8 provides for the designation and duties of criminal magistrates.]

CASE NOTES

Authority of Court to Promulgate.

Section 16-11-301, which authorizes the Supreme Court to prescribe rules of criminal procedure merely recognizes the court’s inherent power rather than conferring an express power, and if the Supreme Court has the inherent power to make the rules of criminal procedure, it follows that it has the inherent power to amend those rules. Jennings v. State, 276 Ark. 217, 633 S.W.2d 373, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 862, 103 S. Ct. 137, 74 L. Ed. 2d 117 (1982).

Rule 1.2. Scope.

These rules shall govern the proceedings in all criminal cases in the Supreme Court and in circuit courts of the State of Arkansas. They shall also apply in all other courts where their application is practicable or constitutionally required.

CASE NOTESConstruction of Rules.

A municipal court speedy trial violation motion to dismiss pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 30.1(a) may be raised in the de novo circuit court proceeding even though Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.1 only refers to trial in a circuit court. Whittle v. Washington County Circuit Court, 325 Ark. 136, 925 S.W.2d 383 (1996).

Rule 1.3. Purpose and Construction.

These rules are intended to provide for a just, speedy determination of every criminal proceeding. They shall be construed to secure simplicity in procedure, fairness in administration, the elimination of unnecessary delay and expense, and to protect the fundamental rights of the individual while preserving the public interest.

Where these rules, any statute governing procedure in criminal proceedings, or any court order entered in a criminal proceeding prescribes that a period of time of more than twenty-four (24) hours may or must intervene between events or acts, the day on which one (1) only of the events or acts occurs shall be computed as part of the designated period. When the first or last day of a time period is a Saturday, Sunday, or state or federal legal holiday, it shall not be computed as part of the period, which shall run until the end of the next day which is neither a Saturday, Sunday, nor a legal holiday. Whenever a party has the right or is required to take some action within a prescribed period after service of a notice or other paper and such service is allowed and made by mail, five (5) days shall be added to the prescribed period.

CASE NOTESApplicability.

Appellant's attorney was clearly at fault when he filed a motion for new trial more than 30 days after entry of the judgment and commitment order pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. ARTICLE II. PROCEDURES COMMENCING WITH INITIAL CONTACT BY LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICER

- Rule 2. Pre-Arrest Contacts
Rule 3. Detention Without Arrest

Commentary to Article II

Article II confronts fundamental threshold problems associated with encounters between law enforcement officer and citizen. The Article is composed of Rules 2 and 3. The former is concerned with the law enforcement officer's authority to request cooperation, the latter with detention not occasioned by formal arrest. As is the case with Articles III and IV, Article II parallels closely in language and concept the provisions of the American Law Institute Model Code of Pre-Arrest Procedure (Proposed Official Draft No. 1: April 10, 1972), designated throughout this commentary as the A.L.I.

Rule 2 authorizes law enforcement officers to seek cooperation from any person in order to facilitate investigation and prevention of crime. As pointed out in the explanatory note to A.L.I. § 110.1, the rule is not the product of innovation.

Given the importance of voluntary cooperation to the successful investigation of crime, such an explicit statement is appropriate in a comprehensive code in order to encourage officials to seek voluntary cooperation wherever possible, and to express to the public that official requests for cooperation are lawful. Id. at 4.

Rule 2.1 defines "reasonable suspicion," a concept central to the Article. It will be immediately observed that a "reasonable suspicion," while somewhat more than an intuitive guess or hunch, is not equitable with probable cause. The distinction is drawn because detention authorized pursuant to reasonable suspicion serves different purposes and is of a different nature than detention occasioned by arrest. The Comment to the rule is Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-435 (Supp. 1973) virtually verbatim. It elucidates by way of example the kinds of conduct that may provide a basis for "reasonable suspicion."

Rule 2.2 is divided into two parts. The first, 2.2(a), confers authority to request cooperation; the second, 2.2(b), is restrictive, prohibiting a policeman from leading a person to believe that compliance with the officer's request is required by law. Additionally, 2.2(b) makes it clear that, in the absence of an improper statement or implication, compliance with a request for cooperation will not be deemed involuntary simply by virtue of the inherent respect accorded by some citizens to a request by an officer.

Rule 2.3 requires that a request to go to a police station be accompanied by some form of notice that the request is not attended by a legal obligation to comply.

Rule 3 is concerned with detention not arising in the context of an arrest. Present Arkansas authority, Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-429 et seq. (Supp. 1973), as well as the A.L.I. Code, was used as the model for the rule.

The Arkansas statutory scheme is characteristic of those generated by the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 88 S. Ct. 1868, 20 L. Ed. 2d 889 (1968). The fundamental aspects of the provision have historical antecedents as well, some in the form of statutes dating from the thirteenth century. See, Commentary, A.L.I. § 110.2 at 105, 106.

Rule 3.1 closely tracks § 43-429, but broadens police authority in two ways.

First, it permits a stop in a situation where the officer has a reasonable suspicion respecting the commission of a misdemeanor involving danger of forcible injury to persons or damage to or theft of property. In limiting the authority to stop to those situations where "such action is reasonably necessary either to obtain or verify the identification of the person or to determine the lawfulness of his conduct," the rule closely follows the language of § 43-429.

Second, although the fifteen minute time limitation is adopted from current law, this limitation is itself qualified by the phrase "or such further time as is reasonable under the circumstances." Although fifteen minutes is a desirable limit in most cases, the Commission recognizes that exigent circumstances occur justifying detention for longer periods and, accordingly, feels that the outer bounds of the permissible duration of nonarrest detention should be left to definition through court decision.

Rule 3 is designed to regulate on-the-street investigations; consequently, unless an arrest is made, entry upon private premises is not licensed. Neither is removal of persons to a police station authorized except where a material witness refuses to provide certain information.

The purpose of the rule is to allow brief detention in circumstances not affording reasonable cause to arrest but giving rise to a "reasonable suspicion" that criminal conduct is afoot. The Commission shares the conviction of the A.L.I. Reporters that "... such an authority is essential to the control of crime in an urban, mobile and anonymous environment. [The Commission is] further convinced that only by providing for this authority explicitly is it possible to confine its exercise even approximately to those situations of genuine urgency which best justify it." A.L.I. at 110.

The rule is grounded on the premise that the law enforcement officer is repeatedly confronted with circumstances requiring acquisition of information from or about a person unknown to him and whom, once departed, he is unlikely to find again. See, A.L.I. at 110.

Several arguments have been essayed to support the proposition that under circumstances not affording grounds capable of supporting an arrest law enforcement officers should be left to rely on voluntary cooperation. The following subsidiary arguments supporting this proposition are persuasively met by the A.L.I. Reporters thusly: First, that if voluntary cooperation is inadequate to fill the law enforcement need this is only because society is reluctant to go to the trouble and expense of hiring more and better police. But surely no police force can be large enough to allow officers to follow and observe every suspicious person they encounter. Nor is it clear that individual liberty from government action would be more secure in a society so pervasively policed. In reality, if an authority such as is proposed here is not granted, the real choice for the police in these situations is between an attempt to secure voluntary cooperation and an arrest. If cooperation cannot be secured and an arrest is unjustified, the person must be allowed to disappear, and with him must disappear any information or clarification his detention might have provided. Second, it is argued that the dilemma faced by the police if they are denied the power to stop is not so bleak, since in many cases the failure to stop and provide voluntary cooperation will resolve the ambiguity in the suspect's situation and justify an arrest. Indeed the failure to comply with a lawful request for cooperation might well be taken into account as a factor relevant to the arrest decision . . . But as sound as this argument may be in some cases, there are other cases where it will not work, and the attempt to make it work must result either in disingenuity about whether the person was constrained under authority or in an undesirable expansion in the standard of belief justifying an arrest. How can an officer, without a coercive stop, secure the voluntary cooperation of persons traveling in a car at night at sixty miles per hour? Similarly, it is artificial to describe as a request for voluntary cooperation the word "stop," shouted to a man running down a street, or the announcement to the persons at the scene of a shooting, "nobody leave; we want your names and addresses." So also it seems dubious that an arrest would be justified if a person who meets in a very general way the description of one wanted in connection with a serious crime, politely refuses to stop and identify himself, but calmly turns his back on the officer and walks away. Ultimately, the positive justification of the section is this: If, as some have argued, the only power to restrain a person, even briefly, is by arresting him on reasonable grounds to believe him guilty of a crime, the police will be foreclosed from responding to confused, emergency situations in the way that seems most natural and rational. For in such circumstances, where a crime may have been committed and a suspect or important witness is about to disappear, it seems irrational to deprive the officer of the opportunity to "freeze" the situation for a short time, so that he may make inquiry and arrive at a considered judgment about further action to be taken. To deny the police such a power would be to pay a high price in effective policing and in the police's respect for the good sense of the rules that govern them. A.L.I. at 111-113 [footnotes omitted].

Another argument against permitting stops is that granting authority to detain necessarily creates a potential for abuse which ultimately outweighs the advantages sought to be gained. Further, it is said that, at best, the stop constitutes an unwarranted imposition upon innocent parties concerned; at worse, it is susceptible to being used as a method for harassment, a method engendering resentment and disrespect of laws and enforcement agencies.

What empirical data does exist is unfortunately not determinative, although it does not appear that widespread misuse of the power to stop is inevitable wherever such power is conferred. See, Commentary, A.L.I. § 110.2 at 114-117. However, to minimize the possibilities of abuse and the inconvenience unavoidably incident to the procedure, the circumstances justifying the stop have been circumscribed: only where there is a direct threat to persons or property is detention permissible.

Rule 3.2 closely follows § 43-429(b) (Supp. 1973) in requiring that a detained person be advised of the reason for his detention and the authority of the person detaining him.

Rule 3.3 is patterned after § 43-430 (Supp. 1973) but is more restrictive in so far as it permits the use of only nondeadly force in effecting a stop. While the Commission feels that the power to stop necessarily entails authority to coerce obedience, it is of the view that here deadly force is so manifestly inappropriate that it should be unequivocally forbidden.

Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-431 is assimilated into the code by Rule 3.4, which permits the search of a person lawfully stopped and reasonably suspected of possessing a weapon posing an immediate threat to the officer or other persons. The provision seeks to ensure the safety of the officer, the subject, and bystanders, while precluding routine frisking and, in the process, thereby discouraging pretextual stops.

While permitting searches undeniably entails a certain risk of abuse, the Commission stands with the A.L.I. Reporters in its belief that police officers cannot be asked to risk what they perceive to be potentially lethal encounters unless they are, at the same time, authorized to make protective frisks.

Rule 3.5 incorporates § 43-432 (Supp. 1973) almost word for word in sanctioning the stop of a person believed to be a witness to a felony. The fifteen minute time limit imposed by 3.1 finds application here also.

Section 43-434 (Supp. 1973), setting out limitations on the right to stop, was deemed surplusage and was not made part of Rule 3.

RULE 2.

PRE-ARREST CONTACTS

Rule

Rule 2.1. Definitions.

Rule 2.2. Authority to request cooperation.

Rule 2.3. Warning to persons asked to appear at a police station.

Rule 2.1. Definitions.

For the purposes of this Article, unless the context otherwise plainly requires:

“Reasonable suspicion” means a suspicion based on facts or circumstances which of themselves do not give rise to the probable cause requisite to justify a lawful arrest, but which give rise to more than a bare suspicion; that is, a suspicion that is reasonable as opposed to an imaginary or purely conjectural suspicion.

Comment to Rule 2.1

The following are among the factors to be considered in determining if a “reasonable suspicion” exists:

- (a) The conduct and demeanor of a person.
- (b) The gait and manner of a person.
- (c) Any knowledge the officer may have of a person’s background or character.
- (d) Whether a person is carrying anything, and what he is carrying.
- (e) The manner of a person’s dress, including bulges in his clothing, when considered in light of all the other factors.
- (f) The time of the day or night.
- (g) Any overheard conversation of a person.
- (h) The particular streets and areas involved.
- (i) Any information received from third person, whether he is known or unknown.
- (j) Whether a person is consorting with others whose conduct is “reasonably suspect.”
- (k) A person’s proximity to known criminal conduct.
- (l) Incidence of crime in the immediate neighborhood.
- (m) A person’s apparent effort to conceal an article.
- (n) Apparent effort of a person to avoid identification or confrontation by the police.

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Comment to Rule 2.1

The legality of stops under Rule 3.1 and weapons searches under Rule 3.4 turns on whether a law enforcement officer has “reasonable suspicion” as defined in Rule 2.1. Whether the officer has adequate grounds is a question that will, of course, arise most frequently when the stop yields an incriminating statement or other evidence.

In Tillman v. State, 275 Ark. 275, 630 S.W.2d 5 (1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1201, 103 S. Ct. 1185, 75 L. Ed. 2d 432 (1983), the Court established a quadripartite standard helpful in understanding how it will determine whether the reasonable suspicion test of Rule 2.1 has been met.

Considerations [pertaining to grounds for relief] are relative, and can be compared to a ladder with four rungs: at the highest level is certain knowledge, as in the case of an eyewitness to a crime; next is probable cause, less than a certainty, but enough to satisfy a prudent man; lower yet is a reasonable suspicion; and at the lowest level, a bare or imaginary suspicion, founded on nothing more than a hunch. 275 Ark. at 279, 630 S.W.2d at 7.

CASE NOTES

Accomplice.

Even though “mere presence” does not make one an accomplice under § 5-2-403, there can be enough presence to constitute probable cause to arrest. State v. Bell, 329 Ark. 422, 948 S.W.2d 557 (1997).

Arrest.

If a police officer has probable cause to arrest, failure to give an Ark. R. Crim. P. 2.3 warning is irrelevant. State v. Bell, 329 Ark. 422, 948 S.W.2d 557 (1997).

Factors Considered.

Under § 16-81-203, the trial court may consider several factors, including, but not limited to: (a) the demeanor of the suspect; (b) the gait and manner of the suspect; (c) any knowledge the officer may have of the suspect's background or character; and (d) any apparent effort of the suspect to avoid identification or confrontation by the police. Burris v. State, 330 Ark. 66, 954 S.W.2d 209 (1997).

Stop of defendant was lawful and complied with this rule, Ark. R. Crim. P. 2.2(a), and 14.1 (2010) as an officer arrived on the scene within 30 seconds of a police broadcast; defendant's was the only vehicle in the area; and the stop was brief, non-aggressive, and a minimal intrusion compared to the state's interest in investigating the crime. Penister v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 405 (2011).

In an aggravated robbery case, suppression of evidence was not warranted because there was a reasonable suspicion for stopping a vehicle; an officer spotted a car near the robbery that was seen at another robbery a few days earlier, and the owner of the car had been arrested previously for having a gun. Davis v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 658, 430 S.W.3d 190 (2013).

Noncompliance.

Detention without probable cause did not comply with requirements of this Rule. Rose v. State, 294 Ark. 279, 742 S.W.2d 901 (1988).

Reasonable Suspicion.

Where the suspects were followed a considerable distance and observed to be studying residences along the way as if to be "casing" them, and coupled to those circumstances were the knowledge and observations of the arresting officer that the area had been frequently burglarized, that the vehicle was unfamiliar to him, and that the occupants were unknown to him and were thought to have just emerged from a private driveway 45 minutes to an hour after the informant observed them "casing" the residence, such circumstances collectively established a reasonable suspicion warranting a stop and detention of the suspects. Tillman v. State, 275 Ark. 275, 630 S.W.2d 5 (1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1201, 103 S. Ct. 1185, 75 L. Ed. 2d 432 (1983).

The justification for investigative stops depends upon whether, under the totality of the circumstances, the police have specific, particularized, and articulable reasons indicating the person or vehicle may be involved in criminal activity. Reeves v. State, 20 Ark. App. 17, 722 S.W.2d 880 (1987).

Evidence sufficient to support reasonable suspicion to stop. Adams v. State, 26 Ark. App. 15, 758 S.W.2d 709 (1988), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1018, 109 S. Ct. 1136, 103 L. Ed. 2d 197 (1989); Coffman v. State, 26 Ark. App. 45, 759 S.W.2d 573 (1988); Folly v. State, 28 Ark. App. 98, 771 S.W.2d 306 (1989).

Reasonable suspicion is more than an imaginary or purely conjectural suspicion, but less than probable cause. Nottingham v. State, 29 Ark. App. 95, 778 S.W.2d 629 (1989); Jackson v. State, 34 Ark. App. 4, 804 S.W.2d 735 (1991).

Defendant's arrest was not pretextual where the arresting officer had been told that the defendant was a "possible suspect," where a witness told him that he thought defendant did it, and he wore thermal shirts like the one that was found and a spent shotgun shell was visible on the defendant's car seat. Ray v. State, 304 Ark. 489, 803 S.W.2d 894, cert. denied, 501 U.S. 1222, 111 S. Ct. 2837, 115 L. Ed. 2d 1005 (1991).

Reasonable suspicion entails a consideration of the total circumstances and the existence of particularized, specific reasons for a belief that the person may be engaged in criminal activity. Stout v. State, 304 Ark. 610, 804 S.W.2d 686 (1991).

A stop, based on a citizen's tip regarding criminal activity, and on policeman's observation that the vehicle was driving back through a neighborhood it had just left, was reasonable. Brooks v. State, 40 Ark. App. 208, 845 S.W.2d 530 (1993).

Considering the totality of the circumstances, the officers were justified in reasonably suspecting that defendant was involved in criminal activity. Roark v. State, 46 Ark. App. 49, 876 S.W.2d 596 (1994).

Officer's belief that a narcotics transaction was occurring was reasonable where it was based on his observations that a person was leaning into the driver's side of the window and quickly left the vehicle after the officer's arrival, that the defendant's vehicle was stopped on the wrong side of the street facing in the wrong direction, that the area was known for drug activity, and that it was after dark. Dickerson v. State, 51 Ark. App. 64, 909 S.W.2d 653 (1995).

Although the police acted reasonably in responding to a motel employee's report of a suspicious truck and in stopping and detaining the truck and its two occupants to determine whether the vehicle was stolen, the police lacked reasonable suspicion to conduct a search of the defendant passenger after they learned that the truck was not stolen when the driver produced papers verifying his recent purchase of it. Wimbley v. State, 68 Ark. App. 56, 3 S.W.3d 709 (1999).

Officers lacked reasonable suspicion to stop and detain defendant where the only factors tending to lead to reasonable suspicion for an investigatory stop under Ark. R. Crim. P. 3.1 were the time of day and the incidence of crime in the neighborhood, and where the officers did not observe any criminal activity or observe a suspicious transaction; the officers did not have reasonable suspicion, as defined by this rule, and they were not investigating a particular crime as required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 2.2. Davis v. State, 77 Ark. App. 310, 74 S.W.3d 671 (2002), rev'd, 351 Ark. 406, 94 S.W.3d 892 (2003).

Defendant's behavior gave rise to a reasonable suspicion where defendant and another man were in a high crime area known for drug activity, they engaged in an apparent hand-to-hand transaction, when they saw the police officers approach they separated, defendant appeared nervous, and the totality of the circumstances gave rise to a reasonable suspicion sufficient to justify making an investigatory stop. Davis v. State, 351 Ark. 406, 94 S.W.3d 892 (2003).

Although the searching officer testified that defendant did not present a danger to him because defendant was in the custody of a fellow officer, it was still possible that defendant could have broken away from the police and obtained access to any weapons in the truck; moreover, unlike Long and Reeves, defendant was stopped because his vehicle met the description of the police broadcast regarding shots being fired from the described vehicle and, thus, it was reasonable for the officer to search the passenger compartment of the automobile for the safety of the officers and the safety of others. Saulsberry v. State, 81 Ark. App. 419, 102 S.W.3d 907 (2003).

Police officer had reasonable suspicion to stop defendant's vehicle after he observed that the left taillight and brake light of the car was not functioning, which was a violation of § 27-36-216(a) and (b); however, after issuing defendant a citation, the officer did not have reasonable suspicion to further detain him and the subsequent search of defendant's car for drugs was not justified. Sims v. State, 356 Ark. 507, 157 S.W.3d 530 (2004).

Under this rule, "reasonable suspicion" means a suspicion based on facts or circumstances that give rise to more than a bare suspicion, not an imaginary or purely conjectural suspicion. Sims v. State, 356 Ark. 507, 157 S.W.3d 530 (2004).

Officer did not have reasonable suspicion to further detain defendant for a canine sniff after a traffic stop where the officer based the further detention on a one-way rental, a rental in another person's name, nervousness, and the presence of air freshener. Lilley v. State, 362 Ark. 436, 208 S.W.3d 785 (2005).

Police officer's continued detention of defendant for questioning and the officer's actions in running a drug dog around defendant's vehicle constituted an unreasonable, unlawful seizure because the legitimate purpose of the valid traffic stop was complete when the officer returned defendant's license and gave him a warning ticket; the officer did not have a reasonable, articulable suspicion, based on defendant's nervousness, defendant's possession of energy-drink cans and a rental car agreement signed by an absent third party, or the smell of air freshener in the car, that defendant was committing, had committed, or was about to commit a felony or misdemeanor involving danger to persons or property. Lilley v. State, 89 Ark. App. 43, 199 S.W.3d 692 (2004), superseded, 362 Ark. 436, 208 S.W.3d 785 (2005).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress marijuana seized after a search of his vehicle where the officer developed a reasonable suspicion that defendant was committing a felony, authorizing his continued detention of defendant; further, the officer detected a strong odor of fabric sheets, as opposed to air freshener, which the officer testified were often used to mask the odor of illegal controlled substances. Ayala v. State, 90 Ark. App. 13, 203 S.W.3d 659 (2005).

Defendant's motion to suppress evidence was properly denied in a drug case because an officer had authority to continue a detention under Ark. R. Crim. P. 3.1; there was reasonable suspicion based on defendant's nervousness, his unusual travel plans, and the strong smell of fabric softener in his car. Ayala v. State, 90 Ark. App. 13, 203 S.W.3d 659 (2005).

Defendant's drug convictions were improper as the police lacked reasonable suspicion to stop him based only on an informant's information that defendant had just bought a "large quantity" of matches; therefore, the initial stop and the subsequent search of defendant's home were illegal seizures. Summers v. State, 90 Ark. App. 25, 203 S.W.3d 638 (2005).

In a drug case, defendant's motion to suppress evidence should have been granted because the officer did not have reasonable suspicion to detain defendant after the issuance of a warning ticket; nervousness, as well as a new cell phone, atlases, fast food wrappers, and energy drinks in the car, were insufficient for reasonable suspicion. Meraz-Lopez v. State, 92 Ark. App. 157, 211 S.W.3d 564 (2005).

In a murder case, the trial court properly denied a motion to suppress because, although defendant was seized when she was told she could not leave the crime scene, in light of the remoteness of the crime scene and the circumstances existing at the time, requesting defendant to remain at the crime scene was reasonable, and defendant's statements were not incriminating as defendant said that she had last seen the victim the night before when he got into a van with some other people to go and drink beer. Flanagan v. State, 368 Ark. 143, 243 S.W.3d 866 (2006).

Counsel was not ineffective in relation to a motion to suppress evidence following a traffic stop because defendant flew to California, stayed a very short while, returned to Tennessee by rental car, the person who rented the car was not present, the rental agreement provided that the car was to be operated in California, only by the renter, and although the car was nearly new, the manufacturer provided jack and associated tools were lying on the floor of the car. Harrison v. State, 371 Ark. 474, 268 S.W.3d 324 (2007).

Motion to suppress evidence was improperly granted because, where police had known an informant to give reliable information in the past, and accurate information was received from the informant about defendant and his vehicle, officers had specific, particularized, and articulable reasons for thinking that defendant was involved in criminal activity, which justified a stop under Ark. R. Crim. P. 3.1. Because the officers had reasonable suspicion to stop and detain the vehicle, any pretext on the part of the officers was irrelevant; moreover, the officers did not need any additional reasonable suspicion to justify a canine sniff, which was not a search under the Fourth Amendment. State v. Harris, 372 Ark. 492, 277 S.W.3d 568 (2008).

Police officer's 6:00 p.m. stop after defendant backed defendant's truck into a department store's side lot in a two-three mile zone of recent armed robberies violated both Ark. R. Crim. P. 2.2 and 3.1 since there was clearly a Fourth Amendment seizure when the officer blocked defendant's truck with the patrol car, turned on the bright headlights, placed the spot light and take-down lights on defendant, and approached the truck with a gun in hand; further, defendant's mere presence in a high crime area did not rise to reasonable suspicion sufficient to authorize an investigatory stop. Cockrell v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 700, 369 S.W.3d 19 (2009), rev'd, 2010 Ark. 258, 370 S.W.3d 197 (2010).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress because an officer had reasonable suspicion that defendant was carrying a weapon and, therefore, a frisk of defendant was not an illegal search; the officer testified that defendant's shrugged shoulders, no eye contact, and tightening up indicated to the officer that defendant was lying about not having any weapons or anything illegal. Gilbert v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 857, 379 S.W.3d 774 (2010).

Officer had reasonable suspicion to stop and detain defendant based on a reliable confidential informant's information that he was going to deliver methamphetamine at a specified convenience store and defendant's arrival at the store, followed by the informant's call to defendant that he was at the wrong store and defendant's then leaving the first store and driving toward the other store. Owens v. Arkansas, 2011 Ark. App. 763, 387 S.W.3d 250 (2011).

Officer had reasonable suspicion to stop defendant and investigate drug-related criminal activity because a reliable known informant provided information about a delivery of methamphetamine. The fact that defendant arrived in a black car rather than a white car of the same make as described did not undermine reasonable suspicion. James v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 118, 390 S.W.3d 95 (2012).

Officer had reasonable suspicion for a stop because an informant told the police that a white male had bought five one-pound bags of iodine from the feed store just down the road from the police department, and he gave the police the vehicle's license-plate number. It was sufficient corroboration when the car with that license-plate number passed by the officers and its occupants were two white males. Ashley v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 131, 388 S.W.3d 914 (2012).

Court did not err by denying the motion to suppress; officer had reasonable suspicion that defendant was driving while intoxicated before he administered the PBT because defendant admitted he had been drinking, the officer saw defendant driving, and the officer noticed that defendant smelled of intoxicants; there was probable cause to arrest even without consideration of the PBT results because defendant told the officer that he had been drinking, his eyes were bloodshot and watery, and he smelled of intoxicants and failed two field-sobriety tests. Fisher v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 301, 427 S.W.3d 743 (2013).

Police officer properly conducted field sobriety tests of defendant because the officer's warrantless seizure of defendant was based on a reasonable suspicion that defendant had committed the offense of driving while intoxicated and defendant's consent was not required. The officer observed defendant's vehicle cross a center line of a roadway and noted that defendant's eyes were bloodshot and watery, defendant's actions were lethargic and exaggerated, and defendant's speech was slow and deliberate. Tiller v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 431, 439 S.W.3d 705 (2014).

At the time the officer made a stop of defendant's truck, a tip had been sufficiently corroborated to have given the officer reasonable suspicion, given that after receiving a call of a possible disturbance, the officer arrived on the scene two minutes later and verified the presence of two vehicles and that one was trying to leave, as the callers had indicated; the denial of defendant's motion to suppress was affirmed. Lee v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 691, 449 S.W.3d 709 (2014).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress evidence of her intoxication because the informant's tip about defendant's illegal behavior while driving was sufficiently reliable to give the trooper reasonable suspicion to pull defendant over on suspicion of driving while intoxicated; the informant's tip ranked high in reliability as the informant identified himself by name, phone number, and vehicle, the informant's report was based on his personal observation of illegal activity, and the trooper was not required to personally observe defendant's erratic driving in order to form a reasonable suspicion of drunken driving and to pull her over. Tankersley v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 37, 453 S.W.3d 699 (2015).

Circuit court erred in denying defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized following a stop of his vehicle because the police officer who made the stop was acting on a purely conjectural suspicion that defendant was engaged in illegal activity at the time of the stop; although the officer testified that he would conduct a stop in the event of a color discrepancy to determine whether the vehicle was stolen, he did not testify that, in his experience, car thieves would change the color of a vehicle after it had been stolen or that a discrepancy in color was indicative of any type of criminal conduct. Schneider v. State, 2015 Ark. 152, 459 S.W.3d 296 (2015).

In a drug case, a motion to suppress should have been granted because a canine sniff was conducted on a vehicle without reasonable suspicion for a continued detention after a traffic stop. Defendant picked up a package that had a strong odor of dryer sheets, the package contained a return address in California and was addressed to someone besides defendant, a package with the same return address had been previously intercepted by the post office, neither of the names on the package were associated with the respective street addresses, and defendant did not sign for the package with his own name. However, these facts did not give rise to anything more than bare suspicion. MacKintrush v. State, 2016 Ark. 14, 479 S.W.3d 14 (2016).

Circuit court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress evidence where an identified tipster provided specific information that defendant had beaten on his door, had been drinking, had a gun, and had left the tipster's residence in a tan Chevrolet truck, and thus, the officer had specific, particularized, and articulable reasons indicating that defendant may have been involved in criminal activity at the time he stopped defendant's vehicle. Casey v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 93, 483 S.W.3d 327 (2016).

In a constructive possession case, involving marijuana found in a non-owned vehicle that defendant was transporting along with other vehicles in his automobile-transport carrier, defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied because, inter alia, an officer had probable cause to stop defendant for failure to maintain proper control for crossing the fog line. Pokatilov v. State, 2017 Ark. 264, 526 S.W.3d 849 (2017).

Rule 2.2. Authority to request cooperation.

(a) A law enforcement officer may request any person to furnish information or otherwise cooperate in the investigation or prevention of crime. The officer may request the person to respond to questions, to appear at a police station, or to comply with any other reasonable request.

(b) In making a request pursuant to this rule, no law enforcement officer shall indicate that a person is legally obligated to furnish information or to otherwise cooperate if no such legal obligation exists. Compliance with the request for information or other cooperation hereunder shall not be regarded as involuntary or coerced solely on the ground that such a request was made by a law enforcement officer.

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Commentaries to Rules 2.2 and 2.3

Rules 2.2 and 2.3 require that "reasonable steps" be taken to advise persons from whom information is sought that there is no "legal obligation" to comply with a request for cooperation. Failure to advise may convert a stop into an arrest and trigger the need for Miranda warnings.

In Lascano v. State, 275 Ark. 346, 631 S.W.2d 258 (1982), appellant was taken by a deputy sheriff from her home to the sheriff's office where she was questioned as a suspect by an officer. In response to questions, she indicated that she had last seen the decedent on the preceding day at about the time she was killed. After making this disclosure, appellant was given Miranda warnings. She subsequently made incriminating statements which were admitted into evidence at the trial at which she was convicted of murder. The Arkansas Supreme Court affirmed the conviction, noting that the record did not disclose whether appellant was advised that she did not have to accompany the officers to the sheriff's office. The Court disposed of her contention that she had not been given adequate Rule 2.3 warnings by pointing out that because the issue had not been raised below it could not be pursued on appeal. The Court hinted that its decision might have been different if the evidence had shown that appellant was likely a suspect from the outset. Id. at 349, 631 S.W.2d at 259.

Chief Justice Adkisson, dissenting, noted that "evidence that this 'pick up' was, in effect, an arrest can be garnered from the failure of the deputies to advise her that she was not required to accompany them. Such a statement is required by Rule 2.3 . . ." Id. at 352, 631 S.W.2d at 261. See, also, Richardson v. State, 288 Ark. 407, 706 S.W.2d 363 (1986), where failure to advise under Rule 2.3 was considered evidence that an arrest was pretextual.

Rule 2.3 contains no sanction for its violation, but in Richardson suppression of evidence in the form of clothing seized pursuant to the appellant's incarceration was found necessary.

If one becomes a suspect after complying with a request to cooperate and then is given Miranda warnings, a subsequently given statement will be admissible. See, for example, Hayes v. State, 269 Ark. 47, 598 S.W.2d 91 (1980). It is clear, however, that failure to give the advice required by Rules 2.2(b) and 2.3 may result in suppression of an incriminating statement, even if the statement follows entirely adequate Miranda warnings. In Foster v. State, 285 Ark. 363, 687 S.W.2d 829 (1985), appellant was convicted of first degree murder at a trial at which a tape recorded statement was admitted into evidence. Four police officers took appellant from her home at 2:30 a.m., telling her that the prosecuting attorney wanted to speak with her. After arriving at the prosecutor's office she was questioned by officers, and a tape recorded statement of an accomplice was played to her. She was then advised of her rights, signed a form waiver, and gave a tape recorded statement.

The Arkansas Supreme Court, without citing Lascano or Hayes, observed: There are several legal mechanisms by which an individual can lawfully be picked up for questioning, but none of them were used in this case. . . . The entire procedure whereby Mrs. Foster's presence at the prosecutor's office was obtained was merely a guise to let the officers detain her and interrogate her. Based on the totality of the circumstances, the illegality of this procedure has impermissibly tainted Mrs. Foster's subsequent statement and it should have been suppressed. Id. at 367-68, 687 S.W.2d at 830-31.

Rule 2.2 Stop vs. Rule 3.1 Stop

Though under Rule 2.2 a law enforcement officer may have authority to interrupt the normal course of a citizen's activities long enough to request information in an effort to prevent or investigate "crime," a Rule 3.1 stop must be based upon a reasonable suspicion that the person stopped has committed or is about to commit a felony or a misdemeanor. In Meadows v. State, 269 Ark. 380, 602 S.W.2d 636 (1980), police officers waiting at an airport became suspicious when two men looked back at them after walking past them. The officers followed them, required them to produce identification, and arrested them when a check disclosed an outstanding felony arrest warrant for one of them. In suppressing evidence adduced at trial (heroin) on grounds that it was obtained after an unauthorized stop, the Court reasoned as follows: Here the officer's sole reason for approaching the two men was their conduct in looking back and in quickening their pace upon being followed. That conduct, however, could not possibly suggest that Meadows or Duncan had committed or were about to commit any particular type of felony or misdemeanor, which is necessarily what Rule 3.1 refers to. In fact, Bounds testified that he suspected that Meadows had committed "crime," but he was unable to be more specific. We must conclude that in the circumstances the officers were not authorized by Rule 3.1 to stop the two men. 269 Ark. at 382-83, 602 S.W.2d at 638 (Court's emphasis).

Prior decisions to the effect that an officer need not have in mind a specific crime committed at the time of an arrest were not distinguished or reconciled with the holding in Meadows, so it may be assumed that these cases have continuing validity.

Finally, it should be noted that the Court did not advert in Meadows to the Comment following Rule 2.1 stating that conduct, demeanor, gait, manner, and efforts to avoid confrontation by the police may be considered in applying the "reasonable suspicion" test. In fact, no case relying on Comment has been found, though consideration of these criteria might have led to different results in some cases. See, e.g., Van Patten v. State, 16 Ark. App. 83, 697 S.W.2d 919 (1985).

CASE NOTES

In General.

The approach of a citizen pursuant to a policeman's investigative law enforcement function must be reasonable under the existent circumstances and requires a weighing of the government's interest for the intrusion against the individual's right to privacy and personal freedom; to be considered are the manner and intensity of the interference, the gravity of the crime involved, and the circumstances attending the encounter. Baxter v. State, 274 Ark. 539, 626 S.W.2d 935, cert. denied, 457 U.S. 1118, 102 S. Ct. 2930, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1331 (1982); Blakemore v. State, 25 Ark. App. 335, 758 S.W.2d 425 (1988).

Applicability.

A situation may not involve the authority of a police officer to make an investigatory stop based on reasonable suspicion in accordance with Ark. R. Crim. P. 3.1, but may involve the question of the extent of permissible interruption a citizen must bear to accommodate a law officer who is investigating a crime under this rule. Blakemore v. State, 25 Ark. App. 335, 758 S.W.2d 425 (1988).

An interview does not come within the ambit of this rule when the defendant did not go to the police department as a result of a request by a member of that department, but rather on his own volition. Smith v. State, 321 Ark. 580, 906 S.W.2d 302 (1995).

When defendant stopped his vehicle, he did not do so after a "show of authority" by the officer, rather, it was a voluntary act such that there were no utterances or conduct by the officer that would have conveyed to a reasonable person that he was being ordered to restrict his movement; defendant was not "seized" through a "show of authority" and the appellate court was not required to consider whether the officer had the requisite grounds under either subsection (a) of this rule or Ark. R. Crim. P. 3.1 for stopping defendant's car. Simmons v. State, 83 Ark. App. 87, 118 S.W.3d 136 (2003).

This rule authorized an officer to approach defendant's car to investigate whether he was about to drive while intoxicated. Information provided by identified citizen-informants combined with defendant's obvious intoxication when the officer approached provided the reasonable suspicion that defendant was about to drive under the influence, allowing detention under Ark. R. Crim. P. 3.3. Stewart v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 9, 373 S.W.3d 387 (2010).

Defendant was detained under Ark. R. Crim. P. 3.1, and the stop was not voluntary under this rule, at the point that officers wearing guns and badges ordered defendant to step out of his car. Ashley v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 131, 388 S.W.3d 914 (2012).

As defendant abandoned the cocaine that he was carrying prior to being seized by a police officer, such that the evidence was not the fruit of a search, it was not necessary to determine whether his detention was illegal under this rule and Ark. R. Crim. P. 3.1 for purposes of suppression. Williams v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 337 (2012).

Invasion of Privacy.

Consent to an invasion of privacy must be proved by clear and positive testimony — a burden that is not met by showing only acquiescence to a claim of lawful authority. Meadows v. State, 269 Ark. 380, 602 S.W.2d 636 (1980).

Where shortly after a jewelry store was robbed a police officer stopped the defendant, in a public park near the store, to ask him if he had seen anyone running through the park, the initial nonaggressive stop of the defendant, which led to the subsequent discovery of the robbery suspects, was valid, since the manner and intensity of the interference with the defendant's right of privacy and freedom of movement was slight and minimal as compared to the governmental interest in investigating a serious felony offense. Baxter v. State, 274 Ark. 539, 626 S.W.2d 935, cert. denied, 457 U.S. 1118, 102 S. Ct. 2930, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1331 (1982); Blevins v. State, 310 Ark. 538, 837 S.W.2d 879 (1992).

Miranda Warnings.

A police officer investigating a crime may request a person to furnish information by answering questions and may stop and detain a suspect for 15 minutes or as is reasonable under the circumstances, where he reasonably suspects that person is involved in a crime. The Miranda warning is not required unless statements result from custodial interrogation, nor is it required for voluntary, spontaneous statements. Ward v. State, 308 Ark. 415, 827 S.W.2d 110, 831 S.W.2d 100, cert. denied, 506 U.S. 841, 113 S. Ct. 124, 121 L. Ed. 2d 79 (1992).

Defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied because, at the time defendant answered a question of an inspector for the U.S. Postal Inspection Service regarding what the delivered package contained, defendant was not entitled to Miranda warnings as he was not under formal arrest, and his freedom of movement was not restrained to the extent of a formal arrest; and, although the inspector did make the statement that defendant was not free to leave, a police investigator testified that defendant was free to leave and not answer the question; however, when defendant told the inspector and the investigator that the package contained marijuana, he was no longer free to leave. Gordin v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 61, 510 S.W.3d 271 (2017).

Permissible Encounter.

Denying defendant's motion to suppress his cell phone as evidence was not error where he was injured and climbing out of an upended vehicle when a police officer approached him, the officer knew that an individual matching defendant's description was seen in a vehicle matching defendant's car, defendant provided a phone number that was connected to the texts received by the missing victim, and thus, seizure of the phone was appropriate under Ark. R. Crim. P. 10.2. Lewis v. State, 2017 Ark. 211, 521 S.W.3d 466 (2017).

Because an officer testified that he was on extra patrol late at night in an area where there had been complaints of trespassing on private property, and he encountered two vehicles parked next to each other on the private gas-well property where the prior trespassing had been reported, the initial encounter was lawful under this rule; defendant was not on a public street but rather on private property where there had been complaints of trespassing, and the officer was investigating the potential crime of trespass. Dye v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 545, 564 S.W.3d 299 (2018).

Reasonable Suspicion.

Where the officer stopped defendant and he was aware that defendant had been identified as a suspect in a felony under investigation, under the totality of the circumstances, the trial court could properly find that the officer had adequate reason to stop defendant's vehicle under both Ark. R. Crim. P. 3.1 and this rule. McDaniel v. State, 20 Ark. App. 201, 726 S.W.2d 688, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 838, 108 S. Ct. 121, 98 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1987).

Evidence sufficient to support reasonable suspicion to stop. Adams v. State, 26 Ark. App. 15, 758 S.W.2d 709 (1988), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1018, 109 S. Ct. 1136, 103 L. Ed. 2d 197 (1989); Hammons v. State, 327 Ark. 520, 940 S.W.2d 424 (1997).

Officers lacked reasonable suspicion to stop and detain defendant where the only factors tending to lead to reasonable suspicion for an investigatory stop under Ark. R. Crim. P. 3.1 were the time of day and the incidence of crime in the neighborhood, and where the officers did not observe any criminal activity or observe a suspicious transaction; the officers did not have reasonable suspicion as defined by Ark. R. Crim. P. 2.1, and they were not investigating a particular crime as required by this rule. Davis v. State, 77 Ark. App. 310, 74 S.W.3d 671 (2002), rev'd, 351 Ark. 406, 94 S.W.3d 892 (2003).

In a murder case, the trial court properly denied a motion to suppress because, although defendant was seized when she was told she could not leave the crime scene, in light of the remoteness of the crime scene and the circumstances existing at the time, requesting defendant to remain at the crime scene was reasonable, and defendant's statements were not incriminating as defendant said that she had last seen the victim the night before when he got into a van with some other people to go and drink beer. Flanagan v. State, 368 Ark. 143, 243 S.W.3d 866 (2006).

Request for Identification.

Where there was nothing in the police officer's testimony to support a belief that the officer asked the defendant for identification in the course of a criminal investigation, the request made of the defendant for identification was improper under this rule since a police officer may not stop a citizen at any time, without reasonable grounds for suspicion, request identification, and arrest and search the citizen if his identity uncovers an outstanding felony warrant. Meadows v. State, 269 Ark. 380, 602 S.W.2d 636 (1980).

Defendant's nervous demeanor and the fact that he shifted his bag away from the drug dog were objective reasons for police officers to stop him and request his identification under this rule, even though they did not know at that point who defendant was. Jackson v. State, 359 Ark. 297, 197 S.W.3d 468 (2004), cert. denied, 544 U.S. 1039, 125 S. Ct. 2266, 161 L. Ed. 2d 1070 (2005).

Vehicle passenger, who was allegedly arrested by a state police officer for refusing to provide identification, stated a claim against the officer for a Fourth Amendment violation. There was no probable cause to arrest the passenger under § 5-54-102(a)(1) for obstructing the performance of a governmental function; the officer's authority under this rule to request information did not provide probable cause because there was no showing that the passenger had a duty under Arkansas law to furnish identification. Stufflebeam v. Harris, 521 F.3d 884 (8th Cir. 2008).

In a case where defendant was convicted of trafficking in methamphetamine and simultaneous possession of drugs and firearms, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress because the initial investigation and request for identification was justified as defendant's truck and 16-foot trailer filled with scrap metal was parked in an area routinely used for illegal dumping, and the detective was concerned with the amount of scrap metal in the trailer due to reports of recent thefts in the area. Martin v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 107, 513 S.W.3d 295 (2017).

Seizure.

This rule authorizes a police officer to undertake a nonseizure encounter, such as where an officer approaches an individual on a street and asks if he is willing to answer some questions; because the encounter is in a public place and is consensual, it does not constitute a "seizure" within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment.

Thompson v. State, 303 Ark. 407, 797 S.W.2d 450 (1990).

Officer's approach to investigate defendant's car, which was parked in a public place with its lights on and engine running, resulting in the defendant's arrest for driving while intoxicated, was a consensual encounter in public, and was not a "seizure" within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment. Thompson v. State, 303 Ark. 407, 797 S.W.2d 450 (1990).

A "seizure" occurred when the officer ordered defendant to step from his vehicle, so that it was an investigatory stop under Ark. R. Crim. P. 3.1, and not a request under this rule for information. Frette v. State, 58 Ark. App. 81, 947 S.W.2d 15 (1997), rev'd, Frette v. City of Springdale, 331 Ark. 103, 959 S.W.2d 734 (1998).

Although the "knock-and-talk" procedure has been upheld as a consensual encounter and a valid means to request consent to search a house, the officers failed to provide clear and positive testimony that any type of consent, verbal or otherwise, was obtained by the officers before they entered defendant's house; thus, the officer's warrantless entry into defendant's home constituted a Fourth Amendment violation. Latta v. State, 350 Ark. 488, 88 S.W.3d 833 (2002).

Stop Held Improper.

Where contraband was seized from a vehicle belonging to a missing girl's boyfriend after police stopped the vehicle looking for the girl, the evidence was properly suppressed pursuant to this rule because the stop of defendant's vehicle was not proper under this rule; the intrusion into defendant's privacy was unreasonable when weighed against the governmental interest of locating a missing girl, where no allegations of criminal activity were made. State v. McFadden, 327 Ark. 16, 938 S.W.2d 797 (1997).

Where police officer requested that defendant approach his patrol car simply because she was standing on the corner in a high crime area late in the evening, and the officer was not investigating a nearby crime or a tip from an informant at the time of the encounter, the encounter was impermissible under this rule. Stewart v. State, 332 Ark. 138, 964 S.W.2d 793 (1998).

Stop was not justified where there was no testimony that the officer was investigating or preventing a crime when she encountered defendant, therefore, the stop and search was illegal and defendant's motion to suppress the evidence of the cocaine and the firearm should have been granted. Jennings v. State, 69 Ark. App. 50, 10 S.W.3d 105 (2000).

Police could not require defendant to identify himself, under this rule, when they were not investigating a particular crime, but were on routine patrol. Jefferson v. State, 76 Ark. App.

Where police officer was not investigating a crime or a tip from an informant at the time of the encounter, the officer's stop and pat-down search of defendant, who was standing near a "No Loitering" sign in a parking lot in a high crime area with several other men, was impermissible and could not be justified under the rule. Anderson v. State, 79 Ark. App. 286, 86 S.W.3d 403 (2002).

This rule did not provide a basis for defendant's stop where the detective was not tipped off that defendant was arriving at the bus station, and detective's presence at the station was for the purpose of routine monitoring activities; the detective also did not state that he was investigating any particular crime and defendant's conduct was not indicative of any criminal activity. Jackson v. State, 86 Ark. App. 39, 158 S.W.3d 715, overruled in part, 359 Ark. 297, 197 S.W.3d 468 (2004).

Where an officer drove past a closed gas station where he observed two vehicles in the parking lot, there were no signs of criminal activity, no moving violations, nor any defective equipment on the vehicles; nonetheless, he stopped one vehicle, questioned the driver, asked him to get out of the car, and seized marijuana from the vehicle and defendant's person. Because the police officer was not investigating a crime, the initial encounter was not authorized by this rule; therefore, the trial court erred by denying defendant's motion to suppress the evidence. Dosia v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 429, 318 S.W.3d 583 (2009).

Police officer's 6:00 p.m. stop after defendant backed defendant's truck into a department store's side lot in a two-three mile zone of recent armed robberies violated both this rule and Ark. R. Crim. P. 3.1 since there was clearly a Fourth Amendment seizure when the officer blocked defendant's truck with the patrol car, turned on the bright headlights, placed the spot light and take-down lights on defendant, and approached the truck with a gun in hand; further, defendant's mere presence in a high crime area did not rise to reasonable suspicion sufficient to authorize an investigatory stop. Cockrell v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 700, 369 S.W.3d 19 (2009), rev'd, 2010 Ark. 258, 370 S.W.3d 197 (2010).

Stop Held Proper.

The initial encounter of defendant and the police was appropriate under this rule considering the manner of the interference, the gravity of the crimes in the area, and the circumstances of the encounter. Stewart v. State, 59 Ark. App. 77, 953 S.W.2d 599 (1997).

Where officers were executing a search warrant and had found evidence of a methamphetamine lab when defendant came onto property, officers were permitted to approach defendant to ask for identification and inquire about the purpose of his visit. Sanders v. State, 76 Ark. App. 104, 61 S.W.3d 871 (2001), cert. denied, 537 U.S. 815, 123 S. Ct. 82, 154 L. Ed. 2d 19 (2002).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress statements she made to police during their investigation of her landlord's death where the officers made it reasonably clear to defendant that she was not legally obligated to furnish information or otherwise cooperate; the officers made it clear that she could go to the sheriff's office at her own convenience. Wilson v. State, 364 Ark. 550, 222 S.W.3d 171 (2006).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress a crack pipe that was found in a vehicle in which he was a passenger because the officer's initial approach of the vehicle was valid as the vehicle was sitting in a parking lot early in the morning; although defendant might have been illegally seized when the officer ordered him out of the vehicle, the driver of the vehicle gave consent to the vehicle search independent of any violation of defendant's rights, thus, defendant lacked standing to challenge the vehicle search. Swan v. State, 94 Ark. App. 115, 226 S.W.3d 6 (2006).

Based on the totality of the circumstances, an investigating officer did not violate this rule when he asked defendant to show him a robbery/murder victim's car without informing defendant that he was not required to assist him; after learning that defendant had recently bought the car, the officer had an articulable suspicion that defendant had committed a crime and, at that point, was justified in detaining defendant for a reasonable amount of time. In fact, defendant agreed to show the officer where the car was parked and walked freely around the area of the victim's car until he was placed under arrest; although the officer was in uniform, he did not show defendant his weapon, and he did not tell defendant that he was required to assist him. Boldin v. State, 373 Ark. 295, 283 S.W.3d 565 (2008).

Officer's initial approach to investigate defendant's vehicle was lawful pursuant to this rule; defendant's movement in reaching down when the officer shined lights on defendant, combined with the fact that the vehicle was backed into a parking spot in a dark area of the parking lot, in an area that recently had a high incidence of armed robberies, provided the officer reasonable suspicion that justified detaining defendant. Cockrell v. State, 2010 Ark. 258, 370 S.W.3d 197 (2010).

Where, at 7:25 a.m., officers observed defendant walking through a backyard on private property near a school, the officers did not violate subsection (a) of this rule by calling defendant to their vehicle and asking defendant's name. Fowler v. State, 2010 Ark. 431, 371 S.W.3d 677 (2010), cert. denied, 565 U.S. 816, 132 S. Ct. 95, 181 L. Ed. 2d 24 (2011).

Although an officer did not explicitly inform defendant that he was not required to go to the police station and make a statement, the circumstances of the officer's request, including allowing defendant to drive there in his own vehicle, showed that the officer made clear that defendant was not required to go, pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 2.3. Therefore, his incriminating statements regarding the rape of his seven-year-old daughter were properly admitted. Charland v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 4, 380 S.W.3d 465 (2011), writ denied, 2013 Ark. 452 (2013).

Stop of defendant was lawful and complied with subsection (a) of this rule, and Ark. R. Crim. P. 2.1 and 14.1, as an officer arrived on the scene within 30 seconds of a police broadcast; defendant's was the only vehicle in the area; and the stop was brief, non-aggressive, and a minimal intrusion compared to the state's interest in investigating the crime. Penister v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 405 (2011).

Subpoena Power.

Use of the prosecutor's subpoena power to obtain the presence of a witness for questioning by a police officer, absent the prosecutor, was illegal. Duckett v. State, 268 Ark. 687, 600 S.W.2d 18 (Ct. App. 1980).

Where prosecutor's subpoena power was used to give police officers a means not only of getting on defendant's property but to force defendant to talk to police officers, the abuse resulted in unlawful seizure of evidence which was properly excluded. State v. Shepherd, 303 Ark. 447, 798 S.W.2d 45 (1990).

Rule 2.3. Warning to persons asked to appear at a police station.

If a law enforcement officer acting pursuant to this rule requests any person to come to or remain at a police station, prosecuting attorney's office or other similar place, he shall take such steps as are reasonable to make clear that there is no legal obligation to comply with such a request.

CASE NOTES

In General.

This rule requires that an officer inform a person he is free not to accompany the officer if the officer does not have a warrant. Burnett v. State, 295 Ark. 401, 749 S.W.2d 308 (1988); Johnson v. State, 325 Ark. 197, 926 S.W.2d 837 (1996).

This rule does not provide that a person must repeatedly be advised that he has no legal obligation to come to the police station each time he agrees to appear for an interview or questioning. Johnson v. State, 325 Ark. 197, 926 S.W.2d 837 (1996).

The Supreme Court will no longer interpret this rule to require a verbal warning of freedom to leave as a bright-line rule for determining whether a seizure of the person has occurred under the Fourth Amendment and whether a statement to police officers must be suppressed; rather, a verbal admonition of freedom to leave will be one factor to be considered in an analysis of the total circumstances surrounding compliance with this rule. State v. Bell, 329 Ark. 422, 948 S.W.2d 557 (1997).

Appellate Review.

Although defendant might have been barred on remand from arguing that there had been a violation of this rule because he had failed to argue that point in his first appeal, the state's argument was not preserved for appeal because it was not raised in the trial court; the law-of-the-case defense cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. State v. Bell, 329 Ark. 422, 948 S.W.2d 557 (1997).

The court would reject the contention that the trial court should have suppressed evidence seized at the defendants' apartment and statements made by one defendant at city hall on the basis that officers violated the rule by failing to inform the defendant that he was under no obligation to accompany them to the police station to give a statement since the officers had probable cause to arrest the defendant based on strong medical evidence that he had physically abused his infant child. Efurd v. State, 334 Ark. 596, 976 S.W.2d 928 (1998).

Applicability.

An interview does not come within the ambit of this rule when the defendant did not go to the police department as a result of a request by a member of that department, but rather of his own volition. Smith v. State, 321 Ark. 580, 906 S.W.2d 302 (1995).

This rule did not apply where police arrested and detained defendant for driving without insurance and without a valid driver's license, even though the arrest was a pretext to apprehend defendant for questioning about an unrelated criminal charge, because a valid and objective reason existed for the arrest. Brown v. State, 54 Ark. App. 44, 924 S.W.2d 251 (1996).

Compliance.

Trial court did not err by denying defendant's motion to suppress his statements where, although defendant was fourteen years old, a seventh-grade drop-out, and had a functional IQ of 68 or 69, there was testimony indicating that the officers informed defendant that he did not have to accompany them to the police station and defendant's mother was present when he signed the Miranda waiver form. Otis v. State, 364 Ark. 151, 217 S.W.3d 839 (2005).

Although an officer did not explicitly inform defendant that he was not required to go to the police station and make a statement, the circumstances of the officer's request, including allowing defendant to drive there in his own vehicle, showed that the officer made clear that defendant was not required to go, pursuant to this rule. Therefore, his incriminating statements regarding the rape of his seven-year-old daughter were properly admitted. Charland v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 4, 380 S.W.3d 465 (2011), writ denied, 2013 Ark. 452 (2013).

Denial of defendant's motion to suppress evidence derived from the saliva sample and his statement given on November 25, 2008 was appropriate because the officers satisfied this rule's requirement to make it clear that he was not legally obligated to comply with their request to accompany them to the station. Vance v. State, 2011 Ark. 243, 383 S.W.3d 317 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress a statement to the police because although an officer could not say whether the officer complied with the rule, the officer's testimony indicated that the officer took steps to make it reasonably clear to defendant that defendant had no obligation to comply with the request to talk; defendant was not handcuffed or coerced in any way. Green v. State, 2012 Ark. 347, 423 S.W.3d 62 (2012).

Construction.

When interpreting this rule in deciding whether a seizure of a person has transpired, the Arkansas Supreme Court will be following United States v. Mendenhall, 446 U.S. 544 (1980); to the extent that Arkansas decisions such as Martin v. State, 328 Ark. 420, 944 S.W.2d 512 (1997), state a contrary interpretation, the Supreme Court will henceforth retreat from those interpretations. State v. Bell, 329 Ark. 422, 948 S.W.2d 557 (1997).

The question of whether a person's consent to accompany the police was voluntary or the product of duress or coercion should be determined by the totality of the circumstances. Wilson v. State, 364 Ark. 550, 222 S.W.3d 171 (2006).

Evidence Illegally Obtained.

The arrest for public intoxication was a pretext for conducting the search of a person who was a suspect in a murder and arson investigation, where the search had no relation to the nature and purpose of the arrest, each of the law enforcement officials testified that the defendant could not have left the police station because he was a suspect in the murder and arson investigation even at the time he was brought to the police station, the officers failed to comply with this rule, and there was a violation of the detention limit posed by Ark. R. Crim. P. 3.1. Therefore, the evidence obtained pursuant to the arrest for public intoxication had to be suppressed. Richardson v. State, 288 Ark. 407, 706 S.W.2d 363 (1986).

Noncompliance.

Where the detectives did not comply with this rule, there was a seizure of the defendant and a violation of his rights under the U.S. Const. Amend. 4. Hart v. State, 312 Ark. 600, 852 S.W.2d 312 (1993), overruled, State v. Bell, 329 Ark. 422, 948 S.W.2d 557 (1997).

Error associated with a violation of this rule held harmless. State v. Bell, 329 Ark. 422, 948 S.W.2d 557 (1997).

Probable Cause.

Where defendant was put in the back seat of a state police car from which he could not get out unless the door was opened from the outside, and detained for longer than 15 minutes, and taken to the sheriff's office, but not told that he was not required to go, this rule and Ark. R. Crim. P. 3.1 were not violated because based on the information that the officers had at the time of the stop, indicating the defendant was an accomplice to armed robbery, it was reasonable that the defendant was held longer than 15 minutes and the officers had probable cause to arrest the defendant for being an accomplice to the armed robbery of the bank before he was put in the police car. Beebe v. State, 303 Ark. 691, 799 S.W.2d 547 (1990).

If a police officer has probable cause to arrest, failure to give a warning under this rule is irrelevant. State v. Bell, 329 Ark. 422, 948 S.W.2d 557 (1997).

Search and Seizure.

This rule does not require a verbal warning of freedom to leave as a bright-line rule for determining whether a seizure of the person has occurred under the Fourth Amendment and whether a statement to police officers must be suppressed; courts view a verbal admonition of freedom to leave as one factor to be considered in our analysis of the total circumstances surrounding compliance with this rule. Shields v. State, 348 Ark. 7, 70 S.W.3d 392 (2002).

Statements Involuntary.

Where the defendant did not volunteer for questioning but only went to the prosecutor's office because four officers came to her house and took her there, there was no compliance with this rule and the defendant's statement taken at the prosecutor's office was excluded. Foster v. State, 285 Ark. 363, 687 S.W.2d 829 (1985).

Statements Voluntary.

The state met its burden of proving that the statements of defendant were voluntary, since the interrogation was not rendered coercive by reason of the fact that the officers took no steps to make it clear to defendant that he had no legal obligation to accompany them to the sheriff's office, or by reason of the presence of his parole officer, who had, on a previous occasion, caused defendant's apartment to be searched under a "white warrant." Pace v. State, 265 Ark. 712, 580 S.W.2d 689 (1979).

The court was correct in refusing to suppress police officer's testimony about defendant's statement to him where there was probable cause to arrest defendant at the time the statement was made and defendant had been informed of his rights when he volunteered his statement. Kiefer v. State, 297 Ark. 464, 762 S.W.2d 800 (1989).

This rule does not require an explicit statement that one is not required to accompany the police, rather, the police only need to take such steps as are reasonable to make clear that there is no legal obligation to comply with the request to come to the police station; where an explicit statement was made to defendant that he was not under arrest and was free to leave, this advice by law enforcement adequately supported the state's position that it was clear to defendant that he was not required to go to the sheriff's department and, thus, defendant's subsequent confession was admissible. Anderson v. State, 357 Ark. 180, 163 S.W.3d 333 (2004).

Rape conviction was affirmed where police complied with this rule by making it reasonably clear to defendant that he was only wanted for questioning regarding allegations of abuse of his granddaughter and he was Mirandized before the interviews; because defendant's reference to needing an attorney was ambiguous, police did not violate his right to counsel by continuing to question him and, thus, his confession was voluntary. Baker v. State, 363 Ark. 339, 214 S.W.3d 239 (2005).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress statements she made to police during their investigation of her landlord's death where the officers made it reasonably clear to defendant that she was not legally obligated to furnish information or otherwise cooperate; the officers made it clear that she could go to the sheriff's office at her own convenience. Wilson v. State, 364 Ark. 550, 222 S.W.3d 171 (2006).

In defendant's murder case, the trial court properly denied a motion to suppress statements because, although defendant might have been a suspect at the time she made the statements, she was asked, not ordered, to go the police station, she was not handcuffed, and she was described as being very cooperative; further, an officer testified that defendant did not appear to be intoxicated when she spoke to him, the interval of time between the last Miranda warning and the giving of the statement did not render the confession involuntary, and defendant's question — "do I need to call an attorney" — was an ambiguous request for counsel. Flanagan v. State, 368 Ark. 143, 243 S.W.3d 866 (2006).

Subpoena Power.

Use of the prosecutor's subpoena power to obtain the presence of a witness for questioning by a police officer, absent the prosecutor, was illegal. Duckett v. State, 268 Ark. 687, 600 S.W.2d 18 (Ct. App. 1980).

Where prosecutor's subpoena power was used to give police officers a means not only of getting on defendant's property but to force defendant to talk to police officers, the abuse resulted in unlawful seizure of evidence which was properly excluded. State v. Shepherd, 303 Ark. 447, 798 S.W.2d 45 (1990).

RULE 3.

DETENTION WITHOUT ARREST

Rule

Rule 3.1. Stopping and detention of person: time limit.

Rule 3.2. Advice as to reason for detention.

Rule 3.3. Use of force.

Rule 3.4. Search for weapons.

Rule 3.5. Stop of witness to crime.

Rule 3.1. Stopping and detention of person: time limit.

A law enforcement officer lawfully present in any place may, in the performance of his duties, stop and detain any person who he reasonably suspects is committing, has committed, or is about to commit (1) a felony, or (2) a misdemeanor involving danger of forcible injury to persons or of appropriation of or damage to property, if such action is reasonably necessary either to obtain or verify the identification of the person or to determine the lawfulness of his conduct. An officer acting under this rule may require the person to remain in or near such place in the officer's presence for a period of not more than fifteen (15) minutes or for such time as is reasonable under the circumstances. At the end of such period the person detained shall be released without further restraint, or arrested and charged with an offense.

Publisher's Notes.

A proposed amendment to Rules 3.1 was published by the Supreme Court of Arkansas on June 27, 2002, for comment from the bench and bar. The proposed amendment to Rule 3.1 would expand the scope of the rule to allow a stop and detention for any criminal offense.

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Commentary to Rule 3.1

Several cases interpreting this rule are discussed in the supplementary commentary to Rules 2.2 and 2.3. For cases in which the Arkansas Supreme Court has arrived at different conclusions based upon the adequacy of "specific, particularized, and articulable reasons" for believing that a person has been involved in criminal activity, see Hill v. State, 275 Ark. 71, 628 S.W.2d 285 (1982). Compare, Reeves v. State, 20 Ark. App. 17, 722 S.W.2d 880 (1987) with Van Patten v. State, 16 Ark. App. 83, 697 S.W.2d 919 (1985).

CASE NOTESApplicability.

A situation may not involve the authority of a police officer to make an investigatory stop based on reasonable suspicion in accordance with this rule, but may involve the question of the extent of permissible interruption a citizen must bear to accommodate a law officer who is investigating a crime under Ark. R. Crim. P. 2.2. Blakemore v. State, 25 Ark. App. 335, 758 S.W.2d 425 (1988).

Where defendant threw the cocaine on the ground before he was seized, he abandoned any reasonable expectation of privacy to the cocaine and the contraband was not the product of a seizure; thus, the appellate court was not required to determine whether the officer's detention of defendant was illegal under this rule. Simmons v. State, 83 Ark. App. 87, 118 S.W.3d 136 (2003).

In a DWI case where the trial court denied defendant's motion to dismiss, finding that the officer had jurisdiction to arrest under this rule, as the motion to dismiss was not the proper mechanism for challenging the arrest, the appellate court did not need to decide the jurisdictional issue. Weaver v. State, 103 Ark. App. 201, 287 S.W.3d 649 (2008).

Where a confidential informant appeared at a drug dealer's home to buy drugs, the drug dealer's wife contacted defendant, and defendant immediately left his home carrying a package, drove to the dealer's home, entered the home without knocking, and left a short time thereafter without the package, the police had probable cause to effect a warrantless arrest of defendant because the evidence essentially established a call by a known drug dealer requesting the delivery of narcotics from a supplier, immediate movement by a known drug supplier who was the suspected supplier, direct travel by that supplier to the source of the supply request, and the apparent delivery of a package. While this proof may not have been sufficient to convict defendant, it provided sufficient probable cause to make an arrest, and the court rejected defendant's argument that the evidence only supported an investigatory stop pursuant to this rule. Pullan v. State, 104 Ark. App. 78, 289 S.W.3d 180 (2008).

As defendant abandoned the cocaine that he was carrying prior to being seized by a police officer, such that the evidence was not the fruit of a search, it was not necessary to determine whether his detention was illegal under Ark. R. Crim. P. 2.2 and this rule for purposes of suppression. Williams v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 337 (2012).

Custodial Interrogation.

Subsequent detention for custodial interrogation at the police station is not authorized by this rule because this rule, by its plain language, does not contemplate the detention of persons at one place and a subsequent detention at a police station. Addison v. State, 298 Ark. 1, 765 S.W.2d 566 (1989), overruled, State v. Bell, 329 Ark. 422, 948 S.W.2d 557 (1997).

Police officer's initial inquiry of whether defendant had any weapons on his person was not the result of a custodial interrogation and did not therefore require a Miranda warning where the officer's undisputed testimony established that he asked the initial question as defendant approached his vehicle, before placing defendant in handcuffs, and that he did issue a Miranda warning to defendant after placing him in handcuffs. Fowler v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 232, 459 S.W.3d 837 (2015).

Detention.

Trial court erred in denying defendant's motion to suppress because the stop was concluded before the deputy deployed his K-9, and the deputy did not have reasonable suspicion to continue the stop upon its conclusion; when the deputy finished writing the ticket and had no other business pertaining to the traffic stop itself, the traffic stop was concluded, and reasonable suspicion was required to continue detaining defendant. Dumond v. State, 2022 Ark. App. 292, 647 S.W.3d 9 (2022).

Discovery of contraband was not fruit of detention, legal or otherwise, where, when the defendant discarded the contraband, there was no indication that the officers had activated the siren or had turned on the flashing lights, or had engaged in any other activity which would lead a reasonable person to believe that he was not free to leave. Rabun v. State, 36 Ark. App. 237, 821 S.W.2d 62 (1991).

Not all personal intercourse between policemen and citizens involves a detention under § 16-81-204(a) or this rule. Phillips v. State, 53 Ark. App. 36, 918 S.W.2d 721 (1996).

Whether a person has been detained depends on whether, in view of all of the circumstances surrounding the incident, a reasonable person would have believed that he was not free to leave. Phillips v. State, 53 Ark. App. 36, 918 S.W.2d 721 (1996).

It is not a detention for a police officer to approach a car parked in a public place to determine whether there is anything wrong; thus, where officer approached van that was stopped and appeared to have a problem, there was no detention under § 16-81-204(a) or this rule until after the van window was rolled down, officer smelled marijuana, and then asked for defendant's driver's license. Phillips v. State, 53 Ark. App. 36, 918 S.W.2d 721 (1996).

A "seizure" occurred when the officer ordered defendant to step from his vehicle, so that it was an investigatory stop under this rule, and not an Ark. R. Crim. P. 2.2 request for information. Frette v. State, 58 Ark. App. 81, 947 S.W.2d 15 (1997), rev'd, Frette v. City of Springdale, 331 Ark. 103, 959 S.W.2d 734 (1998).

Police officer's detention and questioning of defendant for about 30 minutes was reasonable as much of this time was spent attempting to verify false identification given by defendant. Townsend v. State, 76 Ark. App. 371, 66 S.W.3d 666, overruled in part, 350 Ark. 129, 85 S.W.3d 526 (2002).

Search of a vehicle was proper because an officer determined that he was going to give defendant a warning for a traffic violation, he asked defendant for consent to search, and the passenger, whose name was on the car rental agreement, consented to the search 16 minutes after the stop was initiated. As of the point in time when the passenger gave his consent to the search, the officer had neither returned defendant's identification papers to him nor given him a copy of the warning. Yarbrough v. State, 370 Ark. 31, 257 S.W.3d 50 (2007).

Defendant was detained under this rule, and the stop was not voluntary under Ark. R. Crim. P. 2.2, at the point that officers wearing guns and badges ordered defendant to step out of his car. Ashley v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 131, 388 S.W.3d 914 (2012).

Dog's alert constituted reasonable suspicion for a further detention and a search because the officer demonstrated a profound alert; after conducting the free-air sniff, the dog began pulling him toward the front-passenger side of the vehicle, to the point the dog was almost choking, and he exhibited excessive tail wagging and deep, labored breathing. At one point, the dog was trying to get in through the window, which was unusual behavior for him, and at another point, the dog stood and stared at the door, a sign of an indication. Jackson v. State, 2013 Ark. 201, 427 S.W.3d 607 (2013).

Where defendant appealed his convictions for violating §§ 5-64-443(c) and 5-64-420(a)(2), circuit court's decision to deny his motion to suppress the evidence was not clearly against the preponderance of the evidence. Because he met the officers on his front porch with a rifle, an officer reasonably detained and frisked him to ensure the officers' safety, and the contraband was discovered when, after the valid frisk, defendant voluntarily pulled the contraband out of his pocket and showed it to the officer. King v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 81, 432 S.W.3d 127 (2014).

In a driving while intoxicated case, defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied because a law enforcement officer rightly exercised his function as a community caretaker under the United States Constitution and opened a car door to check on defendant; the officer observed defendant in the front seat, unconscious, and with the motor running. Upon opening the door, the officer smelled an odor of alcohol; therefore, the officer was permitted to detain defendant for further investigation. Szabo v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 512, 470 S.W.3d 696 (2015).

Officer's exploration of defendant's criminal past and the subsequent search of his person went far beyond the scope of any administrative search conducted for the purpose of investigating defendant's compliance with hunting laws. Facts presented did not give rise to reasonable suspicion allowing officers to conduct a criminal investigation, as the officer did not develop reasonable suspicion that defendant had committed a crime prior to the completion of their investigation into defendant's compliance with hunting laws. Pickle v. State, 2015 Ark. 286, 466 S.W.3d 410 (2015).

Defendant was observed by a store manager stuffing merchandise down his pants, then leaving the store, and this gave rise to a reasonable suspicion on which the officer could detain defendant under this rule, and also gave rise to the statutory shoplifting presumption; the officer testified that he detained defendant until after the store manager completed an affidavit and did not search him until afterwards, and the detention was proper under § 5-36-116. Wells v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 174, 518 S.W.3d 106 (2017).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress because under the totality of the circumstances, defendant's continued detention was not unlawful; the officer testified that he knew defendant, that he had received information from a reliable informant that defendant had drugs in the vehicle, and that defendant's demeanor continued to make him nervous, and defendant's fiancée stated to the officer that defendant placed a plastic bag under his seat after he had entered her vehicle. Rainey v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 427, 528 S.W.3d 288 (2017).

Under the totality of the circumstances, the officers' effectuation of a stop with blue lights without reasonable suspicion constituted an illegal seizure. The record indicated that when defendant became aware of the blue lights behind him, he turned to look back, shook his head, and took a couple of steps before turning and stopping in front of the officers' vehicle, and he did not attempt to flee; although defendant put his hand in his pants pocket, which led one of the officers to draw his weapon, the illegal seizure had already occurred the moment the officers engaged their patrol cruiser's blue lights and approached defendant on the side of the highway without reasonable suspicion. Taff v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 488, 562 S.W.3d 877 (2018).

Duty to Investigate.

Trial court believed an officer's testimony that the encounter was no more than the officer trying to direct traffic and appellants vehicle on a congested and dark street amidst a crime scene where officers' safety was at issue, and while protecting the officers was a specific explanation for knocking on appellant's window, the odor of intoxicants and his appearance gave the required suspicion for an investigation into a potential driving while intoxicated offense; under this rule the officer then had a duty to investigate further because it is unlawful for any person who is intoxicated to operate or be in actual physical contact of a motor vehicle. Ward v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 649 (2012).

Judicial Review.

Judgment had to be affirmed because defendant failed to challenge the lower court's ruling that the stop was a valid stop under the rule, and he made no mention of the rule in his argument, which concentrated on whether the Fourth and Fifth Amendments were violated; this was a separate argument from the lower court's ruling under the rule. Barber v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 120 (2015).

Justification for Stop.

The justification for the investigative stop depends upon whether, under the totality of the circumstances, the police have specific, particularized, and articulable reasons indicating the person or vehicle may be involved in criminal activity. Hill v. State, 275 Ark. 71, 628 S.W.2d 284, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 882, 103 S. Ct. 180, 74 L. Ed. 2d 147 (1982); Miller v. State, 21 Ark. App. 10, 727 S.W.2d 393 (1987); Kilpatrick v. State, 322 Ark. 728, 912 S.W.2d 917 (1995).

Where the defendant was stopped while driving an automobile which closely matched the detailed description given in a police broadcast of an automobile that was involved in a murder and robbery in a nearby community, and the defendant fit the description given of the perpetrator of those crimes, the investigatory stop of the defendant's vehicle was justified and the limited search of the automobile for weapons by the police was reasonable; therefore, a pistol seized from under the driver's seat was admissible. Hill v. State, 275 Ark. 71, 628 S.W.2d 284, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 882, 103 S. Ct. 180, 74 L. Ed. 2d 147 (1982).

Since defendant's parked car created a traffic hazard, the officers had specific, particular, and articulable reasons to suspect that a misdemeanor involving danger of injury to persons or property was being committed by the defendant; thus, the stop was reasonable under this rule and the evidence of driving while intoxicated was admissible. Dacus v. State, 16 Ark. App. 222, 699 S.W.2d 417 (1985).

Where felonies or crimes involving a threat to public safety are concerned, the government's interest in solving the crime and promptly detaining the suspect outweighs the individual's right to be free from a brief stop and detention. Reeves v. State, 20 Ark. App. 17, 722 S.W.2d 880 (1987); Nottingham v. State, 29 Ark. App. 95, 778 S.W.2d 629 (1989).

Where a person has not been arrested, his detention for investigation of driving while intoxicated is expressly authorized by this rule. Arndt v. State, 26 Ark. App. 243, 763 S.W.2d 98 (1989).

It is without question that DWI under § 5-65-103 carries with it the danger of forcible injury to persons as required by this rule. Nottingham v. State, 29 Ark. App. 95, 778 S.W.2d 629 (1989); Wright v. State, 327 Ark. 558, 940 S.W.2d 432 (1997).

The fact that the conduct observed by an officer is consistent with innocence will not preclude a legitimate stop. Jackson v. State, 34 Ark. App. 4, 804 S.W.2d 735 (1991).

Although it was quite clear that the police officer's primary purpose in stopping defendant was to search for drugs, the arrest was not tainted by this fact since the arrest would have occurred in any event; the test is whether a “reasonable officer” would have made the traffic stop — not whether this particular officer would have made the stop absent his ulterior motive. Miller v. State, 44 Ark. App. 112, 868 S.W.2d 510 (1993), cert. denied, 511 U.S. 1128, 114 S. Ct. 2137, 128 L. Ed. 2d 866 (1994).

An officer does not have to witness the violation of a statute in order to stop a suspect. Piercefield v. State, 316 Ark. 128, 871 S.W.2d 348 (1994).

Where police officer asked defendant to approach his patrol car because she was standing on a street corner in a known drug area at around 1:45 a.m., and nothing in her actions or demeanor indicated that she was involved in any illegal activity, the officer did not have sufficient reason to stop defendant under this rule. Stewart v. State, 332 Ark. 138, 964 S.W.2d 793 (1998).

There was sufficient evidence of reliability to justify an investigatory stop where an officer stated that his confidential informant had supplied reliable information on many prior occasions and the informant had given an earlier tip regarding the defendant which the officer was able to verify. Johnson v. State, 333 Ark. 673, 972 S.W.2d 935 (1998).

The trial court did not err in finding that a police officer was justified in making a stop based upon a reasonable suspicion that the defendant was committing, had committed, or was about to commit the felony of stalking, or a misdemeanor involving a danger of personal injury or the appropriation or damage to property where a woman notified the police that the defendant had been following her for several weeks and that she felt that he was stalking her, and her descriptions of their location and the types of vehicles that they were driving was confirmed by the officer. Potter v. State, 342 Ark. 621, 30 S.W.3d 701 (2000).

Defendant's presence in a high crime area in the early hours of the morning did not provide reasonable suspicion to stop him, nor did other surrounding circumstances. Jefferson v. State, 76 Ark. App. 300, 64 S.W.3d 791, rev'd, 349 Ark. 236, 76 S.W.3d 850 (2002).

Defendant's behavior gave rise to a reasonable suspicion where defendant and another man were in a high crime area known for drug activity, they engaged in an apparent hand-to-hand transaction, they separated when they saw the police officers approach, defendant appeared nervous, and the totality of the circumstances gave rise to a reasonable suspicion sufficient to justify making an investigatory stop. Davis v. State, 351 Ark. 406, 94 S.W.3d 892 (2003).

Defendant's motion to suppress evidence should have been granted because the stop and detention of defendant was impermissible where an officer only suspected defendant of the crime of loitering at the time he approached defendant; pursuant to § 5-71-213(a)(6), the misdemeanor crime of loitering does not involve a danger of forcible injury to persons or of appropriation of or damage to property. Brazwell v. State, 354 Ark. 281, 119 S.W.3d 499 (2003).

Once the legitimate purpose of a valid traffic stop is over, an officer must have a reasonable suspicion that the person stopped is committing, has committed, or is about to commit a felony or a misdemeanor involving danger to persons or property. Sims v. State, 356 Ark. 507, 157 S.W.3d 530 (2004).

Stop of defendant was not justified where the officer responsible for the police dog testified that the dog was the type that would sometimes make people nervous; repeated glances back at law enforcement officers and a quickened stride were not indicative of criminal activity, and shifting a bag from one side to the other was so common and innocuous an activity as to provide no suspicion of criminal activity whatsoever. Jackson v. State, 86 Ark. App. 39, 158 S.W.3d 715, overruled in part, 359 Ark. 297, 197 S.W.3d 468 (2004).

Defendant's drug convictions were improper as the police lacked reasonable suspicion to stop him based only on an informant's information that defendant had just bought a “large quantity” of matches; therefore, the initial stop and the subsequent search of defendant's home were illegal seizures. Summers v. State, 90 Ark. App. 25, 203 S.W.3d 638 (2005).

In a murder case, the trial court properly denied a motion to suppress because, although defendant was seized when she was told she could not leave the crime scene, in light of the remoteness of the crime scene and the circumstances existing at the time, requesting defendant to remain at the crime scene was reasonable, and defendant's statements were not incriminating as defendant said that she had last seen the victim the night before when he got into a van with some other people to go and drink beer. Flanagan v. State, 368 Ark. 143, 243 S.W.3d 866 (2006).

Defendant's motion to suppress a breath test was improperly overruled under this rule; witnessing no traffic violations, the arresting officer stopped defendant's vehicle without reasonable suspicion for possible road rage even though no one ever saw an actual fight or had any indication that one was about to erupt other than an obscene gesture incident. Jones v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 61 (2011).

Stop of defendant was lawful and complied with this rule and Ark. R. Crim. P. 2.1, 2.2(a), and 14.1 as an officer arrived on the scene within 30 seconds of a police broadcast; defendant's was the only vehicle in the area; and the stop was brief, non-aggressive, and a minimal intrusion compared to the state's interest in investigating the crime. Penister v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 405 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress the results of the breathalyzer test, because his stop and arrest for DWI were not supported by reasonable cause; a trooper was permitted to stop defendant's vehicle under this rule, after he saw it stopped and then observed it cross the center line at 10:00 pm on a Saturday night. Defendant's driving, his demeanor, and the odor of alcohol led the trooper to believe that defendant was driving under the influence of intoxicants and was a danger to himself or others. Lewis v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 39 (2013).

Miranda Warnings.

A police officer investigating a crime may request a person to furnish information by answering questions and may stop and detain a suspect for 15 minutes or as is reasonable under the circumstances, where he reasonably suspects that person is involved in a crime. The Miranda warning is not required unless statements result from custodial interrogation, nor is it required for voluntary, spontaneous statements. Ward v. State, 308 Ark. 415, 827 S.W.2d 110, 831 S.W.2d 100, cert. denied, 506 U.S. 841, 113 S. Ct. 124, 121 L. Ed. 2d 79 (1992).

Officer was not required to read defendant his Miranda rights prior to questioning him about an attempt to use a company credit card to buy a large amount of gas because a detention for up to 15 minutes was permitted under this rule. Lee v. State, 102 Ark. App. 23, 279 S.W.3d 496 (2008).

Reasonable Suspicion.

Where the suspects were followed a considerable distance and observed to be studying residences along the way as if to be "casing" them, and coupled to those circumstances were the knowledge and observations of the arresting officer that the area had been frequently burglarized, that the vehicle was unfamiliar to him, and that the occupants were unknown to him and were thought to have just emerged from a private driveway 45 minutes to an hour after the informant observed them "casing" the residence, such circumstances collectively established a reasonable suspicion warranting a stop and detention of the suspects. Tillman v. State, 275 Ark. 275, 630 S.W.2d 5 (1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1201, 103 S. Ct. 1185, 75 L. Ed. 2d 432 (1983).

Where the officer stopped the defendant on the basis of an anonymous radio dispatch which gave extremely general information about a "loud party" and a "brown jeep," the officer did not have specific, particular or articulable reasons to suspect that a felony or a misdemeanor involving danger of injury to persons or property had been committed; thus, the officer's stop of defendant was unreasonable under this rule, it violated defendant's Fourth Amendment rights and the evidence of the driving while intoxicated violation should have been excluded. Van Patten v. State, 16 Ark. App. 83, 697 S.W.2d 919 (1985).

Where the officer stopped defendant and he was aware that defendant had been identified as a suspect in a felony under investigation, under the totality of the circumstances, the trial court could properly find that the officer had adequate reason to stop defendant's vehicle under both this rule and Ark. R. Crim. P. 2.2. McDaniel v. State, 20 Ark. App. 201, 726 S.W.2d 688, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 838, 108 S. Ct. 121, 98 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1987).

Investigatory stops may be conducted without a warrant. Kaiser v. State, 24 Ark. App. 19, 746 S.W.2d 559, rev'd, 296 Ark. 125, 752 S.W.2d 271 (1988).

Evidence sufficient to support reasonable suspicion to stop. Adams v. State, 26 Ark. App. 15, 758 S.W.2d 709 (1988), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1018, 109 S. Ct. 1136, 103 L. Ed. 2d 197 (1989); Coffman v. State, 26 Ark. App. 45, 759 S.W.2d 573 (1988); Cooper v. State, 297 Ark. 478, 763 S.W.2d 645 (1989); Folly v. State, 28 Ark. App. 98, 771 S.W.2d 306 (1989); Smith v. State, 301 Ark. 569, 785 S.W.2d 465 (1990); Bliss v. State, 33 Ark. App. 121, 802 S.W.2d 479 (1991); *Weaver v. Where a person attempts to avoid a road-block, police officers have reasonable suspicion that he has been engaged in unlawful activity. Tims v. State, 26 Ark. App. 102, 760 S.W.2d 78 (1988), modified, 26 Ark. App. 102, 770 S.W.2d 211 (1989).

Evidence insufficient to support reasonable suspicion to stop. Vega v. State, 26 Ark. App. 172, 762 S.W.2d 1 (1988).

For the purposes of this rule, "reasonable suspicion" means a suspicion based upon facts or circumstances which give rise to more than a bare, imaginary, or purely conjectural suspicion. Addison v. State, 298 Ark. 1, 765 S.W.2d 566 (1989), overruled, State v. Bell, 329 Ark. 422, 948 S.W.2d 557 (1997); Hammons v. State, 327 Ark. 520, 940 S.W.2d 424 (1997).

Under certain circumstances, a police officer may rely on his experience and make inferences and deductions that might well elude an untrained person. Smith v. State, 301 Ark. 569, 785 S.W.2d 465 (1990).

Where defendant was put in the back seat of a state police car from which he could not get out unless the door was opened from the outside, and detained for longer than 15 minutes, and taken to the sheriff's office, but not told that he was not required to go, Ark. R. Crim. P. 2.3 and this rule were not violated because the officers had a reasonable suspicion at the time of the stop, that the defendant was an accomplice to an armed robbery, and it was reasonable that the defendant was held longer than 15 minutes. Beebe v. State, 303 Ark. 691, 799 S.W.2d 547 (1990); Jackson v. State, 34 Ark. App. 4, 804 S.W.2d 735 (1991).

Defendant's arrest was not pretextual where the arresting officer had been told that the defendant was a "possible suspect", where a witness told him that he thought defendant did it and wore thermal shirts like the one that was found and a spent shotgun shell was visible on the defendant's car seat. Ray v. State, 304 Ark. 489, 803 S.W.2d 894, cert. denied, 501 U.S. 1222, 111 S. Ct. 2837, 115 L. Ed. 2d 1005 (1991).

Reasonable suspicion entails a consideration of the total circumstances and the existence of particularized, specific reasons for a belief that the person may be engaged in criminal activity. Stout v. State, 304 Ark. 610, 804 S.W.2d 686 (1991).

Based on what the detectives knew, they had grounds to detain the defendant without arrest for a reasonable time under this rule as part of their investigation into foul play where defendant's roommate was missing, the roommate's employer had seen blood on the defendant's front porch and yard which was gone the next day, the detectives themselves had found blood on the premises, and where defendant had changed residences shortly after the roommate's absence. Weaver v. State, 305 Ark. 180, 806 S.W.2d 615 (1991).

A "reasonable suspicion" need not rise to the level of probable cause, but it must amount to more than a purely conjectural suspicion. Stewart v. State, 42 Ark. App. 28, 853 S.W.2d 286 (1993).

"Reasonable suspicion," which is something less than probable cause, is required to constitutionally justify an investigative stop. Johnson v. State, 43 Ark. App. 145, 862 S.W.2d 290 (1993).

Considering the totality of the circumstances, the officers were justified in reasonably suspecting that defendant was involved in criminal activity. Roark v. State, 46 Ark. App. 49, 876 S.W.2d 596 (1994).

Once police officer stopped defendant at roadblock and detected signs of intoxication, officers had authority under this rule to further detain defendant. Mullinax v. State, 53 Ark. App. 176, 920 S.W.2d 503 (1996), superseded, 327 Ark. 41, 938 S.W.2d 801 (1997).

Reasonable suspicion sufficient to justify a stop and search of possible jewel thieves shown where police lieutenant not only had information from a radio dispatch but also had personal knowledge that the local pawn shops had given reliable information in the past that was used by the police, he confirmed the vehicle description, license number and identification of the occupants of the truck, and observed a ring box on the front seat of the individuals' vehicle before questioning the suspects. Roberson v. State, 54 Ark. App. 230, 925 S.W.2d 820 (1996).

An officer had a reasonable suspicion warranting a stop and detention where he had lawfully stopped defendant's vehicle for investigative purposes, and defendant then began to scramble and reach under the front seat and the officer thought he saw a pistol. Hammons v. State, 327 Ark. 520, 940 S.W.2d 424 (1997).

Testimony from the arresting officer that he had nothing more than "feelings" that defendant "might" be engaged in drug trafficking was not enough to support a reasonable suspicion under this rule. Stewart v. State, 59 Ark. App. 77, 953 S.W.2d 599 (1997).

An officer had probable cause to seize the defendant after seeing him ingest an off-white substance where (1) the officer was sent to investigate a complaint of a pickup truck blocking an apartment complex driveway, and (2) when the officer approached the truck, the defendant jumped out of the truck, started to use profanities, and then reached in his pocket and put an off-white substance in his mouth. Hunter v. State, 62 Ark. App. 275, 970 S.W.2d 323 (1998).

An officer had reasonable suspicion sufficient to detain the defendant after a traffic stop in order to conduct a consensual search of the defendant's vehicle where the officer suspected that the defendant was armed based on his extreme nervousness, his rigid posture, his trembling lips, his manner of dress, and his criminal background. Muhammad v. State, 64 Ark. App. 352, 984 S.W.2d 822 (1998).

The initial stop of the defendant's car was not based on reasonable suspicion where (1) police officers went to the defendant's house to execute a warrant to search the house, but the defendant was not at home, (2) the officers decided not to search the house at that time and, instead, to look for the defendant's car based on their suspicion that he might have drugs on him, and (3) the officers located the defendant's car and stopped the car, although the defendant was not speeding or committing any traffic violation. Colbert v. State, 340 Ark. 657, 13 S.W.3d 162 (2000).

In determining whether an encounter with defendant was unconstitutional under this rule, the court considered the factors listed in § 16-81-203, and determined that the officer did not have grounds to reasonably suspect defendant enough to warrant the detention and search. Jennings v. State, 69 Ark. App. 50, 10 S.W.3d 105 (2000).

Defendant's criminal history, failure to disclose his drug arrest and charge, refusal to reveal his vehicle's ownership, combative demeanor, and drugs and paraphernalia found in the van gave an officer reasonable suspicion of criminal activity, authorizing defendant's detention and further search of the van. Laime v. State, 347 Ark. 142, 60 S.W.3d 464 (2001), cert.

A police officer had reasonable suspicion to order the defendant out of his car where (1) he approached the defendant's car, which was parked in a driveway, (2) shined his flashlight into the car, and (3) saw empty beer cans, the defendant sleeping with a coat over him, and keys in the ignition. Bohanan v. State, 72 Ark. App. 422, 38 S.W.3d 902 (2001).

While it is proper to establish and secure a reasonable perimeter to insure the safety of the law enforcement officers that are conducting a lawful search of premises pursuant to a warrant, an officer is not justified in detaining and searching an individual or his vehicle simply because he is approaching the perimeter from the outside; the notion that under any circumstances a person can be subject to a warrantless search merely because he is approaching such a perimeter is inconsistent with the principle that an individual is free from unreasonable searches and seizures. Mathis v. State, 73 Ark. App. 90, 40 S.W.3d 816 (2001).

No reasonable cause existed for the search of the defendant's person, and a directive that he empty his pockets was unlawful, where (1) a police officer stopped the defendant's vehicle after observing it cross the highway's center line three times in approximately a mile and a half, (2) a driver's license check and criminal history revealed that the defendant had been convicted of possession of methamphetamine, but that he had no outstanding warrants, and (3) the defendant was unable to produce proof of insurance, but he was neither arrested nor given a citation. Hoey v. State, 73 Ark. App. 118, 42 S.W.3d 564 (2001).

Based on the totality of the circumstances, a sheriff's officer who, while following defendant's pickup, saw defendant drive his pickup across the centerline and to the right of the fog line on a road had the requisite suspicion to stop defendant for driving while intoxicated. Hoay v. State, 75 Ark. App. 103, 55 S.W.3d 782 (2001), modified, aff'd, 348 Ark. 80, 71 S.W.3d 573 (2002).

Where police were patrolling a trailer park known for drug trafficking at 2:00 a.m. and defendant appeared from between two trailers and attempted to evade police, there was a reasonable suspicion that something illegal was afoot to justify a stop; moreover, the trial court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress evidence of cocaine which fell to the ground when defendant pulled his hand from his pocket. Jefferson v. State, 349 Ark. 236, 76 S.W.3d 850 (2002).

Officers lacked reasonable suspicion to stop and detain defendant where the only factors tending to lead to reasonable suspicion for an investigatory stop under this rule were the time of day and the incidence of crime in the neighborhood, and where the officers did not observe any criminal activity or observe a suspicious transaction; officers did not have reasonable suspicion as defined by Ark. R. Crim. P. 2.1, and they were not investigating a particular crime as required by Ark. R. Crim. P. 2.2. Davis v. State, 77 Ark. App. 310, 74 S.W.3d 671 (2002), rev'd, 351 Ark. 406, 94 S.W.3d 892 (2003).

Police officer's continued detention of defendant for questioning and the officer's actions in running a drug dog around defendant's vehicle constituted an unreasonable, unlawful seizure because the legitimate purpose of the valid traffic stop was complete when the officer returned defendant's license and gave him a warning ticket; the officer did not have a reasonable, articulable suspicion, based on defendant's nervousness, defendant's possession of energy-drink cans and a rental car agreement signed by an absent third party, or the smell of air freshener in the car, that defendant was committing, had committed, or was about to commit a felony or misdemeanor involving danger to persons or property. Lilley v. State, 89 Ark. App. 43, 199 S.W.3d 692 (2004), super-seded, 362 Ark. 436, 208 S.W.3d 785 (2005).

Officer did not have reasonable suspicion to further detain defendant for a canine sniff after a traffic stop where the officer based the further detention on a one-way rental, a rental in another person's name, nervousness, and the presence of air freshener. Lilley v. State, 362 Ark. 436, 208 S.W.3d 785 (2005).

Motion to suppress evidence was properly denied, even though the trial court erred by finding that no seizure occurred when defendant was detained outside of a restaurant to wait on a canine sniff of his vehicle, because the officers had specific, particularized, and articulable reasons for suspecting defendant of involvement in the sale of methamphetamine based on the fact that he was following a known associate, who was driving a rental car, and they parked next to each other at the restaurant. Dowty v. State, 363 Ark. 1, 210 S.W.3d 850 (2005).

Police officers had justifiably detained appellant under this rule where although they may not have observed him engaging in criminal activity, they had information that he and another detained individual were involved in drug trafficking, that his rental car could have been involved in drug trafficking, he had an obvious association with the other detained individual, and a dog had alerted on the rental car during a second dog sniff. Dowty v. State, 363 Ark. 1, 210 S.W.3d 850 (2005).

Stop of defendant was legal given the broken taillight, and the slight detention of defendant beyond the initial stop to allow a dog sniff around the perimeter of the car was proper as the officer had a reasonable suspicion that defendant had or was committing a crime; the car defendant was driving was registered to someone in Texas but defendant could not prove that he had permission to drive the car, defendant was extremely nervous while talking to the officer, and defendant did not know where he was driving to in Arkansas. Malone v. State, 364 Ark. 256, 217 S.W.3d 810 (2005), cert. denied, 547 U.S. 1102, 126 S. Ct. 1890, 164 L. Ed. 2d 575 (2006).

Defendant's motion to suppress evidence was properly denied in a drug case because an officer had authority to continue a detention under this rule; there was reasonable suspicion based on defendant's nervousness, his unusual travel plans, and the strong smell of fabric softener in his car. Ayala v. State, 90 Ark. App. 13, 203 S.W.3d 659 (2005).

Pursuant to a report of a drug related disturbance, officer stopped defendant's vehicle and conducted a pat-down of defendant without any objective, factual basis for a reasonable belief that defendant was dangerous or might have gained immediate control of a weapon, moreover, the illegal frisk was not cured by defendant's purported consent in turning over the small bottle in his pocket as the lapse of time between the pat-down and the request to see what was in his pocket was not sufficient to dissipate the taint; thus, the methamphetamine seized as a result of the illegal frisk was the fruit of the poisonous tree and had to be suppressed. Hill v. State, 2005 Ark. App. LEXIS 9 (Ark. Ct. App. Jan. 5, 2005), sub. op., 89 Ark. App. 126, 206 S.W.3d 300 (2005).

In a drug case, defendant's motion to suppress evidence should have been granted because the officer did not have reasonable suspicion to detain defendant after the issuance of a warning ticket; nervousness, as well as a new cell phone, atlases, fast food wrappers, and energy drinks in the car, were insufficient for reasonable suspicion. Meraz-Lopez v. State, 92 Ark. App. 157, 211 S.W.3d 564 (2005).

There was no violation of this rule where defendant was detained for 37 minutes after a traffic stop because, based on defendant's nervousness, evasive answers, the odor of air freshener, and the fact that defendant had a new cell phone, gave an officer a reasonable suspicion of criminal activity and justified calling for a canine sniff; therefore, a motion to suppress evidence was properly denied. Omar v. State, 99 Ark. App. 436, 262 S.W.3d 195 (2007).

Counsel was not ineffective in relation to a motion to suppress evidence seized following traffic stop because defendant flew to California, stayed a very short while, returned to Tennessee by rental car, the person who rented the car was not present, the rental agreement provided that the car was to be operated in California, only by the renter, and although the car was nearly new, the manufacturer provided jack and associated tools were lying on the floor of the car. Harrison v. State, 371 Ark. 474, 268 S.W.3d 324 (2007).

Motion to suppress evidence was improperly granted because, where police had known an informant to give reliable information in the past, and accurate information was received from the informant about defendant and his vehicle, officers had specific, particularized, and articulable reasons for thinking that defendant was involved in criminal activity, which justified a stop under this rule. Because the officers had reasonable suspicion to stop and detain the vehicle, any pretext on the part of the officers was irrelevant; moreover, the officers did not need any additional reasonable suspicion to justify a canine sniff, which was not a search under the Fourth Amendment. State v. Harris, 372 Ark. 492, 277 S.W.3d 568 (2008).

Evidence should have been suppressed in a drug case because a state trooper's post-warning questioning of defendant was not a consensual police-citizen encounter since a reasonable person would not have felt like he could have left without answering; since there was no reasonable suspicion under this rule, an illegal detention resulted. Bedsale v. State, 104 Ark. App. 253, 290 S.W.3d 607 (2009).

Police officer's 6:00 p.m. stop after defendant backed defendant's truck into a department store's side lot in a two-three mile zone of recent armed robberies violated both Ark. R. Crim. P. 2.2 and this rule since there was clearly a Fourth Amendment seizure when the officer blocked defendant's truck with the patrol car, turned on the bright headlights, placed the spot light and take-down lights on defendant, and approached the truck with a gun in hand; further, defendant's mere presence in a high crime area did not rise to reasonable suspicion sufficient to authorize an investigatory stop. Cockrell v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 700, 369 S.W.3d 19 (2009), rev'd, 2010 Ark. 258, 370 S.W.3d 197 (2010).

Evidence seized upon defendant's arrest did not violate his rights under the U.S. Constitution, Ark. Const., Art. 2, § 15, or this rule and Ark. R. Crim. P. 4.1 because defendant's erratic driving in a high crime area provided a reasonable suspicion to stop him, and defendant's attempts to hide his identity from the officer provided probable cause for his arrest. Mosley v. Ark., 2009 Ark. App. 799, 370 S.W.3d 273 (2009).

Defendant's movement in reaching down when the officer shined lights on defendant, combined with the fact that the vehicle was backed into a parking spot in a dark area of the parking lot, in an area that recently had a high incidence of armed robberies, provided the officer reasonable suspicion that justified detaining defendant. Cockrell v. State, 2010 Ark. 258, 370 S.W.3d 197 (2010).

Where, at 7:25 a.m., officers observed defendant walking through a backyard on private property near a school, they had reasonable suspicion to pursue and stop defendant when defendant ran after they called defendant to their vehicle. Fowler v. State, 2010 Ark. 431, 371 S.W.3d 677 (2010), cert. denied, 565 U.S. 816, 132 S. Ct. 95, 181 L. Ed. 2d 24 (2011).

In a case in which defendant, pursuant to Arkansas R. Crim. P. 24.3(b), appealed the trial court's denial of his motion to suppress evidence, he unsuccessfully argued that two deputies had no reasonable suspicion to believe that he was armed and dangerous, thereby justifying the pat-down search. Immediately prior to their encounter with defendant, the deputies were dealing with three individuals who appeared to be hiding from them, one of whom had a weapon on his person, defendant approached the deputies unprovoked and appeared to be under the influence of a drug, and the deputies saw a bulge in his pants soon after finding a knife on another suspect after seeing a similar bulge. Blount v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 219 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress, in which defendant argued that the evidence against him was obtained as a result of an unlawful search that police conducted because the officers had a specific, particularized, and articulable reason to believe that defendant was involved in illegal activity in light of the fact that one suspect told the officers that defendant had hidden cocaine in his buttocks area. Canada v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 510 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized as a result of a detention and a canine sniff of defendant's truck because an officer had reasonable suspicion to detain defendant; after stopping defendant for driving a vehicle with a broken tail light, the officer noted that defendant refused to make eye contact, exhibited increased nervousness, and was known to have had prior drug problems. Johnson v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 167, 392 S.W.3d 897 (2012).

Circuit court's ruling denying defendant's motion to suppress evidence recovered in a search of her truck after she was stopped for a traffic violation was not clearly against the preponderance of the evidence. Factors that combined to give a state trooper a reasonable suspicion that defendant was engaged in criminal activity were: (1) one month earlier he had stopped the same truck and arrested defendant's passenger for drunk driving and possession of marijuana; (2) during a criminal history check, the trooper discovered defendant had been previously arrested; (3) the trooper had information from a local police department that defendant was suspected of drug dealing; (4) defendant was nervous; and (5) it was late at night. Menne v. State, 2012 Ark. 37, 386 S.W.3d 451 (2012).

Court did not err by denying the motion to suppress; officer had reasonable suspicion that defendant was driving while intoxicated before he administered the PBT because defendant admitted he had been drinking, the officer saw defendant driving, and the officer noticed that defendant smelled of intoxicants; there was probable cause to arrest even without consideration of the PBT results because defendant told the officer that he had been drinking, his eyes were bloodshot and watery, and he smelled of intoxicants and failed two field-sobriety tests. Fisher v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 301, 427 S.W.3d 743 (2013).

In an aggravated robbery case, suppression of evidence was not warranted because there was a reasonable suspicion for stopping a vehicle; an officer spotted a car near the robbery that was seen at another robbery a few days earlier, and the owner of the car had been arrested previously for having a gun. Davis v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 658, 430 S.W.3d 190 (2013).

Trial court erred in denying defendant's motion to suppress evidence because a police officer lacked reasonable suspicion to stop defendant's vehicle where the officer initiated a traffic stop on defendant, when he had not violated any traffic laws, in order to tell him that he was the one the neighbors had been complaining about. Dewitt v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 369 (2014).

At the time the officer made a stop of defendant's truck, a tip had been sufficiently corroborated to have given the officer reasonable suspicion, given that after receiving a call of a possible disturbance, the officer arrived on the scene two minutes later and verified the presence of two vehicles and that one was trying to leave, as the callers had indicated; the denial of defendant's motion to suppress was affirmed. Lee v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 691, 449 S.W.3d 709 (2014).

Police officer properly conducted field sobriety tests of defendant because the officer's warrantless seizure of defendant was based on a reasonable suspicion that defendant had committed the offense of driving while intoxicated and defendant's consent was not required. The officer observed defendant's vehicle cross a center line of a roadway and noted that defendant's eyes were bloodshot and watery, defendant's actions were lethargic and exaggerated, and defendant's speech was slow and deliberate. Tiller v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 431, 439 S.W.3d 705 (2014).

Police officer's initial approach was based on reasonable suspicion, considering the matching vehicle description, its proximity to the location of the alleged aggravated assault, and the identification of the vehicle as belonging to defendant. Fowler v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 232, 459 S.W.3d 837 (2015).

Circuit court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress marijuana and contraband found on his person where the police officers had been called to a motel to investigate drug use on the premises, and the smell of raw and burnt marijuana emanating from defendant's person was sufficient to give the officers reasonable suspicion to stop him and determine if he was involved in the drug use. Spraglin v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 166 (2015).

Under the circumstances, a detective had a reasonable suspicion that defendant, who matched a description given by dispatch and was trying to leave the area, may have been involved in criminal activity. Accordingly, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress drug evidence seized pursuant to the stop. Foster v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 412, 467 S.W.3d 176 (2015).

In a drug case, a motion to suppress should have been granted because a canine sniff was conducted on a vehicle without reasonable suspicion for a continued detention after a traffic stop. Defendant picked up a package that had a strong odor of dryer sheets, the package contained a return address in California and was addressed to someone besides defendant, a package with the same return address had been previously intercepted by the post office, neither of the names on the package were associated with the respective street addresses, and defendant did not sign for the package with his own name. However, these facts did not give rise to anything more than bare suspicion. MacKintrush v. State, 2016 Ark. 14, 479 S.W.3d 14 (2016).

Officer's stop of defendant was not supported, given that she did not have reasonable suspicion that he had committed a crime or probable cause to believe that he had committed a traffic violation; the fact that defendant's passenger was leaning out of the vehicle and vomiting was not illegal, and defendant did not flee the officer, but merely left after it was safe to do so, when the passenger was inside the vehicle with the door shut. Meeks v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 9, 479 S.W.3d 559 (2016).

Circuit court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress evidence where an identified tipster provided specific information that defendant had beaten on his door, had been drinking, had a gun, and had left the tipster's residence in a tan Chevrolet truck, and thus, the officer had specific, particularized, and articulable reasons indicating that defendant may have been involved in criminal activity at the time he stopped defendant's vehicle. Casey v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 98, 483 S.W.3d 327 (2016).

Trial court did not err in finding that the officer had developed a reasonable suspicion that defendant was involved in criminal activity before the purpose of the stop was concluded; defendant and his friend were uncontrollably nervous, gave differing accounts of their trip, and both had prior criminal history, and thus the officer reasonably detained defendant beyond the time necessary for the initial stop. Hoey v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 253, 519 S.W.3d 745 (2017).

Search of defendant's wallet violated the Fourth Amendment. While the officer had reasonable suspicion to investigate the presence of defendant's car in a closed city park during the early morning hours and a pat-down search of defendant's outer clothing was reasonable under the Fourth Amendment where the responses of defendant and his companion were evasive, if not completely untruthful, and neither of them could produce a driver's license, the officer lacked probable cause to search defendant's wallet for an identification card. Further, it was not disputed that the officer failed to ask defendant to consent to the search of his wallet and defendant did not verbally authorize him to look inside. Shay v. State, 2018 Ark. 393, 562 S.W.3d 832 (2018).

Trial court erred in concluding that the totality of the circumstances provided a reasonable suspicion sufficient to justify a stop under Ark. R. Crim. P. 3.1 where the only information was that defendant had been a victim of a robbery in the same neighborhood two days earlier but refused to make a report, defendant was not speeding or engaging in any other traffic violations at the time of the stop, the officers were in the area because of a generalized increase in shootings rather than a specific report of shots fired, and the officers had not verified a claim made by an unidentified person that defendant might be hot, even though it would have been easy to verify whether a warrant had been issued. Rounds v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 267, 550 S.W.3d 403 (2018).

Police officers did not have a reasonable suspicion to stop and search defendant where no crime was being investigated at the time the blue lights were engaged, nothing indicated that defendant had an unlawful intent in possessing the weapon while at a store, and defendant had walked two miles away from the store at the time of the encounter. Merely "acting suspicious" does not equate to reasonable suspicion. Taff v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 483, 562 S.W.3d 877 (2018).

Consensual police-citizen encounter transformed into a seizure because a reasonable person in defendant's position would not believe he was free to leave based on the officers' 10-minute search for another individual who fled the scene, and an officer's request for permission to search for that individual in defendant's residence; however, the police had reasonable suspicion to detain defendant based on such factors as the prior reports of trespassing where defendant was parked, a black pouch containing plastic baggies in plain sight between the front seats of the truck, a determination that defendant had prior methamphetamine convictions, and the fact that the co-occupant fled the scene, and the 20-minute length of the detention was not unreasonable under these circumstances. Dye v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 545, 564 S.W.3d 299 (2018).

Officers had reasonable suspicion to stop defendant's vehicle based on an anonymous call that was recorded, as the caller stated he was a coworker, the caller provided specific identifiable information about defendant's identity, vehicle, and route that police were able to confirm prior to stopping defendant, and the caller stated he had previously asked an officer what to do if a coworker was drinking and driving. Gross v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 432 (2020).

—Informants.

When an informant is the source of the information that results in one law enforcement agency requesting another agency to stop a suspect, the officers who originally dealt with the informant must have reasonable suspicion to stop the suspect. Kaiser v. State, 24 Ark. App. 19, 746 S.W.2d 559, rev'd, 296 Ark. 125, 752 S.W.2d 271 (1988).

Evidence of informant's reliability, combined with the accuracy of the informant's information and the detective's testimony regarding the area's reputation for drug traffic, was enough to give the officers specific, particularized and articulable reasons indicating the person or vehicle may be involved in criminal activity. Kilpatrick v. State, 322 Ark. 728, 912 S.W.2d 917 (1995).

Police officer, who acted solely on the basis of a tip phoned in by an identified citizen informant, acted lawfully in ordering defendant, the occupant of a parked tractor-trailer, out of his vehicle; the tip carried with it sufficient indicia of reliability to give the officer reasonable suspicion to justify an investigatory stop. Frette v. City of Springdale, 331 Ark. 103, 959 S.W.2d 734 (1998).

Officer had reasonable suspicion for a stop because an informant told the police that a white male had bought five one-pound bags of iodine from the feed store just down the road from the police department, and he gave the police the vehicle's license-plate number. It was sufficient corroboration when the car with that license-plate number passed by the officers and its occupants were two white males. Ashley v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 131, 388 S.W.3d 914 (2012).

Officer had reasonable suspicion to stop and detain defendant based on a reliable confidential informant's information that he was going to deliver methamphetamine at a specified convenience store and defendant's arrival at the store, followed by the informant's call to defendant that he was at the wrong store and defendant's then leaving the first store and driving toward the other store. Owens v. Arkansas, 2011 Ark. App. 763, 387 S.W.3d 250 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress evidence of her intoxication because the informant's tip about defendant's illegal behavior while driving was sufficiently reliable to give the trooper reasonable suspicion to pull defendant over on suspicion of driving while intoxicated; the informant's tip ranked high in reliability as the informant identified himself by name, phone number, and vehicle, the informant's report was based on his personal observation of illegal activity, and the trooper was not required to personally observe defendant's erratic driving in order to form a reasonable suspicion of drunken driving and to pull her over. Tankersley v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 37, 453 S.W.3d 699 (2015).

Right to Counsel.

Supreme Court had jurisdiction to hear interlocutory appeal by the state where the issue was whether an accused had the right to have an attorney of his own choosing present during an in-custody interrogation. State v. Johnson, 326 Ark. 660, 934 S.W.2d 499 (1996).

Suppression of Evidence.

Where the police officer's sole reason for stopping and detaining the defendant and his companion at the airport was their conduct in looking back and in quickening their pace upon being followed through an air terminal by the plain clothes police officer, such conduct could not possibly suggest that they were about to commit any particular type of felony or misdemeanor which is required to support a police detention under this rule, therefore, the trial court should have suppressed the evidence produced by a search of the defendant following his detention. Meadows v. State, 269 Ark. 380, 602 S.W.2d 636 (1980).

The arrest for public intoxication was a pretext for conducting the search of a person who was a suspect in a murder and arson investigation, where the search had no relation to the nature and purpose of the arrest, each of the law enforcement officials testified that the defendant could not have left the police station because he was a suspect in the murder and arson investigation even at the time he was brought to the police station, the officers failed to comply with Ark. R. Crim. P. 2.3, and there was a violation of the detention limit posed by this rule. Therefore, the evidence obtained pursuant to the arrest for public intoxication had to be suppressed. Richardson v. State, 288 Ark. 407, 706 S.W.2d 363 (1986).

Where contraband was seized from a vehicle belonging to a missing girl's boyfriend after police stopped the vehicle looking for the girl, the evidence was properly suppressed pursuant to this rule because the stop of defendant's vehicle was not proper under Ark. R. Crim. P. 2.2; the intrusion into defendant's privacy was unreasonable when weighed against the governmental interest of locating a missing girl, where no allegations of criminal activity were made. State v. McFadden, 327 Ark. 16, 938 S.W.2d 797 (1997).

The fact that the detention and search of the defendant exceeded the scope of a Terry stop did not require suppression of evidence discovered by the police because the police had probable cause to arrest the defendant when they first made contact. Blockman v. State, 69 Ark. App. 192, 11 S.W.3d 562 (2000).

Officer did not articulate a reasonable suspicion that defendant was committing, or about to commit, a felony or misdemeanor involving danger of forcible injury to persons or of appropriation of or damage to property; therefore, the trial court erred in denying defendant's motion to suppress evidence as the investigatory stop was impermissible. Anderson v. State, 79 Ark. App. 286, 86 S.W.3d 403 (2002).

Defendant was entitled to suppress evidence of drugs seized from his car when police detained him after the legitimate purpose of the traffic stop ended. Sims v. State, 356 Ark. 507, 157 S.W.3d 530 (2004).

Trial court erred in denying defendant's motion to suppress where the officer provided no reasons for frisking defendant other than that it was "policy" and admitted he had not seen anything that led him to believe that defendant had a weapon; thus, while the officer had a reasonable basis to stop defendant under this rule, the officer lacked specific, objective, and articulable facts to support a reasonable suspicion that defendant was armed and presently dangerous to warrant a search under Ark. R. Crim. P. 3.4. Hill v. State, 89 Ark. App. 126, 206 S.W.3d 300, rev'd, 363 Ark. 505, 215 S.W.3d 586 (2005).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress marijuana seized after a search of his vehicle where the officer developed a reasonable suspicion that defendant was committing a felony, authorizing his continued detention of defendant; further, the officer detected a strong odor of fabric sheets, as opposed to air freshener, which the officer testified were often used to mask the odor of illegal controlled substances. Ayala v. State, 90 Ark. App. 13, 203 S.W.3d 659 (2005).

Where an officer drove past a closed gas station where he observed two vehicles in the parking lot, there were no signs of criminal activity, no moving violations, nor any defective equipment on the vehicles; nonetheless, he stopped one vehicle, questioned the driver, asked him to get out of the car, and seized marijuana from the vehicle and defendant's person. Because the police officer lacked reasonable suspicion, the initial encounter was not authorized by this rule; therefore, the trial court erred by denying defendant's motion to suppress the evidence. Dosia v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 429, 318 S.W.3d 583 (2009).

Because a police officer had probable cause to stop defendant's vehicle based on an apparent invalid license tag, defendant's weaving and low-speed driving, and the officer's training, the stop was justified under this rule; therefore, defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied. Murrell v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 311 (2011).

Officer had reasonable suspicion to stop defendant and investigate drug-related criminal activity because a reliable known informant provided information about a delivery of methamphetamine. The fact that defendant arrived in a black car rather than a white car of the same make as described did not undermine reasonable suspicion. James v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 118, 390 S.W.3d 95 (2012).

Physical evidence was not suppressed under U.S. Const. Amend. IV and this rule because the legitimate purpose of a traffic stop was ongoing when a drug dog was deployed; the dog's reliability was established, and a positive indication from the dog gave rise to probable cause to search the vehicle. Jackson v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 508 (2012), vacated, 2013 Ark. 201, 427 S.W.3d 607 (2013).

Suppression motion was denied in a drug case because there was no violation of this rule based on an alleged prolonged detention since it was within a few minutes of questioning that appellant admitted to having two illegal items and consented to a search; the legitimate purpose of the traffic stop was not complete when the officer asked to search the vehicle, which was before he returned appellant's documents. The totality of the circumstances, including appellant's nervousness, failure to make eye contact, and admissions, gave rise to reasonable suspicion that appellant was engaged in felony criminal activity, which allowed a detention of 15 minutes or a reasonable time under the circumstances. Powell v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 322, 427 S.W.3d 782 (2013).

Circuit court erred in denying defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized following a stop of his vehicle because the police officer who made the stop was acting on a purely conjectural suspicion that defendant was engaged in illegal activity at the time of the stop; although the officer testified that he would conduct a stop in the event of a color discrepancy to determine whether the vehicle was stolen, he did not testify that, in his experience, car thieves would change the color of a vehicle after it had been stolen or that a discrepancy in color was indicative of any type of criminal conduct. Schneider v. State, 2015 Ark. 152, 459 S.W.3d 296 (2015).

In a case where defendant was convicted of trafficking in methamphetamine and simultaneous possession of drugs and firearms, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress because the detective possessed the reasonable suspicion necessary to justify detaining defendant to determine the lawfulness of his possession of a firearm, and the discovery of the methamphetamine and other firearm resulted from the officer's subsequent investigation. Martin v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 107, 513 S.W.3d 295 (2017).

It was not clear error to deny defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized in a traffic stop because (1) the legitimate purpose of the traffic stop had not ended when an officer asked defendant for consent to search her car, as the officer had not returned defendant's license and paperwork or issued a warning or citation for the traffic violation (crossed center line for six seconds), and (2) the officer testified that only 10 to 12 minutes passed between defendant's stop, her consent to a search, and the discovery of drugs and paraphernalia in her purse. Lauck v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 145, 596 S.W.3d 71 (2020).

Territorial Jurisdiction.

Evidence sufficient to find that police officer who had the authority to either stop, or to stop and arrest, the defendant before he left the officer's jurisdiction, and the officer was within the bounds of his authority when he followed defendant outside his jurisdiction and subsequently made the stop and arrest. King v. State, 42 Ark. App. 97, 854 S.W.2d 362 (1993).

Time Limit.

A 17 to 20 minute search was not unreasonable where police officers acted diligently and caused no undue delay in performing the consensual search and, the defendant's girlfriend extended the stop by consenting to the search of their car. Newton v. State, 73 Ark. App. 285, 43 S.W.3d 170 (2001).

Where defendant repeatedly lied to a police officer about his identity, any delay in obtaining or verifying his identity was defendant's own fault. Townsend v. State, 350 Ark. 129, 85 S.W.3d 526 (2002).

Length of the detention did not violate this rule because the officer acted diligently in securing the closest available drug dog; defendant said he did not mind waiting, the closest available K-9 unit arrived in less than an hour, and the officer's continued detention of defendant beyond 15 minutes was reasonable under the circumstances. Hoey v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 253, 519 S.W.3d 745 (2017).

In a constructive possession case, involving marijuana found in a non-owned vehicle that defendant was transporting along with other vehicles in his automobile-transport carrier, the trial court did not err in determining that the length of the stop, which was approximately one hour, was justified. Pokatilov v. State, 2017 Ark. 264, 526 S.W.3d 849 (2017).

Circuit court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress, as (1) the initial traffic stop, which occurred after the officer ran defendant's tags through the Vehicle Insurance Database, was not invalid because the lack of insurance information in the database was sufficient to provide the officer with probable cause to believe that a traffic violation had occurred; and (2) the purpose of the stop had not concluded by the time the officer deployed his drug dog since defendant had not produced his insurance paperwork and the encounter lasted less than eight minutes. Cagle v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 69, 571 S.W.3d 47 (2019).

Rule 3.2. Advice as to reason for detention.

A law enforcement officer who has detained a person under Rule 3.1 shall immediately advise that person of his official identity and the reason for the detention.

Rule 3.3. Use of force.

A law enforcement officer acting under the authority of Rule 3.1 may use such nondeadly force as may be reasonably necessary under the circumstances to stop and detain any person for the purposes authorized by Rules 3.1 through 3.5.

CASE NOTES

Applicability.

Ark. R. Crim. P. 2.2 authorized an officer to approach defendant's car to investigate whether he was about to drive while intoxicated. Information provided by identified citizen-informants combined with defendant's obvious intoxication when the officer approached provided the reasonable suspicion that defendant was about to drive under the influence, allowing detention under this rule. Stewart v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 9, 373 S.W.3d 387 (2010).

Rule 3.4. Search for weapons.

If a law enforcement officer who has detained a person under Rule 3.1 reasonably suspects that the person is armed and presently dangerous to the officer or others, the officer or someone designated by him may search the outer clothing of such person and the immediate surroundings for, and seize, any weapon or other dangerous thing which may be used against the officer or others. In no event shall this search be more extensive than is reasonably necessary to ensure the safety of the officer or others.

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Commentary to Rule 3.4

The "reasonably necessary" language of this rule and Rule 3.1 establish an objective test. In deciding whether the stop or frisk at issue is reasonable, courts evaluate the conduct by measuring it against what could be expected of a "reasonably prudent man" under the circumstances. Leopold v. State, 15 Ark. App. 292, 299, 692 S.W.2d 780 (1985).

CASE NOTES

In General.

A search under this rule cannot be lawfully undertaken unless justification for detaining the suspect exists under Ark. R. Crim. P. 3.1. Muhammad v. State, 337 Ark. 291, 988 S.W.2d 17 (1999).

Fruit of Reasonable Search.

Hydromorphine discovered but not confiscated by police officer who was executing an invalid search warrant was admissible in evidence as the fruit of a reasonable and lawful "pat-down" search, and would also have been admissible as a controlled substance seized without a search due to the apparent abandonment of the pills by defendant when he subsequently hid them under the seat of the police car. Webb v. State, 269 Ark. 415, 601 S.W.2d 848 (1980).

A police officer executing an arrest warrant acted reasonably in looking at a pill bottle in defendant's pants' pocket felt during the "pat-down" search for weapons and in returning the pill bottle to defendant's pants' pocket after determining that it was not a weapon where the officer testified he found two knives concealed on defendant, since a glass pill bottle is certainly similar enough to the size and shape of a knife to warrant further examination when felt. Webb v. State, 269 Ark. 415, 601 S.W.2d 848 (1980).

In a case in which defendant, pursuant to Arkansas R. Crim. P. 24.3(b), appealed the trial court's denial of his motion to suppress evidence, he unsuccessfully argued that two deputies had no reasonable suspicion to believe that he was armed and dangerous, thereby justifying the pat-down search. Immediately prior to their encounter with defendant, the deputies were dealing with three individuals who appeared to be hiding from them, one of whom had a weapon on his person, defendant approached the deputies unprovoked and appeared to be under the influence of a drug, and the deputies saw a bulge in his pants soon after finding a knife on another suspect after seeing a similar bulge. Blount v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 219 (2010).

Possession by Felon.

There are rarely clearer circumstances for the immediate search and seizure of a weapon than when an officer actually sees the weapon in the pocket of a person he knows to be a convicted felon. Combs v. State, 270 Ark. 496, 606 S.W.2d 61 (1980).

Reasonableness of Search.

Justification for a limited search for weapons turns upon the question of whether the facts available to the officer at the moment of search would warrant a man of reasonable caution to believe that the action taken was appropriate; and it is only required that the police officer be able to point to specific and articulable facts which, taken together with rational inferences to be drawn from those facts, reasonably warrant a belief that his safety or that of others is in danger. Webb v. State, 269 Ark. 415, 601 S.W.2d 848 (1980).

Where the defendant was stopped while driving an automobile which closely matched the detailed description given in a police broadcast of an automobile that was involved in a murder and robbery in a nearby community, and the defendant fit the description given of the perpetrator of those crimes, the investigatory stop of the defendant's vehicle was justified and the limited search of the automobile for weapons by the police was reasonable; therefore, a pistol seized from under the driver's seat was admissible. Hill v. State, 275 Ark. 71, 628 S.W.2d 284, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 882, 103 S. Ct. 180, 74 L. Ed. 2d 147 (1982).

Although the police officers had reasonable suspicion to make an investigative stop of defendants' truck, a protective search allegedly conducted for weapons was invalid. The state's bald assertion that since the officers suspected that defendants were engaged in spotlighting for deer, it was reasonable for the officers to expect that they might have had weapons in the truck, was unsupported by the testimony of the officer and was insufficient to pass constitutional muster. Leopold v. State, 15 Ark. App. 292, 692 S.W.2d 780 (1985).

Limited search or "pat down" deemed warranted. Cooper v. State, 297 Ark. 478, 763 S.W.2d 645 (1989); Dickerson v. State, 51 Ark. App. 64, 909 S.W.2d 653 (1995).

Where the officer has every reason to suspect that a person is armed, a pat-down search is reasonable. Folly v. State, 28 Ark. App. 98, 771 S.W.2d 306 (1989).

When a lawful stop occurs, the police are permitted to search the outer clothing of an individual and the immediate vicinity for weapons, if the facts available to an officer would warrant a person of reasonable caution to believe that a limited search was appropriate, and officer was justified in conducting a limited search to determine that the obvious bulge in defendant's jacket was not a weapon. Stout v. State, 304 Ark. 610, 804 S.W.2d 686 (1991).

While it seems clear that an ordinary gun or weapon would not fit into a matchbox, this does not mean that the officer did not have the right to open the matchbox. Under this rule, he was authorized to seize "any weapon or other dangerous thing" which "may" be used against the officer and even a "penny" matchbox could hold a razor blade. Jackson v. State, 34 Ark. App. 4, 804 S.W.2d 735 (1991). But see Stewart v. State, 59 Ark. App. 77, 953 S.W.2d 599 (1997).

Without some evidence other than suspicion or a hunch that a matchbox contained a controlled substance, it was patently inappropriate for the officer, under the guise of maintaining his or others' safety, to take a matchbox and open it. Stewart v. State, 59 Ark. App. 77, 953 S.W.2d 599 (1997).

A pat-down search violated the defendant's constitutional right to be free from unreasonable search and seizure because the totality of the evidence did not establish that the police had objective, specific, and articulated facts that justified a reasonable suspicion that the defendant was armed and presently dangerous so as to present a threat as prescribed by the rule. Pettigrew v. State, 64 Ark. App. 339, 984 S.W.2d 72 (1998).

An officer was justified in searching the defendant to ensure his own safety where the officer suspected that the defendant was armed based on his extreme nervousness, his rigid posture, his trembling lips, his manner of dress, and his criminal background. Muhammad v. State, 64 Ark. App. 352, 984 S.W.2d 822 (1998).

It was reasonable to frisk the defendant for weapons after he gave permission for a search of his car in light of the officer's knowledge of the defendant's criminal record, which included aggravated robbery and illegal drug charges, the defendant's persistent nervousness, and his manner of dress, which included a loose pullover shirt. Muhammad v. State, 337 Ark. 291, 988 S.W.2d 17 (1999).

Where a frisk of the defendant for weapons yielded no weapons, the search of the defendant should have ended and the officer could not validly remove a bag from the defendant's rear pocket after manipulating the pocket and determining that it felt like a plastic bag containing a vegetable-like substance. Bell v. State, 68 Ark. App. 288, 7 S.W.3d 343 (1999).

The trial court did not err in finding that a police officer was justified in conducting a pat-down frisk of the defendant where (1) a woman notified the police that the defendant had been following her for several weeks and that she felt that he was stalking her, (2) when the officer arrived at the scene, he noticed that the defendant repeatedly turned around and looked at him through the back window of his truck, (3) when the defendant returned to the vehicle at the officer's command, he began fumbling with something in the seat, and (4) noticing the defendant's furtive movement, the officer drew his weapon when the defendant reached behind the seat to get his wallet. Potter v. State, 342 Ark. 621, 30 S.W.3d 701 (2000).

The fact that a search exceeded the scope of a frisk permitted after a Terry stop did not require the suppression of evidence seized from the defendant since the officers had probable cause to arrest the defendant and, therefore, also had the authority to conduct a search incident to arrest, which is permissibly more intrusive than a Terry frisk. Blockman v. State, 69 Ark. App. 192, 11 S.W.3d 562 (2000).

An officer was authorized to conduct a weapons search of the defendant where (1) the officer legally stopped the defendant for a traffic violation and obtained consent from his girlfriend to search the car, (2) a drug dog alerted the officer to the possibility of drugs in the car, (3) the defendant was visibly nervous during the entire stop and walked around unsteadily and talked very fast, and (4) at one point in time, the defendant raised his shirt and the officer then saw a bulge on the left side of his groin. Newton v. State, 73 Ark. App. 285, 43 S.W.3d 170 (2001).

After defendant and a suspect left defendant's home, the officer frisked the suspect for weapons; the officer's subsequent warrantless entry into defendant's home was not justified under this rule, as the intrusion was more extensive than was reasonably necessary to ensure the safety of the officer or others. Holmes v. State, 75 Ark. App. 46, 54 S.W.3d 121 (2001), aff'd, 347 Ark. 530, 65 S.W.3d 860 (2002).

Pat-down search of defendant was justified under the totality of the circumstances as the testimony revealed that the police officer was concerned about the possibility of drugs and weapons violations; defendant was in a high crime area, the officer had seen defendant and another man engaged in a hand-to-hand transaction, defendant appeared nervous and the officer did not know what was in defendant's pocket. Davis v. State, 351 Ark. 406, 94 S.W.3d 892 (2003).

Although the searching officer testified that defendant did not present a danger to him because defendant was in the custody of a fellow officer, it was still possible that defendant could have broken away from police and obtained access to any weapons in the truck; moreover, unlike Long and Reeves, defendant was stopped because his vehicle met the description of the police broadcast regarding shots being fired from the described vehicle and, thus, it was reasonable for the officer to search the passenger compartment of the automobile for the safety of the officers and the safety of others. Saulsberry v. State, 81 Ark. App. 419, 102 S.W.3d 907 (2003).

Pursuant to a report of a drug related disturbance, officer stopped defendant's vehicle and conducted a pat-down of defendant without any objective, factual basis for a reasonable belief that defendant was dangerous or might have gained immediate control of a weapon, moreover, the illegal frisk was not cured by defendant's purported consent in turning over the small bottle in his pocket as the lapse of time between the pat-down and the request to see what was in his pocket was not sufficient to dissipate the taint; thus, the methamphetamine seized as a result of the illegal frisk was the fruit of the poisonous tree and had to be suppressed. Hill v. State, 2005 Ark. App. LEXIS 9 (Ark. Ct. App. Jan. 5, 2005), sub. op., 89 Ark. App. 126, 206 S.W.3d 300 (2005).

Trial court erred in denying defendant's motion to suppress where the officer provided no reasons for frisking defendant other than that it was "policy" and admitted he had not seen anything that led him to believe that defendant had a weapon; thus, while the officer had a reasonable basis to stop defendant under Ark. R. Crim. P. 3.1, the officer lacked specific, objective, and articulable facts to support a reasonable suspicion that defendant was armed and presently dangerous to warrant a search. Hill v. State, 89 Ark. App. 126, 206 S.W.3d 300, rev'd, 363 Ark. 505, 215 S.W.3d 586 (2005).

Pat-down search was properly conducted, as trial testimony indicated defendant consented to the search, under a totality of the circumstances the search was justified by officers' reasonable suspicion that defendant was armed and dangerous, as defendant was suspected of selling drugs and was carrying a screwdriver, and the search occurred incident to defendant's arrest for which the officers had probable cause. Franklin v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 792, 378 S.W.3d 296 (2010).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress because an officer had reasonable suspicion that defendant was carrying a weapon and, therefore, a frisk of defendant was not an illegal search; the officer testified that defendant's shrugged shoulders, no eye contact, and tightening up indicated to the officer that defendant was lying about not having any weapons or anything illegal. Gilbert v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 857, 379 S.W.3d 774 (2010).

Where defendant appealed his convictions for violating §§ 5-64-443(c) and 5-64-420(a)(2), circuit court's decision to deny his motion to suppress the evidence was not clearly against the preponderance of the evidence. Because he met the officers on his front porch with a rifle, an officer reasonably detained and frisked him to ensure the officers' safety, and the contraband was discovered when, after the valid frisk, defendant voluntarily pulled the contraband out of his pocket and showed it to the officer. King v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 81, 432 S.W.3d 127 (2014).

In a weapons case, a motion to suppress evidence was properly denied because a pat-down was proper where there was objective evidence that defendant posed a potential threat by his consistently aggressive demeanor, which included questioning whether the officer intended to shoot him. Added to the reasonable basis for the safety-frisk was the officer's testimony that he had already formed a legitimate reason to suspect that defendant was in possession of marijuana due the odor emanating from defendant and the vehicle, which gave reasonable suspicion to detain defendant to determine the lawfulness of his conduct, to search the vehicle, and to arrest him, depending on the circumstances. Blair v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 623, 447 S.W.3d 608 (2014).

Search of defendant's wallet violated the Fourth Amendment. While the officer had reasonable suspicion to investigate the presence of defendant's car in a closed city park during the early morning hours and a pat-down search of defendant's outer clothing was reasonable under the Fourth Amendment where the responses of defendant and his companion were evasive, if not completely untruthful and neither of them could produce a driver's license, the officer lacked probable cause to search defendant's wallet for an identification card. Further, it was not disputed that the officer failed to ask defendant to consent to the search of his wallet and defendant did not verbally authorize him to look inside. Shay v. State, 2018 Ark. 393, 562 S.W.3d 832 (2018).

Rule 3.5. Stop of witness to crime.

Whenever a law enforcement officer has reasonable cause to believe that any person found at or near the scene of a felony is a witness to the offense, he may stop that person. After having identified himself, the officer must advise the person of the purpose of the stopping and may then demand of him his name, address, and any information he may have regarding the offense. Such detention shall in all cases be reasonable and shall not exceed fifteen (15) minutes unless the person shall refuse to give such information, in which case the person, if detained further, shall immediately be brought before any judicial officer or prosecuting attorney to be examined with reference to his name, address, or the information he may have regarding the offense.

CASE NOTES

Reasonable Suspicion.

In a murder case, the trial court properly denied a motion to suppress because, although defendant was seized when she was told she could not leave the crime scene, in light of the remoteness of the crime scene and the circumstances existing at the time, requesting defendant to remain at the crime scene was reasonable, and defendant's statements were not incriminating as defendant said that she had last seen the victim the night before when he got into a van with some other people to go and drink beer. Flanagan v. State, 368 Ark. 143, 243 S.W.3d 866 (2006).

Defendant's detention was proper because he volunteered that he heard the shot, and, by the time that the detective directed defendant to remain until questioned, it was known that the victim had been in defendant's apartment immediately before the shooting. Nelson v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 421 (2013).

ARTICLE III. ARREST, CITATION, SUMMONS AND PRETRIAL RELEASE

Rule 4. Arrest: General Provisions

Rule 5. Rule 5. Release by a Law Enforcement Officer Acting Without an Arrest Warrant

Rule 6. Rule 6. Issuance of Summons in Lieu of Arrest Warrant

Rule 7. Arrest with a Warrant

Rule 8. Rule 8. Release by Judicial Officer at First Appearance

Rule 9. The Release Decision

Commentary to Article III

Article III encompasses six rules that establish arrest, citation, and summons authority and prescribe procedures to be followed in making an arrest and issuing a citation or summons. Existing statutory authority in this area is found at Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-401 et seq. (Repl. 1964).

It should be pointed out at this time that beginning in Article III, the terms "person," "accused," and "defendant" are terms of art. With very few exceptions, for the purposes of the rules a "person" does not become an "accused" until an arrest warrant or summons is issued, or until cited; he becomes a "defendant" only after first appearance.

Rule 4 is addressed to the subject of arrest. Rule 4.1 is drawn both from existing statutory authority found at § 43-403 (Repl. 1964) and from A.L.I. § 120.1. The present requirement that a warrantless arrest be supported by "reasonable cause" is retained.

Private persons are empowered to make felony arrests by Rule 4.1(b), which adopts the language of § 43-404 (Repl. 1964). Rule 4.1(c) is designed to make it clear that knowledge of the precise offense committed is not an essential element of a valid arrest.

Rule 4.1(d) provides that an officer making an arrest need not personally have information furnishing reasonable cause so long as the arrest is made on instructions from a police agency collectively having the requisite quantum of knowledge.

Lastly the reader will observe that use of the term "probable cause" has been studiously avoided both in Rule 4 and in the remainder of the rules. In eschewing this term the Commission aligns itself with the A.L.I. Reporters who explain their partiality as follows: Of the several formulations of the standard of belief necessary for an arrest, the draft adopts reasonable cause. This formulation seems better than "probable cause," with its implication that guilt must be more probable than not. Although "probable cause" is the term used in the Fourth Amendment to describe the basis for the issuance of a warrant, the Reporters believe that it is inappropriate to use that term in a modern statute. The word "probable" in an earlier time meant that which was capable of being proved or worthy of belief, and was not linked to more recent notions of probabilities measured mathematically. "Reasonable cause," or its analogue, "reasonable ground," is the term used by statutes in every United States jurisdiction defining the authority to arrest without a warrant. In the arrest cases "reasonable cause" appears to be the more usual term. Commentary to A.L.I. § 120.1 at 132 [footnotes omitted].

Rules 4.2 and 4.3 deal with arrest under warrant. They provide that such an arrest may be made in any county and regardless of whether the arresting officer has physical possession of the warrant. Parallel Arkansas statutory authority is found at §§ 43-411, 43-416 (Repl. 1964). See, also, A.L.I. § 120.3; Fed. R. Crim. P. § 4 (c). Matters such as bases for issuance of arrest warrants and warrant forms are dealt with by Rule 7 discussed infra.

Rule 4.4 obliges a law enforcement officer making an arrest to identify himself, to inform the arrested person that he is under arrest, and to indicate the cause of arrest. As the Comment indicates, the rule makes no effort to exhaustively enumerate all of the warnings which might be constitutionally required. Recent decisions indicate, however, the advisability of giving full Miranda warnings on arrest. Orozco v. Texas, 394 U.S. 324, 89 S. Ct. 1095, 22 L. Ed. 2d 311 (1969). Cf., Johnson v. State, 252 Ark. 1113, 482 S.W.2d 600 (1972); Oulett v. State, 246 Ark. 1130, 442 S.W.2d 216 (1969); Haire v. Sarver, 437 F.2d 1262 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 910, 92 S. Ct. 235, 30 L. Ed. 2d 182 (1971); and Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-416 (Repl. 1964).

Rule 4.5 has no statutory counterpart in Arkansas law. It prohibits the questioning of an arrested person who has indicated in any manner that he does not wish to be questioned.

Rule 4.6 requires that an arrested person be promptly taken to a police station or other place of detention unless the exigencies of the particular case require delay.

Rule 5 provides for release, pursuant to citation, of a person taken into custody for a misdemeanor offense by an officer acting without an arrest warrant.

The initial subpart of Rule 5.1 defines the pivotal terms employed throughout the remaining provisions of Article III. The terms and their definitions are drawn almost word for word from ABA Standards, Pretrial Release § 1.4 (Approved Draft, 1968), designated hereafter as Standards, Pretrial Release. Except with regard to bail, Arkansas statutory and case law do not provide definitions of these terms, at least as they are here employed. See, e.g., Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-701 et seq. (Repl. 1964). A brief discussion of the terms appears in the Standards commentary to Pretrial Release at 29, 30.

Rule 5.2 is central to the entire Article and breaks new ground. In authorizing an officer to issue a citation under specified circumstances, the provision follows the lead of Standards, Pretrial Release, although the rule stops short of its suggested requirement that issuance of citations be mandatory in some instances. The proposed rule is permissive in that it gives the officer in the field latitude to determine whether citation or arrest is more appropriate. The Comment following the provision announces that citation is to be the rule and arrest the exception absent circumstances discussed by the rule. Subsection (d) supplies guidelines to be considered by the officer making the decision.

In conferring discretion to issue citations upon the law enforcement officer, the Commission also brings the proposed rule in line with A.L.I. § 120.2. Like the A.L.I. provision, Rule 5.2 supplies a solution to the problem facing an officer who must deal with the petty misdemeanor and his victim:

[I]t permits the issuance of a citation in a case in which the officer is not empowered to make an arrest without a warrant. An officer called to the place where a petty misdemeanor has been committed may not have authority to make an arrest under [Rule 4.1], because though there is reasonable cause, the offense did not take place in his presence. The victim of the crime may seek to have the officer make an arrest and not understand why the officer cannot do so. In many situations of this kind officers now may respond by characterizing the offense as a felony for the purpose of justifying an arrest, even though they realize that nothing more than a misdemeanor is involved. The power to take the formal step of issuing a citation to appear should reduce the pressure for arrest. A.L.I. at 143.

Subpart (b) of 5.2 is patterned after Standards, Pretrial Release § 2.2(b) and permits the release of persons arrested for misdemeanors. As the commentary to Pretrial Release points out at pages 34, 35, in most instances the accused will have been identified by the time the question arises as to whether he should be released. Since "... custody is costly both in monetary and human terms," in most cases continued custody will serve no purpose, unless it is determined that there is a likelihood that the defendant will not reappear if released. A.L.I. commentary at 19.

Subpart (c) of Rule 5.2 is fashioned to permit the release of a person charged with a felony where the prosecutor feels this to be appropriate.

Rule 5.3 prescribes in detail the requisite form of all citations. It has no complement in either statutory or case law and is drawn from Rule 4 of the Proposed Uniform Rules of Criminal Procedure (Second Tentative Draft: July-August, 1973) designated hereafter as the Uniform Rules. Every citation will speak with a particularity which will preclude confusion as to matters such as the offense alleged, the appearance date, and the cited person's right to representation by counsel.

The procedure for issuing citations is set out by Rule 5.4 which is, in turn, modeled after A.L.I. § 120.2(3). The procedure is similar to that currently employed in Arkansas for traffic offenses.

One aspect of the procedure established by this provision is particularly noteworthy. Although all citation forms will have a space for the signature of the accused (Rule 5.3(a)(vi)), mere delivery of the citation will suffice to formally charge the accused and require court appearance. Of course, an officer may require an accused to sign, and arrest upon refusal. But the language of the rule is calculated to avoid requiring an officer to arrest a person who refuses to sign out of momentary anger or irritation. If the officer feels that an accused will respond to the citation, he can avoid a confrontation and a pointless arrest by simply delivering the citation without any mention of a signature.

It will also be noted that citation and custody are not mutually exclusive. An officer may issue a citation and temporarily retain custody of a person where it appears that the person cited is mentally or physically incapable of caring for himself.

The last subpart of Rule 5 is drawn from Standards, Pretrial Release § 2.4 and reflects the Commission's concern that the citation procedures not be interpreted to restrict in any way the permissible scope of searches incident to "arrest" or, here, restraint pending issuance of a citation in lieu of arrest.

Rule 6 provides authority for the issuance of a summons in lieu of an arrest warrant. Existing authority is ambiguous and perhaps contradictory respecting this authority. Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-102 (Repl. 1964) permits issuance of summons in cases within the jurisdiction of city, police, or justice of the peace courts. Contrariwise, Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-408 (Repl. 1964) imposes upon "magistrates" the duty of issuing arrest warrants where it appears there are reasonable grounds to believe an offense has been committed.

Rule 6.1 resolves matters by providing that any official who may issue an arrest warrant may also issue a "criminal summons" in its stead, where a complaint or information has been filed or an indictment has been returned.

As was the case with Rule 5.2, Rule 6.1 brings the code into substantial conformity with Standards recommendations, although summons procedure is never compulsory under the new rules.

In so providing, the proposed rule recognizes that the logic supporting release of a defendant on order to appear also supports compelling attendance by summons in the first instance.

In establishing the requisite form for summons, Rule 6.2 incorporates all but one of the requirements of Rule 5.3(a) and (b) and, like 5.3, ensures that the defendant knows the nature of the charges against him and the consequences of failure to appear. The requirement not carried forward is that of the signature space.

Rule 6.3 is in accord with Standards, Pretrial Release § 3.4. By allowing service by certified mail it goes slightly further than most modern statutes gearing service of criminal summons to civil procedures. Cf., Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-330 (Repl. 1962). [Superseded].

Rule 7 governs the issuance of warrants. It is largely derived from Uniform Rule 3(b).

Rule 7.1(a) is the necessary corollary of Rules 5.3(b) and 6.2(b): it authorizes the issuance of a warrant for the arrest of a person failing to appear in response to citation or summons.

Rule 7.1(b) sets out standards regulating warrant procedure in all cases not covered by 7.1(a). Issuance of a warrant may be grounded upon written affidavit, recorded testimony, or information, the latter term embracing also an indictment (Rule 1.6(d)). Further, under 7.1(b)(i), it must appear not only that there is reasonable cause to believe an offense was committed by the party sought to be accused, but also that the manner in which it was committed involved violence to persons or the threat or risk of bodily injury. Alternatively, 7.1(b)(ii) authorizes warrant procedure where it appears, upon adverting to criteria set out at 7.1(b)(ii)(A)-(J), that a summons would go unheeded.

Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 22-751, 22-722 (Repl. 1962) have been compressed into a single provision, Rule 7.1(c), which substantially restates present law permitting court clerks to issue arrest warrants.

Rule 7.2 sets out the required form of a warrant. Like 7.1, it is fashioned from the Uniform Rules, specifically Uniform Rule 4(e). Existing statutory authority is found at Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-407 (Repl. 1964). A discussion of the provision is found in the Comment to Uniform Rule 4(e) at pages 29-31.

Rule 7.3 is concerned with return of warrants and summonses, as well as execution after return. Rules 7.3(a) and (b) are taken, respectively, from Uniform Rules 6(c) and 6(b). Rule 7.3(c) is designed to allow service of an unexecuted, uncanceled warrant or summons at any time during the pendency of an information, complaint, or indictment. Cf., Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 43-421, 43-422 (Repl. 1964).

Rule 8 establishes procedures and guidelines designed to result in expeditious determination of a defendant's eligibility for release.

Analogues to Rule 8.1 are found at Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 43-601, 43-605 (Repl. 1964). The rule is in accord with the Standards. See, Standards, Pretrial Release § 4.1. As is the case in the Standards, "[n]o attempt is made here to resolve the many difficult issues involved in determining the duration and conditions of permissible in-custody investigation." Id. at 43.

Rule 8.2 brings Arkansas in line with both Standards, Pretrial Release and the thrust of recent decisions of the United States and Arkansas Supreme Courts. See, Argersinger v. Hamlin, 407 U.S. 25, 92 S. Ct. 2006, 32 L. Ed. 2d 530 (1972); Kitchens v. Smith, 401 U.S. 847, 91 S. Ct. 1089, 28 L. Ed. 2d 519 (1971); Coleman v. Alabama, 399 U.S. 1, 90 S. Ct. 1999, 26 L. Ed. 2d 387 (1970); Graves v. State, 256 Ark. 117, 505 S.W.2d 748 (1974).

The rule treats the subjects of waiver and appointment of counsel for indigents more thoroughly than does Arkansas statutory or decisional law. See, Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 43-605, 43-1203 (Repl. 1964); Cableton v. State, 243 Ark. 351, 420 S.W.2d 534 (1967).

Subpart (a) of Rule 8.2 encourages prearrest determination of an accused's ability to retain, and his desire for, counsel. Moreover, Rule 8.2(a) requires that an indigent defendant who does not waive representation by counsel be afforded counsel except when the trial judge determines that incarceration will in no event be imposed upon conviction.

As the Comment indicates, it was not intended that the rule be interpreted to indorse or criticize any contemplated or currently operational defense service systems.

Moreover, procedures now having only the status of routine practices under present statutory law governing first appearances are explicitly imposed as requirements by Rule 8. See, Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-601 et seq. (Repl. 1964). The defendant is to be informed of his rights to remain silent, to the assistance of counsel, and to communication with friends or counsel.

Rules 8.4 and 8.5, dealing with the circumstances requiring and time of pretrial inquiry, are innovative; they appear to have no counterparts in statutory or decisional authority. Although Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-603 (Repl. 1964) confers certain latitude for a magistrate's exercise of discretion in determining whether to commit, bail, or discharge the accused, no existing statute sets out with specificity the factors to be considered.

The provisions of Rule 9 provide authority to release and enumerate factors and conditions which properly play a role in the release process.

Rules 9.1(a) and (b) provide for release under greater or lesser restrictive conditions, Rule 9.1(a) recognizing the propriety of personal recognizance and release on order to appear, and (b) permitting release on more stringent conditions. Rule 9.1 formally recognizes and encourages nonmonetary release conditions not presently countenanced explicitly by Arkansas statutory law. Cf., Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-709 (Repl. 1964); and Article 2, sections 8 and 9 of the Arkansas Constitution.

Rule 9.2 allows money bail to be set, but does so only in the event that no other condition will assure the appearance of a defendant. Rule 9.2(b) sets out the types of secured and unsecured bonds which are acceptable. Cf., Ark. Stat. Ann. § 43-702 et seq. (Repl. 1964). Appropriate subjects of inquiry in determining the amount of bail are enumerated by Rule 9.2(c), in which the provisions of Standards, Pretrial Release § 5.3(d) are adopted virtually verbatim. Rule 9.2 is accompanied by a policy statement in the form of a Comment.

Rule 9.3 provides the court granting release authority to enter orders prohibiting a variety of kinds of conduct on the part of the defendant.

Rule 9.4 is calculated to avoid misunderstandings as to release conditions. Written recodation of such conditions should serve to discourage meritless petitions seeking release from incarceration imposed as a result of disobedience of them.

Rule 9.5 complements 9.3 by providing remedies for violations of release conditions. Prosecutors and law enforcement officers are given authority to initiate revocation procedures on verified application or reasonable cause.

Rule 9.6 partakes of the rationale underlying 9.5 by making provision for revocation of release by any court upon a showing that reasonable cause exists to believe that a defendant has committed a felony while released pending adjudication of another charge.

RULE 4.

ARREST: GENERAL PROVISIONS

Rule

Rule 4.1. Authority to arrest without warrant.

Rule 4.2. Authority to arrest with warrant.

Rule 4.3. Arrest pursuant to warrant: possession of warrant unnecessary.

Rule 4.4. Procedures on arrest.

Rule 4.5. Limitations on questioning.

Rule 4.6. Procedures on arrest: prompt taking to police station.

Rule 4.7. Recording Custodial Interrogations.

Rule 4.1. Authority to arrest without warrant.

(a) A law enforcement officer may arrest a person without a warrant if:

(i) the officer has reasonable cause to believe that such person has committed a felony;

(ii) the officer has reasonable cause to believe that such person has committed a traffic offense involving:

(A) death or physical injury to a person; or

(B) damage to property; or

(C) driving a vehicle while under the influence of any intoxicating liquor or drug;

(iii) the officer has reasonable cause to believe that such person has committed any violation of law in the officer's presence;

(iv) the officer has reasonable cause to believe that such person has committed acts which constitute a crime under the laws of this state and which constitute domestic abuse as defined by law against a family or household member and which occurred within four (4) hours preceding the arrest if no physical injury was involved or 12 (twelve) hours preceding the arrest if physical injury, as defined in Ark. Code Ann. § 5-1-102, was involved;

(v) the officer is otherwise authorized by law.

(b) A private person may make an arrest where he has reasonable grounds for believing that the person arrested has committed a felony.

(c) An arrest shall not be deemed to have been made on insufficient cause hereunder solely on the ground that the officer or private citizen is unable to determine the particular offense which may have been committed.

(d) A warrantless arrest by an officer not personally possessed of information sufficient to constitute reasonable cause is valid where the arresting officer is instructed to make the arrest by a police agency which collectively possesses knowledge sufficient to constitute reasonable cause.

(e) A person arrested without a warrant shall not be held in custody unless a judicial officer determines, from affidavit, recorded testimony, or other information, that there is reasonable cause to believe that the person has committed an offense. Such reasonable cause determination shall be made promptly, but in no event longer than forty-eight (48) hours from the time of arrest, unless the prosecuting attorney demonstrates that a bona fide emergency or other extraordinary circumstance justifies a delay longer than forty-eight (48) hours. Such reasonable cause determination may be made at the first appearance of the arrested person pursuant to Rule 8.1.

Publisher's Notes.

The Per Curiam Order dated June 6, 1994, provided, in part: "In Gerstein v. Pugh, 420 U.S. 103 (1975), the United States Supreme Court ruled that a person arrested without a warrant is entitled to a prompt judicial determination of probable cause. In County of Riverside v. McLaughlin, 500 U.S. 44 (1991), the Court held that a judicial determination of probable cause within 48 hours of arrest will generally satisfy the promptness requirement of Gerstein, but the court recognized that a longer delay may be justified by 'bona fide emergency or other extraordinary circumstance.' The change to Rule 4.1 codifies Gerstein as modified by Riverside. This new rule is to be applied retroactively to all criminal cases currently pending trial on the merits and to all direct appeals currently in progress. See Powell v. Nevada, 114 S. Ct. 1280 (1994)."

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Commentary to Rule 4.1

Rule 2.1 defines the term "reasonable suspicion" as it is used in Article II. "Reasonable cause," as used in Rule 4.1(a), remains undefined, however, it being left to the courts to give content to this concept on a case by case basis.

Suppression of Confession Following Illegal Warrantless Arrest.

Not every confession following an illegal warrantless arrest will be suppressed, the theory being that illegally arrested persons sometimes divulge criminal conduct of their own "free will." Brown v. Illinois, 422 U.S. 590, 45 L. Ed. 2d 416 (1975); Roderick v. State, 288 Ark. 360, 705 S.W.2d 433 (1986). But the state's burden of proving the absence of all causal connection between an illegal arrest and a subsequent confession of crime is heavy. Not even a showing that adequate Miranda warnings were given before a confession will always sever the causal connection and permit introduction of the evidence. Roderick, supra.

Developments Curing Original Illegality.

The character of detention pursuant to an illegal arrest is not immutably fixed. A statement given during detention pursuant to an originally illegal arrest is admissible where circumstances giving rise to reasonable cause intervene between the illegal warrantless arrest and the statement. For instance, in Brewer v. State, 271 Ark. 810, 611 S.W.2d 179 (1981), after a warrantless arrest attacked as illegal for lack of reasonable cause, defendant was implicated in a statement given by a friend, who was also a suspect. After receiving multiple Miranda warnings, defendant first gave an exculpatory statement and, then, after being told by his girlfriend that she had implicated him, an incriminating one. The Arkansas Supreme Court held that the information received from appellant's girlfriend was "a sufficient intervening circumstance" that "attenuated any taint of [the unlawful] arrest." Id. at 813, 814, 611 S.W.2d at 182.

The Arkansas Supreme Court held that defendant confessed "as an act of free will" as a result of being told that his friend had implicated him in the crime. The "free will" doctrine has been recognized by the U.S. Supreme Court. See Brown v. Illinois, and Roderick v. State: It is entirely possible . . . that persons arrested illegally frequently may decide to confess, as an act of free will unaffected by the initial illegality. But the Miranda warnings, alone and per se, cannot always make the act sufficiently a product of free will to break, for Fourth Amendment purposes, the causal connection between the illegality and the confession.

Roderick at 365, 705 S.W.2d at 436, quoting Brown v. Illinois at 603, 45 L.Ed.2d at 427.

A more reasonable approach would be to distinguish between arrests and detentions following arrests, focusing on the legality of the detention rather than the legality of the original arrest, since the latter is an instantaneous event, the character of which can be affected only by indulging in legal fictions. Whether the Brewer court recognized this distinction and found that illegal detention can be transmuted into lawful detention as a result of information lawfully obtained from a third party after an illegal arrest is uncertain, but Brewer is susceptible to this reading.

In any event, when a statement following an arrest is sought to be excluded, it is clear that Arkansas law requires separate determinations on the legality of the arrest and the excludability of the evidence.

Warrantless Entry of Premises.

The Arkansas Supreme Court's decision in Gaylor v. State, 284 Ark. 215, 681 S.W.2d 348 (1984) discusses exigent circumstances rendering a warrantless entry of premises to make an arrest reasonable and permissible under Payton v. New York, 445 U.S. 573, 63 L. Ed. 2d 639 (1980) and Riddick v. New York, 445 U.S. 573, 63 L. Ed. 2d 639 (1980), which prohibited police officers from making a warrantless, nonconsensual entry into a suspect's home in order to make a routine felony arrest absent exigent circumstances.

Warrantless Arrests for Misdemeanors.

While Rule 4.1(a) permits a warrantless arrest for the misdemeanor traffic offense of DWI, Wright v. State, 17 Ark. App. 24, 702 S.W.2d 811 (1986), it does not permit a warrantless arrest for other misdemeanors involving threatened or actual physical harm to persons. As early as 1974, the Code Revision Commission felt that operating a vehicle while intoxicated was an offense of sufficient gravity to bring it within an exception to the common law in-presence requirement for warrantless arrests. This concern was not, however, great enough to lead it to permit warrantless arrests for this offense by private citizens. Brewer v. State, 286 Ark. 1, 688 S.W.2d 736 (1985).

Presumptive Legality of Arrests; Standard of Review.

Though warrantless vehicular searches (and, a fortiori, residential searches) are presumptively unlawful, Leopold v. State, 15 Ark. App. 292, 692 S.W.2d 780 (1985) and Jackson v. State, 274 Ark. 317, 624 S.W.2d 437 (1981) (home search), warrantless arrests are presumptively legal, with appellant bearing the burden of proving otherwise on appeal. Freeman v. State, 6 Ark. App. 240, 640 S.W.2d 456 (1982), relying on Thorne v. State, 274 Ark. 102, 622 S.W.2d 178 (1981). On appeal, the Arkansas Supreme Court makes an independent determination and will reverse the trial court's decision on the legality of a search if it is clearly erroneous. Smith v. State, 265 Ark. 104, 576 S.W.2d 957 (1979); State v. Osborn, 263 Ark. 554, 566 S.W.2d 139 (1978). In arrest cases, all presumptions on appeal are favorable to the trial court's ruling, and the burden of establishing error rests on appellant. Gaylor v. State, 284 Ark. 215, 681 S.W.2d 348 (1984).

Arrests Pursuant to Information from Another Jurisdiction.

Though officers in one locality may justifiably make an arrest in reliance upon information reasonable on its face received from officials in another place, this does not preclude a subsequent attack on the legality of the arrest grounded on lack of reasonable cause. In Whiteley v. Warden, 401 U.S. 560, 28 L. Ed. 2d 306 (1971), the Court said: "We do not, of course, question that the Laramie police were entitled to act on the strength of the radio bulletin. Certainly police officers called upon to aid other officers in executing arrest warrants are entitled to assume that the officers requesting aid offered the magistrate the information requisite to support an independent judicial assessment of probable cause. Where, however, the contrary turns out to be true, an otherwise illegal arrest cannot be insulated from challenge by the decision of the instigating officer to rely on fellow officers to make the arrest." 401 U.S. at 568, 28 L. Ed. 2d at 313.

CASE NOTESBurden of Proof.

Probable cause to arrest without a warrant does not require the degree of proof sufficient to sustain a conviction. Hudson v. State, 316 Ark. 360, 872 S.W.2d 68 (1994).

This rule protects the federal constitutional right of a person to a judicial determination of probable cause as a prerequisite to extended restraint of liberty following arrest; at this preliminary stage, the state is required to present proof that justifies the accused's arrest, not to establish the accused's guilt. Nance v. State, 323 Ark. 583, 918 S.W.2d 114, cert. denied, 519 U.S. 847, 117 S. Ct. 134, 136 L. Ed. 2d 83 (1996).

Collective Police Information.

This rule embodies the principle that a warrantless arrest is to be evaluated on the basis of the collective information of the police. Jackson v. State, 274 Ark. 317, 624 S.W.2d 437 (1981).

The test of probable cause for the stopping of an automobile rests upon the collective information of the police officers and not upon the information of the officer actually stopping the vehicle. Gass v. State, 17 Ark. App. 176, 706 S.W.2d 397 (1986); Mock v. State, 20 Ark. App. 117, 725 S.W.2d 1 (1987).

Due Process.

Defendant was not constitutionally entitled to a verbatim transcription of the probable-cause proceeding; officer's affidavit and the bench warrant satisfied defendant's constitutional requirements to due process at this most preliminary stage of the criminal proceedings. Nance v. State, 323 Ark. 583, 918 S.W.2d 114, cert. denied, 519 U.S. 847, 117 S. Ct. 134, 136 L. Ed. 2d 83 (1996).

Illegal Arrest.

An illegal arrest is not grounds for dismissal of criminal charges. State v. Fore, 46 Ark. App. 27, 876 S.W.2d 278 (1994).

Informants.

Where a confidential informant had reported that defendant and another person had been processing and packaging marijuana and that defendant had departed in his car with cocaine in his possession and earlier information indicated that defendant was engaged in drug trafficking the police officer had reasonable cause to believe that defendant had committed a felony. Hudson v. State, 316 Ark. 360, 872 S.W.2d 68 (1994).

Knowledge of Out-of-State Warrant.

Where two state police officers were aware that the county sheriff's office had an out-of-state warrant charging defendant with assault and battery with intent to kill, the officers had probable cause for defendant's arrest. Woodall v. State, 260 Ark. 786, 543 S.W.2d 957 (1976).

Law Enforcement Officer.

Where a defendant was arrested and issued a citation by two unsupervised auxiliary deputies for the misdemeanor of driving while intoxicated, the defendant could not be tried or convicted of the offense because the unsupervised auxiliary deputies lacked the authority to lawfully charge the defendant with a misdemeanor offense. Brewer v. State, 286 Ark. 1, 688 S.W.2d 736 (1985).

Offense Committed.

An arrest shall not be deemed to have been made on insufficient cause solely on the ground that an officer was unable to determine the particular offense which may have been committed; reasonable cause to arrest without a warrant exists when the facts and circumstances within the officers' collective knowledge, and of which they have reasonably trustworthy information, are sufficient in themselves to warrant in a man of reasonable caution the belief that an offense has been committed by the person to be arrested. Yocum v. State, 325 Ark. 180, 925 S.W.2d 385 (1996).

Private Persons.

A private person has the authority to make an arrest where he has reasonable grounds for believing that the person arrested has committed a felony, but no such authority in case of a misdemeanor. Perry v. State, 303 Ark. 100, 794 S.W.2d 141 (1990).

Reasonable Cause.

Probable cause, or reasonable cause, exists where facts and circumstances within the officer's knowledge and of which he has reasonably trustworthy knowledge are sufficient in themselves to warrant a man of reasonable caution to conclude that an offense has been or is being committed. McGuire v. State, 265 Ark. 621, 580 S.W.2d 198 (1979); Gaylor v. State, 284 Ark. 215, 681 S.W.2d 348 (1984); Wright v. State, 17

Ark. App. 24, 702 S.W.2d 811 (1986); Roderick v. State, 288 Ark. 360, 705 S.W.2d 433 (1986); Gass v. State, 17 Ark. App. 176, 706 S.W.2d 397 (1986); Mock v. State, 20 Ark. App. 117, 725 S.W.2d 1 (1987); Johnson v. State, 21 Ark. App. 211, 730 S.W.2d 517 (1987); Vega v. State, 26 Ark. App. 172, 762 S.W.2d 1 (1988).

Officers had reasonable cause to arrest defendant. Davis v. State, 271 Ark. 492, 609 S.W.2d 109 (Ct. App. 1980); Washington v. Simpson, 806 F.2d 192 (8th Cir. 1986); Gass v. State, 17 Ark. App. 176, 706 S.W.2d 397 (1986); Johnson v. State, 21 Ark. App. 211, 730 S.W.2d 517 (1987); Chism v. State, 312 Ark. 559, 853 S.W.2d 255 (1993).

In determining whether there is reasonable cause to arrest a defendant without a warrant, the issue is not whether there is sufficient evidence to sustain a conviction, but rather whether there is sufficient evidence for the police officers to believe, in good faith, that they had probable cause to make the arrest. Washington v. Simpson, 806 F.2d 192 (8th Cir. 1986).

The district court was not clearly erroneous in concluding that the parolee's attempt to conceal herself in the defendant's room, with his knowledge, coupled with the defendant's assertion of ignorance regarding the parolee's whereabouts, constituted reasonable belief by the officers that the defendant was attempting to hinder the apprehension of the parolee in violation of § 5-54-105; therefore, the officers had reasonable cause to arrest the defendant. Washington v. Simpson, 806 F.2d 192 (8th Cir. 1986).

Probable cause to arrest without a warrant does not require that degree of proof sufficient to sustain a conviction; however, a mere suspicion is not enough and even a "strong reason to suspect," will not suffice. Roderick v. State, 288 Ark. 360, 705 S.W.2d 433 (1986); Gass v. State, 17 Ark. App. 176, 706 S.W.2d 397 (1986); Vega v. State, 26 Ark. App. 172, 762 S.W.2d 1 (1988).

Where the only proof was that the victim and the defendant were seen together in public, there was not probable cause to charge the defendant with murder. Roderick v. State, 288 Ark. 360, 705 S.W.2d 433 (1986).

Where there was sufficient reasonable cause to believe defendant had committed a felony to support a warrantless arrest, any possible defect in either the information or warrant would therefore not render his arrest unlawful. Van Daley v. State, 20 Ark. App. 127, 725 S.W.2d 574 (1987).

A determination of probable cause to arrest exists where a reasonable ground of suspicion is supported by circumstances sufficiently strong to warrant a cautious person to believe the suspect committed a crime, yet the degree of proof that would sustain a conviction is not required. Stout v. State, 304 Ark. 610, 804 S.W.2d 686 (1991).

Even if the officer could not open a matchbox, which contained crack cocaine, because he could not reasonably suspect it contained "any weapon or other dangerous thing," he could certainly know from its sound and feel that it did not contain matches. And under all the circumstances shown by the evidence, the officer would have reasonable cause to believe the box contained a controlled substance of some type. With the matchbox lawfully in his hand and with reasonable cause to believe it contained a controlled substance, the officer could arrest the appellant and, as incident to the arrest, he could seize the contraband in the matchbox. Jackson v. State, 34 Ark. App. 4, 804 S.W.2d 735 (1991). But see Stewart v. State, 59 Ark. App. 77, 953 S.W.2d 599 (1997).

When the defendant would not identify objects in his hand when asked to do so by a police officer, but ate them, the officer had reasonable cause to suspect the substance was a prohibited substance, even if the officer did not know exactly what. Crail v. State, 309 Ark. 120, 827 S.W.2d 157 (1992).

The same standards govern reasonable (that is to say, probable) cause determinations, whether the question is the validity of an arrest or the validity of a search and seizure. Hudson v. State, 316 Ark. 360, 872 S.W.2d 68 (1994).

Reasonable, or probable, cause for a warrantless arrest exists when the facts and circumstances within an officer's knowledge are sufficient to permit a person of reasonable caution to believe that an offense has been committed by the person to be arrested. Hudson v. State, 316 Ark. 360, 872 S.W.2d 68 (1994).

A violation of § 27-14-306 provides a police officer with reasonable cause to believe that the driver of the vehicle is committing a violation of the law in his presence. Wilburn v. State, 317 Ark. 73, 876 S.W.2d 555 (1994).

The conduct of the defendant gave reasonable cause to believe that he was in violation of § 5-71-207, the disorderly conduct statute; thus his subsequent warrantless arrest was legal under former subdivision (c)(iii) of this rule. Williams v. State, 47 Ark. App. 143, 887 S.W.2d 312 (1994).

The smell of marijuana or its smoke emanating from a vehicle constitutes facts and circumstances sufficient to warrant a person of reasonable caution to believe that a controlled substance has been or is being possessed and/or delivered, thus giving an officer probable cause to arrest. Brunson v. State, 327 Ark. 567, 940 S.W.2d 440, cert. denied, 522 U.S. 898, 118 S. Ct. 244, 139 L. Ed. 2d 173 (1997).

Where the officers indisputably observed defendant violate several laws while in their presence, there was a factual basis for the stop and reasonable cause for the arrest. Hazelwood v. State, 328 Ark. 602, 945 S.W.2d 365 (1997).

The court did not err in determining that the defendant was afforded a probable cause determination within 48 hours of his arrest where (1) it was undisputed that the determination was made at about 9:30 A.M., two days after his arrest, and (2) although there was conflicting evidence as to the time of arrest, the arrest report stated that he was arrested at 10:50 A.M. Britt v. State, 344 Ark. 13, 38 S.W.3d 363 (2001).

There was probable cause to support defendant's arrest because defendant was exceeding the posted speed limit, defendant was driving a car with fictitious tags, which was a crime, and both the vehicle and defendant matched the description of the robbery suspect that the police were given; thus, the officer had reasonable cause to believe that an offense had been committed by defendant. Medlock v. State, 79 Ark. App. 447, 89 S.W.3d 357 (2002).

On appeal of the denial of defendant's motion to suppress evidence, the state's argument that an officer could have arrested defendant for loitering and searched him incident to that arrest failed; at the time the officer detained defendant, the officer could not have reasonably suspected defendant of loitering because he had not observed defendant long enough to determine if he had been "lingering" or "remaining" outside the liquor store, as was required by § 5-71-213. Brazwell v. State, 354 Ark. 281, 119 S.W.3d 499 (2003).

The officer's observations with regard to the smell of alcohol and defendant's bloodshot eyes, in addition to defendant's refusal to take the portable breath test and his admission that he had been drinking, was sufficient to sustain the finding that there was probable cause to arrest defendant for driving while intoxicated. Hilton v. State, 80 Ark. App. 401, 96 S.W.3d 757 (2003).

Police officers who obtained a warrant authorizing them to arrest defendant on a charge of theft also had probable cause to arrest defendant without a warrant on charges of capital murder and aggravated robbery, thus, the trial court properly rejected defendant's claim that statements he made to police about his participation in a capital murder and an aggravated robbery should have been suppressed. Romes v. State, 356 Ark. 26, 144 S.W.3d 750 (2004).

Where police discovered marijuana in a vehicle in which defendant was an occupant, the police had probable cause to arrest defendant, and the discovery of marijuana in defendant's shoe was the result of a legal search incident to his arrest; the search was valid even though conducted before the actual arrest since the arrest and search were substantially contemporaneous and there was probable cause to arrest prior to the search. Thornton v. State, 85 Ark. App. 31, 144 S.W.3d 766 (2004).

No error was committed by the trial court in refusing to suppress evidence that was seized incident to defendant's arrest because, given all the information known to the police officers, they had reasonable cause to believe that defendant had committed a felony, and they had authority under this rule, Ark. R. Crim. P. 12.1, and 12.2 to make the warrantless arrest and to conduct a limited search. Edwards v. State, 360 Ark. 413, 201 S.W.3d 909 (2005).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress evidence of bags of cocaine that were found in his mouth because, once an officer found a crack pipe in the backseat of the vehicle in which defendant was riding, he had probable cause to arrest defendant; after the valid arrest, the officer could search defendant's person. Swan v. State, 94 Ark. App. 115, 226 S.W.3d 6 (2006).

Defendant's arrest for DWI and search incident to arrest were proper under the standards set forth in subdivision (a)(ii)(C) of this rule and Ark. R. Crim. P. 12.1(d) because a restaurant manager had reported that defendant was intoxicated, the officer discovered defendant sitting in his vehicle, with the keys in the ignition, and he failed two field sobriety tests, thus providing probable cause for arrest. Stewart v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 9, 373 S.W.3d 387 (2010).

Trial court committed no error in denying defendant's motion to suppress his custodial statement and in concluding that police officers had reasonable cause to arrest him without a warrant because the facts and circumstances gave the officers reasonable cause to believe that defendant was the escaped driver who had engaged in multiple felonies earlier that day; the police were given information that a man covered in mud and shivering was in a wooded area where people normally did not go; upon investigating, the police found defendant; and his items of clothing matched the description of those worn by the driver who had escaped into the woods. Barber v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 210, 374 S.W.3d 709 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress his statements and the items found in his possession at his arrest because his arrest was valid under this rule since the facts and circumstances were sufficient to permit a person of reasonable caution to believe that defendant had committed a felony; law enforcement officers testified that they personally believed or knew that the property to be searched under a warrant was defendant's residence, that they found mail addressed to him and a court order from a case involving him, and that defendant and his parents began to pull into the driveway but changed course and drove off as soon as they saw that law enforcement was there. Smith v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 539 (2011).

Denial of motion to suppress was not clearly against the preponderance of the evidence, because the inventory search of defendant's vehicle was proper upon defendant's lawful arrest, and it was standard police policy to inventory the contents of any vehicle before having it towed; at the time of defendant's arrest theft of property was a Class C felony if the value of the property was less than $2,500 but more than $500, and criminal attempt was a Class D felony if the offense attempted was a Class C felony. Boykin v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 274, 409 S.W.3d 321 (2012).

There was reasonable cause for defendant's arrest for DWI and it was proper under subdivision (a)(ii)(C) of this rule, because the trooper's observations of defendant's driving, his demeanor, and the odor of alcohol led him to believe that defendant was driving under the influence of intoxicants and was a danger to himself or others. Lewis v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 39 (2013).

Police officer had probable cause to arrest defendant because the officer observed defendant's vehicle cross a center line of a roadway and noted that defendant's eyes were bloodshot and watery, defendant's actions were lethargic and exaggerated, and defendant's speech was slow and deliberate. Tiller v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 431, 439 S.W.3d 705 (2014).

Circuit court's denial of defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized during a traffic stop was affirmed where the deputy testified that he knew from a prior traffic stop that defendant's license had been suspended, and thus, pursuant to subdivision (a)(iii) of this rule, he had reasonable cause to believe that appellant was violating Ark. Code Ann. § 5-65-105. Williams v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 291, 524 S.W.3d 13 (2017).

Separation of Powers.

Order authorizing police officers to pick up the parties' child from the mother and deliver the child to the father for visitation did not violate the separation-of-powers doctrine. The trial court directed officers to assist in the implementation of its order by transporting the child; as such, they were officers of the court for that purpose and were authorized to make arrests for violation thereof under subdivision (a)(iii) of this rule and § 16-81-106(c)(1). Brock v. Eubanks, 102 Ark. App. 165, sub. op., 102 Ark. App. 165, 288 S.W.3d 272 (2008).

Statement After Illegal Arrest.

Where the defendant was jailed merely on suspicion and told to "think it over," there was a lapse of only a few hours between the arrest and the statement, and the defendant was alternately threatened and coaxed with assurances of assistance, the state failed to demonstrate that the illegal arrest and the ensuing statement were separate and independent of each other; accordingly, the statement should have been suppressed. Roderick v. State, 288 Ark. 360, 705 S.W.2d 433 (1986).

Statement After Warrantless Arrest.

Where defendant may have been illegally arrested for burglary of a store, incriminating statements which he made relating to a robbery and murder at another store, after his girlfriend visited him in jail, and police informed him that she had incriminated him in the murder and robbery, were admissible in evidence at his trial for aggravated robbery, since he had twice been given his Miranda rights and had had approximately 24 hours for reflection and deliberation before giving his incriminating statement. Brewer v. State, 271 Ark. 810, 611 S.W.2d 179 (1981).

Supersession of Statute.

Section 16-81-114, which allows a warrantless arrest for gas theft, is not superseded by this rule. State v. Lester, 343 Ark. 662, 38 S.W.3d 313 (2001).

Violation of Law in Officer's Presence.

Where deputy sheriff stopped defendant's truck because the Texas license plate did not display an expiration sticker, and the deputy believed that the law of Texas, like the law of Arkansas, required license plates to display expiration stickers, then even though the deputy was erroneous, he had probable cause to make a traffic stop; it does not matter whether the defendant is actually guilty of the violation that was the basis for the stop, all that is required is that the officer had probable cause to believe that a traffic violation had occurred. Travis v. State, 331 Ark. 7, 959 S.W.2d 32 (1998).

Warrantless Arrest Justified.

Circumstances justified a warrantless arrest by police summoned by the alert observer based upon exigent circumstances, or upon the "fresh pursuit" exception as defined in § 16-81-303; in any event, the defendant's failure to show that the arrest was not based on reasonable cause under this rule prevented him from overcoming the presumption on appeal that the arrest was legal. Thorne v. State, 274 Ark. 102, 622 S.W.2d 178 (1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1024, 102 S. Ct. 1726, 72 L. Ed. 2d 144 (1982).

Where the officer had personal observations sufficient to warrant his belief that the defendant was intoxicated, and he had reasonably trustworthy information from a deputy sheriff that he had observed the defendant operating a motor vehicle in that condition a few minutes earlier, the arresting officer had reasonable cause for the arrest without a warrant. Wright v. State, 17 Ark. App. 24, 702 S.W.2d 811 (1986).

Where officers witnessed defendant carrying freshly-cut marijuana stalks across his yard, clearly giving them reasonable cause to believe he was committing a felony, they were authorized to arrest without a warrant under subdivision (a)(i) of this rule. Johnson v. State, 291 Ark. 260, 724 S.W.2d 160, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 830, 108 S. Ct. 101, 98 L. Ed. 2d 61 (1987).

warrantless arrest of defendant at his motel was not illegal. Ross v. State, 300 Ark. 369, 779 S.W.2d 161 (1989).

Arrest without a warrant was in violation of subsection (d) of this rule, where the arrest was made by an officer who did not personally possess the information constituting reasonable cause and who was not instructed by officers of another jurisdiction, who did possess the information constituting reasonable cause, to arrest defendant but only requested other law enforcement agencies to stop defendant and hold him for questioning. Friend v. State, 315 Ark. 143, 865 S.W.2d 275 (1993).

Officers who collectively were aware that victim had been killed, that defendant's voice was heard at the time victim was murdered, and that defendant was apparently the assailant, had reasonable cause to arrest without a warrant. Williams v. State, 321 Ark. 344, 902 S.W.2d 767, cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1030, 116 S.Ct. 676, 133 L. Ed. 2d 525 (1995).

Officers had reasonable cause to believe, at the time of defendant's arrest, that he had committed a felony by working together with codefendant in the trafficking of drugs; an informant had implicated both defendant and codefendant in the trafficking of cocaine and, acting on that information, officers arrested codefendant, who admitted to all allegations, including codefendant's having worked with defendant in the purchase and sale of cocaine, and when officers asked codefendant to arrange a meeting with defendant, codefendant had no trouble in doing so. Baxter v. State, 324 Ark. 440, 922 S.W.2d 682 (1996).

The warrantless arrest of the defendant for robbery was justified where the defendant matched the description of one of the robbers, and where he was seen within a block of the scene of the robbery within minutes of its commission provided the police with reasonable cause to believe that he had committed the crime. McKenzie v. State, 69 Ark. App. 186, 12 S.W.3d 250 (2000).

There was probable cause to arrest the defendant without regard to the validity of a warrant where (1) the arresting officers had information that the defendant was seen at the site of a multiple-killing homicide at about the same time that the victims were allegedly killed, with one of the victims being his girlfriend who had recently accused him of battery, and (2) before the police could even approach the defendant to detain him for investigatory purposes, he fled from them while armed with a weapon. Smith v. State, 343 Ark. 552, 39 S.W.3d 739 (2001).

Trial court did not err in finding that defendant's arrest was valid; given that defendant was the last person seen at the crime scene, defendant's girlfriend gave police the murder weapon, and defendant had access to a gun, the police had probable cause to arrest defendant without a warrant pursuant to this rule. Winston v. State, 355 Ark. 11, 131 S.W.3d 333 (2003).

Police officer's inability to determine at the time of the arrest the particular offense that defendant had committed did not make the arrest illegal, especially where defendant's statement regarding his attempt to contact his wife, coupled with his statement that there was an updated order of protection, provided the officer with probable cause to believe that defendant was committing the offense of violation of an order of protection by attempting to harass his wife. West v. State, 82 Ark. App. 165, 120 S.W.3d 100 (2003).

Where defendant confessed to the shooting shortly after being brought to the police station, the officers had sufficient evidence to justify his arrest. Otis v. State, 364 Ark. 151, 217 S.W.3d 839 (2005).

Judgment notwithstanding the verdict was properly granted in a malicious prosecution case where the passenger of a truck was arrested when the vehicle bumped a key-card entry gate; even if there was no damage to the gate or a mistake about such, there was still probable cause for an arrest for criminal mischief or attempt under subsection (c) of this rule. Coombs v. Hot Springs Vill. Prop. Owners Ass'n, 98 Ark. App. 226, 254 S.W.3d 5 (2007).

Motion to suppress evidence was properly denied based on an allegedly illegal arrest because, where officers saw two defendants enter two retail stores and purchase pseudoephedrine, there was probable cause to arrest them under subdivision (a)(iii) of this rule; the officers suspected that defendants were over the legal limit due to their purchases. Champlin v. State, 98 Ark. App. 305, 254 S.W.3d 780 (2007).

Police officer had reasonable cause to believe that defendant had committed an offense involving the domestic abuse of his wife and child, even if he did not articulate the specific offense, and thus was entitled to arrest defendant without a warrant. The police officer, who was dispatched to defendant's home after receiving a domestic-disturbance call, arrested defendant after learning from defendant's wife and neighbors that defendant had thrown dishes and candles at his wife and child, had shaken his wife to the extent of leaving marks on her, and threatened her. Koster v. State, 374 Ark. 74, 286 S.W.3d 152 (2008).

Where a confidential informant appeared at a drug dealer's home to buy drugs, the drug dealer's wife contacted defendant, and defendant immediately left his home carrying a package, drove to the dealer's home, entered the home without knocking, and left a short time thereafter without the package, the police had probable cause to effect a warrantless arrest of defendant because the evidence essentially established a call by a known drug dealer requesting the delivery of narcotics from a supplier, immediate movement by a known drug supplier who was the suspected supplier, direct travel by that supplier to the source of the supply request, and the apparent delivery of a package. While this proof may not have been sufficient to convict defendant, it provided sufficient probable cause to make an arrest. Pullan v. State, 104 Ark. App. 78, 289 S.W.3d 180 (2008).

Evidence seized upon defendant's arrest did not violate his rights under the U.S. Constitution, Ark. Const., Art. 2, § 15, or Ark. R. Crim. P. 3.1 and this rule because defendant's erratic driving in a high crime area provided a reasonable suspicion to stop him, and defendant's attempts to hide his identity from the officer provided probable cause for his arrest. Mosley v. Ark., 2009 Ark. App. 799, 370 S.W.3d 273 (2009).

In a weapons case, a motion to suppress evidence was properly denied because a pat-down was proper where there was objective evidence that defendant posed a potential threat by his consistently aggressive demeanor, which included questioning whether the officer intended to shoot him. Added to the reasonable basis for the safety-frisk was the officer's testimony that he had already formed a legitimate reason to suspect that defendant was in possession of marijuana due the odor emanating from defendant and the vehicle, which gave reasonable suspicion to detain defendant to determine the lawfulness of his conduct, to search the vehicle, and to arrest him, depending on the circumstances. Blair v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 623, 447 S.W.3d 608 (2014).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress because his warrantless arrest was supported by probable cause where the confidential informant was not an anonymous tipster and had been used by other detectives, at least one of whom found her knowledge relating to drug activity to be credible, the officers' investigation and personal knowledge corroborated the informant's information, defendant's flight to avoid arrest was admissible in corroboration of evidence tending to establish guilt, and the officers' warrantless arrest of defendant was justified. King v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 84 (2015).

Warrantless Arrest Not Justified.

Defendant's motion to suppress should have been granted where the officers lacked probable cause to arrest him for driving under a suspended or revoked driver's license and consequently were precluded from inventorying his impounded vehicle in which 60 kilograms (130 pounds) of cocaine were discovered. Mounts v. State, 48 Ark. App. 1, 888 S.W.2d 321 (1994).

Rule 4.2. Authority to arrest with warrant.

Any law enforcement officer may arrest a person pursuant to a warrant in any county in the state.

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Commentary to Rule 4.2

Though authority to make arrests with warrants is precisely defined by Rule 4.2, questions about the legality of warrantless arrests by local officers beyond the boundaries of their political subdivisions must be resolved by reference to less certain "fresh pursuit" standards. Arrest Proper.

Circuit court did not clearly err in finding that the search was not illegal where a probation violation warrant was on the computer and the request for confirmation of the warrant was a matter of terminology or verbiage used within the Texarkana Police Department in dealing with local warrants, and thus defendant was properly arrested under Ark. R. Crim. P. 4.2. Saffel v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 163 (2021).

Arrest Without Warrant.

Rule 4.4. Procedures on arrest.

Upon making an arrest, a law enforcement officer shall

- (a) identify himself as such unless his identity is otherwise apparent;
- (b) inform the arrested person that he is under arrest; and
- (c) as promptly as is reasonable under the circumstances, inform the arrested person of the cause of the arrest.

Comment to Rule 4.4

This rule does not attempt to set out all warnings which might be required or advisable in an arrest context. Accordingly, the rule should not be interpreted as relaxing any obligation to provide constitutionally required warnings.

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Commentary to Rule 4.4

Failure to Inform Defendant that He is Under Arrest. In Williams v. State, 278 Ark. 9, 642 S.W.2d 887 (1982), the appellant sought to suppress evidence seized after an arrest, arguing that no one told him that he had been arrested. The Court rejected the argument, holding that formal words of arrest are not essential. Implicit in the Williams decision is the notion that the state will not be permitted to rely on an officer's failure to utter "magic words" to avoid the constitutional circumscriptions on questioning that come into being after arrest. Interrogations following restraint clearly constituting arrest cannot be characterized as non-custodial simply because the officer did not take the time to verbally apprise a defendant of his arrest.

Illegal Arrest.

An illegal arrest is not grounds for dismissal of criminal charges. State v. Fore, 46 Ark. App. 27, 876 S.W.2d 278 (1994).

Interrogation.

Officers did not reinitiate further communication with defendant simply by telling him that he was going to be held overnight. The officers had a duty to inform appellant that he was under arrest under subsection (b). Words or conduct on the part of the police normally attendant to arrest and custody do not constitute interrogation. Brunson v. State, 41 Ark. App. 39, 848 S.W.2d 936 (1993).

Rule 4.5. Limitations on questioning.

No law enforcement officer shall question an arrested person if the person has indicated in any manner that he does not wish to be questioned, or that he wishes to consult counsel before submitting to any questioning.

CASE NOTES

Blood Alcohol Testing.

Notwithstanding this rule, the Court of Appeals of Arkansas held that defendant had no right to consult with counsel before taking a breathalyzer test following a traffic stop. Lewis v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 39 (2013).

Invocation of Right to Remain Silent.

Circuit court erroneously denied defendant's motion to suppress his statement given after he was apprehended by police on the night of a murder because (1) defendant indicated, "I don't want to say anything right now," immediately upon being advised of his Miranda rights; (2) defendant's response was an invocation of his right to remain silent and an initial indication that he did not wish to be questioned; (3) having invoked his Miranda rights under both Miranda and this rule, law enforcement was obligated to scrupulously honor defendant's assertion of his rights and should have refrained from continuing to ask defendant about the crime; and (4) defendant's subsequent conversation with a police officer was not initiated by defendant. Robinson v. State, 373 Ark. 305, 283 S.W.3d 558 (2008).

None of defendant's statements unambiguously and unequivocally indicated defendant's right to remain silent or a right to counsel; defendant was conscious of his Miranda rights and he continued to talk to the officer and answer his questions even though he knew it was against his best interest, and there was no error in allowing the indicated portions of the custodial statement. Sykes v. State, 2009 Ark. 522, 357 S.W.3d 882 (2009).

Appellant argued that the circuit court should have suppressed his statement because he invoked his right to remain silent; however, viewing that statement in context, it was made after appellant repeatedly denied sexually assaulting the victim and the detective repeatedly refused to believe appellant. In essence, appellant and the detective were arguing and appellant was informing the detective that if he did not believe him, then there was nothing left to discuss; however, appellant kept talking, denying involvement, so appellant's statement was not an unequivocal request invoking his right to remain silent and pursuant to Bowen, his willingness to continue the conversation implicitly waived any attempt to invoke that right. Bryant v. State, 2010 Ark. 7, 377 S.W.3d 152 (2010).

Defendant's question to an interrogating officer — "How soon can I talk to an attorney?" — was not an unambiguous and unequivocal request for an attorney. Further, the officer informed defendant of the process by which he could obtain an attorney, and defendant continued with his confession without further referencing his desire for an attorney. Davis v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 686, 386 S.W.3d 647 (2011).

Although defendant unequivocally invoked his right to remain silent, a detective never ceased questioning him, and defendant could not have waived the earlier invocation of his right. Due to the trial court's prejudicial error in admitting defendant's statement, his convictions for aggravated robbery and firearm enhancement were reversed. Coleman v. State, 2017 Ark. 218, 521 S.W.3d 483 (2017).

Trial court properly denied petition for post-conviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object and file a motion to suppress appellant's Miranda rights form and custodial statement; appellant admitted he committed the offenses, the eyewitness testimony confirmed that he committed the offenses, and appellant did not invoke his right to remain silent but simply requested that his statement not be recorded at that time, which did not rise to the level of an invocation of his right to remain silent. Gordon v. State, 2018 Ark. 73, 539 S.W.3d 586 (2018).

Waiver.

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress certain statements she made during questioning regarding her missing child; although defendant claimed that she had done the best she could to convey to the officer that she was concerned about continuing to talk to him without a lawyer present, when the officer asked defendant whether she was asking for a lawyer, she did not answer that question but continued answering other questions and did not mention a lawyer again during the interview. Gilbert v. State, 88 Ark. App. 296, 198 S.W.3d 561 (2004).

Defendant's in-custody statement was voluntary and admissible because defendant waived her Miranda rights by implication because defendant was advised of her Miranda rights by an Arkansas state trooper prior to an interrogation by a county sheriff, the county sheriff specifically asked defendant if she had been advised of her rights, and when she answered that she had, the county sheriff asked if keeping that in mind she wished to speak with him, and defendant responded that she did. Young v. State, 373 Ark. 41, 281 S.W.3d 255 (2008).

Rule 4.6. Procedures on arrest: prompt taking to police station.

Any person arrested, if not released pursuant to these rules, shall be brought promptly to a jail, police station, or other similar place. The arresting officer may, however, first take the person to some other place, if:

- (a) the person so requests; or
- (b) such action is reasonably necessary for the purpose of having the person identified:
 - (i) by a person who is otherwise unlikely to be able to make the identification; or
 - (ii) by a person near the place of the arrest or near the scene of a recently committed offense.

Rule 4.7. Recording Custodial Interrogations.

(a) Whenever practical, a custodial interrogation at a jail, police station, or other similar place, should be electronically recorded.

(b)(1) In determining the admissibility of any custodial statement, the court may consider, together with all other relevant evidence and consistent with existing law, whether an electronic recording was made; if not, why not; and whether any recording is substantially accurate and not intentionally altered.

(2) The lack of a recording shall not be considered in determining the admissibility of a custodial statement in the following circumstances:

(A) a statement made by the accused in open court at his or her trial, before a grand jury, or at a preliminary hearing,

(B) a statement made during a custodial interrogation that was not recorded because electronic recording was not practical,

(C) a voluntary statement, whether or not the result of a custodial interrogation, that has a bearing on the credibility of the accused as a witness,

(D) a spontaneous statement that is not made in response to a question,

(E) a statement made after questioning that is routinely asked during the processing of the arrest of the suspect,

(F) a statement made during a custodial interrogation by a suspect who requests, prior to making the statement, to respond to the interrogator's questions only if an electronic recording is not made of the statement, provided that an electronic recording is made of the statement of agreeing to respond to the interrogator's question, only if a recording is not made of the statement, or

(G) a statement made during a custodial interrogation that is conducted out-of-state.

(3) Nothing in this rule precludes the admission of a statement that is used only for impeachment and not as substantive evidence.

(c) An electronic recording must be preserved until the later of:

(1) the date on which the defendant's conviction for any offense relating to the statement is final and all direct and post-conviction proceedings are exhausted, or

(2) the date on which the prosecution for all offenses relating to the statement is barred by law.

(d) In this rule, "electronic recording" includes motion picture, audiotape, or videotape, or digital recording.

failure to record a statement in determining the admissibility of the statement.

Reporter's Notes, 2012:

This rule was added in 2012 in response to the decision in Clark v. State, 374 Ark. 292, 287 S.W.3d 567 (2008). The rule does not mandate the recording of all custodial statements. Instead, it allows the trial court to consider the

Applicability.

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress the in-custody statements he gave to a store clerk in the convenience store parking lot where, given the location of the statement, subsection (a) of this rule was not implicated. Although the police did attempt, unsuccessfully, to record the statement, there was no requirement that they do so. Cohns v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 177, 516 S.W.3d 789 (2017).

Motion to Suppress.

Circuit court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress a custodial statement because defendant asked for the recording to be turned off. Millsap v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 192, 488 S.W.3d 559 (2016).

This rule does not require automatic exclusion, and subsection (b)(2)(F) clearly states that the lack of a recording is not considered in determining the admissibility of a custodial statement if the person interviewed asked for the recording to be stopped. Millsap v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 192, 488 S.W.3d 559 (2016).

While statements that defendant made in police vehicles were not recorded and defendant did not sign the form from which a police officer read defendant his rights, these defects were not sufficient by themselves to render the custodial statement inadmissible. Tarver v. State, 2018 Ark. 202, 547 S.W.3d 689 (2018).

There was no violation of this rule because it did not require exclusion of an unrecorded statement to police; defendant's statement was recorded despite the microphone's malfunction; there was no bad faith on the part of police as to the malfunction; and the content of the interview, as explained through a detective's testimony, was consistent with defendant's two later statements, which were entered into evidence at trial. Thus, defendant's motion to suppress the detective's testimony about the interview that failed to properly record was properly denied Bennett v. State, 2020 Ark. 295 (2020).

Citation.
The traffic bureau is a "governmental office" as that term is used in subdivision (a) of this rule, and therefore, a written order issued by a police officer commanding the defendant to appear at the traffic bureau at the police department anytime before a specified date, sufficiently complied with the requirements of Ark. R. Crim. P. 5.3 by designating a time, place, and court for the appearance of the accused. Gullett v. State, 18 Ark. App. 97, 711 S.W.2d 836 (1986). Citation to appear in court was not an arrest. Mosley v. State, 22 Ark. App. 29, 732 S.W.2d 861 (1987).

Release on Own Recognizance.

When petitioner refused to make a single, direct response to the court that he would appear for trial or hearing as directed, he was not entitled to release prior to trial other than by bail. Wade v. Tomlinson, 284 Ark. 432, 682 S.W.2d 751 (1985).

Rule 5.2. Authority to issue citations.

- (a) A law enforcement officer in the field acting without a warrant who has reasonable cause to believe that a person has committed any misdemeanor may issue a citation in lieu of arrest or continued custody.
- (b) When a person is arrested for any misdemeanor, the ranking officer on duty at the place of detention to which the arrested person is taken may issue a citation in lieu of continued custody.
- (c) Upon the recommendation of a prosecuting attorney, the ranking officer on duty at the place of detention to which the arrested person is taken may issue a citation in lieu of continued custody when the person has been arrested for a felony.
- (d) In determining whether to continue custody or issue a citation under (a) or (b) above, the officer shall inquire into and consider facts about the accused, including but not limited to:
 - (i) place and length of residence;
 - (ii) family relationships;
 - (iii) references;
 - (iv) present and past employment;
 - (v) criminal record; and
 - (vi) other relevant facts such as:
 - (A) whether an accused fails to identify himself satisfactorily;
 - (B) whether an accused refuses to sign a promise to appear pursuant to citation;
 - (C) whether detention is necessary to prevent imminent bodily harm to the accused or to another;
 - (D) whether the accused has ties to the jurisdiction reasonably sufficient to assure his appearance and there is a substantial likelihood that he will respond to a citation;
 - (E) whether the accused previously has failed to appear in response to a citation.

Comment to Rule 5.2

Maximum use of citations should be encouraged in circumstances where issuance of a citation is consistent with the effective enforcement of the law. Accordingly, a law enforcement officer having grounds for making an arrest

CASE NOTES

Sufficiency of Citation.

The traffic bureau is a "governmental office" as that term is used in Ark. R. Crim. P. 5.1(a), and therefore, a written order issued by a police officer commanding the defendant to appear at the traffic bureau at the police department anytime before a specified date, sufficiently complied with the requirements of this rule by designating a time, place, and court for the appearance of the accused. Gullett v. State, 18 Ark. App. 97, 711 S.W.2d 836 (1986).

Where the traffic ticket that the defendant received clearly apprised him of the charges against him and the time during which he could appear before the traffic bureau to have his court date set, and the defendant did not show how he was prejudiced by the failure of the police officer to write the title of his office on the ticket, the trial court did not err in refusing to grant defendant's motion to dismiss. Gullett v. State, 18 Ark. App. 97, 711 S.W.2d 836 (1986).

Where defendant had actual notice of the DWI charge against her, she was given copies of documents indicating the charge and the court and date on which she was to appear, and a completed citation was filed in the municipal court, the defendant was properly charged even though the copy of the citation given to her was only partially filled out. Leroy v. City of Springdale, 47 Ark. App. 18, 883 S.W.2d 847 (1994).

Rule 5.4. Procedure for issuing citations.

(a) In issuing a citation the officer shall deliver one (1) copy of the citation to the accused.

(b) The officer shall thereupon release the accused or, if the person appears mentally or physically unable to care for himself, take him to an appropriate medical facility.

(c) As soon as practicable, one (1) copy of the citation shall be filed with the court specified therein, and one (1) copy shall be delivered to the prosecuting attorney. If an electronic citation is issued, (i) either a written or electronic copy of the citation shall be filed with the court specified therein as designated by the clerk of that court, and (ii) either a written or electronic copy of the citation shall be delivered to the prosecuting attorney as designated by the prosecuting attorney.

Rule 5.5. [Repealed.]

Publisher's Notes.

In light of the United States Supreme Court's decision in Knowles v. Iowa, 525 U.S. 113, 119 S. Ct. 484, 142 L. Ed. 2d 492 (1998), Rule 5.5 of the Rules of Criminal Procedure was repealed, effective June 24, 1999. In Knowles v. Iowa, the Supreme Court held that the full search of an automobile, with neither the automobile driver's consent nor probable cause to conduct the search, by a police officer who stops the driver for speeding and issues the driver a citation rather than arresting the driver, as authorized by state statute, violates the Federal Constitution's Fourth Amendment.

RULE 6.

ISSUANCE OF SUMMONS IN LIEU OF ARREST WARRANT

Rule

Rule 6.1. Authority to issue summons.

Rule 6.2. Form of summons.

Rule 6.3. Service of criminal summons.

Rule 6.1. Authority to issue summons.

(a) A judicial officer with the authority to issue an arrest warrant may issue, or authorize the clerk of the court to issue, a criminal summons in lieu thereof in any case in which a complaint, information, or indictment is filed or returned against a person not already in custody.

(b) A prosecuting attorney who files an information or approves the filing of a complaint against a person not already in custody may authorize the clerk of a court to issue a criminal summons in lieu of an arrest warrant.

(c) A summons shall not be issued pursuant to this Rule if:

(i) the offense, or the manner in which it was committed, involved violence to a person or the risk or threat of imminent serious bodily injury; or

(ii) it appears that the person charged would not respond to a summons.

In determining whether the defendant would respond to a summons, appropriate considerations include, but are not limited to:

(A) the nature and circumstances of the offense charged;

(B) the weight of the evidence against the person;

(C) place and length of residence;

(D) present and past employment;

(E) family relationship;

(F) financial circumstances;

(G) apparent mental condition;

(H) past criminal record;

(I) previous record of appearance at court proceedings; and

(J) any other relevant information.

HISTORY: Amended November 8, 2007.

Reporter's Notes, 2007 Amendment:

The 2007 amendments made minor editorial changes to subsection (a) and rephrased subsection (b). Subsection (c), which was added in 2007, is based on language originally found in Rule 7.1.

In Johnson v. State, 98 Ark. App. 245, 254 S.W.3d 794 (2007), the Court of Appeals held that issuance of a summons is mandatory unless the defendant is charged with a violent offense or it appears that the defendant will not respond to a summons. The 2007 changes to Rule 6.1 and Rule 7.1 were intended to make clear that use of a summons rather than an arrest warrant is discretionary.

Comment to Rule 6.1

In determining whether to issue a criminal summons or arrest warrant, the official should require the applicant for the arrest warrant or criminal summons to provide such information as may be reasonably obtained concerning the accused's:

(i) residence;

(ii) employment;

(iii) family relationship;

(iv) past history of response to legal process; and

(v) past criminal record.

A summons should be issued in lieu of an arrest warrant when the prosecuting attorney so requests.

Rule 6.2. Form of summons.

(a) A summons shall:

- (i) be in writing;
 - (ii) be signed by the officer issuing it with the title of his office;
 - (iii) state the date of issuance and the municipality or county where issued;
 - (iv) specify the name of the accused and the offense alleged;
 - (v) designate a time, place, and court for the appearance of the accused; and
 - (vi) have attached a copy of the information, complaint or indictment.
- (b) Every summons shall inform the accused that failure to appear at the stated time, place, and court may result in his arrest and shall constitute a separate offense for which he may be prosecuted.

CASE NOTES

Burden of Proof.

Trial court erred in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict because the prosecution failed to present sufficient evidence that defendant had actual notice that she was to appear for her arraignment; given that the state failed to prove that defendant was set at liberty upon condition that she appear at a specified time, place, and court or that the attempted summons was served in compliance with this rule, the state failed to meet its burden of proof of notice. Stewart v. State, 89 Ark. App. 86, 200 S.W.3d 465 (2004), aff'd, 362 Ark. 400, 208 S.W.3d 768 (2005).

Service in a criminal contempt proceeding was governed by § 16-10-108, rather than this rule. Arkansas Dep't of Human Servs. v. R.P., 333 Ark. 516, 970 S.W.2d 225 (1998).

RULE 7.
ARREST WITH A WARRANT

- Rule
- Rule 7.1. Arrest with a warrant: basis for issuance of arrest warrant.
 - Rule 7.2. Form of warrant.
 - Rule 7.3. Return of warrant and summons; execution after return.

Rule 7.1. Arrest with a warrant: basis for issuance of arrest warrant.

- (a) A judicial officer may issue an arrest warrant for a person who has failed to appear in response to a summons or citation.
- (b) In addition, a judicial officer may issue a warrant for the arrest of a person if, from affidavit, recorded testimony, or other documented information, it appears there is reasonable cause to believe an offense has been committed and the person committed it. A judicial officer may issue a summons in lieu of an arrest warrant as provided in Rule 6.1. An affidavit or other documented information in support of an arrest warrant may be transmitted to the issuing judicial officer by facsimile or by other electronic means. Recorded testimony in support of an arrest warrant may be received by telephone or other electronic means provided the issuing judicial officer first administers an oath by telephone or other electronic means to the person testifying in support of the issuance of the warrant.

(c) A judicial officer who has determined that an arrest warrant should be issued may authorize the clerk of the court or his deputy to issue the warrant.

HISTORY: Amended June 6, 1994; November 8, 2007; September 26, 2013; amended May 29, 2014, effective July 1, 2014.

Reporter's Notes, 2007 Amendment:

The 2007 amendments deleted language that addressed at length the issuance of a criminal summons in lieu of an arrest warrant. The amendments were intended to overturn Johnson v. State, 98 Ark. App. 245, 254 S.W.3d 794 (2007), insofar as that case held that issuance of a summons was mandatory in certain cases.

Reporter's Notes, 2013 Amendment:

The 2013 amendment made it clear that in all situations in which a warrant should issue, the judicial officer may delegate the actual issuance of the warrant to a clerk or deputy clerk.

Reporter's Note, 2014:

In 2014, subsection (b) was amended to address the transmission by electronic means of affidavits in support of a warrant. In addition, oaths and recorded testimony may be administered and received by telephone or other electronic means that permit audible communication.

Unofficial Supplementary Commentary to Rule 7.1

Standard of Review. On appeal, all presumptions are favorable to the trial court's ruling on the legality of an arrest, the burden being on appellant to demonstrate error. Hines v. State, 289 Ark. 50, 709 S.W.2d 65 (1986).

Pretextual Arrests. A pretextual arrest is one made solely to permit exploration for evidence where no reasonable cause exists for a search. The Arkansas Supreme Court has recognized that an arrest may not be used as a pretext to search for evidence. Richardson v. State, 288 Ark. 407, 706 S.W.2d 363 (1986), relying upon United States v. Lefkowitz, 285 U.S. 452, 76 L. Ed. 877 (1932). The Court will inquire into an arresting officer's actual motivation to ascertain whether he had an ulterior motive. A "but for" standard is employed: Confusion can be avoided by applying a "but for" approach, that is, would the arrest not have occurred but for the other, typically the more serious, crime. Where the police have a dual motive in making an arrest, what might be termed the covert [sic] motive is not tainted by the overt [sic] motive, even though the covert motive may be dominant, so long as the arrest would have been carried out had the covert motive been absent . . . Because the action would have been taken in any event, [Professor La Fave] states, "There is no conduct which ought to have been deterred and, thus, no reason to bring the Fourth Amendment exclusionary rule into play." (Citations omitted.) Hines v. State, 289 Ark. 50, 55, 709 S.W.2d 65, 68 (1986).

As might be expected, stating the standard is simpler than applying it. In Hines, the Court noted that appellant, who had been convicted of murder, was originally arrested on a misdemeanor warrant for an unrelated offense after he appeared at a police station voluntarily, perhaps having heard that his sister-in-law had been arrested for the same minor offense. While in custody for the misdemeanor, he confessed to the murder. The Court noted that an arrest under the warrant for the misdemeanor would have occurred in any event, a finding undercut somewhat by the Court's recognition that the prosecuting attorney signing the information for the warrant knew that appellant was under investigation for the murder, so his motivation for issuing the misdemeanor warrant was subject to question. It should also be noted that the Court might have avoided the issue entirely by taking the position that appellant's arrest under the warrant was irrelevant and a warrantless arrest justified, given his sister-in-law's statement that he had told her he killed decedent. See Allen v. State, 277 Ark. 380, 641 S.W.2d 710 (1982) and discussion below. But, because appellant was arrested pursuant to a warrant obtained by a private citizen without contrivance by any police agency, the Court found that whatever covert motive might have existed was not such as to taint the arrest and call for exclusion of the confession.

In Richardson v. State, the Court found that an arrest for public intoxication at a sheriff's office was pretextual and suppressed physical evidence seized from appellant's person in a search incident to the arrest. Appellant had come to the sheriff's office in the course of an investigation of the death of a relative the preceding evening. Drinking from a bottle concealed in his boot during frequent trips to a bathroom, appellant became intoxicated and was ultimately arrested by officers who found incriminating evidence in a search of his pockets. After he had been jailed, his clothes were sent to a crime lab where bloodstains were matched to the blood type of decedent. Citing authority from a number of jurisdictions, the Court found pretext from the fact that the searches had no relation to the nature and purpose of the arrest for public intoxication and from the circumstance that each law enforcement officer testified at trial that appellant could not have left the sheriff's office because he was a suspect in a murder and arson investigation. The officers' failure to comply with Rule 2.3 — they did not advise claimant that he did not have to appear at the station — was seen as indicative that he was under investigation and was not really considered a witness.

How Richardson would have been decided under the “but for” standard subsequently adopted in Hines is not free from doubt. The problematical aspect of the “but for” approach that it is not clear that a justifiable arrest founded on reasonable cause will in all cases satisfy the rule. Thus, the Court in Richardson might have concluded that the police had grounds for arresting appellant for public intoxication but that the arrest would not have been made in the absence of a covert motive. This analysis would result in a finding that the arrest was pretextual and call for exclusion of the evidence.

How the “but for” standard is to be applied in practice is also uncertain. Suppose a defendant is convicted of a felony based on evidence seized after an intoxication arrest. May he, in questioning whether the arrest was pretextual, adduce testimony that because of manpower and budgetary constraints law enforcement officers in a community do not customarily arrest persons for misdemeanor intoxication violations?

Independent Adequate Grounds for Warrantless Arrest.

The Arkansas Supreme Court has held that an arrest pursuant to a defective warrant is not illegal where independent adequate grounds justify a warrantless arrest. Allen v. State, 277 Ark. 380, 641 S.W.2d 710 (1982). Appellant argued that his arrest was unlawful on grounds that no judge had entered an order under Rule 7.1(c) authorizing the clerk to issue an arrest warrant upon the filing of an information. After finding that there were grounds supporting appellant's warrantless arrest, the Court explicitly reserved findings on whether a judicial officer must enter an order to authorize this procedure and whether authorizations must be made on a case by case basis. Id. at 386, 641 S.W.2d at 713. These questions remain unanswered.

“Good Faith Exception”.

In United States v. Leon, 468 U.S. 897, 82 L. Ed. 2d 677 (1984), the United States Supreme Court held that evidence seized under a defective search warrant is admissible so long as it is shown that officers acted in good faith in procuring the warrant and executing it. The Arkansas Supreme Court has announced that it will adhere to the relaxed standards formulated in Leon. Lincoln v. State, 285 Ark. 107, 685 S.W.2d 166 (1985); State v. Anderson, 286 Ark. 58, 688 S.W.2d 947 (1985). The Court has also applied the Leon standards in an arrest warrant case. Stewart v. State, 289 Ark. 172, 711 S.W.2d 787 (1986). While the Court may overlook some technical deficiencies in warrants, known misstatements of fact made to procure an arrest warrant and in the warrant itself, however well intentioned, will not pass constitutional muster and will result in the warrant's invalidation.

Appellant in Stewart was convicted of capital murder after giving a confession following his arrest for an unrelated misdemeanor. He was arrested pursuant to a warrant issued by a municipal court clerk who did not require the affiant to swear to the supporting affidavit. The warrant itself was one of fifty in a pad that had been signed in blank by the municipal judge, who testified that he had authorized the clerk to issue arrest warrants over his name upon receiving a supporting affidavit. Finding that the affiant had not made an accusation under oath, that the “issuing official” (the judge) made no finding of reasonable cause for the arrest, and that the police officers executing the warrant were aware of these deficiencies, the Arkansas Supreme Court found that the “good faith” exception permitted by Leon could not save the evidence admitted at trial. The decision was unanimous, a concurring opinion by Justice Purtle being in complete agreement except with regard to the Court's failure to rule on suppression of other evidence that he opined should have been excluded. Id. at 275, 711 S.W.2d at 789.

The Stewart decision should be compared to Brown v. State, 276 Ark. 20, 631 S.W.2d 829 (1982), a pre-Leon case in which appellant was convicted of one robbery on the basis of a confession given after his arrest for another robbery. The arrest was made pursuant to a warrant that appears to have been facially invalid. Issues relating to legality of appellant's custody were not raised at the trial. On the subject of appellant's arrest, the majority simply observed that appellant was already in custody after his arrest for the first robbery when he confessed to the second robbery. He was then arrested for and was ultimately convicted of committing the second robbery.

Advocating invocation of the plain error doctrine, Justice Purtle pointed out that the evidence demonstrated that the appellant had been arrested pursuant to a warrant issued by a court clerk without requiring an affidavit sworn to by the complainant, one of the defects relied upon by the Court in its Stewart reversal four years later. Because appellant's confession to the second robbery came after two days' custody under an invalid warrant for another offense, the dissent cogently argues that the confession should have been suppressed.

ASE NOTES

Affidavit.

Burden is on state to show affidavit is in compliance with law. Davis v. State, 293 Ark. 472, 739 S.W.2d 150 (1987).

This section does not require that statements in an arrest warrant's supporting affidavit be made under oath. Newman v. State, 327 Ark. 339, 939 S.W.2d 811 (1997).

Circuit court did not err when it denied defendant's motions to suppress evidence of his arrest because a detective testified that he generated the reasonable-cause affidavit after the eyewitness had come to his office, that he took the affidavit to the prosecutor's office, and that the warrant was issued on July 28, well ahead of the day (approximately October 13) that defendant was arrested in Michigan; and the circuit court could have credited the officers' testimony and inferred from the evidence that the date of September 28, which appeared on the reasonable-cause affidavit, was a ministerial error, not a substantive timing error in the warrant process. Wells v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 391 (2018).

Approval by Judge.

The appearance of the traffic judge's initials on the corner of a warrant of arrest would not cause court to take judicial notice that such judge must have approved the issuance of the warrant by the clerk. Webb v. State, 269 Ark. 415, 601 S.W.2d 848 (1980).

That the warrant for defendant's arrest was issued without independent judicial determination of probable cause did not invalidate his assault conviction, as the prosecutor was not required to receive judicial approval prior to filing a charging instrument, and the trial court's jurisdiction to try defendant did not depend on validity of the arrest warrant. Clark v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 496, 423 S.W.3d 122 (2012).

Defective Warrant.

Arrest warrant for contempt of court which was issued by court clerk without authorization of judge and without accompanying affidavit or proof that an information was issued and which was not executed for over two years after its issuance was invalid as being both defective and "stale." Webb v. State, 269 Ark. 415, 601 S.W.2d 848 (1980).

Where a police officer knew that the affiant had not made her accusation under oath, an essential element of an affidavit, he could not have acted in good faith, for purposes of the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule, in obtaining the arrest warrant on the strength of that spurious affidavit. Stewart v. State, 289 Ark. 272, 711 S.W.2d 787 (1986).

In view of the police officer's knowledge of the illegal procedure involved in the procurement of the arrest warrant, and the issuing magistrate's abdication of his responsibility by signing blank arrest warrants and authorizing his clerk to read the supporting affidavit and fill in the blanks, the arrest could not be upheld and the trial court should have suppressed the subsequent confession under the poisonous tree principle. Stewart v. State, 289 Ark. 272, 711 S.W.2d 787 (1986).

Warrant requirements were not met. Davis v. State, 293 Ark. 472, 739 S.W.2d 150 (1987); Lamb v. State, 23 Ark. App. 115, 743 S.W.2d 399 (1988).

The failure to meet the warrant requirements of this rule did not require reversal of the defendant's conviction as the case did not involve the admission of evidence seized pursuant to the warrant. Donovan v. State, 71 Ark. App. 226, 32 S.W.3d 1 (2000).

Although an arrest warrant was allegedly defective on the ground that a judicial officer did not issue or authorize a circuit clerk's issuance of the warrant, the charges against the defendant should not have been dismissed because an invalid arrest did not entitle a defendant to be discharged from responsibility for the offense charged. State v. Richardson, 373 Ark. 1, 280 S.W.3d 20 (2008).

Although an arrest warrant signed by a court clerk was defective as not issued by a neutral magistrate, defendant's charges should not have been dismissed because an invalid arrest did not entitle a defendant to be discharged from responsibility for the offense. State v. Holden, 373 Ark. 5, 280 S.W.3d 23 (2008).

Illegal Arrest.

An illegal arrest, without more, has never been viewed as either a bar to subsequent prosecution or a defense to a valid conviction. Van Daley v. State, 20 Ark. App. 127, 725 S.W.2d 574 (1987).

Defendant's arrest was illegal because, although there was reasonable cause to believe that defendant committed the offense of owning an illegal drug paraphernalia business, that was a misdemeanor offense, for which a summons, and not an arrest warrant, should have issued under former subdivision (b)(i) of this rule. There was no information tending to show that defendant would not respond to a summons, the offense of owning a store that sold drug paraphernalia was, in itself, not a violent offense and did not involve the risk of imminent serious bodily injury, and the good-faith exception did not apply because there was no good-faith reliance that an arrest warrant, as opposed to a summons, could be issued for the misdemeanor; therefore, the incriminating evidence obtained as a result of the illegal arrest was the fruit of the poisonous tree. Johnson v. State, 98 Ark. App. 245, 254 S.W.3d 794 (2007).

Issuing Officer.

Warrant issued under subsection (c) of this rule must be issued by a detached, neutral officer who makes an independent determination of probable cause. Davis v. State, 293 Ark. 472, 739 S.W.2d 150 (1987); Lamb v. State, 23 Ark. App. 115, 743 S.W.2d 399 (1988).

Presumption of Legality.

The reviewing court should follow a liberal rather than a strict course and all presumptions are favorable to the trial court's ruling on the legality of the arrest; the burden of demonstrating error rests upon the defendant. Reed v. State, 9 Ark. App. 164, 656 S.W.2d 249 (1983).

Presumption of legality of bench warrant not overcome. Munnerlyn v. State, 292 Ark. 467, 730 S.W.2d 895 (1987).

Probable Cause.

The existence of probable cause for arrest must be determined upon either the facts and circumstances of which the arresting officer has knowledge of at the moment of the arrest or those which are made known to the magistrate at the time the warrant is issued, and this determination is based upon the factual and practical considerations of everyday life upon which reasonable and prudent men act. Reed v. State, 9 Ark. App. 164, 656 S.W.2d 249 (1983).

Probable cause for an arrest is only a reasonable ground of suspicion supported by circumstances sufficiently strong in themselves to warrant a cautious man to believe that the accused committed a felony but not tantamount to the quantum of proof required to support a conviction and arrests are to be appraised from the viewpoint of a prudent and cautious police officer at the time the arrest is made. Reed v. State, 9 Ark. App. 164, 656 S.W.2d 249 (1983).

When the arrest is based upon a judicial officer's, rather than a police officer's, determination of probable cause, the reviewing court should not require evidence of more "judicially competent or persuasive character as would have justified an officer in acting on his own without a warrant," and should sustain a judicial determination as long as there is a "substantial basis" for the conclusion that the accused person has committed a felony. Reed v. State, 9 Ark. App. 164, 656 S.W.2d 249 (1983).

Where the fact that a felony had been committed was clearly established and neighbors saw a man fleeing from the scene and where two witnesses identified the defendant as the person they saw a short distance away running down the street in the same direction as the neighbors who were pursuing him, although there was no proof that they were one and the same person, reasonable minds could conclude that the defendant probably was the same person as the one the neighbors were pursuing and there was probable cause for his arrest. Reed v. State, 9 Ark. App. 164, 656 S.W.2d 249 (1983).

Determination of probable cause is said to be based on factual and practical considerations of everyday life upon which reasonable and prudent men, rather than legal technicians, act. Hines v. State, 289 Ark. 50, 709 S.W.2d 65 (1986).

There was probable cause to arrest the defendant for criminal mischief where the defendant's brother admitted pouring formaldehyde on the victim's couch, the defendant was present at the time of the incident, and the formaldehyde belonged to the defendant. Hines v. State, 289 Ark. 50, 709 S.W.2d 65 (1986).

The technical invalidity of an arrest warrant is irrelevant when the arrest has been made upon probable cause. Mitchell v. State, 295 Ark. 341, 750 S.W.2d 936 (1988), overruled, MacKintrush v. State, 334 Ark. 390, 978 S.W.2d 293 (1998).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress evidence where defendant was searched pursuant to an arrest warrant because no contemporaneous recording of oral testimony was necessary to support a bench warrant's probable cause requirement; in this case, the arrest warrant was issued upon the sworn testimony of an investigator, which fell into the category of other information within this rule. Blanchett v. State, 368 Ark. 492, 247 S.W.3d 477 (2007).

Purpose.

The only purpose of an arrest warrant is to have an accused arrested and brought before the justice or other officer issuing the warrant so that he may be dealt with according to law. When that has been done, the warrant has performed its function and has no operation whatever on the subsequent proceedings. Van

(i) be in writing and in the name of the state;

(ii) be directed to all law enforcement officers in the state;

(iii) be signed by the issuing official with the title of his office and the date of issuance;

(iv) specify the name of the accused or, if his name is unknown, any name or description by which he can be identified with reasonable certainty;

(v) have attached a copy of the information, if filed, or, if not filed, a copy of any affidavit supporting issuance; and

(vi) command that the accused be arrested and that unless he complies with the terms of release specified in the warrant he be brought before a judicial officer without unnecessary delay.

(b) The warrant may specify the manner in which it is to be executed, and may specify terms of release and requirements for appearance.

In Van Daley v. State, 20 Ark. App. 127, 725 S.W.2d 574 (1987), the Court of Appeals held that where a prosecuting attorney drew up an information, signed it, and mailed it to the court clerk, there was compliance with Rule 7.2(c), there being no statutory, constitutional, or rule requirement that an information be filed under oath.

CASE NOTES

Defective Warrant.

In view of the police officer's knowledge of the illegal procedure involved in the procurement of an arrest warrant, and of the issuing magistrate's abdication of his responsibility by signing blank arrest warrants and authorizing his clerk to read the supporting affidavit and fill in the blanks, the arrest could not be upheld and the trial court should have suppressed the subsequent confession under the poisonous tree principle. Stewart v. State, 289 Ark. 272, 711 S.W.2d 787 (1986).

Information or Affidavit.

It is not customary in Arkansas that every arrest warrant have attached the information or affidavit. It is not even necessary for an officer to have an arrest warrant in his hand to make an arrest. Starr v. State, 297 Ark. 26, 759 S.W.2d 535 (1988), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1100, 109 S. Ct. 1578, 103 L. Ed. 2d 944 (1989).

Suppression of Evidence.

State supreme court refused to consider defendant's argument that statements he made to police should have been suppressed because he was not brought before a judicial officer for more than two months after he was arrested, in violation of Ark. R. Crim. P. 4.1 and 8.1, because, although he made that argument in the context of discussing this rule, he did not obtain a clear ruling on his argument from the trial court. Romes v. State, 356 Ark. 26, 144 S.W.3d 750 (2004).

Rule 7.3. Return of warrant and summons; execution after return.

(a) The law enforcement officer executing a warrant shall make return thereof to the court before which the accused is brought, and notice thereof shall be given to the prosecuting attorney.

(b) On or before the date for appearance the officer to whom a summons was delivered for service shall make return thereof to the judicial officer before whom the summons is returnable.

(c) At any time while a complaint, information or indictment is pending, the issuing official may deliver a warrant returned unexecuted and not cancelled, or a summons returned unserved, or a duplicate of either to a law enforcement officer or other authorized person for execution or service.

(d) Upon return of a warrant, whether executed or unexecuted, the warrant long with the affidavit or sworn testimony on application shall be filed with the clerk of the issuing judicial officer, and they shall be publically accessible unless the court for good cause based upon reasonably specific facts orders that any of them should be closed or sealed.

(e) Arrest warrants, affidavits, or sworn testimony on application are filed in the warrant docket as described in Administrative Order Number 2 or 18. Administrative Order Number 19 governs public access to documents in the warrant docket subject to the provisions of this rule (see section (VII)(A)(3); see section (VIII) for obtaining access to documents excluded from public access). Remote electronic access to the warrant docket by the general public, however, shall be governed by and subject to the policies or requirement of the court.

An arrested person who is not released by citation or by other lawful manner shall be taken before a judicial officer without unnecessary delay.

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Commentary to Rule 8.1

Effect of Violation. Though Rule 8.1 is mandatory, Bolden v. State, 262 Ark. 718, 561 S.W.2d 281 (1978), for its violation there may well be no remedy in most cases. A defendant is not ipso facto entitled to a dismissal of the charge on which he is arrested when the rule is contravened. Bolden, supra. See, also Cook v. State, 274 Ark. 244, 623 S.W.2d 820 (1981), quoting with approval the following language from Gerstein v. Pugh, 420 U.S. 103, 119, 43 L. Ed. 2d 54, 68 (1975): "Nor do we retreat from the established rule that illegal arrest or detention does not void a subsequent conviction." 274 Ark. at 246, 623 S.W.2d at 821-22.

And, more generally, as recognized by both the United States Supreme Court and the Arkansas Supreme Court, a judgment of conviction will not be vacated on grounds that a defendant was detained pending trial without a determination of probable cause. Harris v. Tate, 259 Ark. 187, 532 S.W.2d 423 (1976), relying upon Gerstein v. Pugh.

Civil suits over failure to comply with the rule will likely prove fruitless, too. Judges have absolute immunity in virtually every conceivable case. So do prosecutors, unless they are acting in an investigatory capacity. Imbler v. Pachtman, 424 U.S. 409, 47 L. Ed. 2d 128 (1976); Ginter v. Stallcup, 641 F. Supp. 939 (E.D. Ark. 1986).

Even though the cases routinely state that this rule is mandatory, not discretionary, and that its violation does not require dismissal of the charges, a more precise statement of the law might be that dismissal of charges is not an appropriate remedy, the proper remedy being suppression of evidence flowing from violation of the rule. Cook v. State.

Moreover, though a defendant is not entitled to dismissal for failure of the prosecution to bring him before a judicial officer without unnecessary delay, the Arkansas Supreme Court will consider such a delay in ruling on a defense motion for dismissal on grounds of prejudice resulting from unreasonable prosecutorial delay. Some periods of delay are so unreasonable that the Court will impute to the state a purpose of gaining a tactical advantage over the accused. Scott v. State, 263 Ark. 669, 566 S.W.2d 737 (1978). See, also, United States v. Lovasco, 431 U.S. 783, 52 L. Ed. 2d 752 (1977).

CASE NOTES

Appeals.

Where the pretrial suppression motion is not based upon violation of this rule, an appellate court will not consider the argument that it should have been granted on that basis pursuant to former Ark. R. Crim. P. 36.21 relating to exceptions and motion for new trial being unnecessary. Allen v. State, 297 Ark. 155, 760 S.W.2d 69 (1988).

Construction.

City was properly granted summary judgment on a personal representative's claim that the Ashley County District Court lacked jurisdiction to conduct a first appearance for the decedent who was arrested and charged in a separate county or judicial district; Ark. Code Ann. § 16-88-101(c) meant that any Arkansas district court had authority to perform pretrial functions as necessary and as authorized by the Arkansas Rules of Criminal Procedure, and this rule was interpreted to sweep broadly for first appearances. Given that the county district judge had jurisdiction and authority to conduct the first appearance, the constitutional claim necessarily failed. Green v. Byrd, 972 F.3d 997 (8th Cir. 2020).

Delay Permissible.

The fact that a prosecuting attorney filed an information directly against the defendant without a pretrial hearing, such as a grand jury, was not an unconstitutional practice where the defendant was arraigned eight days after the crime, at which time the charges, penalty and his constitutional rights were explained to him. McCree v. State, 266 Ark. 465, 585 S.W.2d 938 (1979).

Where the defendant was held from the time of his arrest late Friday afternoon through the weekend before he was taken before a magistrate on Monday morning, such a delay did not violate this rule. Brown v. State, 276 Ark. 20, 631 S.W.2d 829 (1982).

Where defendant was detained approximately six and one-half hours, there was no violation of this rule. Sparrow v. State, 284 Ark. 396, 683 S.W.2d 218 (1985).

Three and one-half day period of delay between defendant's arrest and arraignment was reasonable. Owens v. State, 300 Ark. 73, 777 S.W.2d 205 (1989).

The delay in defendant's arraignment was permissible where he was arrested at 10:30 p.m. on Thursday, and arraigned at 9:00 a.m. on Monday, because the record indicated the county municipal court did not ordinarily sit on Friday unless specified arrangements were made in advance. Johnson v. State, 307 Ark. 525, 823 S.W.2d 440 (1992).

There was no improper delay in taking the defendant before a magistrate, notwithstanding that she was arrested on a Thursday night and was not taken before a magistrate until Monday morning, where (1) there was no evidence that a magistrate was available during the period of delay, (2) there was no evidence that the defendant's statements were reasonably related to the delay, especially as she began requesting to talk to the sheriff from the moment she was arrested and repeatedly asked to speak with law enforcement officers during he period of the delay, (3) the defendant was repeatedly informed of her right to an attorney and her right to remain silent before every statement was taken, (4) the defendant's last statement was made on Saturday evening and (5) there was no suggestion that the delay was caused so that police officers could conduct further investigation. Arnett v. State, 342 Ark. 66, 27 S.W.3d 721 (2000).

There was no proof that a delay in juvenile defendant's appearance was for the purpose of obtaining a confession where, although the police questioned defendant several times after arresting him, there was testimony that his grandmother, mother, and step-father were present at the police station, defendant sat with them part of the time, and he was not held incommunicado. Otis v. State, 364 Ark. 151, 217 S.W.3d 839 (2005).

Defendant's contentions relating to an unnecessary delay in his arraignment lacked merit, as defendant requested to speak to an officer and thereby caused the delay. Airsmann v. State, 2014 Ark. 500, 451 S.W.3d 565 (2014).

Failure to Comply.

Although this rule, which is designed to afford an arrestee protection against an unfounded invasion of liberty and privacy, is mandatory in scope, the court's failure to afford an arrestee a preliminary hearing does not require a dismissal of the charges. Bolden v. State, 262 Ark. 718, 561 S.W.2d 281 (1978); Smith v. State, 296 Ark. 451, 757 S.W.2d 554 (1988).

Where a murder charge was not filed until three years after the crime, but the defendant was in the penitentiary at the time of filing and one continuance was granted at the request of defense counsel, the charges would not be dismissed for failure to bring the defendant before a judicial officer as required by this rule. Scott v. State, 263 Ark. 669, 566 S.W.2d 737 (1978);

Smith v. State, 296 Ark. 451, 757 S.W.2d 554 (1988); Allen v. State, 297 Ark. 155, 760 S.W.2d 69 (1988).

This rule is mandatory rather than discretionary, but the remedy for violation of the rule is to suppress any incustodial statement instead of dismissing the charges; accordingly, where a defendant was held in custody for over 30 days before appearing before a judicial officer, the trial court acted properly in suppressing a statement made during that period but not dismissing the charges against the defendant. Cook v. State, 274 Ark. 244, 623 S.W.2d 820 (1981).

A delay of 56 days between the time of the defendant's arrest and his first appearance before a judicial officer was clearly improper, however, it did not automatically require that the defendant's custodial statements be excluded, and where the defendant failed to abstract or include the statements in the appellate record, the Supreme Court could not determine whether the statements were prejudicial or harmless. Richardson v. State, 283 Ark. 82, 283 Ark. 91, 678 S.W.2d 772 (1984).

Delay of three and one-half days was held unnecessary where there was no evidence in the record to suggest a reason for the delay in taking the defendant before a judicial officer in accordance with this rule, nor did the state offer any explanation in its brief, and the record showed the delay was purposeful and that the prosecutor made a deliberate decision to hold defendant in detention and ignore the prompt appearance requirement. Duncan v. State, 291 Ark. 521, 726 S.W.2d 653 (1987).

Where deceased was arrested on suspicion of theft and police promptly notified the prosecuting attorney of the arrest, even if the police were not responsible for the delay in arraignment, they could still be answerable for the constitutional violation under 42 U.S.C. § 1983. Wayland v. City of Springdale, 933 F.2d 668 (8th Cir. 1991).

Defendant is not entitled to a dismissal of the charge on which he is arrested when this rule is contravened, nor does an illegal arrest or detention necessarily void a subsequent conviction. Hudgens v. State, 324 Ark. 169, 919 S.W.2d 939 (1996).

In determining whether an inculpatory statement is reasonably related to the delay in taking the accused before a judicial officer, the court considers: (1) any proof that the delay was for the purpose of obtaining a confession; (2) the frequency of police interrogation; (3) whether the accused was incommunicado; and (4) the passage of time. Landrum v. State, 328 Ark. 361, 944 S.W.2d 101 (1997).

Where individual failed to appear on traffic citations, was arrested, and remained in jail for 38 days before the individual's first court appearance, it constituted an "unnecessary delay" under former Ark. R. Crim. P. 8.1 and a violation of the individual's due process rights under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983, and the county was liable for the unconstitutional policies and customs adopted by the county sheriff and the jail administrator in their official capacities; the jail administrator was also liable individually because he had a duty to ensure that the prisoners were taken before a court without unnecessary delay, however, the sheriff was not liable because he did not possess the level of personal knowledge and awareness typically required to hold a county official liable in their individual capacity. Hayes v. Faulkner County, 285 F. Supp. 2d 1132 (E.D. Ark. 2003), aff'd, 388 F.3d 669 (8th Cir. 2004).

County's policy of submitting the names of pretrial detainees to the court and then waiting for the court to schedule a hearing was deliberately indifferent to a detainee's due process rights where the policy attempted to delegate the responsibility of taking the detainee promptly before a court and ignored the jail's authority for long-term confinement; thus, detainee's detention for 38 days without having a first appearance with the court violated his Fourteenth Amendment right to due process. Hayes v. Faulkner County, 388 F.3d 669 (8th Cir. 2004).

Preservation of Transcript for Trial.

A preliminary hearing under Ark. R. Crim. P. 8.1 et seq., is not the full-fledged hearing involving extensive cross-examination from which a transcript can be admitted at trial under Evid. Rule 804. Scott v. State, 272 Ark. 88, 612 S.W.2d 110 (1981).

Purpose.

This rule was designed to afford an arrestee protection against an unfounded invasion of liberty and privacy. Bates v. McNeil, 318 Ark. 764, 888 S.W.2d 642 (1994).

This rule protects the federal constitutional right of a person to a judicial determination of probable cause as a prerequisite to extended restraint of liberty following arrest; at this preliminary stage, the state is required to present proof that justifies the accused's arrest, not to establish the accused's guilt. Nance v. State, 323 Ark. 583, 918 S.W.2d 114, cert. denied, 519 U.S. 847, 117 S. Ct. 134, 136 L. Ed. 2d 83 (1996).

The purpose of this rule is to deter police misconduct. Landrum v. State, 326 Ark. 994, 936 S.W.2d 505 (1996).

Suppression of Evidence.

Statements taken after the defendant had been held in jail for 35 days in violation of this rule should have been suppressed. Richardson v. State, 283 Ark. 82, 283 Ark. 91, 678 S.W.2d 772 (1984).

Although compliance with this rule is mandatory, a breach does not compel a dismissal of the charges; rather, it requires that evidence gained as a result of the unnecessary delay be suppressed. Richardson v. State, 283 Ark. 82, 283 Ark. 91, 678 S.W.2d 772 (1984).

Statements reasonably related to a delay in violation of this rule must be excluded. Duncan v. State, 291 Ark. 521, 726 S.W.2d 653 (1987).

Where the delay is unnecessary, the evidence is prejudicial, and the evidence is reasonably related to the delay, the evidence will be excluded. Duncan v. State, 291 Ark. 521, 726 S.W.2d 653 (1987).

Where the evidence is completely unrelated to the delay, suppression of the evidence is not required. Branscomb v. State, 299 Ark. 482, 774 S.W.2d 426 (1989); Lemons v. State, 307 Ark. 12, 817 S.W.2d 411 (1991).

A statement should be excluded under this rule when: (1) the delay is unnecessary, (2) the evidence is prejudicial, and (3) the evidence is reasonably related to the delay. Owens v. State, 300 Ark. 73, 777 S.W.2d 205 (1989); Landrum v. State, 328 Ark. 361, 944 S.W.2d 101 (1997).

Inculpatory statements given by the defendant to federal officials during a conference, while waiting for his arraignment, were not reasonably related to any delay in the arraignment but were apparently prompted by defendant's desire to negotiate a bargain with authorities to his advantage, and are, thus, not inadmissible. Ryan v. State, 303 Ark. 595, 798 S.W.2d 679 (1990).

There was no causal connection between defendant's statements and any delays, where he made it clear at the outset of his questioning that he was willing to talk to the police about crimes he had been involved in. Johnson v. State, 307 Ark. 525, 823 S.W.2d 440 (1992).

Incriminating statements, given before there was any possibility that they were given as a result of an unreasonable delay in being taken before a magistrate, held admissible. Bryant v. State, 314 Ark. 130, 862 S.W.2d 215 (1993).

Where defendant was arrested on August 26, but not taken to court until August 29, the statement made on August 26 was admissible, because there was no relationship between that statement and the subsequent delay in taking defendant before a judge, but the August 28 statement should have been suppressed. Clay v. State, 318 Ark. 122, 883 S.W.2d 822 (1994).

Where no police misconduct occurred during the defendant's incarceration, there was no policy reason to apply the exclusionary rule to his statement. Landrum v. State, 326 Ark. 994, 936 S.W.2d 505 (1996).

The trial court did not err in refusing to suppress a statement concerning the charged crimes where (1) the delay was not for the purpose of obtaining a confession but due to the defendant's desire to negotiate a favorable bargain, (2) there was no evidence of police misconduct, and (3) the defendant was well-apprised of his Miranda rights. Landrum v. State, 328 Ark. 361, 944 S.W.2d 101 (1997).

The defendant was denied a prompt first appearance and, therefore, suppression of statements he made was warranted since (1) the delay in bringing him before a judicial officer was unnecessary as he was transported to a detention center on Sunday night and could have been brought before a judicial officer on Monday, rather than on Tuesday, (2) the statements at issue, which were made on Monday, were prejudicial as they were more detailed than his prior statements and were more inculpatory, and (3) the statements were reasonably related to the delay as the defendant did not initiate contact with the police to give a statement or negotiate and as the delay was deliberate and was for the purpose of further investigation. Britt v. State, 334 Ark. 142, 974 S.W.2d 436 (1998).

Suppression of defendant's custodial confession was not warranted where there was no evidence that the delay between his arrest and his first appearance was deliberate or for the purpose of obtaining an incriminating statement, defendant was informed of his right to an attorney and his right to remain silent before the statement was taken, and the delay in the case was necessary to record the preliminary confession that defendant had completed almost an hour before his first appearance was scheduled. Green v. State, 80 Ark. App. 199, 92 S.W.3d 687 (2002).

State supreme court refused to consider defendant's argument that statements he made to police should have been suppressed because he was not brought before a judicial officer for more than two months after he was arrested, in violation of Ark. R. Crim. P. 4.1 and this rule, because he did not obtain a clear ruling on his argument from the trial court. Romes v. State, 356 Ark. 26, 144 S.W.3d 750 (2004).

Rule 8.2. Appointment of counsel.

(a) A judicial officer shall determine whether the defendant is indigent and, if so, appoint counsel to represent him or her at the first appearance, unless the defendant knowingly and intelligently waives the appointment of counsel. The court need not appoint counsel if the indigent defendant is charged with a misdemeanor and the court has determined that under no circumstances will incarceration be imposed as a part of any punishment. A suspended or probationary sentence to incarceration shall be considered a sentence to incarceration if revocation of the suspended or probationary sentence may result in the incarceration of the indigent without the opportunity to contest guilt of the offense for which incarceration is imposed.

(b) Attorneys appointed by district courts may receive fees for services rendered upon certification by the presiding judicial officer if provision therefor has been made by the county or municipality in which the offense is committed or the services are rendered. Attorneys so appointed shall continue to represent the indigent accused until relieved for good cause or until substituted by other counsel.

Reporter's Notes, 1999 Amendment:

The addition of the last sentence to Rule

8.2(c) is intended to ensure that where counsel is appointed in municipal court, the appointment continues for purposes of this rule even in circuit court proceedings unless and until appointed counsel is relieved or new counsel is appointed.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2003 Amendment:

The amendments made two changes to subsection (b). The word "imprisonment" was replaced with the word "incarceration" to avoid any implication that the right to counsel attaches only when the defendant faces confinement in state prison. The final sentence was added to incorporate the United States Supreme Court holding in Alabama v. Shelton, 535 U.S. 654, 122 S.Ct. 1764, 152 L.Ed.2d 888 (2002).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2017 Amendment:

This change clarifies what Rule 8 has always required: that judges appoint lawyers for indigent defendants to represent them at the first appearance. See Bradford v. State, 325 Ark. 278 (1996) ("Rule 8.2 provides that the trial court shall appoint counsel to represent an indigent defendant at the first appearance, if the right is not knowingly and intelligently waived.").

Comment to Rule 8.2

This provision seeks to ensure compliance with constitutional requirements respecting the rights of indigent defendants to representation by counsel. It should not be construed to indorse or to criticize any existing or contemplated system designed to provide defense services.

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Commentary to Rule 8.2

Constitutional Requirements. In Sutton v. State, 262 Ark. 492, 559 S.W.2d 16 (1977), no attorney was appointed for appellant at his first appearance. He confessed to burglary after almost three weeks' incarceration and after being advised by a postal inspector of Miranda warnings in connection with questioning about violations of federal postal laws. Reversing and remanding, the Court found several deficiencies necessitating the exclusion of a confession, including a defective Miranda warning. Significantly, the opinion of the Court does contain language suggesting that Rule 8.2(a) and (b) have constitutional dimensions so that failure to comply with these provisions may result in exclusion of evidence if the state does not show that failure to comply was harmless. After quoting Rule 8.2(a) and (b) as well as Rule 8.3(b), the Court observed: The burden is clearly on the state to establish that [appellant] waived his rights. All doubts must be resolved in favor of the individual rights and constitutional safeguards. . . We cannot say in this case the state met the burden of proving that it complied with the Rules of Criminal Procedure. Sutton at 495, 559 S.W.2d at 18 (emphasis added) (citations omitted).

CASE NOTES

Absence of Counsel Harmless.

Absence of counsel at defendant's preliminary hearing, if error, was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt, where the absence of counsel did not in any way affect the outcome of his state trial. Reeves v. Mabry, 480 F. Supp. 529 (W.D. Ark. 1979), aff'd, 615 F.2d 489 (8th Cir. 1980).

Defendant Found Not Indigent.

When, at the time defendant was determined to be capable of employing his own attorney, he owned seven automobiles, had received $13,679.00 in salary during the year, and had over $1,200.00 in cash on his person, the determination that defendant was not entitled to court-appointed counsel was clearly correct. Reeves v. Mabry, 480 F. Supp. 529 (W.D. Ark. 1979), aff'd, 615 F.2d 489 (8th Cir. 1980).

Circuit court did not violate the right to counsel of a defendant convicted of rape and incest because defendant was not indigent and not entitled to appointed counsel; and, although he did not waive his right to counsel, he forfeited his right to counsel as defendant was free on bond during the relevant time period; he had won the lottery, taking home $680,000 during the pendency of the case; he established on the record that he did not want to hire a lawyer because he could not justify spending the money; and the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in determining that defendant preferred not to hire a lawyer. Patton v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 63, 569 S.W.3d 906, cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 263, 205 L. Ed. 2d 167 (2019).

Financial Ability.

Forcing a criminal defendant to go to trial pro se without conducting an appropriate inquiry into his financial ability to afford counsel constitutes a denial of that defendant's Sixth Amendment right to counsel. Kincade v. State, 303 Ark. 331, 796 S.W.2d 580 (1990).

When trial court asked defendant why he did not have an attorney, and defendant stated that he could not afford to hire one, the trial court was under a duty to make further inquiry, by whatever means appropriate, into defendant's financial condition in order to satisfactorily determine whether he could, in fact, hire an attorney. Kincade v. State, 303 Ark. 331, 796 S.W.2d 580 (1990).

Immunity for Judicial Officer.

A county prosecutor who denied the defendant counsel as an indigent was immune from liability, as his participation was part of his quasi-judicial duties. Ginter v. Stallcup, 641 F. Supp. 939 (E.D. Ark. 1986), dismissed without op., Ginter v. Blasingame, 802 F.2d 462 (8th Cir. 1986), dismissed without op., 802 F.2d 462 (8th Cir. 1986), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 869 F.2d 384 (8th Cir. 1989).

Indigent Accused.

Where no attorney was appointed for indigent defendant at preliminary hearing, the state failed to show that defendant specifically waived that right and defendant was improperly informed of his rights, court erred in permitting police lieutenant to testify regarding oral confession of defendant. Sutton v. State, 262 Ark. 492, 559 S.W.2d 16 (1977).

Prejudice Presumed.

No showing of prejudice is necessary when a trial court erroneously denies appointment of counsel altogether because prejudice to the defendant is presumed. Kincade v. State, 303 Ark. 331, 796 S.W.2d 580 (1990).

Rule 8.3. Nature of first appearance.

(a) Upon the first appearance of the defendant the judicial officer shall inform him of the charge. The judicial officer shall also inform the defendant that:

(i) he is not required to say anything, and that anything he says can be used against him;

(ii) he has a right to counsel; and

(iii) he has a right to communicate with his counsel, his family, or his friends, and that reasonable means will be provided for him to do so.

(b) No further steps in the proceedings other than pretrial release inquiry may be taken until the defendant and his counsel have had an adequate opportunity to confer, unless the defendant has intelligently waived his right to counsel or has refused the assistance of counsel.

(c) The judicial officer, if unable to dispose of the case at the first appearance, shall proceed to decide the question of the pretrial release of the defendant. In so doing, the judicial officer shall first determine by an informal, non-adversary hearing whether there is probable cause for detaining the arrested person pending further proceedings. The standard for determining probable cause at such hearing shall be the same as that which governs arrests with or without a warrant.

CASE NOTES

In General.

Under this rule, an attorney for an indigent defendant should be appointed at the probable cause hearing, or the state must show that right to have counsel appointed at the hearing was specifically waived. Bradford v. State, 325 Ark. 278, 927 S.W.2d 329, cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1028, 117 S. Ct. 583, 136 L. Ed. 2d 513 (1996).

323 Ark. 583, 918 S.W.2d 114, cert. denied, 519 U.S. 847, 117 S. Ct. 134, 136 L. Ed. 2d 83 (1996).

Burden of Proof.

This rule protects the federal constitutional right of a person to a judicial determination of probable cause as a prerequisite to extended restraint of liberty following arrest; at this preliminary stage, the state is required to present proof that justifies the accused's arrest, not to establish the accused's guilt. Nance v. State, Escape in First Degree.

Where information charged county sheriff with permitting escape in the first degree under § 5-54-113, sheriff was not entitled to a preliminary hearing to see if probable cause existed since the sheriff had not been incarcerated following his arrest, and both this rule and § 16-85-207 [repealed] apply only where the defendant is in custody, and there must be a determination of probable cause to further detain him and there is no constitutional provision or requirement for such a hearing under Const. Amend. 21. State v. Garrison, 272 Ark. 470, 615 S.W.2d 371 (1981).

Failure to Explain Rights.

Where no attorney was appointed for indigent defendant at preliminary hearing, the state failed to show that defendant specifically waived that right and defendant was improperly informed of his rights, court erred in permitting police lieutenant to testify regarding oral confession of defendant. Sutton v. State, 262 Ark. 492, 559 S.W.2d 16 (1977).

Pretrial Release Inquiry.

Where accused was arrested for possessing marijuana for sale and bail was fixed by the municipal court solely upon the offense charged without regard to individual responsibility of accused, the municipal court's deficiency in failing to hold a pretrial release inquiry before setting money bail was not cured by circuit court which, in proceeding on accused's petition for supervisory writ of mandamus and certiorari, conducted a hearing restricted to consideration of the nature of the charges. Thomas v. State, 260 Ark. 512, 542 S.W.2d 284 (1976).

The circuit court in proceeding on accused's petition for writ of mandamus and certiorari erred in refusing to direct the municipal court to conduct a pretrial release inquiry before setting money bail for accused who was arrested for possessing marijuana for sale and whose bail was reduced from a preset $20,000 for drug arrests to $5,000 solely on the showing that accused was a state resident. Thomas v. State, 260 Ark. 512, 542 S.W.2d 284 (1976).

Probable Cause.

The issue is whether there is probable cause to continue detaining the suspect, not whether the state will be able to prove every element of its case on each of the charges. Probable cause is said to be "only a reasonable ground of suspicion supported by circumstances sufficiently strong in themselves to warrant a cautious man in believing that a crime has been committed by the person suspected." Gardner v. State, 296 Ark. 41, 754 S.W.2d 518 (1988).

Release on Other Condition.

In view of mandate in Rule 9.2 that money bail should be used only as a last resort to ensure the court appearance of an accused, the circuit court erred in refusing to require the municipal court to make a determination that no other condition would ensure accused's court appearance before setting money bail. Thomas v. State, 260 Ark. 512, 542 S.W.2d 284 (1976).

Rule 8.4. Pretrial release inquiry: in what circumstances conducted.

(a) An inquiry by the judicial officer into the relevant facts which might affect the pretrial release decision shall be made:

(i) in all cases where the maximum penalty for the offense charged exceeds one (1) year and the prosecuting attorney does not stipulate that the defendant may be released on his own recognizance;

(ii) in those cases where the maximum penalty for the offense charged is less than one (1) year and in which a law enforcement officer gives notice to the judicial officer that he intends to oppose release of the defendant on his own recognizance.

(b) In all other cases, the judicial officer may release the defendant on his own recognizance or on order to appear without conducting a pretrial release inquiry.

CASE NOTES

Failure to Conduct Inquiry.

The circuit court in proceeding on accused's petition for writ of mandamus and certiorari erred in refusing to direct the municipal court to conduct a pretrial release inquiry before setting money bail for accused who was arrested for possessing marijuana for sale and whose bail was reduced from a preset $20,000 for drug arrests to $5,000 solely on the showing that accused was a state resident. Thomas v. State, 260 Ark. 512, 542 S.W.2d 284 (1976).

Rule 8.5. Pretrial release inquiry: when conducted; nature of.

- (a) A pretrial release inquiry shall be conducted by the judicial officer prior to or at the first appearance of the defendant.
- (b) The inquiry should take the form of an assessment of factors relevant to the pretrial release decision, such as:
 - (i) the defendant's employment status, history and financial condition;
 - (ii) the nature and extent of his family relationships;
 - (iii) his past and present residence;
 - iv) his character and reputation;
 - (v) persons who agree to assist him in attending court at the proper times;
 - (vi) the nature of the current charge and any mitigating or aggravating factors that may bear on the likelihood of conviction and the possible penalty;
 - (vii) the defendant's prior criminal record, if any, and, if he previously has been released pending trial, whether he appeared as required;
 - (viii) any facts indicating the possibility of violations of law if the defendant is released without restrictions; and
 - (ix) any other facts tending to indicate that the defendant has strong ties to the community and is not likely to flee the jurisdiction.
- (c) The prosecuting attorney should make recommendations to the judicial officer concerning:
 - (i) the advisability and appropriateness of pretrial release;
 - (ii) the amount and type of bail bond;
 - (iii) the conditions, if any, which should be imposed on the defendant's release.

CASE NOTES

- Defendant's Motive.

Pursuant to Ark. R. Evid. 804(b)(1), the circuit court erred in admitting a witness's testimony from the bond-reduction hearing at trial because defendant did not have a similar motive to develop the witness's testimony at that hearing; the purpose of this rule was not solely to attack the State's proof; rather, the judicial officer's inquiry also included an assessment of defendant's connection to the community, familial relationships, and history of appearing in court after a pretrial release, and defendant's motive at the bond-reduction hearing was to obtain a pretrial release from jail. Beasley v. State, 370 Ark. 238, 258 S.W.3d 728 (2007).

Rule 8.6. Time for filing formal charge.

If the defendant is continued in custody subsequent to the first appearance, the prosecuting attorney shall file an indictment or information in a court of competent jurisdiction within sixty days of the defendant's arrest. Failure to file an indictment or information within sixty days shall not be grounds for dismissal of the case against the defendant, but shall, upon motion of the defendant, result in the defendant's release from custody unless the prosecuting attorney establishes good cause for the delay. If good cause is shown, the court shall reconsider bail for the defendant.

HISTORY: Adopted April 15, 1999, effective July 1, 1999.

Reporter's Notes:

This rule is intended to address the problem identified in State v. Pulaski County Circuit Court, 326 Ark. 886, 934 S.W.2d 915 (1996), modified on rehearing, 327 Ark. 287, 938 S.W.2d 815 (1997), wherein the person was arrested without a warrant, was continued in custody beyond his first appearance in municipal court, but waited over two months before his case was formally filed in circuit court by the filing of an information. This rule contemplates that, in the typical case, formal charges should be filed within a reasonable time following an arrest with sufficient latitude being given for circumstances that are beyond the prosecuting attorney's control and which necessitate a delay in the filing of formal charges. Nothing in this rule shall be construed to abrogate the defendant's privilege to file an application for writ of habeas corpus or any other applicable extraordinary remedy.

Rule 8.7. Use of video conferences in pretrial proceedings.

(a) If the defendant is confined in a jail, prison, or other detention facility, a first appearance as provided in Rules 8.1 and 8.3 or a pretrial release inquiry as provided in Rule 8.4 may be conducted by video conference as provided in this rule.

(b) Any video conferencing system used under this rule must meet all the following requirements:

(1) All participants in the proceeding must be able to see, hear, and communicate with each other simultaneously during the proceeding.

(2) All participants in the proceeding must be able to see and hear any witnesses who may testify in the proceeding.

(3) All participants in the proceeding must be able to see, hear, and otherwise observe any physical evidence or exhibits presented during the proceeding, either by video, facsimile, or other method.

(4) The video quality of the video conferencing system must be adequate to allow the participants to observe each other's demeanor and nonverbal expressions as well as the demeanor and nonverbal expressions of any witnesses who testify in the proceeding.

(5) If the defendant is represented by an attorney, the attorney shall, upon request, be provided with the opportunity for confidential communication with the defendant.

(c) As used in this rule, the "participants in the proceeding" mean the judicial officer conducting the proceeding, the prosecuting or deputy prosecuting attorney, the defendant, and, if the defendant is represented by an attorney, the attorney.

(d) An attorney representing a defendant during a video conference may elect to be present either in the courtroom with the presiding judicial officer or in the place where the defendant is confined. With the approval of the court, an attorney may represent a defendant during a video conference from a location other than the courtroom or the place of detention.

Rule 9.2. Release on money bail.

- (a) The judicial officer shall set money bail only after he determines that no other conditions will reasonably ensure the appearance of the defendant in court.
(b) If it is determined that money bail should be set, the judicial officer shall require one (1) of the following:
 (i) the execution of an unsecured bond in an amount specified by the judicial officer, either signed by other persons or not;

(ii) the execution of an unsecured bond in an amount specified by the judicial officer, accompanied by a deposit of cash or securities equal to ten per cent (10%) of the face amount of the bond. Ninety per cent (90%) of the deposit shall be returned at the conclusion of the proceedings, provided the defendant has not defaulted in the performance of the conditions of the bond; or

(iii) the execution of a bond secured by the deposit of the full amount in cash, or by other property, or by obligation of qualified sureties.

(c) In setting the amount of bail the judicial officer should take into account all facts relevant to the risk of wilful nonappearance including:

(i) the length and character of the defendant's residence in the community;

(ii) his employment status, history and financial condition;

(iii) his family ties and relationship;

(iv) his reputation, character and mental condition;

(v) his past history of response to legal process;

(vi) his prior criminal record;

(vii) the identity of responsible members of the community who vouch for the defendant's reliability;

(viii) the nature of the current charge, the apparent probability of conviction and the likely sentence, in so far as these factors are relevant to the risk of nonappearance; and

(ix) any other factors indicating the defendant's roots in the community.

(d) Nothing in this rule shall be construed to prohibit a judicial officer from permitting a defendant charged with an offense other than a felony from posting a specified sum of money which may be forfeited or applied to a fine and costs in lieu of any court appearance.

(e) An appearance bond and any security deposit required as a condition of release pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule shall serve to guarantee all subsequent appearances of a defendant on the same charge or on other charges arising out of the same conduct before any court, including appearances relating to appeals and upon remand. If the defendant is required to appear before a court other than the one ordering release, the order of release together with the appearance bond and any security or deposit shall be transmitted to the court before which the defendant is required to appear. This subsection shall not be construed to prevent a judicial officer from:

(i) decreasing the amount of bond, security or deposit required by another judicial officer; or

(ii) upon making written findings that factors exist increasing the risk of wilful nonappearance, increasing the amount of bond, security, or deposit required by another judicial officer.

Upon an increase in the amount of bond or security, a surety may surrender a defendant.

Comment to Rule 9.2

Money bail in any form ought to be a last resort and should be used only to assure the defendant's appearance. It is believed that damage to the integrity of the legal process will best be avoided by limiting bail to its lawful function.

1987 Unofficial Supplementary Commentary to Rule 9.2

Though Rule 9.2(e) provides that appearance bonds set by one court serve to guarantee all subsequent appearances of a defendant on the same charge, "including appearances relating to appeals," the Arkansas Supreme Court has held that appeal bonds are governed by Rules 36.5-36.7. Perry v. State, 275 Ark. 170, 628 S.W.2d 304 (1982). So, "even though the pre-trial bond guarantees the defendant's appearance in appellate proceedings if the bond is still enforced, that does not make it an appeal bond.” 275 Ark. at 171, 628 S.W.2d at 305.

Yet, in Zoeller v. State, 284 Ark. 118, 680 S.W.2d 87 (1984), decided after Perry v. State, supra, the Court flatly stated that “the law is clear that an appearance bond once approved remains in effect through appeal, and this includes any appearances on remand.” Id. at 119, 680 S.W.2d at 88.

Rules 9.2 and 36.5-36.7 overlap, giving rise to ambiguity that might best be resolved by mending Rule 9.2 to alert the practitioner that making bail pending appeal after a conviction in circuit court is governed exclusively by Rule 36.

CASE NOTES

Constitutionality.

The bail provisions of this rule provide the process or procedure by which a defendant may obtain pretrial release on a charge arising out of his alleged violation of substantive law and, as such, are not unconstitutional or outside the enabling act. Miller v. State, 262 Ark. 223, 555 S.W.2d 563 (1977).

Amount of Bail.

Amount of bail rests in reasonable discretion of the trial court. Municipal Court v. Casoli, 294 Ark. 37, 740 S.W.2d 614 (1987).

Where the circuit court set bond for defendant in the amount of $1,000,000, “cash only,” explicitly for the purpose of putting it out of reach, and where the court failed to consider the factors set forth in subsection (c) of this rule, it exceeded the bounds of its discretion in arbitrarily setting bail at such a level. Foreman v. State, 317 Ark. 146, 875 S.W.2d 853 (1994).

Appeal Bond Separate.

Where prior to this trial the defendant had been free on a $10,000 pretrial release bond but at his trial the defendant was sentenced to concurrent terms of 40 and six years after a jury found him guilty of first-degree murder and second-degree battery, the circuit judge could properly fix his appeal bond at $50,000 without making written findings to support the increased bond because the two types of bonds were clearly distinguishable, and in fixing the appeal bond the circuit judge knew the actual sentence imposed and therefore was in an improved position to weigh the risk of the defendant’s nonappearance pending appeal. Perry v. State, 275 Ark. 170, 628 S.W.2d 304 (1982).

Even if a pretrial release bond under this rule continues pending appeal, that does not make it an appeal bond as governed by Ark. R. Crim. P. Rules 36.5, 36.6, and 36.7. Garrett v. State, 294 Ark. 556, 744 S.W.2d 731 (1988).

Cash-Only Bail.

Term “sufficient sureties” in Ark. Const., Art. 2, § 8, refers to a broad range of methods to accomplish sufficient sureties, including cash.

Accordingly, the Arkansas Constitution permits cash-only bail, as determined by the circuit court pursuant to this rule, and is subject to the constitutional protections of Art. 2, § 8. Trujillo v. State, 2016 Ark. 49, 483 S.W.3d 801 (2016).

Construction With Other Laws.

There is no conflict between § 16-84-111(b) and subsection (e) of this rule. Bobby Cox Bail Bonds, Inc. v. State, 71 Ark. App. 119, 36 S.W.3d 752 (2000).

Contractual Language of Bond.

Statutory requirement of this rule that appearance bond shall guarantee all subsequent appearances of defendant in any court superseded the limitation of liability in the contractual language of the bond to assuring defendant’s presence in the municipal court. Miller v. State, 262 Ark. 223, 555 S.W.2d 563 (1977).

Failure to Set Bond.

Failure to set bond would not vitiate an otherwise valid conviction. Orsini v. State, 281 Ark. 348, 665 S.W.2d 245, cert. denied, 469 U.S. 847, 105 S. Ct. 162, 83 L. Ed. 2d 98 (1984).

Judgment on Bond.

Where bond guaranteed defendant’s appearance until he was discharged or surrendered himself for execution of final judgment, trial court could not extend bond after time of sentencing without surety’s consent and it was error to render judgment on such bond when defendant failed to surrender himself. Liberty Bonding Co. v. State, 270 Ark. 434, 604 S.W.2d 956 (1980).

Jurisdiction.

Where probable cause for detention in a felony matter had been found in municipal court, and the case had been bound over to circuit court, then the circuit court had jurisdiction to reduce the bail set by the municipal court. State v. Pulaski County Circuit Court, 326 Ark. 886, 934 S.W.2d 915 (1996), reaff’d in part, 327 Ark. 287, 938 S.W.2d 815 (1997). See also State v. Pulaski County Circuit Court, 327 Ark. 287, 938 S.W.2d 815 (1997).

New Trial.

Where a case was clearly reversed and remanded for a new trial, the trial court erred in requiring a new appearance bond; this in no way implies however that a new bond cannot be required or that a bond cannot be raised in an appropriate situation. Zoller v. State, 284 Ark. 118, 680 S.W.2d 87 (1984).

Period of Effectiveness.

Subsection (e) of this rule guarantees that a bond approved in municipal court will be sufficient for circuit court, only to the extent that a judge cannot refuse the bond simply because it was made in municipal court; as the rule provides, the judge can decrease or increase the bond, but if he increases it, he must have reasons to do so. Miller v. Pulaski County Circuit Court, 284 Ark. 55, 679 S.W.2d 187 (1984).

An appearance bond once approved remains in effect through appeal, and this includes any appearances on remand. Zoller v. State, 284 Ark. 118, 680 S.W.2d 87 (1984); Garrett v. State, 294 Ark. 556, 744 S.W.2d 731 (1988).

Order of forfeiture against a bail bond company after a criminal defendant failed to surrender or appear was upheld because under subsection (e) of this rule, an appearance bond remained in effect through the defendant's appeal. A written confirmation from the bail bond company was not necessary for the bond to continue. Bob Cole Bail Bonds, Inc. v. State, 99 Ark. App. 354, 260 S.W.3d 754 (2007).

Appearance bond shall serve to guarantee all subsequent appearances of a defendant on the same charge or on other charges arising out of the same conduct before any court, including appearances relating to appeals and upon remand. Bob Cole Bail Bonds, Inc. v. State, 99 Ark. App. 354, 260 S.W.3d 754 (2007).

Preset Bail.

Since this rule contemplates that in fixing money bail the judicial officer will use the least restrictive type of money bail arrangement, the municipal court was in error in reducing a preset $20,000 money bail to $5,000 money bail based only on a showing that accused was a state resident without further inquiry into his individual circumstances to determine whether any other condition would ensure his court appearance. Thomas v. State, 260 Ark. 512, 542 S.W.2d 284 (1976).

Refund.

Circuit court erred in ordering the bond set by municipal court refunded. Municipal Court v. Casoli, 294 Ark. 37, 740 S.W.2d 614 (1987).

Refusal to Set Bond.

Where, at the bond hearing, the state produced sufficient facts to establish probable cause to file capital murder charges against defendant, the court properly refused to set bond. Orsini v. State, 281 Ark. 348, 665 S.W.2d 245, cert. denied, 469 U.S. 847, 105 S. Ct. 162, 83 L. Ed. 2d 98 (1984).

Supersedeas Bond Separate.

The regimens of this rule have no practicable application to the setting of a supersedeas bond contemplated by § 16-96-504 [repealed], nor are they constitutionally required. There is a marked difference between the purpose of supersedeas, which is to stay the effect of the judgment, and those bonds which operate to guarantee the appearance of the person. Gober v. Daniels, 295 Ark. 199, 748 S.W.2d 29 (1988).

Rule 9.3. Prohibition of wrongful acts pending trial.

If it appears that there exists a danger that the defendant will commit a serious crime or will seek to intimidate witnesses, or will otherwise unlawfully interfere with the orderly administration of justice, the judicial officer, upon the release of the defendant, may enter an order:
